

Theological Seminary.

PRINCETON, N. J.

ADDRESS: THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY,

M.

Case

Shelf

Book

J. Addison Alexander,

September 30. 1841.

THE BOOK
OF
THE PATRIARCH JOB,
TRANSLATED FROM THE ORIGINAL HEBREW, AS NEARLY AS POSSIBLE IN THE TERMS AND STYLE OF THE AUTHORISED ENGLISH VERSION, TO WHICH IS PREFIXED AN INTRODUCTION,
ON THE HISTORY, TIMES, COUNTRY, FRIENDS, AND BOOK OF THE PATRIARCH; WITH SOME STRICTURES ON THE STATEMENTS OF BISHOP WARBURTON, AND OF THE RATIONALISTS OF GERMANY, ON THE SAME SUBJECTS, AND TO WHICH IS APPENDED
A COMMENTARY,
Critical and Exegetical,
CONTAINING ELUCIDATIONS OF MANY OTHER PASSAGES OF HOLY WRIT.

INSCRIBED, BY PERMISSION, TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE OF SUSSEX.

By SAMUEL LEE, D.D.

D.D. OF THE UNIVERSITY OF HALLE; HONORARY MEMBER OF THE ASIATIC SOCIETY OF PARIS, AND OF THE HISTORICAL SOCIETY OF RHODE ISLAND; MEMBER OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND, AND OF THE ORIENTAL TRANSLATION COMMITTEE, ETC.; PREBENDARY OF BRISTOL; VICAR OF BANWELL; AND REGIUS PROFESSOR OF HEBREW IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE.

LONDON:

JAMES DUNCAN, PATERNOSTER ROW.

M.DCCC.XXXVII.

LONDON:
PRINTED BY JAMES MOYES, CASTLE STREET, LEICESTER SQUARE.

TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS
PRINCE AUGUSTUS FREDERICK, DUKE OF SUSSEX,

K.G. K.T. G.C.H. D.C.L. ETC. ETC.

THIS ENDEAVOUR TO TRANSLATE AND ELUCIDATE THE MOST ANCIENT COMPLETE DOCTRINAL PORTION OF SCRIPTURE NOW EXISTING;

NAMELY,

THE BOOK OF THE PRINCE AND PATRIARCH JOB,

IN GRATEFUL AND LASTING TESTIMONY OF THE MANY AND GREAT ADVANTAGES DERIVED FROM A FREE USE OF THE SPLENDID BIBLICAL AND THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY

COLLECTED BY HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS;

AND OF THE VERY MANY SIGNAL INSTANCES OF ENCOURAGING CONDESCENSION AND REAL KINDNESS

EXPERIENCED AT A TIME AND UNDER CIRCUMSTANCES WHICH GAVE THEM A PECULIAR INTEREST AND VALUE,

IS,

BY PERMISSION OF HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS,

MOST RESPECTFULLY INSCRIBED

BY

THE TRANSLATOR AND AUTHOR.

CONTENTS.

INTRODUCTION.

	PAGE
PRELIMINARY Remarks	1-6
SECTION I.
On the question, Whether Job was a real Person or not ?	6-12
SECTION II.
The Objections of Bishop Warburton and others, to the strictly historical Character of the Book of Job, examined	12-28
SECTION III.
On the questions, Where, and at what Period, Job lived ?	28-35
SECTION IV.
On the question, As to Who committed this Book to writing ?	36-48
SECTION V.
On the Language, Usages, and general Contents of the Book of Job	48-56
SECTION VI.
On the Doctrines found in this Book	57-65
SECTION VII.
On the Quotations, &c. found in this Book, as made from former Revelations, or pointing to them respectively ; and also on those found in subsequent Scriptures, as taken from this Book, or alluding to it	65-89

SECTION VIII.

	PAGE
On the Translation and Interpretation of Scripture generally, and of this Book in particular, as adopted in this Work	90-111

SECTION IX.

On the Scope and Object of this Book	111-113
--	---------

TRANSLATION.

On Job's place of residence, his children, origin, and cause of his trials; visit of his Friends. Chh. i. ii.	117-120
Job reviles his day, laments his existence, and wishes for death. Ch. iii.	120-121
Eliphaz replies, setting forth God's providence, and the blessedness of afflictions sent by him on good men. Chh. iv. v.	121-124
Job rejoins, lamenting his afflictions, and the want of sympathy in his friends. Chh. vi. vii.	124-127
Bildad rebukes Job, and vindicates the justice of God from various considerations. Ch. viii.	127-128
Job rejoins, allowing his own sinfulness and God's justice, laments the unprofitableness of his days, and the severity of his afflictions. Chh. ix. x.	129-132
Zophar the Naamathite replies; he accuses Job of folly, and vindicates the wisdom of God. Ch. xi.	132-134
Job rejoins, allowing the justness of his Friends' remarks, but affirms that they are inapplicable to his case, &c. Chh. xii. xiii. xiv.	134-138
Eliphaz replies a second time, retorting Job's arguments on himself, &c. Ch. xv.	138-140
Job again answers Eliphaz; reproaches him with a want of sympathy, &c. Chh. xvi. xvii.	140-142
Bildad offers a second reply; complains of the length of the dispute, &c. Ch. xviii.	142-143
Job replies a second time to Bildad, complaining of contemptuous treatment, &c. Ch. xix.	144-145

	PAGE
Zophar's second reply; dwells on the vanity of wickedness as before, ch. xi. &c. Ch. xx.	145-147
Job's second reply to Zophar; confesses his astonishment at the prosperity of the wicked, &c. Ch. xxi.	147-149
Eliphaz commences a third series of replies; dilates on man's unprofitableness to God, &c. Ch. xxii.	149-151
Job answers; complains of the weight of his afflictions, &c. Chh. xxiii. xxiv.	151-153
Bildad offers a third reply, asserting the all-comprehensive power, wisdom of God, &c. Ch. xxv.	153-154
Job answers Bildad; objects to his want of charity, wisdom, &c. Chh. xxvi-xxxi.	155-162
Elihu, observing that Job's Friends had failed, apologises for offering his opinions, declares his sincerity, &c. Chh. xxxii-xxxvii.	163-171
Jehovah appears and speaks from the whirlwind, calling into question Job's knowledge on various grounds. Chh. xxxviii-xli.	171-177
Job answers, ascribing all power to God, and confessing his own ignorance, weakness, &c. intercedes with sacrifices for his Friends, and returns to double his former prosperity, &c. Ch. xlii.	178-179

COMMENTARY.

PASSAGES OF SCRIPTURE GENERALLY ELUCIDATED.

	PAGE		PAGE
Gen. i. 16	433, 4	1 Kings, xviii. 21	339
ii. 2	184	xxi. 10, 13 ..	185
vi. 1-5	187, 301	Isa. xvii. 4	413
ix. 27	434	xxi. 12	318
xvi. 12	374	xxvi. 19	413
xxxvii. 2	289	liv. 2	304
Exod. x. 21	280, 1	Jer. v. 28	271
xvi. 12	214	Ezek. xiii. 10, 11-14..	281
xvii. 6	274	xxvii. 19	271
xvii. 12	367	Amos, xi. 3	277
xxii. 27	185	Jonah, i. 6	271

	PAGE		PAGE
Ps. i. 3	343	Ps. ci. 5	250
xvi. 11	304	civ. 26	534
xlix.	283	cx. 3	413
lxvi. 11	227	cxxxix. 14	258
lxviii. 13	367	cxlvi. 4	271
lxviii. 15	226	Prov. xvi. 4	456
lxxi. 5, 17	432	Cant. iv. 12	240
lxxii. 17	326	iv. 14	271
lxxvii. 3	367	Dan. vi. 4	271
lxxviii. 57	346	Luke, xxi. 24	291
xc. 10	271	2 Pet. iii. 8	454

PREFACE.

THE object of the present undertaking has been, to present to the public as literal a Translation of the Book of Job as the idiom of our language would allow, together with such explanatory matter as seemed necessary. In the first case, the style and language of the Authorised Version have been adopted as far as practicable; because these were deemed the best, both on account of their simplicity and purely English character; and because they had, from long usage, established a sort of claim to preference. And, in the second, as to the explanatory matter offered, a translator would hardly be justified in presenting a new translation of any book to the public, without giving at the same time his reasons for the renderings which he may have had to propose. In the Book of Job this would be particularly requisite, as well on account of its acknowledged difficulty, as of the doubts found to rest on the history of Job himself.

The former of these will, it is hoped, be found sufficiently provided for in the Commentary appended to the Translation; the latter, in the Introduction prefixed to it. In both cases, indeed, much might have been added, which to some might have seemed no more than necessary: while to others, what is now given will probably appear too much. I have, therefore, kept within these extremes to the best of my judgment; endeavouring to give no more than was necessary to the due understanding of my author, and the justification of my translation of him. But on this subject, on the style adopted, the rules observed in making the Translation, the parallelism, and other such matters, more will be found in the Introduction.

One question appeared to me of the greatest importance here. It was this: There has perhaps been no period in which much doubt has not existed, whether Job was or was not a real character. Since the times of Bishop Warburton, however, and since Rationalism or Neologianism, as it has been called, has made so great a progress in Germany, this question has—on one side at least—received all the help that learning and ingenuity could bestow upon it: and this was the side of doubt and infidelity. I say, doubt and infidelity; because I hold, that every thing which tends to deprive this book, and such books as this, of their real historical character, cannot but administer to infidelity in the end; and because I am convinced that the views both of Bishop Warburton and of his followers, are, in this case, perfectly groundless and false. I therefore considered it my duty to investigate this question in all its essential bearings; and, in doing so, I soon found that every thing necessary to its determination was at hand. I found, as I thought, the family of Job—those of his friends generally—the parts in which he and they resided—as well as the times in which they lived, all determinable in Holy Writ, in a manner never found in cases of parable; and to an extent quite sufficient to prove that the whole was real history, and intended to be received as such.¹ The particular objections of Bishop Warburton, Rosenmüller, and others, I have considered; and have found that they universally rest on some mistaken view, translation, or application, of the passages on which they treat. The truth seems to be, Bishop Warburton,—great as he was in other respects,—was not mighty in the Scriptures; and it may be doubted whether his followers, to whom allusion has been made, are gifted with any thing like his ability and honesty; although it may fairly be allowed that they are not less ingenious, theoretical, and fanciful, than he was.

One consideration, which has appeared to me of great moment, presented itself during this investigation; it was this:—If I have rightly ascertained the period in which Job lived; the allusions so often made in his Book to God's Will, Commands, Ways, and Judgments, must be allusions to revelations existing before the times of Moses; and, as I find many of them made in the very words of the Book of Genesis, it should follow that this Book was in existence, and generally known, before the times of Job: those not to be found in this Book might have been taken from others, which Divine Providence has not deemed it necessary should be preserved: and of such we have some intimations elsewhere in the Old Testament, and in the Epistle general of Jude in the New. But, what appeared to me the most important and remarkable was, the real citations made in considerable numbers from the Book of Job, by subsequent writers of the Old Testament, as well as by those of the New; and these, together with allusions less direct, existing to a very great extent. Job is not, therefore, merely cited by name, but his Book is quoted verbally and literally, in very many cases: in many more it is manifestly imitated, or else alluded to. If this, therefore, can be relied on,—and my own conviction is that it can, and is, moreover, indisputable,—nothing farther can be wanted to complete the proof, that the Book of Job is strictly historical and canonically true; the sacred penmen themselves of the subsequent Scriptures having both considered and treated it as such, and as being of paramount Divine authority.

¹ See also F. Spanhemii Historia Jobi, Lugd. Batav. 1694; to which I have occasionally referred in the Introduction. I had, however, arrived at my conclusions before I consulted the valuable little book of Mr. Spanheim.

On this question, therefore, I have bestowed considerable labour and care in the Introduction, the marginal references attached to the Text, and the Commentary; because I thought it a most important one, both as it respects the canonical authority of this book, and the doctrines which it inculcates: and also, because both this canonical authority, and these doctrines, must have had their influence on the Jews throughout the whole period of the theocracy. And, if this be the case, we need no longer doubt, with Grotius and Warburton, as to the religious knowledge and expectations of the Jews during the whole period of their commonwealth, as we have the very document now in our hands from which most of these must have been drawn ; a document affording in the richness and pithiness of its details, matter abundantly sufficient for all these purposes.

Out of this consideration, moreover, will issue others of considerable importance ; for it will now appear, that even the patriarchs were much more enlightened on the subject of revealed religion than has been usually believed : which cannot fail to throw much light and interest on their histories as recorded in the Old Testament, and appealed to in the New ; as also on the state and expectations of believers generally in their days. It will also be seen, that the Bible really contains within itself much more, that is calculated to supply the best elucidation of its own contents, than many have supposed. For, if it be true that the Book of Genesis, as above remarked, is actually quoted and commented on in the Book of Job, and that the Book of Job is, in like manner, in subsequent portions of Holy Writ ; it must also follow that, from a careful comparison of the same doctrines, events, phraseology, &c. thus occurring in several places, considerable light will be elicited, and may be thrown upon them in all. This consideration struck me very forcibly in my late endeavour to throw some light on the declarations of prophecy.¹ For then, I found—or thought I found—the Old and New Testament so intimately connected and interwoven as it were together, as it also appeared to be the case with all the books of the Old ; and, at the same time, so much interpreted and applied in the New, that, in fact, nothing now remained to be done beyond a careful examination of the several passages so connected together, interpreted, and applied, and then to draw the necessary conclusion; which was, that the whole was completely fulfilled!

¹ See my Sermons and Dissertations. London, 1830.

This consideration, moreover, may be fairly reckoned upon, as supplying in every case a most powerful argument in favour of the Divine authority and inspiration of the Scriptures. For, if there does exist the most perfect agreement in all, and every one, of the most minute particulars of this sort — which certainly could never have been effected by human means,— and this I will affirm is the fact, and that it will every day become more and more apparent, as we become more familiar with the original Scriptures: and again, if it should also appear — which I will likewise affirm it eventually will — that not a jot or tittle of prophecy has failed, but that all has been fulfilled;—then, I say, we shall have such a twofold cord of evidence as never can, and never will, be broken: and, what is best of all, this will be obtained by means the most unexceptionable,— the just and natural method of arriving at the intentions of the great Author of Holy Writ,—namely, a minute but comprehensive investigation of its own details.

As to the Notes or Commentary generally, my aim has been, at once to supply the wants of the student of the Hebrew Bible, and of the theologian and general reader. The appeals to the Hebrew Grammar,¹ the dialects of the Hebrew, and other

¹ In these cases, the second edition of my own, printed in 1832, is constantly referred to. The Hebrew Bible used, is that printed by Mr. Duncan in 1833.

Oriental usages, I considered as necessary to the student; both for the purpose of pointing out to him a most ample and valuable stock of materials for the cultivation of Biblical literature, and also to justify the renderings here offered to his notice. The exegetical, or generally explanatory, part, I deemed indispensable; because, after all, the intention of the Writer is the main thing to be had in view; and because this is always found to influence even the grammatical construction of passages, and the sense of single words, in a very great degree, as is shewn more at length in the Introduction.

I will now add, that it is my intention—should Divine Providence graciously continue to me my health, and should the public approve of this present endeavour—in like manner also to translate and explain all the other Books of the Old Testament. I am well aware of the weight and responsibility of such an undertaking, and of my inability duly to execute it; yet, I feel that the endeavour ought to be made, and,—as this must begin somewhere—that, occupying the station which I do in the University of Cambridge, I should be doing no more than my duty, in attempting to supply the little in my power towards so desirable a work. I may perhaps assume, that my labours have hitherto been crowned with some small degree of success; and that, with these views before me, if I cannot do all I may wish, or may be wanted, I may, nevertheless, with the aid of Divine Providence, contribute something in this way towards serving the public.

I ought, perhaps, to apologise here for the time which has elapsed since this work was promised. The truth is, some things have occurred, demanding a considerable portion of my time, over which I had no control: others again, which struck me as duties not to be neglected, and which necessarily consumed some time. Add to this the fact, that the more I saw of my author, the more I felt the necessity of thoroughly investigating every difficulty which fell in my way; and, in many cases, of instituting fresh inquiries into the precise force of very many of the single words, and phrases, with which I had to do, as it will be seen in the Notes appended to the Translation.

The duties, too, of the several offices which I have the honour to fill, have necessarily occupied much time not calculated upon when I first undertook this work: and an important part of these as necessarily fixed my residence, for the greater part of the year, in a village far removed from every public library, as well as from the press; which has had the effect both of delaying the work, and of increasing the expenses of printing it. This, too—which I trust the reader's kindness will indulge—will probably have had the further effect of diminishing the accuracy of the references, which are indeed very numerous. To all of which I can only say, I have done the best which my measure of ability, joined with unceasing labour, could effect. And I am not without hopes, that I have so far succeeded as to make my work acceptable, and generally as accurate as works of a similar nature are found to be.

INTRODUCTION.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

It is, I believe, universally admitted, that, when we wish to make ourselves well acquainted with any writer of antiquity, the first step to be taken is, thoroughly to study his history; and, in doing this, to familiarise ourselves as much as possible with every thing connected with him: viz. his language, style, manner; his opinions and views, religious, moral, political, and philosophical; the country, and times, in which he lived: and, in short, every thing—such as collateral history, and the like,—which may tend, either directly or indirectly, to throw light on the subjects touched on by him. This, I say, is universally admitted: and it is no more than what the nature of the case requires. It must also be admitted, I think, that the further any such writer is removed from our own times and country, the more difficult will this task become, and the probabilities of mistake be the greater; especially if the language in which he has written has long ceased to be vernacular, and is, at the same time, in its character altogether different from our own. Now, in no composition, with which I am acquainted, do all these properties so fully concur as in the Book of Job. It was committed to writing, in all probability, not later than three thousand five hundred years ago. Its author resided in the deserts of Arabia, not far from the Euphrates, and spoke a language the most unlike possible to that cultivated among us. The customs, laws, manners, politics, husbandry, commerce, art, science, &c., with which he was conversant, necessarily differed very widely from those prevailing among ourselves; and hence, the language used, and the allusions made, by him, cannot but be liable to misapprehension.

Now, whether it has arisen from any one or more, or from all, of these considerations taken together, I will not pretend to say; but I safely may, that no work of antiquity which has come down to our times has been so frequently, or so grossly, misunderstood as this Book of Job. When I say this, however, it is not my intention to impugn either the good faith, the good intentions, or the abilities, of those who have preceded me in this inquiry. On the contrary, I most highly respect them all on the score of good faith, and good intention at least, and confess myself, moreover, very greatly their debtor. Yet I must say, I know of but few instances, in which sufficient time has been spent in the preparatory studies necessary for such an undertaking, or in which a range has been occupied in prosecuting them so extensive as it requires.

In the early Christian church, for example, Hebrew literature was scarcely known. Commentators extended their inquiries and labours no farther than the text of the Greek Septuagint, the Latin Vulgate, or the Syriac Peschito. Whatever, therefore, had been either misunderstood, or not understood at all, by the translators whom they followed, could hardly be corrected by them, however good, wise, or skilled in their own literature they might have been; and, to this, all their Commentaries, Homilies, and Tracts, will bear the amplest testimony.

g. Jerome?

From the times of the Reformation up to our own, the same has in a great degree been the case, if we make one exception in favour of Hebrew Rabbinical literature under the teaching of Jews.—And let me ask any honest man, who has attentively considered this sort of learning, Whether Biblical literature has, or has not, been really benefited by it? I am far from denying that the works of Lightfoot, and of others who followed him in his method of elucidation, are valuable. I hold directly the reverse: and so far I am thankful for their labours. But, I say, let any one consider the state of the Old Testament—even as it now exists among us, and throughout Europe—and let him ask himself fairly the question, Whether Jewish literature, Jewish Grammars, Commentaries, and Jewish principles of Scriptural interpretation, have not done more towards obscuring the text and context of that Book, than all the other causes, viz. negligence, want of encouragement, &c., put together, have done? And, again, whether the Old Testament was not better understood before the Council of Nice from the text of the Septuagint, and Vulgate only, than it has been generally with us, even since the Reformation? And, once more, Whether the novelties, cultivated, indeed, with so much industry and profound learning by the Neologian school of Germany, have not been derived from the same dark, miserable, and heathenish source? For myself I will say, that of this I have no doubt. I have for a considerable time had my attention fixed on this subject. I have attentively studied its principles; and, I think, I have universally found their results to be obscurity, darkness, and pure heathenism.¹

In our Walton, Castell, Pococke, and others of the same period, we had, indeed, orientalists of the first celebrity,—men who, by the efforts of their mighty minds and almost incredible labours, left behind them monuments of industry and learning never to be excelled. I think it must be confessed, nevertheless, that it was not perceived in their day, that Rabbinism was only another name for ignorance and hatred to Christian truth; and, that they had in their own hands means of illustrating Holy Writ infinitely superior to those of that wretched school, which had been allowed to make such large inroads upon their valuable time, and so materially to darken their views. No one, I am sure, can read Pococke's Commentaries on Hosea and Micah, without lamenting at every step the trash which he had been induced to insert from the Rabbins, as illustrative of the text before him. Nor are Walton and Castell free in this respect; although it must be granted, they were less profuse in the use they made of these blind leaders of the blind. One lesson of value, however, may here be learned. It is this: Rare, indeed, is the penetration, and much more rare the power, which is able to discover the existence of error in fashionable opinions, and to free itself from their thralldom.

After their day, indeed, biblical and oriental literature greatly declined in this country. The unhappy events which took place in the days of the first Charles, and continued for some time after to harass the country, had the effect of bringing the study of the Bible into disrepute: which, aided by the ribaldry of a vicious court, succeeded in completing the lamentable declension in this literature just now noticed. This, as it was likely, influenced our seats of learning. Professorships consequently became sinecures; and the only branches of learning cultivated, were those which were exclusively secular. Occasionally, perhaps, a Warburton, Horsly, or Lowth, turned their attention to the Hebrew Bible; or a Sir William Jones, to the general literature of the East. But, unhappily, in the former, the want of an early and extensive acquaintance with the subjects on which they wrote, rendered their labours almost useless, and rarely to be trusted: in the latter, as secular learning only was had in view, the student of the Bible could receive but little assistance from his successful and elegant labours.

¹ See my Sermons and Dissertations.

Nor was the case widely different on the Continent. Before the times of Michaelis, oriental literature was almost unknown in Germany: and, even in his days, it received but small additions. In like manner, before the times of the Baron de Sacy, the French were not orientalists. D'Herbelot, or De Guignes, might have done something; but it was more of a popular nature than applicable to the purposes of criticism: and, even in the former sense, not always challenging the highest degree of credit. Michaelis was certainly a good Syriac scholar, probably the best in his day in Germany. In the other dialects he never ranked high. And, that he never turned what he knew to the best account, is perhaps evident enough from his large work entitled "a Supplement to the Hebrew Lexicon." One valuable property attended the writings of this extraordinary man, which, had it been duly acted upon, would have raised Germany to a most distinguished height in biblical literature. It was this: Michaelis thought for himself. He had learned from his favourite writer, Richard Simon, that implicit reliance was not to be placed on the dicta of his predecessors in this line of study. Michaelis, therefore, inquired for himself: and, had he been blessed with as great a share of judgment as he was of ingenuity and industry, few men would have so essentially benefited mankind, or have risen to so high a point of literary fame. But, unhappily, what Father Simon wanted in honesty, Michaelis wanted in judgment. He therefore rejected much, conjectured more, and established but little, if we except the disposition to doubt, and the never-ending desire—as it was likely would be the case—of something new.

To this succeeded the school of Eichhorn, Semler, and others; and, to these, those of Bertholdt, Gesenius, Ammon, De Wette, Paulus, Rosenmüller, Ewald, &c. &c., who can claim no higher a ground for their theological system than the long-exploded farrago of Spinoza. In oriental literature many of these gentlemen have made considerable progress, particularly Ewald. Yet, in no instance, as far as I have seen, has any one of them applied either the native grammar of the orientals, or their antiquities, to the illustration of the Hebrew text. In this respect they seldom proceed beyond the Lexicons of Golius or Castell, or, it may be, the “Grammaire Arabe” of the Baron de Sacy, although materials innumerable of genuine oriental grammar and antiquities are within their reach. But what is worst of all is, the meagre, false, and miserable system of theology to which they have attached themselves. Under this, it can avail but little what their philology is; for, a system being previously determined upon which will necessarily ride over all subordinate considerations of this sort, conjecture alone—in other words, human ingenuity,—will supply both root and branch, and these necessarily of a piece with the theory previously received, and set up as arbiter.

In Germany, therefore, where we find much to admire and to venerate, we also find much, very much, to deplore. A never-ending desire for something new is on the alert, which alone—were there no shallow and mischievous principles already adopted—could not but be ruinous to every inquiry after revealed truth. That such are the actual results of these principles and views, every one who has looked into the writings of the persons named above, abundantly knows: which is proof sufficient of the sentiments now advanced.

After what has now been said, no one will, perhaps, affirm, that abundant reason has not still been left for attempting a new translation, or, at least, an amended one, of the Book of Job; and, therefore, that the endeavour to supply this does not imply in me an unpardonable degree of assumption. The book is confessedly the most difficult one in the Hebrew Bible. It certainly is one of the most ancient. It was written in a country and in times altogether unlike those in which we live. Its matter and its language are of the most exalted and splendid description; while the influence which it has exerted on the whole Hebrew Bible, and the connexion which its doctrines evidently have with those of the New Testament, cannot but strike the Christian theologian as most interesting and valuable considerations.

I have now only to state, that the subjects which I have deemed it right to discuss here, for the purpose of introducing my reader to the history of, and circumstances connected with, our patriarch, will be found under the following heads:—viz. Section I. On the question whether Job was a real character, or not.—II. Objections to the reality of Job's character examined.—III. The times and place in which he appears to have lived.—IV. As to who wrote the book bearing his name.—V. The language and style of the book considered.—VI. On the doctrines contained in it.—VII. On the quotations found in it from former revelations, and also made from it in subsequent ones.—VIII. On the translation and interpretation of the Scriptures generally, and particularly as adopted in this work.—IX. On the scope and object of the Book of Job.

SECTION I.

ON THE QUESTION, WHETHER JOB WAS A REAL PERSON, OR NOT?

I NEED not now stop to shew, that the Scriptures are capable of being misunderstood, or that this book, in particular, has come in for its full share in this respect. These are positions which stand in no need of proof. Our business will now rather be, to shew how the sacred writers have provided against mistake, with reference to the question now before us; which is this, whether Job was, or was not, a real character. Now, if we are to take the language in which this book is written in its literal and direct acceptation, we can have no doubt that Job was a real character: but, if we are to suppose that the whole is to be considered as a case proposed, i. e. as a parable, or allegory, for the mere purpose of inculcating some religious truth, or truths; then we shall conclude, that Job was not a real, but a fictitious, character: and, as men of very considerable learning have been found to take each of these sides of the question, the inquiry becomes the more important, and deserving of the greater attention.

The first question, then, which seems to claim our consideration in this case is, whether any real difference is discoverable in the modes of expression adopted by the sacred writers, when treating of fictitious, or of real, history, respectively? If there is, then, in what this is found to consist. For, if we can determine this, we shall have discovered a rule by which we shall be able to judge in all similar cases, whether we have before us real or fictitious history:—whether we have accounts of events as they actually happened; or, only a representation of them, given for the purpose of enabling us to draw certain conclusions: and, lastly, whether the Book of Job is of the former, or latter, sort.

In the first place, then, Parables are necessarily short: when lengthened out, they are termed Allegories: and, as the characters introduced, in each case, are brought forward for some specific purpose, no more is usually said of them than is absolutely necessary to this end. We never have, for example, in this sort of writing, the genealogy, the circumstances of family, the particular recital of children, friends, wealth, age, &c. of the parties concerned, dwelt upon. The events immediately connected with the doctrine to be enforced are solely mentioned: and, as the narrative must be short, in the case of parable, the conclusion is soon drawn; and the narrative itself is never after referred to, although the doctrine, which it was intended to illustrate and enforce, may, and often is.

The reason of such omissions is obvious. If a teacher were to dwell on circumstances and events unconnected with his main object, the force of his doctrine would evaporate under them. If, for example, in the parable of Lazarus and the rich man, we had the pedigree, the places of abode, the age, &c. of either, or both, of these characters, minutely detailed, we should have a mass of information which would be perfectly useless; and, what is worse, the point intended by the parable would be greatly obscured. The same is necessarily true of all parables: they are short, and unencumbered; because their object is to enforce some one simple truth: and, because their illustrations are intended to be striking, and to have a permanent effect on the mind, they can contain nothing more than what is absolutely necessary for this purpose.

But we may have lengthened parables, or allegories; and, in these, the descriptions may be more lengthy, and more minute. In these cases, therefore, should such exist, all the particulars just adverted to might possibly enter. It is the fact, however, that Holy Scripture contains no such things as allegories, unless we allow this Book of Job—which contains such details—to be one: which would be to take for granted something unknown generally to the sacred writers; and, consequently, would be to beg the question—as it has been termed—in this particular instance. These considerations, therefore, afford us no grounds for concluding that this book is fictitious; and, so far, its history would seem to be that of real life.

The Book of Job then, cannot be a parable; and we have no right to conclude that it is an allegory. Let us now inquire, in the second place, how far its statements, and the allusions made to it by other writers, will bear us out in the opinion that it is real history. In the first place, then, it is particular and full on circumstances, which have nothing whatever to do with the doctrines inculcated by its declarations. We are told, for example, in its very outset, that Job dwelt “in the land of Uz;” which, at the same time, intimates, that he must have been a descendant from a progenitor of that name, as will presently be shewn. But why, it may be asked, are we told this, if the book, with all its declarations, was intended to teach the single virtue of patience, grounded on faith? And, again, why are we told that Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite, were his friends, if nothing more than the doctrine just mentioned was intended to be illustrated and enforced? Surely, these designations, Temanite, Shuhite, and Naamathite, might have been spared, as they certainly ought, unless they were intended to intimate that these persons really had "a local habitation and a name." And, if it should turn out, that some traces of them are to be found in the genealogies of the Bible (which we shall presently shew is the fact), it will become more than probable that they were real characters; and, if this be true, their common friend, Job, can hardly be supposed to have been a fictitious one.

We have, moreover, mention made of the Sabeans, the Chaldeans, and the Wilderness: the two former of which need not have been mentioned, as the word robbers would have much better suited the context, had the subject been merely parabolic; but, the introduction of the latter, in conjunction with the names of these people, gives the whole not more the air of historical narration, than it does of geographical accuracy.

Again, the feasting of the sons and daughters of Job, each on his day; that is, during the period of a week: these sons being seven in number:¹ Job's sending for, and admonishing them; his offering up a sacrifice, at the same time, for each of them,—seems overdone and unnecessary, if all that was wanting was, merely to illustrate the doctrine, that patience was a virtue acceptable to God. For here we are led into particulars, which were not only not Jewish, and which never could have been countenanced by that nation, much less have recommended any doctrine; but, which had nothing whatever to do with the lesson principally taught in this book: and, what is most remarkable, which appear strictly to be historical truths, as it regards the customs of the times in which this work appears to have been written. These customs will be considered hereafter, as will also the arguments usually adduced to shew, that this portion of Scripture is parabolical.

So far, then, this book contains neither parable nor allegory; but is, in all probability, real history. Let us now consider, in the next place, how it has been treated by the sacred writers themselves. We are told in Ezekiel, chap. xiv., more than once, that, though Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in such a place, they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness. As far as we can judge from the manner and context in which this is introduced, all the characters mentioned seem intended to be taken as real. For, first, Job is joined with Noah and Daniel; who were, beyond all doubt, real characters. In the next place, they are all spoken of as real and living men; for it is said, “they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness.” And, in another place (ver. 18), “they shall deliver neither sons nor daughters, but they only shall be delivered themselves.” We hear nothing, indeed, in the Scriptures, of the sons or daughters of Daniel: but we are told of the sons of Noah, and of the sons and daughters of Job. In this last place, therefore, allusion was perhaps made to the daughters of Job only: and, this is made as of real, and not of fictitious, characters. Besides, had either the book, or the character, of Job been parabolic, no such allusion could have been made at all: it would have been vain and futile, and, therefore, what never is done in the Sacred Scriptures.

¹ See the notes on this place.

We have another direct allusion to the character of Job in the Scriptures, and this is in the Epistle of St. James. The words are these (chap. v. 11): “Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord.” No doubt can be entertained on the point, that Job is here cited as a real person; that the patience mentioned is as much the patience of a real man, as the sufferings also mentioned are those of our blessed Lord, and not of any imaginary being.¹

From these considerations, we cannot but conclude that Job was a real person. The circumstances of the narrative are such as are incompatible with the enunciation of parable; and such, therefore, as never can, and never do, accompany

¹ We are told by Bishop Warburton, however (Divine Legation, vol. v. p. 26), that Ezekiel and St. James, although citing the name of Job expressly, “do not refer to the BOOK OF JOB at all.” It is very true, they do not mention the book by name: but, it may be asked, Where was the righteousness of Job to be found in the times of Ezekiel, or the patience, in those of St. James, if it was not in the book which went under his name? That the book was in circulation in the times of St. James, there can be no doubt, from the circumstance that the Greek translation of the LXX. was then well known, and also from St. Paul’s citation of this book. And, if so, it would be an unnecessary, and certainly an unlikely, supposition, that the passage in Ezekiel rested upon the authority of tradition. It is true, indeed, neither St. James, St. Paul, nor Ezekiel, enters into any discussion respecting the character of the Book of Job; but, as they evidently refer to it, or cite it, the book itself must have been considered as truly detailing the circumstances relating to the patriarch.

it. Of allegories the Sacred Scriptures know nothing. The Book of Job, therefore, cannot be an allegory, unless it be supposed to form a very remarkable exception to all the other books of the Bible. But this would be to suppose too much; unless, indeed, we had either very good authority for the supposition, or else very strong arguments for its support. Neither, however, has hitherto been produced; and I presume cannot; and consequently never will.

There is, however, an opinion held by some, — and it has been particularly defended by Bishop Warburton, — which goes to maintain that, although Job himself might have been a real character, still the book bearing his name, and professing to detail the circumstances of his life, might be fictitious and dramatical: in other words, it might, like the tragedies of Æschylus or Shakespeare, contain much of true history, mixed up with other matter of a purely poetical nature, added for the sole purpose of recommending the virtues principally intended to be taught. On this point Bishop Warburton¹ is very earnest and full. The rules given by Aristotle and Horace, for judging of such poetry, are quoted as decisions from which there is no appeal: and, therefore, as all-convincing on this question.

I cannot help thinking, nevertheless, that the whole of this is extremely unhappy: because, we are now judging of a book which, as to style, sentiment, subject, language, and date, is as far removed from every thing of Greek or Latin origin and character, as it is possible to imagine. But this may be got over, could it be shewn that the drama was common to both the East and the West. No such thing, however, can be shewn. Neither the Hebrews, Chaldeans, Syrians, nor Arabians, as far as we know, ever yet entertained any thing like the drama of Greece, or, in the least degree assimilated, either to its dramatic or epic composition.

¹ Divine Legation, ed. 1765, vol. v. pp. 18–25; and, after him, the critics of modern Germany. So Doederlein, as cited by Rosenmüller, Proleg. in Job, p. 8: “Equidem si quid verum video, Jobi memoriam diu conservavit traditio, populare historiarum inter orientales promptuarium, quam scriptor sacer arreptam expolivit . . . velut de Ulysse Homerus, de Ænea Virgilius; multa autem adderet de ingenio suo,” &c. And M. Rosenmüller: “Quod Homerus, Epopeæ parens et tragici apud Græcos olim poætæ factitarunt . . . Quæ vero poætæ ingenio, quæ veræ historiae sint deputanda, nemo hodie nostrum unquam conficiat.”

To attempt, therefore, to judge of the writings of one nation by the laws set up by the writers of another, differing from the former in language, modes of thinking, customs, origin, and date, as widely as can be supposed, appears to me to be an effort as far removed from sound criticism, as it is from the requirements of common sense: and yet, this is the sort of argument most earnestly pressed by Bishop Warburton against the historical character of the Book of Job, and most frequently brought forward by the very learned critics of modern Germany for the same purpose. All I shall now say of this mode of arguing is, that it cannot be relied upon. The particular objections urged, both by the bishop and this school of divines, will be more particularly noticed in the next section.

SECTION II.

THE OBJECTIONS OF BISHOP WARBURTON, AND OTHERS, TO THE STRICTLY HISTORICAL CHARACTER OF THE BOOK OF JOB, EXAMINED.

THESE objections may all be arranged under one head or class, as they consist entirely of passages taken from this book, which, it is said, will not admit of a strictly historical interpretation: and, the inference is, that, as these are not historical in the true sense of the term, neither can the book be which contains them. To this inference, however, even if we allow the premises, very serious objections may be made. For, although we may allow that certain parts of any book may be parabolic, or otherwise figurative, still, we are not at liberty to affirm, that, therefore, the whole work is so. We have parables, for instance, in the gospels: but, are we hence to conclude, that the whole of these books are parabolic; and that nothing like real history is to be found in them? We have, too, in the Book of Judges, Jotham's fable of the trees. Are we, therefore, to conclude that this book contains no true history, but is either totally parabolic, or else written upon the model of the drama of Greece or Rome? The man would be considered scarcely in his senses, who should make such an assertion as this; and yet he would do neither more nor less than what has been done by Bishop Warburton, and his followers, with this Book of Job. But let us come to the particulars, and consider the objections themselves in detail.

The first, and perhaps the most formidable, passage of this sort is found in the first chapter of the Book of Job, and is repeated in the second. It is to this effect: On a certain day the sons of God presented themselves before Jehovah: at the same time, and in the same place, *Satan*¹ also presented himself. A dialogue took place between God and the accusing spirit, in which the latter is said to have been walking up and down in the earth, &c. All of which, it is affirmed, must be fictitious and parabolical.

My reply to this is: It is very far from certain, that even this must be fictitious. It is, I am well aware, extremely easy to say that any thing which may appear strange or unintelligible to us, must be either fictitious or poetical; and, hence to conclude, that every thing connected with it must be fictitious likewise: because, forsooth, certain portions of the Greek and Latin authors can be made out in no other way! It becomes us, however, carefully to inquire, whether this is the case; because, should we happen to be wrong, it will avail but little to urge in excuse, that the classic authors can be viewed in no other light. In the present case, there certainly is enough in our hands to enable us to take a different, and, perhaps, a more correct, view of this question; and this we now proceed to consider.

¹ It is a favourite notion with the divines of modern Germany that, because this word (Satan) does not occur in this sense in the earliest books of the Bible, it must have been adopted by the Jews when in Babylon, in imitation of the Chaldean theology; and then to argue that, because this is the case, every book in which it is found is of a date subsequent to the captivity: which clearly is a mere assumption. So Winer (Lex. Simon.) and Gesenius, sub voce, "In libris post exilium Babylonicum scriptis."—"Genius malus in recentiorum Judæorum theologia," &c. Michaelis, however, has well remarked that, although this word does not appear in those elder books, it cannot thence be argued that it was not in use. (See Rosenmüller, in loc.) The argument is, therefore, good for nothing. I remark, although the word (שָׂטָן) does not occur in this sense, the doctrine on which it is founded does; and this, among the very earliest of scriptural declarations. For, in Gen. iii. 15, it is said, "I will put enmity (אֶתְנִיב) between thee and the woman," &c.: which virtually constituted the Tempter an enemy (אֶתְנִיב, a term synonymous with שָׂטָן, and occasionally used in the same sense). We are then told, that the woman's seed (which, St. Paul tells us, is Christ) should bruise the serpent's, that is, this enemy's head; and the author of the book of the Revelation expressly tells us, that this serpent is, the Devil and Satan. We need not, therefore, be sent to Chaldea for the notion included in this term: and, if we were, it is more than any one of these very learned men can do to prove, that this notion was conveyed under the term שָׂטָן by the Chaldean philosophers. The whole, therefore, of this very erudite matter rests on assumptions which have no foundation.

The objections to the passage alluded to, seem to be grounded on the assumption, that the events mentioned could not have really taken place. I am inclined to believe, however, that, in whatever light we view these events, the objections themselves will have no weight. For, in the first place, it is no new thing with the sacred writers, even in these early days, to speak of revelations of the Almighty, of angels, and of the tempter of mankind, in terms the most simple and positive. Take, for example, the instances in which God is said to have conversed with the father of mankind, and, on one occasion, in the presence of the tempter.¹ On another, He appeared to Cain; and, on several others, He either appeared, or made revelations to Noah, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: and, in one instance, apparently accompanied by angels.² Rebekah too, we read, went to inquire of the Lord:³ and the revelation given to Jacob at Bethel, afforded a vision of the Almighty attended by his angels.⁴ It might be added, the account of the Creation, given in the early part of Genesis, must have been matter of Divine revelation, at what period soever we suppose it to have been given. My own opinion is, that it was given as such to the patriarchs: my reasons will appear hereafter. And, if this be the case, we need not be surprised at revelations of this sort being made before the times of Job; and the doctrine respecting angels, both good and bad, being known long before the captivity.

If, then, we suppose the first two chapters of this book to have been written as early as the times of Job (and these times we shall presently fix), their contents will present no difficulty whatever, if we suppose them to contain matter of revelation given for the purpose of affording a key to the whole work. It is true we are not told in so many words, when, or in what particular way, this revelation was given; but the same might be said of the revelations made to Cain, to Noah, to Abram, and, on some occasions, to Isaac and Jacob. If it was here given by vision, as happened on one occasion to Abraham,¹ to Abimelech,² to Laban,³ and to Jacob,⁴ all will be easy and obvious. And, as we can see why this revelation was made, viz. to enable the reader to ascribe the events occurring in the history to their just causes; and thence to see, as he went on, what the mistakes of Job's friends were, we need no more wonder at what has been termed the extraordinary matter occurring in this portion of the book.

¹ Gen. iii. 9-20. ² Ib. xviii. ³ Ib. xxv. 22. ⁴ Ib. xxviii. 12, &c.

I am of opinion, however (and for this my reasons will presently be given), that this portion of the book, together with the last chapter, was written after the times of Job, and that it was the production of Moses. In his days, we are told more than once, that God appeared and made revelations to him, and to the whole people of Israel, either by open declarations, or by means of the Urim and Thummim, in whatever way this last was effected. I am inclined, moreover, to believe, that the revelation now alluded to, was given by vision, detailing the matter just as we find it recorded. Of this sort was the vision of Jacob at Bethel,⁵ and of Micaiah the son of Imlah.⁶ In this last, too, we have the agency of an evil spirit adverted to, just as we have in the Book of Job; and this spirit likewise engaged in converse with the Almighty: and all before the Babylonian captivity!

Whether these visions exhibited what actually took place, or only afforded a representation of something intended to be taught, is another question, and one on which I have already stated my opinion.⁷ All that was necessary on this, or any other similar occasion, was, that something should be held up to the mind of the person so favoured, sufficient to impart the truths intended to be recorded; which, when recorded,

¹ Gen. xv. 1-12.

² Ib. xx. 3.

³ Ib. xxxi. 24.

⁴ Ib. xxviii. 12-17. We have moreover a vision mentioned in Job, iv. 12-21, and probably again in chap. vii. 14. In ch. xxxviii. 1, &c. we have the appearance of Jehovah in the whirlwind; which exhibits a revelation in no way more wonderful or incredible than any of the preceding, or of the revelation afforded to Moses more than once on Mount Sinai.

⁵ Gen. xxviii. 12.

⁶ 1 Kings, xxii. 17-23.

⁷ My Sermons and Dissertations, p. 232, and note on ch. i. 6, below.

would be real history; that is, of such things as composed the vision, and not parable or allegory: and such were the visions¹ of Moses and the elders, Exod. xxiv. 10, of Isa. vi. 1, Ezek. i., &c. Zech. i. 8, Rev. i. &c. given, as it should seem, for the purpose of stamping those scriptures with authority.

If, then, this be the case, the exhibition alluded to can in no way injure the historical character of the Book of Job, no more than the visions and revelations just noticed do the historical character of the books in which they are found. And if this portion was committed to writing some time after the body of the work itself was, and for the purpose of affording a key to its scope and meaning; and if this was done by an inspired person; so far will it be from adding any thing obscure or fictitious to the character of the work, that, on the contrary, it will constitute one of its most instructive and valuable portions. The language used, indeed, may seem to savour of the marvellous, and appear strange to persons unaccustomed to such statements; it ought, however, to be remembered, that Holy Writ universally takes its stand on superhuman agency. From its first to its last verse it argues from this as from a point not to be disputed; and, whether it propose mercies, or denounce vengeance, these, as they take their rise, so do they their fulfilment, from the exertion of powers in every respect superhuman.

¹ Of this sort of vision, I think the account of the creation of Eve presents an instance, Gen. ii. 21, where we are told that God caused a deep sleep (rather an ecstasy, עֲרֵצוּת LXX. ἔκστασις) to fall upon Adam. It is added, עָרַם אָדָם וַיִּשָׁכַב and he slept; which taken prægnanti sensu, may signify, and he dreamt. (Compare 1 Kings, xix. 5, and Job, iv. 13, where Eliphaz has a similar vision.) The account goes on, "And he took one of his ribs," &c. i. e. so the affair appeared to Adam, whether in fact it was so or not. And, accordingly, we are told in the next verse, that "Adam said, This is now bone of my bone. . . . Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother . . . and they shall be one flesh." Adam, it should seem, had in his ecstasy witnessed this process; and hence, as soon as Eve was brought to him, he made this declaration, and for the obvious end of ratifying marriage as a rite instituted by God himself, in which the persons joined should for ever be considered as inseparably one. (Comp. Matt. xix. 5-9; Mark, x. 6-10; 1 Cor. vi. 16.) If this may be relied on, this contract, considered as a mere civil rite, is heathenish, and in direct opposition to God's revealed word.—Ephrem Syrus, speaking of the appearance of Satan here, says, אֲדָמָה בְּיָמֵינוּ אֶתְּחַלְּלֵנָּהּ וְעַתָּה אֶתְּחַלְּלֵנָּהּ. Just as he stood at the right hand of Joshua the son of Josedeck.—Which certainly was in a vision. The "sons of God," he thinks, represented Job and his children.—Milton took the account of Eve's creation in the same way.

Another objection usually brought against the consideration of this book's being historical is, that it is not only written in measured verse, but also partakes of all that fervour and feeling which constitute real poetry.¹ With regard to the first of these objections it may be said, that hitherto no one has been able to shew that this book, or, indeed, any other in the Hebrew Bible, is written in measured verse. Jerome, it is true, makes the assertion that this is the case;² but then he does not confine the remark to the Book of Job; he extends it to the Psalms, Lamentations, and some other parts of the Hebrew Scriptures. Still, the assertion is worth nothing, as neither Jerome nor any other person could, or can to this very day, give proof of its truth. The whole must, therefore, stand for nothing.

¹ Warburton's Divine Legation, vol. v. p. 15. Rosenmülleri Prolegomena in Jobum. 1824, p. 6, &c. The words of Rosenmüller are: "Num tibi credibile fiat, miserum hominem, merore confectum, ac morbo superincumbente jam absumptum et seminecem, eum inquam, velut pro concione diceret, sermones adeo longos tanto apparatu, tanta copia, tot figurarum luminibus distinctos, quin et metri legibus adstrictos, cum familiaribus habuisse?" But, at page 900 of the very same work, we have: "Veterum autem Hebræorum metricam restituendi conatum quod attinet, memi facio Roberti Lowthi iudicium. . . . Quod ad veros versuum Hebræicorum numeros, et rhythmum et modulationem attinet, id omne et penitus ignotum esse, et nulla unquam arte aut industria humana investigari posse, ex ipsa rei natura satis apparet. Manifestum est, antiquam et veram Hebræicam pronuntiandi rationem omnino esse ignotam," &c. Although, therefore, the versification of Job is sufficient, in the Preface, to rank the book among fictitious productions; yet, when the question about Hebrew poetry comes to be mooted, it turns out that M. Rosenmüller believes in the existence of no such thing!

² "Job, exemplar patientiæ, quæ non mysteria suo sermone complectitur? Prosa incipit, versu labitur, pedestri sermone finitur."—Epist. ad Paulinum. And again, in his Preface to the Book of Job: "A principio itaque voluminis usque ad verba Job, apud Hebræos prosa oratio est. Porro a verbis Job, in quibus ait: Pereat dies . . . usque ad eum locum, ubi ante finem voluminis scriptum est: idcirco me reprehendo. . . . hexametri versus sunt dactylo spondæoque currentes, et propter linguæ idioma crebro recipientes et alios pedes, non earundem syllabarum, sed eorundem temporum, &c." . . . "Quod si cui videtur incredulum, metra scilicet esse apud Hebræos, et in morem nostri Flacci, Græciq[ue] Pindari, et Alcaei, et Sapphus, vel Psalterium, vel Lamentationes Hieremiæ, vel omni ferme scripturarum cantica comprehendit, legat Philonem, Josephum, Origenem, Cæsariensem Eusebium, et eorum testimonio me verum dicere comprobabit." Is it not a pity that Jerome did not give his own proof?

As to the other assertion, viz. that the style of the book is lofty and full of pathos, this cannot be adduced to prove that the whole must be fictitious, unless it can also be shewn, that representations of real life can never partake of feeling and lofty sentiment; which is absurd. But, why it should at all be supposed that bold and masterly writing must necessarily be fictitious, is to me utterly unaccountable; for, if revelation was given to raise and refine the mind of man, Why, I want to know, might it not partake of the loftiest flights which genius, co-operating with inspiration, could supply? Is it necessary that truth be dull, rapid, and insipid; while falsehood or fiction alone shall boast of the nobler properties of elegance, sublimity, and strength? I must confess I can see no necessity whatever for such a supposition as this; and when I find the Hebrew Bible exhibiting the finest specimens both of the sublime and beautiful ever witnessed, without at all affecting the truth of its narratives, or the justness of its sentiments, I am compelled to conclude that the objection alluded to is founded on ignorance and folly of the grossest sort.

I shall pass over the objection grounded on the seven days' silence of Job and his friends, as mentioned upon their first meeting, because the expression seven days seems to have been intended to signify nothing more than a considerable length of time; and the silence, only that no particular inquiries had yet been made on the subject; and both to have been introduced to mark the general surprise and sorrow felt by these three friends, at seeing Job in so miserable a condition.¹ But, when I am told that the conduct of these friends is inexplicable upon the supposition that this book is real history, but allowable if we suppose it to be dramatical, I am bound to ask, How can this be made to appear?

The answer is, that they entirely forget their errand, and, instead of mourning with him "in the bitterness of his soul, they wrangle and contradict him in every word he speaks; and this without the least softening of friendship, but with all the fierceness and acrimony of angry disputants contending for a victory."² But," it is added, "suppose now the

¹ Rosenm. Proleg. p. 8. Warburton, lib. cit. p. 16, &c.

² This, ungrounded as it is, seems to have been thought too good by Rosenmüller not to be brought forward again, and retailed with interest. His work to be dramatical, and we immediately see the reason of their behaviour. For, had they not been indulged in their strange captious humour, the author never could have produced a piece of that integrity of action which a scenic representation demanded." And again, "We shall shew, when we come to examine the moral of the poem, that nature is exactly followed; for, that under these three miserable comforters, how true friends soever in the fable, certain false friends were intended to be shadowed out in the moral."¹

I have been the more particular in giving these objections in their author's own words, because since his times they have been repeated again and again as incontrovertible. Let us now consider them in the order in which they are given. In the first place, then, we are told that these friends seem entirely to have forgotten their errand, and to have commenced a system of wrangling and contradiction, such as to shew, that they were far more intent upon victory than upon consoling their afflicted friend. I would only ask here, Is not this a little overdone? These friends do, indeed, dispute with Job on the cause of his calamity; but are the terms used of so acrimonious and unfeeling a character, as to warrant the conclusion here arrived at? I doubt this. Again, as these three friends were manifestly believers in God's sovereignty and goodness; Was it, I would ask, incompatible with the office of true friendship, to endeavour to ascertain, and thence to remove, the causes which might have led to Job's calamities? Their endeavour appears to me to have been a most rational one, and well timed. That they laboured under considerable mistake, is certain from the words of the Almighty himself: but then, it was a mistake to which all men are liable; and, if we only consider the little light afforded in those early days on subjects so very abstruse as this is, we shall not wonder, perhaps, to find these men so much mistaken. Besides, although their error is pointed out and reprobated, their evil dispositions words are: "Quis interea locus perditissimorum nebulonum, misera viri sanctissimi clade exsultantium, sannis, triumphis, contumeliis, quibus se undique, nec semel impetitum queritur?" I would merely ask, would M. Rosenmüller have so readily taken all this upon trust, had it not tended materially to advance the views of his school?

¹ Warburton, lib. cit. pp. 18-21; Rosenmüller, ib. p. 3.

and conduct are never so much as once mentioned, or even hinted at. I am disposed, therefore, to view their characters in a light a little different from that mentioned above; and to believe that, however they erred in word or deed, their intentions were good and sincere; and, farther, that their conduct was strictly in unison with the sentiment delivered by the Psalmist: "Let the righteous smite me; it shall be a kindness: and let him reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head."¹ True friendship does not necessarily consist in the use of none but smooth words; and, if it be supposed that a friend is suffering through ignorance or error, it will not, perhaps, be amiss to use a little sharpness,² for the purpose of relieving him from his sufferings. In the case before us, no such acrimony can be shewn to have been evinced, as the extract above made would imply. All that can be said is, that these friends are importunate and in earnest in framing and urging arguments, which, it appears, are not well founded.

We may now examine the remaining statements just cited. It is implied, then, that these characters are unnatural, if we suppose the work to be historical; but natural, if we suppose it to be dramatical: that these men may be considered friends, as far as the fable is concerned; but false, that is, really foes, as far as the moral is. I am inclined to think, that we have a little misapprehension here, which has grown out of distinctions no where really existing. We are told, that it would be unnatural in history

¹ Psalm cxli. 5: compare Prov. ix. 8; xix. 25; xxv. 12; Eccles. vii. 5. Nothing is more common than sentiments of this sort among the Arabian moralists. Elnawabig, for example, edit. H. A. Schultens, 1772, has the following:

وجد قريبًا يناصره وطن قرآنًا يناطكه

"Invenit socium, qui sincere admoncat; putavitque esse cornu, quod cum impeteret."

And again:

ما منع قول الناصح ان يروقك وهو الذي يتصح خروقك

"Quid impedit dictum sincere monentis, quo minus placeat tibi?
Quum is utique sit, qui consuat laceras restes tuas."

² 2 Cor. xiii. 10; Titus, i. 13. Mr. Good carries the matter here much farther. He tells us (p. xxvi. of his Dissertation), that "the patriarch's friends, stimulated unquestionably by the secret impulse of Satan, have agreed, &c. . . and so make Job's cup of agony brimful!"

to find persons pretending to be friends, who really were enemies; but that, in the drama, this would be both natural, and calculated to keep up integrity in the action: which, we are to infer, constitutes a considerable part of the decorum, the τὸ πρῆξιον of Aristotle, &c. Surely it might have occurred to Bishop Warburton, that nothing is more common in real life than the fact of pretended friendship, offered by persons who are real enemies; and that real history abounds with relations of this sort. And again, that the drama, poetical fiction, and the like, are interesting and good, only in proportion as they represent the incidences of real life, or the occurrences of real history. How this very ingenious writer could have allowed himself to argue in this absurd way, or how his very learned admirers of the Neologian school of Germany, could have adopted reasoning so obviously weak and foolish, I leave it to others to determine.

Let us now see how this matter is managed under the moral intended. We are told, then, that “these things are very discordant, if understood of one and the same person; and can never be reconciled but on the supposition of an allegorical reference to another character: and on that,” it is added, “all will be right.”¹ In addition, then, to the drama, with which we originally set out, we now have allegory to deal with! and a more slippery and fugitive thing, perhaps, could not have been thought of. In this, Job, although allowed to be a real personage, is made to sustain the character of the Jewish people; his wife, that of the heathen; his daughters, that of the daughters of Ismael; and his three friends, those of SANBALLAT, TOBIAH, and GESHEM.² And we are then told, that “the marks of resemblance between the allegorical and real persons, are many and strong.”³ In order, therefore, to reconcile these characters to the decorum necessary, and to good writing, we are now, not to have recourse to the drama only, as taught and exhibited among the Greeks and Latins, but to

¹ Divine Legation, ib. p. 68, &c.

² Nehem. ii. 10, 19, &c.

³ Divine Legation, lib. cit. p. 85. I would ask, if these resemblances are many and strong, as here affirmed, how does it happen that the patience and piety of Job, which this book so evidently teaches, are never to be found in the history of the Jewish people at all? One would have supposed, that the great character sustained by Job would have found a strong resemblance in an allegorical drama,—a new thing in the earth, such as eye hath not seen, nor ear hitherto heard of! And all for the purpose of recommending an hypothesis, palpably at war with the text, and, indeed, with every sentiment delivered in this ancient and venerable book! It certainly would be a waste of words, to set about refuting the many and extraordinary puerilities here advanced for the support of this hypothesis; as it also would, to consider the many and strong resemblances said to mark respectively these real and allegorical characters. I will spare myself the pains, therefore, and my readers the mortification which they could not but experience, in being dragged through an exposure of the failings of this very able, but whimsical man.—I will only remark, that all this is perfectly accountable on the supposition (which is, indeed, the fact), that the principles of Scriptural interpretation were but ill understood during the times of this bold and highly theoretic popular writer; and, that to this circumstance must all the extraordinary positions just adverted to be ascribed.

There are, moreover, some other things, which it is thought could never have occurred in real history; such as the round and doubled numbers found in the several accounts of Job's children, his sheep, camels, oxen, his she-asses, and the years of his own life. His sons, we are told, are seven; his daughters three, which are sacred numbers: these cannot, therefore, be considered as real. Again, his sheep are seven thousand in number; his camels, three thousand; his oxen are one thousand; his she-asses are five hundred, just the one-half of his oxen! These, again, in the days of his last prosperity, are all doubled; and, what is still less likely, he is favoured with seven other sons, and three daughters, by the wife who had been mother of the first, who must now have been an old woman, and who was, at best, far from being a blessing to her husband.¹

this case at least. The truth is, however, there is nothing like a resemblance to be found. And again, if the history of the Jews was thus to be portrayed, how is it to be accounted for, that not so much as one notice, no, nor even allusion, to that people is to be found throughout the whole work? Once more, if we are to go on interpreting the Holy Scriptures by fancied resemblances such as these, where is it likely we shall end, particularly if we can satisfy ourselves with such resemblances as those just noticed?

¹ Rosenmüller, Proleg. in Job, p. 5.

This is, indeed, a large list of objections, and seems at first sight a very formidable one. Upon a little consideration, however, we shall find that it only seems so; the fact being, that this is nothing more than what is constantly found in real history. In the first place, then, as to the round numbers found in these several statements. It would be a work of supererogation, certainly, to prove that historians do universally use round numbers in their details of armies, population, and the like. But suppose we had, in these enumerations, instead of seven thousand sheep, seven thousand four hundred and fifty-three, of which two thousand three hundred and twenty-six were lambs, and so on of the rest; Would the account have now appeared more truly historical, and less fictitious, than it does at present? I think not. Besides, the objection would now have been, that all this was too precise to savour of truth; that there was a particularity about it, which was sufficient to shew that the whole was false. In this case, therefore, we have just what might have been expected, and indeed what we always have in real history; and, so far, we have nothing to dread from these statements.

In the next place, we are told that the numbers seven and three are sacred, or mysterious; and, therefore, it is unlikely that the relation is strictly historical. My reply is, the number seven is certainly used by the Hebrews to signify many indefinitely, in perhaps more cases than any other. But then, this grew out of appointments over which that nation could exercise no control. The observance of weeks consisting of seven days, seems to be quite as ancient as the times of creation;¹ and hence, mention is made of that period in the times of Noah. The circumstance of the clean animals being preserved in the ark by sevens, seems to intimate nothing more than a sufficient provision for the purposes of sacrifice; for we read, that on Noah's leaving the ark, he took of these and sacrificed to the Lord. In after times the feast of weeks occurring after seven whole weeks had been numbered from the passover, with one additional day; as well as the observance of the seventh month for the feast of tabernacles; to which may be added the sabbatical years and jubilees, constituted periods which were sacred, indeed, but which depended not on man for their appointment. And, as we have reason to believe, that these particular periods were intended to keep up the memory of the six days' work of creation, and of the seventh day's rest, we need not be surprised at this number being more frequently in use than some others among the Jews, or at its being particularly marked even in the times of Job.

¹ See my Sermon on the Sabbath, with the notes, second edition.

The use of the number three, however, is far more limited, and occurs, perhaps, less frequently in both Testaments than many others, which confessedly have nothing sacred about them. I deny, however, that any thing like a superstitious use is made of either of these numbers in the Holy Scriptures. What modern Jews may do in these cases, it concerns not me to inquire. But, were we disposed to make the inquiry, we should find, perhaps, as well among them as among the heathen (of whom they now really constitute a part), that scarcely any number has not, first or last, been applied to superstitious purposes, and may, therefore, be termed sacred.

But, if some of these numbers happen to fall in with those of seven and three; How does it happen, supposing the whole to be fictitious, that all the other numbers are not of this sacred character? How is it, that the oxen were one thousand in number, and the she-asses five hundred? Are these also sacred numbers? No; but then five hundred is just the half of one thousand. And, Is this a sacred fraction? or, Are any of the other numbers thus regulated? No such thing! And, after all, there is, perhaps, quite as great a variety in the numbers here given, as there is in any historical work whatsoever; and all that can be said of the objection is, that it is made merely because these numbers are not different from what they are; and may, with just as good a grace, be made to any other numbers whatsoever, and to every real history in the world!

Again, it is likewise incredible that these round, mysterious, &c. numbers could be exactly doubled, as stated in the latter times of Job's prosperity, if his work contains real history. My answer is, as round numbers would most naturally be used in the first instance, nothing can be more probable than that, if Job's wealth was believed to be about double what it was at first, these round numbers would be doubled, without its being at all intended to give the exact numbers in either case. And again, as this book is, from first to last, manifestly extraordinary, and intended at once to exemplify the particular providence and goodness of God, and the faith and patience of Job, Where, I would ask, is the impropriety in supposing, that the whole took place just, or nearly so, as it is here related? If, indeed, there was nothing extraordinary in the history, Why was the book written? And, if the power of God, as manifested here in bringing about these wonderful events, is not to be inculcated—whatever heathens or heathenish men may think to the contrary—Why, I want to know, was any thing like a revelation ever made to man at all? If the judgment of Aristotle and Horace is to regulate our notions on these subjects, quite sure I am that every thing of this sort will soon be discarded among us.

That Job's family, health, wealth, and friends, would be restored with considerable increase, is to me extremely probable, if the book was intended to bear out the intimations given of it in the first two chapters; namely, that Almighty God allowed his servant to be tried, both to shew to the world a good instance of the triumph of faith, and of his faithfulness towards believers. That all this should be diluted and softened down to suit the decorum of heathenism, the rules of epic or dramatic poetry, and to carry with it nothing more powerful and animating than the poetic decorum of Homer, Æschylus, &c. is to my mind as monstrous as the position, that revealed religion, with the evidences which accompany it, is both impossible and incongruous:—a conclusion at which Warburton's admirers in Germany have long ago arrived.

But as to the term double here used: this—so far from having appeared objectionable to the sacred writers who lived after the times of Job—seems particularly to have recommended itself to their minds. When, for example, we find the expressions, “She hath received double for all her sins” (Isa. xl. 2); “For your shame you shall have double ;” “in their land they shall possess the double” (Isa. lxi. 7), and the like; Where are we to look for their illustration or origin, if not in the Book of Job? That a thief should restore double, we learn in the law; but this can have nothing to do with these passages of Isaiah : the subject is altogether of a different sort. They were, therefore, in all probability, taken from Job's history, and intended to be considered as allusions to it ; for, on no other supposition that I know of can they be accounted for.

There is still one objection more. The aged wife of Job is made the mother of a second family : which is incredible. I only ask, — Is it any where said, that this aged wife was the mother of the second family ? No : this is all assumed : because, forsooth, we are never told of Job's second marriage ! Are we, then, according to the rules of good criticism, to conclude any thing we may please, whenever we are not specifically informed to the contrary ? We are not told, for example, that our first parents had any daughters. Are we, then to conclude, that it was impossible for either Cain or Abel to have had wives ; and then, in consequence, that the book of Genesis is a mere fable, or drama ? For my own part, I see no improbability whatever in supposing that Job married a second wife, and by her had this second family ; and of this, I think, we have some intimation in this book.¹

After some complaints, Job is represented as saying, in one instance ; “ Why, then, should I think upon a maid, or virgin ? ” Which, as it appears to me, can be understood on no other supposition, than that his friends had pointed out to him the probability of his being restored to his former prosperity. If so, he must now have lost his first wife, as well as his first children. Upon his restoration, therefore, both to family and friends, he must have contracted a second marriage. Nor is it probable, that a woman so impious as his first wife manifestly was, would be permitted — under circumstances regulated by the immediate superintendence of a particular Providence — to see Job's latter days of abundance and prosperity. Nothing is, indeed, said about her to this effect ; still, this may be presumed of her. Jacob's daughter, Dinah, seems to have been lost sight of much in the same way ; and, apparently, because she evinced strong inclinations to idolatry, and towards idolators.²

¹ Chap. xxxi. 1

² Gen. xxxiv.

Another objection to the historical character of this book has been found in the circumstances related in its thirtieth chapter. Here, Monsieur Boullier is of opinion, that much more is related than could possibly have taken place from the commencement of Job's calamities, and the period in which his friends came to visit and condole with him. This objection, too, Dr. Rosenmüller adopts without either hesitation or examination.¹ I must be allowed, however, to ask, in the first place, upon what grounds the conclusion is arrived at, that all this happened within the period alluded to? because, I can see no reason whatever for its adoption. I have read this chapter again and again; and, I must confess I can see nothing more in it, than a continuation of the twenty-ninth, in which a comparison is instituted between Job's former prosperity and his present troubles; but nothing whatever to limit it to the period mentioned. Nor do I find one word in the Scholia of Rosenmüller, on either, or both, of these chapters, so much as noticing, much less justifying, any such conclusion. I must conclude, therefore, that the whole is a mere fancy, as groundless as it is unworthy of its author, in the first place, and of its adopter, Rosenmüller, in the second.

The last objection which I shall notice under this head, is, How can it be supposed that a person so greatly afflicted as Job was, could ever have composed discourses so elegant, and so elaborate, as those which are attributed to him in this book; not to insist upon the others, put into the mouths of his friends! This seems to exceed probability, at least. I answer, — We are told, that Job lived one hundred and forty years after his restoration. If then, we allow, that his affliction exhibited a state ill suited to such composition; Is it also necessary to allow that, on his return to health, he would still remain equally ill qualified for such a task? “Oh,” said he, on one occasion, “that my words were now written; oh, that they were printed in a book!”² On his return to health and comfort, still retaining his integrity, and with it, in all probability, a deep sense of the goodness by which he had been restored, one can hardly suppose he would be less anxious that both his sufferings and his joys should be recorded. And, if so, I can see no necessity, I must confess, for calling in some poet here to do the needful for him. This objection, therefore, is quite groundless. It supposes, as in other cases already noticed, what is unnecessary: and then proceeds, at once, to condemn what it has mistaken. It is, therefore, perfectly futile.

¹ Proleg. in Job. p. 7.

² Job, xix. 23, 24.

Having ascertained, then, that the objections usually advanced against the strictly historical character of this book are groundless and light; we may now proceed to inquire, in the next place, whether the place and times, in which it is either said, or implied, that this patriarch lived, may or may not be appealed to, as confirmatory of the supposition, that he was a real character.

SECTION III.

ON THE QUESTIONS — WHERE, AND AT WHAT PERIOD, JOB LIVED?

It has been remarked already, that it is not usual with the sacred writers to speak either of the time or place in which the characters introduced into parables are supposed to have lived. It was enough for them to say,—There was a certain man, &c.; or, A certain man did this or that. In the case before us, however, we are told that Job dwelt in the land of Uz: that is, in the country which had received its appellation from a patriarch of that name. And, if so, we are provided, as formerly noticed, with a clue to the family from which Job himself was descended; if, indeed, we are at liberty to suppose (as we undoubtedly are) that this country — wherever it was — still remained in the family of its first possessor.

Having, then, found a clue to the family of our patriarch, it may be worth while to follow it; for, if we can by this means ascertain in what parts the first branches of this family settled; and, if we find them fixed in the very parts to which our history assigns them; we shall then have pretty good reason for concluding, that we have arrived at the true facts of this case. And if, in addition to this, we find certain collateral branches of this family also fixing their habitations in, or near, the same parts, and of which our history also takes notice; our conclusion,—that the whole is real history—will be as strong and decisive as the nature of the case can require.

To begin, then, with the earliest intimations we have in the Bible of the founders of these families. In the tenth chapter of the book of Genesis, we have an account of the descendants of the three sons of Noah, Shem, Ham, and Japheth.¹ With the descendants of Japheth we have now nothing to do: these, manifestly, occupied countries far removed from our scene of action. We next come to the family of Ham; and in this we find Sheba (mentioned with Dedan),² who was probably the ancestor of the Sheba (not “the Sabæans”) mentioned in the book of Job as the murderers of his servants, and the persons who carried away his oxen and asses.³

In Genesis, xxv. 3, we have further mention of this Sheba (and Dedan); and here he is said to have been a descendant of Abraham by Keturah. Abraham, however, was descended from Shem, not from Ham; but Sheba, as just observed, was a descendant of Ham; which could not be the fact, if his descent came through the male line of Abraham. Keturah, however, might have been descended from Ham, and Sheba here have been assigned to the house of Ham through her; for she was probably a Canaanite, and hence descended from Ham. This, I suppose then, was the case. We are told again, in another place,¹ that Abraham gave gifts to the sons of the concubines,—of which Keturah must have been one,—and sent them away eastward into the east country. Sheba, therefore, and *Shuah*² (also a son of Keturah, and with these only are we now concerned), must have been sent to fix their habitations in those parts.

¹ What parts of the earth were inhabited and named after these founders, has been ably and ingeniously shewn by the very learned Samuel Bochart, in his work entitled “Canaan,” which the student cannot too often read.

² Recited with Uz, Tema, Buz, &c. in Jer. xxv. 20, 23, as situated not far from each other. “Sed et ab eodem Buz,” says Spanheim, Hist. Jobi. p. 476, “videtur Busum vel Busan Castellum appellatum apud Ammanum, situm haud longè a Singaris Mesopotamiæ, et ab Euphrate fluvio.” The countries, therefore, both of Uz and Buz, as well as that of Nachor, their father, were all situated nearly together, either on the western or eastern side of the Euphrates. We find an account of this Tema, too, in Koehler’s Abulfeda’s Syria, p. 14, note 65. And we also have a place named Taima, in the 74th verse of the Moallakat Poem of Amrulkeis, which the scholiast says (ed. Hengstenberg) was an ancient city of Arabia.

³ Job, i. 15. “Nec,” says Spanheim, Hist. Jobi. p. 100, “prædones Σαβæων apud Strabonem, alii sunt quàm incolæ Sabæ urbis memoratæ.” Bochart was, therefore, greatly mistaken, when he made these the same people with the Sabæans of Arabia Felix; as did also our own translators. The one people appears to be termed Seba שַׁבָּא or שַׁבְּא, the other Sheba שַׁבְּאָ. Both Pliny and Strabo confound the Sheba and Seba, calling both Sabæans; which arose from the circumstance, that neither the Greeks nor Latins have a letter equal in sound to the Hebrew שַׁ. sh.

Let us now come to the ancestry of Job. In Genesis, x. 23, we find Uz (עֲזָרָה) mentioned as a descendant of Shem. And again, in chap. xxii. 21, he is said to have been a son of Nahor by his wife Milcah, and a brother of Chesed, the progenitor of the Chaldeans, or rather Chasdim—a party of whom is made (Job, i. 17) to sally out, and lay violent hands upon the servants and camels of Job: and, if we may rely on the supposition, that Job was a descendant of Uz, we may that he was also of Nahor the brother of Abraham. Again, we are told, Genesis, x. 30, that the descendants of Shem, of which this Uz was one, had their dwelling “from Mesha, as thou goest to Sephar, a mount of the east;” which corresponds with what we are told of Job himself, where it is said, that he was richer than all the children of the east;¹ manifestly implying that he was an inhabitant of the country so called.

¹ Genesis, xxv. 6.

² Genesis, xxv. 2, from whom we have Bildad the Shuhite. Strabo (lib. xvi. § 8) tells us, too, of a fortress built by Σαῦχος, in the midland of Arabia, who must have been a person of eminence in that country. It may not be amiss here to notice a few very common and very glaring errors, which have exerted considerable influence on the historical parts of this work. Mr. Good tells us (p. iii. of his Dissertation), that, as the sacred history breaks off abruptly with Ishmael, we are compelled, in order to fill up the chasm, to have recourse to the Arabian historians. He tells us in another place (p. v.), of Keturah's sons being fixed in Najd, and in another (p. vii.), that some of the tribes, the Koreish in particular, can trace their own pedigree "with unimpeachable accuracy to Adnan, . . . and with some diversity . . . to Ishmael himself!" I will only say, Mr. Good must either have known very little about the authority of Arabian history, or else must have had a facility of belief by no means desirable to the business of criticism. In another place (p. xiv.), Mr. Good appeals to the Koran, as having retained by tradition some true notices respecting the character of Job. But was Mr. Good not aware that the Koran is a mere spurious production—a miserable, lame, vapid imitation of the Christian Scriptures? and, upon the whole, that one syllable of real ancient history which may be depended on in a question like this, exists not in all the books now to be found in all the east? Mr. Good relied, no doubt, on Richardson, who has left us a splendid Dissertation on Eastern Literature, &c. prefixed to his Dictionary; but neither is the Dissertation, nor the Dictionary as Richardson left it, to be relied upon in any case.

We have now, therefore, Sheba, Dedan, Tema, Buz, Shuah, Chesed, and Uz, all fixing their habitations in those parts which are usually termed “the east,” or “the east country,” in the Hebrew Bible.² We can consequently have no difficulty in supposing, that the family of Job, of Sheba, Shuah, Buz, and Chesed, or the Chaldeans, were sufficiently near to one another, to make it extremely easy for them to associate either for friendly or unfriendly purposes; and, as we know, from the testimony of both ancient and modern times, that these tribes were much addicted to robbery,³ the circumstances of their associating with Job, or of attacking his property, look exceedingly like historical truths.

Let us now endeavour to ascertain from other authorities where these parts lay. In the fifth book of the geography of Ptolemy, we have the *Αἰσίται*¹ (Aisitæ), who are, in all probability, the persons inhabiting the χώρα ἢ Δῦσις of the LXX. translators of Job. Ptolemy places these people in the neighbourhood of the Cauchabeni, and separates them from Chaldea by a ridge of mountains. In the same neighbourhood we find a town called Sabe;² another, Themma; another, Saccæa; the first and last of which were probably the residences of the Sheba already alluded to, and the descendants of Shuah, respectively. Themma might have been the settlement of Tema, one of the sons of Ishmael, and of which mention is also made in the Book of Job;³ and again, in those of Isaiah and Jeremiah.⁴ These, then, were all manifestly situated in those parts which are termed “the east,” and “the east country,” in the Hebrew Bible; they were, therefore, in all probability, the places in which these different tribes or families resided; and, consequently, the whole must be a representation of real places, persons, and things, and not of mere parable or allegory.

¹ Job, i. 3.

² Numb. xxiii. 7; Isa. xli. 2; xlvi. 11; Matth. ii. 1. I would suggest here, for the consideration of those who think highly of the chronology of the Septuagint, and lowly of that of the Hebrew Bible, the following remark; viz. If Abraham actually lived nearly a thousand years after the flood, Is it likely that these countries would have first been peopled by his descendants, so as to have received their names from them? Is it not probable, that, in so long a period of time, chieftains prior to his time would have seized upon these rich and valuable countries? The same might be said of many other places, as Moab, the countries held by Amalek, &c.

³ Strabo (lib. xvi.) gives a similar account of the Scenite Arabs in the southern parts of Mesopotamia, who were probably composed of the same people. Οἱ Σκηνίται Ἀραβίαις, λαστροῖσι τοῖσι καὶ ποιμασιν, μελίστα μὲν ἑαυτοῖς εἰς ἄλλους τόπους, ὅταν ἐπιλείπωσιν αἱ νομαί. κ. τ. λ. Arabes Scenitæ . . . latrociniiis, et pascendo pecori dediti homines, et qui facile in alia loca demigrant, ubi præda eis et pascua deficiunt. A little farther on, a similar account is given of the Arabs of Ituræa and Mount Libanus, many of whom reside in caves, and frequently attack the merchants.—Pliny, Hist. Nat. lib. vi. c. xxxii. Delph. Class.: “Nomadas indè, infestatoresque Chaldaeorum, Scenitæ (ut diximus) claudunt, et ipsi vagi, sed a tabernaculis cognominati, quæ cilicis metantur, ubi libuit.” Again, Strabo, ib. These Scenites compose small states, follow agriculture but little, and live principally on cattle. Σκηνίται Ἀραβίαις δυναστείας σποτιστικῆν μὲν μικρὰς ἐν λυπτοῖσι χωραῖσι διὰ τὰς ἀνοήτους ἡσυχάζοντες μὲν, ἢ οὐδὲν ἢ μικρὰ, νομαίαι δὲ ἕχοντες παντοδαπῶν θημιμάτων, καὶ μάλιστα καμήλων.

Having, then, found the parts in which Job and his friends appear to have resided, let us now endeavour to ascertain at ¹ Lib. v. cap. xix. ὑπὸ μὲν τοῖς καυχᾶσθηνόϊς, αἰσίται; which Bochart and others have thought should be read αἰσίται. We have certainly mention made of Uz, in Genesis, xxxvi. 28, and 1 Chron. i. 42; but, as he is said to have been a son of Dishan, it is quite impossible he could have been the same with the Uz, who was the progenitor of Job. He might have been the founder of another family in the land of Edom, in which he was born; and this appears very probable from a passage in the Lamentations (chap. iv. 21), in which it is said, “Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom, that dwellest in the land of Uz: the cup also shall pass through unto thee, &c.” This place Mr. Good, in his Preliminary Dissertation to his Translation of Job, adopts as the place of the patriarch’s residence, but omits to tell us how this place, which he allows was south of Judea, could also be termed the east, as it is in the Book of Job.

² We find one Sabos (Σάβος) a king in these parts in the times of Strabo (Geog. lib. xvi. § 24); and in Diodorus Siculus (Lib. iii. § 46). Σάβος is the name of a metropolis. This country could not have been far westward of the Euphrates; on each side of which, according to Strabo, petty kings resided (lib. xvi.) Οἱ γὰρ παροικῶντες ἐκατίρωθεν τὸν ποταμὸν φυλαρχοί, χώραν οὐκ εὐπρόσθετον ἔχοντες. κ. τ. λ.

We have, in the ninth book of the Prep. Evangel. of Eusebius, an account of Job from Polyhistor, which is quite of a piece with that found at the end of the Book of Job in the Septuagint. It can, therefore, lay but little claim to our attention.

³ Mentioned in Gen. xxv. 15, and 1 Chron. i. 30. In Job, vi. 19, Tema (טֵמָה), and Sheba (שֵׁבָא) are mentioned as being in the same parts.

⁴ Isa. xxi. 14; Jer. xxv. 23.

what time they lived ; for, if we can determine this point also from Holy Writ, it must become more than probable that these were real characters, and that the sacred author of their memoirs intended these to be looked upon as real histories. The three friends who came to condole with Job were, we are told, Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite : we also find another, towards the end of the book, joining in the dispute. His name was Elihu, and he was a Buzite (i.e. a descendant of Buz, and therefore a relative of Job's), and of the family of Ram.¹

Of the first of these friends only can we determine any thing specific with regard to time ; and he, viz. Eliphaz, was a son of Esau, by his wife Adah,² and the progenitor of the Amalekites.³ This will determine two points ; namely, the period, in the first instance, in which Job must have lived ; and, in the second, that this must have been before the Israelites came out of Egypt ; for at that time Amalek had become a powerful people.⁴

With regard to the first, then. If this Eliphaz was the same with that mentioned in the Book of Job, under the designation of Eliphaz the Temanite—and of this there can exist no reasonable doubt ; for we are told that he was the father of duke Teman : besides, he resided in the land of Teman, and thence would very properly be termed *the Temanite*⁵—then must Job have been contemporary with him : and, as Esau was the brother of Jacob, Esau's children must have been contemporary with those of Jacob—that is, with the twelve patriarchs of Israel ; and, consequently, Job must have lived at the time in which these patriarchs did. The precise period, either of his birth or his death, it is impossible to deter-

¹ This last name has been thought to be the same with Aram, i.e. with the a (s) omitted. I must confess I can see no necessity for this conjecture, nor any thing gained by its adoption. Kemuel, not Buz, we are told (Genesis, xxii. 21), was the father of Aram. There can be little probability in supposing, therefore, that any Buzite belonged to this people.

² Gen. xxxvi. 10.

³ Ib. ver. 12.

⁴ In Numb. xxiv. 20, Amalek is said to be אֲמֵלֶק הָרִאשׁוֹן, the first of the nations ; which cannot be true if taken absolutely. All that is meant by it, apparently, is, that Amalek was the first of the nations that opposed God's people after their deliverance from Egypt ; and such they were. See note on chap. xl. 19.

⁵ Dr. Kennicott, unnecessarily I think, finds the Eliphaz of Job in a descendant of this son of Esau.

mine; but neither of these is necessary. We only know that he lived, after his trials had come to an end, one hundred and forty years; and, if we may suppose that the period of his age was doubled, as his wealth was, he must have been seventy years old when this circumstance took place. If so, his whole age, at the time of his death, must have amounted to two hundred and ten years.

Now, if we suppose Job to have been born about the time of Levi, Jacob's third son, we shall be able to ascertain nearly the time at which he died. Jacob, it is thought, was eighty-eight¹ years old when Levi was born; and he was one hundred and thirty when he stood before Pharaoh;² that is, in the year in which he came down into Egypt. Therefore, $130 - 88 = 42$, will give the age of Levi when he came into Egypt; and, if Job was born in the same year with Levi, he must have been 42 years of age, when the Israelites entered Egypt. Now, supposing the Israelites to have resided in Egypt 215 years, and Job to have been 42 years old when they arrived there, and that he lived, in the whole, to the age of 210; then, $210 - 42 = 168$, will be the sum of the years of Job's life, during the sojourning of the Israelites in Egypt. But their sojourning was 215 years;³ therefore, $215 - 168 = 47$, the number of years during which Job must have been dead, before the Israelites left Egypt.

This computation is made upon the supposition, that the sojourning of the Israelites in Egypt was 215 years, as usually taken by the chronologers—to which I have not yet seen any good reason to object—and that Job might have been born about the time of Jacob's third son, Levi. All that is here intended, is an approximation to the truth: it is impossible to get at any thing like absolute certainty; and this is unnecessary. If, then, we may take this as an approximation, Job will have died about fifty years before the Israelites left Egypt under the leading of Moses: and during this whole time must the family of Amalek have grown—as the Israelites did—into a great nation; for we find them opposing the Israelites soon after their egress.¹

¹ See the Chronology of Capellus, prefixed to the Prolegomena of Walton's Polyglott.

² Gen. xvii 9.

³ Some, indeed, hold, that the 430 years, mentioned as the time of the sojourning in Egypt, is not to be divided between the sojourning in Canaan and Egypt, as usually done; but that all is to be given to the sojourning in Egypt. If this be allowed, Job must have died upwards of 260 years before the egress. I make no account whatever of this difference, sometimes had recourse to in reasoning on this subject, nor of the still more famous difference found to exist between the text of the Septuagint and of the Hebrew Bible. I doubt whether the Septuagint can be relied on in any case; its corruptions being almost endless. Nor is the Hebrew Bible free from error in its numbers, as every one knows who has considered its chronology at all: nor is it, in any case, of any importance, as far as I can see, whether we are quite correct in our chronology or not. If Divine Providence had thought otherwise, no doubt we should have had abundant means of setting ourselves right on this question.

From what we have advanced, we may perhaps generally conclude, that if Job is indeed a fictitious character, the particulars thus determinable respecting him are such as belong to no fictitious character in all the writings, and in all the accounts heard of or known, from his day to the present. That the time, the place, the circumstances of his life, of the lives of his friends, of the people living in his neighbourhood and times, should be deducible from various parts of Holy Writ; that he should be cited by name, and his book be appealed to by inspired authority,² for the purpose of inculcating certain doctrines—are considerations so extraordinary—if we are to suppose the whole to be nothing more than a parable or allegory—that, whatever others may choose to do, I am compelled to believe that the thing is altogether incredible. But, as it has been assumed that, although Job himself might have been a real character, still the book bearing his name might be nothing more than a sort of drama, parable, or allegory; let us now consider, from the history and contents of the book, how far this assumption will hold.

¹ Exod. xvii. 8; Numb. xiv. 45, &c.

² Instances will hereafter be adduced to shew, that no book has, perhaps, been more frequently cited, or referred to, in Holy Scripture than this.

SECTION IV.

ON THE QUESTION — AS TO WHO COMMITTED THIS BOOK TO WRITING ?

WITH regard, then, to the history of this book, it has apparently gone through the hands of more authors than one. The first two and the last chapters did not, in all probability, come from the writer of the remaining intermediate ones, as, indeed, it has been reasonably enough thought by many. My reasons for this opinion are these : first, not only is the style at variance with that found in the rest of the book, but the language itself is materially different. In these portions we have, as far as we can now judge, language of the purest Hebrew composition ; while, in the body of the work, there is a very visible inclination to the forms and significations peculiar to the Chaldee.¹ This, I conceive, is undeniable ; and the probability is, that both came not from the same author.

In the next place, the author of these portions must, from the character of the terms used, have lived after the times of Job, and in a country some distance, at least, from the land of Uz ; which cannot be affirmed of the middle portion of the work. We are told, for example, that there was a man in the land of Uz, in the first case, and that he was greater than all the children of the east ; plainly intimating that he who wrote this, both lived after the times of Job, and was not one of the people so called. And, in the second, that Job died old and full of days ; which must imply, that he who committed this to writing lived after the times of Job. I am inclined to believe, therefore, that some Hebrew wrote the first and last portions of this work ; because, the language used in them is that which was vernacular to him, and the terms just adverted to, those proper to such a writer.

¹ Examples will presently be given.

Besides, in the land of Uz, and at the times in which these portions were apparently written, an account of Job's losses, place of residence, of his return to prosperity, and of his death, could be scarcely necessary : they must all have been well known. But, if we suppose the body of the work to have been carried into parts more western, in which none of these circumstances could have been generally heard of, and in which, moreover, no extensive confidence could be placed, either in the genuineness of the book, or the piety of Job, without some further and more authoritative information — and, indeed, instruction as to its contents — being given ; we shall see at once why these portions were added : and that they must have been supplied by some person high in authority among the Hebrews.

That the Book of Job had been committed to writing, and was considered as authoritative, before the times of David and Solomon, we shall shew hereafter, when we come to consider the citations made from it, and found in their writings. We shall, at present, take for granted that this was the fact. These parts of the book could not, therefore, have been written by any one in their times, but must by some one who lived before them. Joshua might, indeed, have supplied them, were there any circumstances in his history pointing this out as probable ; but there are none. We are, therefore, brought back to Moses, as the person most likely to have written these supplementary and necessary portions. Let us now consider how far the circumstances of the case will make this probable.

We have already shewn, that Job must have died about fifty years before the Israelites left Egypt. We learn from the Book of Exodus that, a considerable time prior to this event, Moses became acquainted, and indeed connected by marriage, with Jethro, the priest of Midian. That Jethro was a believer in Divine revelation, there is very good reason for believing ; and that he was a good and religious man, there certainly can be no doubt.¹ We are told, that he was the Priest of Midian ; that is, the chief, or hierarch, presiding over the whole of the district so called. He held an office, therefore, of the very highest dignity and importance in that country : and we know that he must have been a descendant of Abraham, either through Esau, or by his wife Keturah.¹ Job too, we have seen, was descended from Nahor the brother of Abraham. Job, therefore, and Jethro, must have been distantly related to each other ; and, as Midian, over which Jethro presided, was conterminous with the land of Uz, in which Job dwelt, and, as they must have been contemporary, or nearly so, from what has already been shewn ; it becomes highly probable, that Jethro knew Job personally, and that he was familiar with, and greatly interested in, the circumstances of his whole life.

¹ Witness the authority he had with Moses, and the manner in which his advice was treated both by him and the heads of the tribes of Israel, Exodus, xviii. where it is remarkable, that Jethro appears to have offered up sacrifices to God even in the Israelitish camp, and that Aaron, and the elders of Israel, feasted with him upon it.

If, then, we can suppose the principal part of the book of Job to have been, at this time, committed to writing, (and this we shall presently shew was most probable) no doubt can be entertained that Jethro would possess a copy of it, as he could not but have considered it a most interesting and valuable document: and if so, as he was not niggardly in his advice to Moses for the religious good of Israel, it is most likely that he would also recommend it to his son-in-law, Moses, particularly as both Moses and the Israelites — over whom Providence had placed him as a leader — stood greatly in need of such a work. Besides, the Holy Scriptures must, in those days, even if we suppose the Book of Genesis to be patriarchal, have been confined within a very narrow compass. Very little of a doctrinal character was to be found in them: and less, perhaps, suitable to the Jews, circumstanced as they then were.

¹ Gen. xxv. 1, 2. As Jethro was Priest or Patriarch of Midian, I think it extremely probable that he was a descendant of Midian, the son of Keturah ; otherwise it would be difficult to conceive how he became possessed of such authority in that extensive country. It is true, Job's father-in-law is, in one place (Numb. x. 29.) called Hobab, the son of "Raguel" (רַגֵּוּל), and in another (Exod. ii. 18.) "Reuel" (רְעוּל). — Why our authorised version has so variously written the same name, it is, perhaps, not easy to say). In the last case, however, it is probable that Jethro's, i. e. Hobab's, father (רַגֵּוּל) is only meant. Now, it is certain that Esau had a son of this name (Gen. xxxvi. 4, 10.) ; and, as Eliphaz was also a son of Esau, these must have been brothers. If, then, we suppose this Reuel to have been the father of Hobab, he must have been contemporary with Job. Still, I can find nothing connecting him with the land of Midian : it is probable, therefore, that, as in other cases, the same name was given to different persons. Although, therefore, this Reuel might have had authority in Idumea, it will be difficult to discover how he could have become chief priest in Midian, which was far greater in extent than Idumea. Jethro was, therefore, most probably descended from Abraham, by Keturah, and not through Esau ; and, therefore, distantly related to Job, and with him professing the true religion, as known to the patriarchs. As to the extent of the land of Midian, it is evident from Exod. ii. 16, Numb. xxii. 4, xxxi. that it reached from the confines of Egypt, beyond the plains of Moab eastward. They had five kings in the times of Moses, and very great wealth in cattle. In his days, too, great numbers of them were killed ; and yet, not many years after, they were sufficiently powerful to harass the whole kingdom of Israel (Judges, vi.). In this case, also, their wealth, as well as that of the children of the east, is found to be immense. The Arabian geographers, moreover, ascribe a great extent to the land of Midian. — Travels of Ibn. Batuta, p. 21.

In this book, however, we have faith in God, and patience under tribulations, recommended and exemplified in the most interesting and striking manner: the doctrine of the fall of man, connected with that of his redemption by a Saviour, most plainly and pointedly set forth and inculcated: the power, the wisdom, and the goodness of God, so generally and beautifully contrasted with the feebleness, the ignorance, and the sinfulness of man — as will be presently shewn — that where the other portions of Holy Scripture have failed, this never has, to call forth the admiration of all who have carefully perused it. In addition to this, we have the doctrines of the resurrection of the body, and of a particular, though mysterious, Providence, so strongly and clearly inculcated, that it has never been in the power of the most ingenious infidel or luke-warm writers, to obscure them to any considerable extent. If, then, I say, we can suppose Jethro to have been in possession of such a document as this, we cannot suppose it possible he could withhold it from his son-in-law Moses, situated as he then was. And, if we can further suppose this document to have come thus into the hands of Moses; as surely we must, that the good Providence, which had conducted the matter so far, would take care that it should be delivered to the Jews, with such marks of its authority and genuineness, as would stamp it for ever as canonical with that people.

The language and style of the first two chapters, and of the last, is, as we have already intimated, such as to suit the times, style, and language of Moses: the circumstances of the case, too, are such as were most likely to bring the body of this work into his hands; and the necessities under which the Israelites then laboured, were also such as to make it next to certain, that the necessary supplementary parts would be written under divine authority, by him; and the whole then be put into the hands of the Jewish nation, for their instruction, guidance, and encouragement. My own opinion is, therefore, that this was the case; and that to this circumstance we are to ascribe the authority, with which this book has ever been treated by that people: and hence probably it is, that the whole book has, by them, been ascribed to him.

It is also well worth remarking, that the passages speaking of the sons of God appearing before Jehovah, and of Satan's appearing among them (the objections to which have already been noticed), are those which would, in the estimation of a Jew, give canonical authority to this book; particularly if we suppose them to have come from Moses. For it is in the writings of Moses that we find the book of the covenant sanctioned for the first time as a revelation, by an appearance of the Almighty, in some respects similar to this.¹ After this, similar visions were vouchsafed, as in the mission given to Isaiah (chap. vi.); to Ezekiel (chap. i. &c.); to several of the minor prophets, and to St. John, in the Revelation, in particular. This part of the Book of Job, therefore — however inexplicable or strange it may have appeared to those, whose endeavour has been to interpret the Bible, generally, by the rules laid down by Aristotle and Horace — is, in fact, that which indissolubly connects it with the Jewish Scriptures, and which must have secured to it a complete canonical authority with that people: and, as we cannot reasonably ascribe this portion of the book in question to any writer but Moses, in whatever light we view it, we are compelled to conclude that he was its author.

Let us now consider the general character of the middle portion or body of this book, and endeavour to ascertain who its author was. We have already suggested that Job probably wrote it after his restoration. We now propose to examine that question a little more closely. If, then, in the first place, this book was committed to writing prior to the times of Moses, and of the egress from Egypt, and in a country bordering upon Chaldea; we should naturally expect, that it would contain nothing whatever alluding either to the person of Moses, or to the wonderful events which took place under him at the egress; and also, that its language would be such as to suit a country so situated.

¹ Exod. xxiv. 3-15, as noticed also above.

Now, it is the fact, that no mention whatever, either of the person of Moses, or of the events of the egress; no, nor even the slightest allusion to these, is any where to be found in this Book. The earlier part of the Book of Genesis is alluded to, and even cited again and again,—as will be shewn in the notes;—but not so much as one syllable can fairly be referred to the events of the Exodus.¹ Again, we are told by Moses, that the name Jehovah had not been revealed during the times of the patriarchs;¹ and, accordingly, we find this name very rarely occurring in the middle portion of this book: but El, or Shaddai,—the names revealed to the patriarchs,—are in the most frequent use. The few instances in which Jehovah does occur, may probably have undergone an emendation by Moses, just as it appears to have been the case in the Book of Genesis.² But, if the whole had been committed to writing by Moses, no good reason can be assigned why this name should not have constantly occurred, just as it does in those portions which have been justly ascribed to him. The language, moreover, or rather, the dialect, in which this middle portion of the book is written, inclines manifestly to the Chaldaic, as already remarked; a circumstance utterly at variance with the language of the first and last portions — and, indeed, of all the books usually ascribed to Moses.

¹ Bishop Warburton, indeed, fancied he saw some such allusions, which he terms slight indecorums, and of which the following appear to be the only ones deserving of notice:—"God layeth up iniquity for his children" (chap. xxi. 19); "They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave" (ib. 13); "His eyes shall see his destruction," &c. (ib. vv. 20, 21), and so on; in which we find sentiments not unlike those found in the later books. But, can we rely on such principles of criticism as these? If, for example, we find a sentiment in a confessedly modern work, and again, something nearly corresponding to this in another, the date of which is not very well known, Are we to come to the conclusion at once, that such modern author is manifestly the more ancient of the two? Would not the contrary supposition be the more probable? So much for resemblances of this sort. A little farther on (p. 32) we are told, that "the secret of God" (ch. xxix. 4) must be taken from the Shekinah, which is said to have rested upon the ark. I will only ask, What possible resemblance can be found here between this secret and the Shekinah? I can discover none. "That mine adversary had written a book," must, in the next place, be an allusion to the phylacteries of the Jews. I ask, What resemblance has a book to a phylactery? Or, can any one shew that phylacteries were in use, even fifty years before the times of our Lord? I more than doubt it. "The kings and counsellors, which built desolate places for themselves," affords another instance. These desolate places are, first, made to mean magnificent buildings, i. e. the Pyramids; and then, these kings, &c., are converted into the governors of Egypt. Can any thing like this be relied upon? Again, "God divideth the sea with his power," &c. (p. 36, ch. xxvi. 12). This, we are told, "evidently refers to the destruction of Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea." But all the evidence, so visible here, rests on a manifestly erroneous translation of the passage. The principal word concerned in this mistake is $\pi\acute{\iota}\nu\omega$, which our authorised version renders by divideth: a sense which has evidently been given to it, both here and Isa. li. 15, for the purpose of making it refer to the passage of the Red Sea. And so, the word is first made to allude to this event, and then the passage is cited to prove the allusion! The authors of the Septuagint, however, have escaped this artifice, and truly rendered the place by κατίπτασι την θάλασσαν. Surely the bishop ought to have noticed this! It will be unnecessary to notice these objections further. I will merely remark, that the principle here set up, by which resemblances are to be

Both the matter and the language of this portion is, therefore, what we might have expected it would have been, had it been written before the times of Moses, and in a country bordering on Chaldea. But, if it had been written after the egress, and by a Jew, this would have been next to impossible. No Jew, nor indeed any believer in revelation generally, could, when dwelling on the wonderful works of God, have passed over such events, in silence, as those which took place at the egress: much less would he have given himself the trouble to write in a dialect not vernacular to himself, or to those for whom he wrote, or to use a name of God which had long been obsolete in his nation.³ treated as realities, is a most ruinous one; and that Jewish interpretations, on which many of the objections are founded, must be given up. See my Sermons and Dissertations, Diss. i., &c.

¹ Exod. vi. 2, 3. See also my Prolegomena to Bagster's Polyglott Bible, prol. i. sect. iii.

² See my Prolegomena to Bagster's Polyglott Bible, Prol. i. § iii.

³ "There can be no doubt," says Mr. Good, "that the writer of the poem was a Hebrew; but a Hebrew who, from a long intercourse with Arabia . . . had introduced a considerable proportion of the Arabian dialect into his native tongue," &c. I remark, the fact is, not so much as one instance can be adduced, out of the whole of this book, to shew that the Arabian dialect has been used. Words and phrases, preserved still in the Arabic, are to be found; and so there may in any dialect, as derived from some common mother-tongue. If there is any inclination to dialect in this book, it is to that of the Chaldeans or Syrians.

It has been supposed, I know, that all this might have been feigned, in order to give the whole an air of antiquity, or for the purpose of placing the scene of action in some foreign country.¹ It should not be forgotten, however, that, how easy soever it might be to make such a supposition as this, particularly if we happen to be disposed to give the whole the appearance of fable; it will, nevertheless, be no easy matter to shew that any writer of this age, country, or character, ever had recourse to any such expedient. Nor of this kind is any thing to be found, even in the parables of Scripture; nor yet, as far as my information goes, in any author of tales among the Arabs,² Persians, Syrians, Samaritans, Chaldeans, Ethiopians, or Jews. Aristophanes and the tragedians do, it may be allowed, in some of their pieces, introduce people speaking the dialects of parts of Greece different from that in which they were brought up;³ but in no case has he, or, perhaps, any Greek or Latin author, composed a whole work in a dialect different from that of his as will be shewn hereafter, and not to that of the Arabians. Mr. Good, therefore, is totally wrong here. As to his "no doubt," &c. on the other question, I answer, I think I see strong reasons to doubt: for Why, I would ask, should a Hebrew by birth have mixed his own language with idioms, &c., taken from another, and all in order to edify men of his own nation? The thing is altogether improbable, and what, I believe, has never been done.

¹ So Rosenmüller, after Bishop Warburton, "Verum quæ ad eam sententiam vindicandam qui eam defendunt, potissimum urgent, nullam in universo libro legum Mosaicarum mentionem fieri rituum . . . hæc inquam, nequaquam quod illi volunt, probant. Ne enim historie Hebræicæ aut Israeliticarum quicquam immisceretur, vetabat fabulæ scena; quæ non intra Israeliticæ terræ fines esset eodem pertinet, quod nullum cultus Levitici vestigium in hoc libro deprehenditur," &c. Proleg. § vi. And again, on chap. i. 6:—"Nam quum historie tempus antiquissimæ ætati assignatum, scena autem extra terram Israeliticam collocata esset, posebat τὸ πρῶτον ut in sermonibus personarum, quæ loquentes inducuntur, nominis מִצְרַיִם usus sollicite evitaretur . . . Verum ubi poeta ipse loquitur, narratoris personam sustinens, nihil vetat, quo minus nomen illud, Israelitis inde a Mose peculiare, usurpet." That is, if an hypothesis can be formed (no matter how incongruous it is with the habits of the people whom it may concern), which bids fair for turning the whole of the Bible into a tissue of fiction, reason and rationalism require that it be adopted.

² It may be said, indeed, that Hariri, with other writers of the Makâmât generally, has adopted the antiquated phraseology of Arabia. True: but this has not been done for the purpose either of throwing those compositions back into a higher antiquity than the times of their writers, nor of placing the scene of action in any other country; but to shew the richness of the Arabic language, and to indulge in their love of the ancient style and phraseology, as will be presently shewn.

³ As in several of the comedies, and in the choruses of the tragedies.

own particular country or times, for the mere purpose of giving the whole an air of antiquity, or any other such thing. The supposition itself, therefore, is not only foreign to the character of writers of the oriental nations generally, but to that of every other nation under heaven; and, therefore, cannot be reasonably entertained.

If, then, we can find no one among the Jews who could have written this middle and main portion of the Book of Job, Where are we to look for its author, if not among the persons concerned in the events about which it is conversant? Some, indeed, have fixed upon Elihu as its author; but, as far as I can see, with very little reason. For, How are we, in this case, to account for the matter and language found in the two first, and the last, chapters? These are altogether unsuitable to the character of Elihu. Nor does he ever evince knowledge enough of the matter in debate, to make it at all probable, that he understood the scope and intention of the work generally. This is evident from his speeches, which are rather lengthy, and of much too general a character to entitle him to the authorship of any other portion of the book. The person, however, who wrote the first two chapters, and apparently the last, of Job, was very differently circumstanced. He manifestly saw through the whole affair; and this he has very shortly, and very explicitly, stated. Elihu, on the contrary,—although he says many very good things,—was certainly as much in the dark, as to the true cause and reason of Job's afflictions, and thence of the scope and intent of this book, as any of his companions were. I cannot, therefore, bring myself to believe that he was the author of any part of this work; and, for the same reasons, no other person, concerned in the debate with Job, could be author of the book generally.

There is, consequently, no other person, either Jew, or of the country or times of Job, upon whom we can fix as the probable author of this part of the book before us, except Job himself. Let us now see what reasons there are for supposing that he was its author.

That the writing, as well as publishing, of books was known in the times of Job, we have the most direct and positive testimony from this portion of the book itself:¹ of this, therefore, we can have no doubt; and, consequently, that this book might have been so written and published by our patriarch.¹ Is this work, in the next place, such as to make it probable that it would be so written and published? The testimony of the first two and the last chapters is, that the Almighty himself was particularly concerned in the events which are said to have taken place; which, as already shewn, is, in all probability, the inspired testimony of Moses. In some of the latter chapters of the middle portion of the book, too, Jehovah himself is said to have taken a part in the debate. According to these testimonies, therefore, the work itself is, from first to last, of divine authority.

¹ Job, xix. 23, 24; xxxi. 35.

The doctrines, moreover, contained in this book, are those which are absolutely necessary to the cultivation of a saving faith; and are in strict accordance, as already remarked, with those inculcated in the New Testament.² Some of these, indeed, are to be found in the Book of Genesis; yet in no other book of Scripture, if we except the New Testament, are these doctrines so fully, so plainly, so practically, so forcibly, and so independently, set forth. If, therefore, it was the will of God, that these doctrines should thus be made known and exemplified, it could scarcely have required less than that they should also be preserved and perpetuated. We may conclude therefore on this head, that if the Divine Being ever thought it necessary to provide, that His word should be made known and preserved, it is highly probable He would do so on this occasion, on which, we are assured, He himself took so important a part.

In the next place, Where could a person be found so proper for committing this to writing, as was Job himself? During the period of his sufferings he must have deeply felt the ignorance of his friends, and as deeply deplored the cause of it—in other words, the want of some document which would have taught them better. In one place, indeed, his language amounts to this: "Oh," says he, "that my words were now written! oh, that they were printed in a book! that they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever!" In this place, too, we find that, like the writer of the first two chapters, he was well aware of the real cause of his sufferings: "for," said he, "the hand of God hath touched me."¹ Upon this occasion, too, he gives the remarkable testimony that his Redeemer lived; that he should, in the latter day, stand upon the earth; and that he himself should, in his flesh, yet see God. When, therefore, we consider the depth of Job's piety, the strength of his faith, and the remarkable exhibition of his patience, supported as it must have been by the Divine aid, together with the ignorance which prevailed among his friends,—not omitting the most intelligent of them, Elihu,—and the desirableness that believers should henceforward be better taught; it certainly does seem probable, that Job himself could not but have felt the propriety of committing this part of his own history to writing.

¹ Ephrem Syrus tells us, that “Jobi Librum, Moyses scripsit, verisimile tamen est, ipsum legisse habitam ab eodem cum Amicis de sua tentatione disputationem, quam ab ipsomet Job literis mandatam velut patientiæ suæ monumentum, conjectare licet ex illis verbis: Quis mihi det, ut scribantur sermones mei?” &c. In Lib. Job. explanatio. Rome, 1746, tom. ii.

² The very frequent citations of this book, both in the Old and New Testaments, are alone sufficient to determine the question that the book is of inspired authority, and, therefore, binding on Christians. This question, however, will presently be more especially inquired into.

Another consideration, too, which makes this probable is this; namely, the care taken in detailing his own instances of impatience, such as that of cursing his day, and of regretting the occasion that gave him birth.² In like manner, Moses informs us of his own failings, and of those of his brother Aaron,³ as does Saint Paul of the thorn in his flesh, and of some other things, such as his having been a persecutor of the church.⁴ It has, moreover, been customary with the sacred writers, for the principal character concerned to write the book bearing his name. Hence, Moses committed the last four books of the Pentateuch to writing; Joshua, the book bearing his name; and so on, probably, of the rest. Again, the language of the Book of Job is not the

¹ Job, xix. 21-24.

² Ch. iii. 1, &c.

³ Numb. xx. 12; Exod. xxxii. 2, &c.

⁴ 2 Cor. xii. 7; Acts, xv. 39. I remark these instances, because I believe they are peculiar to the sacred writers. Men, great on account of their piety, worth, abilities, &c., were likely to become objects of adoration, as it had been the case among the heathen; and hence, I believe, they have seldom failed to leave behind them strong marks of their own frailty. This, indeed, has often been made an objection to the sacred books: it is, however, the surest possible mark of the ignorance of the objectors.

language of Moses, of Palestine at any period, or of any Jew.¹ The middle path which it holds between the Hebrew and the Chaldee is, on the contrary, just what we might have expected, supposing the book to have been written in some country between Palestine and Chaldea. In such country, as it has been shewn, Job actually resided. Every consideration, therefore, strengthens the probability that Job was the author of the middle portion of this book.²

It has been objected, however, that a work so exquisitely written could never have come from a man exercised with affliction as he was. Sickness, it is said, and sorrow, can find time and dispositions for no such writing. This may be granted, without affecting our conclusion in the least. We do not think it at all necessary to confine the writing of this book to that particular period; nor to suppose that every word, particle, &c., occurs in the work exactly as it was first uttered. This last would be to suppose what is never found in the sacred Scriptures themselves.³ It is enough for us to suppose that, the work was committed to writing, under the Divine aid after Job's restoration: for, we are told, as already remarked, that he lived one hundred and forty years after this event had taken place.

¹ This will be proved at length, presently.

² Mr. Good has laboured much to shew that Moses was the writer of the whole of this book. His proofs are curious. First, Moses was capable of both the simple and sublime. In Job, the first two and the last chapters are of the simple; the rest is of the sublime style of writing: ergo, Moses must have written them! The writer must have been acquainted with philosophy; Moses was learned in all the wisdom of Egypt: ergo, Moses wrote the book! It was written before the exodus; Moses resided forty years with Jethro before that period: he was, therefore, skilled in the Arabic by that residence, and had time enough to write this book! Mr. Good then gives us instances in which the diction of Moses found in the Pentateuch, and that in the Book of Job, is similar. He does not seem to have been aware that the Book of Genesis was cited by Job; and, in the next place, that Moses, in all probability, imitated both the sentiments and diction of Job, as that of a prior revelation; which many other sacred writers did, as will presently be shewn. All the parallel passages cited by him, therefore, in his Dissertation, are of little use to his purpose. His particular criticisms I pass over, as unworthy of remark.

³ I mean, in those parts of them which are manifestly the same; such as certain psalms occurring in the historical books, and again in the Book of Psalms; in the same relations, occurring both in the books of the Kings and the Chronicles; in those passages cited from the Old, in the New Testament; and again, in those parts of the different gospels which appear to treat of the same events or doctrines: in no case of which does identity of expression appear to have been studied.

If then this was the fact, What employment can we suppose could have been so delightful to the mind of this good man, as that of recording the sufferings and mercies which, under the Divine guidance, he had experienced? And then, Can we suppose any choice of words, or modulation of sentences, could be esteemed too good to recommend the faith, enforce the patience, and to exalt the mercies, which had formed the ground-work of his experience, and now afforded that of his happiness and exultation? Nor, if we believe the whole to be inspired (as we do), is it at all necessary to suppose, that this must have affected every particular word, particle, or sentence recited. Inspiration, we should remember, does not necessarily descend to the choice of syllables: it is enough if it regulate the matter; and so conduct the language, that, upon the whole, a piece, "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness," be produced, in order "that the man of God may be perfect," and "thoroughly furnished unto all good works."¹ And for this, confessedly, is no book which the world has hitherto seen better adapted than the Book of Job. My own conviction is, therefore, that Job committed the middle portion of this book to writing, and for the purposes just mentioned.

SECTION V.

ON THE LANGUAGE, USAGES, AND GENERAL CONTENTS, OF THE BOOK OF JOB.

It will immediately be seen that, if any reliance can be placed on the conclusions arrived at above, other questions requiring consideration will necessarily result from them; namely, whether the language, usages, contents, and doctrines of this book; the allusions made in it to former revelations; and the citations made from it, or allusions to it, by subsequent writers, are such as to fall in with these conclusions. It is my intention now to shew, that the language, usages, and general contents of this book, are precisely of this sort; and, in the next section, that such also are the doctrines found in it: the allusions and citations made in it by its author, or to it by other writers, are likewise such as to justify the conclusions hitherto arrived at.

¹ 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17.

As to the language and usages, then, of this book, it will require, I think, no very great penetration, or even experience in the oriental languages, to discover that the language of the first two chapters, and that of the last, are altogether unlike that which prevails in the body of the book. It is clearly the language of plain narrative, notwithstanding the symbolical descriptions found in the first two; and, as to the nature of the language itself found in these, it is pure Hebrew, as already remarked,¹ while the body of the work occasionally indulges in the Chaldee.

There are, moreover, in these parts of the book, terms and phrases, not only not found in its middle portion, but peculiar to the usage of Moses, and found in his writings, or in those of which he may be supposed to have been the editor. The term Jehovah, for example, as remarked above, which could not have occurred in the usage of the patriarchs, and which very rarely occurs in the body of the work, is used exclusively here. The being Satan, too, about which so much has been said, is, after all, sanctioned by the usage of Moses, if not in the very same word, signifying, nevertheless, the same thing; viz. an adversary. It has been shewn too, above, that the part of the narrative, in which this agent is concerned, contains a species of symbolical description not unusual with Moses. We have nothing, therefore, as far as things are concerned, militating in any way against the conclusions arrived at above.

¹ There are, moreover, certain expressions, or intimations, in these portions, which, unless I am greatly mistaken, are peculiar to Moses; as Chap. i. 3, and Gen. xxvi. 14, עבדה יבנה;—Chap. i. 6, בני האלהים, and Gen. vi. 2; Chap i. 16, אש אלהים, alluding to the destruction of Sodom, Gen. xix. 24;—Chap. ii. 4, עיר בעד-עיר, compare Exod. xxi. 24; ib. עבד יבשתי, compare Gen. ii. 23;—ib. 12, וישא קול יבני, compare Gen. xxvii. 38;—ib. . . . השמימה, compare Exod. ix. 10;—Chap. xlii. 8, שבעה ימים ישבעה אלה, compare Numb. xxiii. 1, a rite peculiar, perhaps, to the children of the East, as they are called:—ib. 11, קשישה, compare Gen. xxxiii. 19, Josh. xxiv. 32, a sort of barter not in use, it should seem, much after the times of the patriarchs:—ib. ידב ידב, compare Gen. xxiv. 22, copied afterwards into the Proverbs, xi. 22; xxv. 12: Solomon evidently imitating the style, and borrowing the terms, of Job:—ib. 15, ייחן להם אביהם, &c., compare Numb. xxvii. 7: mentioned here in Job as a rare thing; that is, rare among the Israelites, and very likely, therefore, to have been so worded by Moses.

In the next place, as to other usages: It has been objected, that those parts of the writings of Moses which are of a poetical cast, differ greatly from those written by him in plain prose; and approach, in some degree, to the style found to prevail in the middle portion of this book: which may be readily granted. The song of Miriam (Exod. xiv.), and of Moses (Deut. xxxii.), are certainly of this sort. So far it is clear, that the Mosaic style of narrative and of song differs very considerably: but this affects not our question. There are still other differences, which, I contend, can be accounted for on no other supposition, than that these different elevated sorts of composition must have come from different authors. They are these: The term (שַׁדַּי) Shaddai, nowhere occurs in the songs of Moses; while the name Jehovah rarely occurs in the writings of Job: and, in the few instances in which it does, it might have been inserted by Moses, as it must also have been in the Book of Genesis.¹ In the songs of Moses too, no marked Chaldaisms occur; while these are numerous in the Book of Job.² On these accounts, therefore, the elevated style of Moses and of Job respectively, present essential differences; while we have nothing of the lower style of narrative occurring at all in the middle part of the Book of Job. If then, our author lived before the times of Moses, the patriarchal name for God¹ must necessarily have been used by him; and again, if he resided on the confines of Chaldea, as shewn above, nothing could be more likely than that terms and phrases in use in those parts would be found in his writings. If then, we allow that the style of the middle portion of this book is not unlike that generally found in the songs of Moses, which I believe is the fact—which may, perhaps, be accounted for, from the circumstance that Moses lived near the times of Job, and was probably a great admirer of his style—yet there are differences so great observable between the writings in question, that it is highly improbable they ever could have come from the same author.

¹ This is certain from Exod. vi. 3, that the term Shaddai (שַׁדַּי) was familiar with the patriarchs. (See my Prolegomena to Mr. Bagster's Polyglot Bible, Prol. i. § iii. par. 2.) And, if the Book of Genesis is really patriarchal — which I contend is the case — the name Jehovah must have been inserted therein by some person of authority, and this person was, in all probability, Moses; who inserted it, perhaps, as shewn (loci citat.), for the purpose of impressing upon his followers, that neither a metaphysical deity, nor yet any idol, was meant, which Elohim (אֱלֹהִים), and perhaps Shaddai, might have signified in his days.

² On this subject, Professor Bernstein has, as it appears from Rosenmüller, and elsewhere, written a Treatise; but, as this has never come to my hands, I shall here set down the passages which have occurred to me, presenting the reader with pure Chaldaisms. They are, Chap. iii. 4, בַּדְּוָה; iv. 12, בַּדְּוָה; v. 2, לְאֵלֵי; ib. 8, אֱלֹהֵי אֲדָמָה, occur in the Chaldaic or Syriac, not the Hebrew sense; viii. 2, חַמְלָה; ib. 7, חַמְלָה; xi. 20, חַמְלָה; xii. 2, עַמְשׁ; ib. 11, חַמְלָה; ib. 23, חַמְלָה; xiii. 17, חַמְלָה אֲדָמָה; xv. 17, חַמְלָה; ib. 18, חַמְלָה for אֱלֹהֵי, which inclines to one of the Arabic dialects. (See Heb. Gram. Art. 177, 3, note; as also Chap. xxxvi. 1); ib. 31, חַמְלָה; xvi. 15, חַמְלָה; ib. 16, חַמְלָה; xviii. 2; vi. 11, קַנְיָה; xxi. 10, קַנְיָה . . . יִשְׁעֵי; xxiv. 22, חַמְלָה; xxxi. 33, חַמְלָה; xxxii. 10, 13, חַמְלָה; xxxiii. 24, חַמְלָה; ib. 33, חַמְלָה; xxxvi. 2, חַמְלָה; ib. 21, חַמְלָה; xxxviii. 3, חַמְלָה; xli. 12, חַמְלָה; most of which occur several times, and to which many more might be added.

There is still another consideration which ought not to be omitted here. It is this: The allusions to customs, manners, times, persons, and places, occurring in the middle portion of the Book of Job, are such as could not have been familiar to the mind of Moses. Of the patriarchal life he could have known no more than what occurred to him, during the short time he kept the flocks of his father-in-law Jethro. The perils incident to travellers in the eastern parts of the desert,² must have been next to unknown to him, as must the circumstances incident to persons residing near the banks of the Euphrates,³ and witnessing the miseries common to the poor and wretched of those parts;⁴ as well as the funereal pomp, and other circumstances, happening to the rich.⁵ Yet our author dwells on these with the greatest minuteness, familiarity, and ease; and, as we have shewn above, that it is quite unusual among eastern writers of this family to describe foreign scenes, to use language, or to appeal to customs, which are not peculiarly their own; the author of the middle portion of this book could not have been Moses, but must have been some person who actually resided in those parts; and here no one can be found so suitable, in all respects, for this undertaking as was Job himself.

Add to this the consideration, that the scope and drift of

¹ See Numb. xxiv. 4, 16.

² Chap. vi. 13, &c.

³ Chap. xxviii. 4.

⁴ Chap. xxx. 1.

⁵ Chap. xxi. 33.

the writings of these two persons, respectively, are altogether different. Moses was manifestly raised up to be the leader and founder of the Jewish nation,—a work sufficiently large to occupy all the powers of any one man, however gifted. It will be found, too, I think, by all who take upon themselves the trouble to inquire, that those writings which originated with Moses never proceed beyond the necessities, the circumstances, or, as far as prophecy is concerned, the fate of the Jews. The religion inculcated by Moses is that of the theocracy only; it never extends itself beyond the boundaries of Jewry: and, if it occasionally found its way to foreigners, this was under the character of proselytes. It provided, indeed, for the cessation of the theocracy, and foretold times in which the Gentiles should rejoice with God's people; as it also did for the rejection of the unbelieving Jews:—for predictions of this sort necessarily reached beyond the times of the theocracy. But, as far as the legislation and religious observances peculiarly belonging to Moses were concerned, they were strictly exclusive and limited.

With Job, however, the case is totally different. This patriarch, indeed, retains the sacrificial rites of his predecessors; and, as a prophet, conducts his readers to those times—that latter day—in which a redeemer should appear upon the earth; and even to that period in which he himself should in his flesh see God. So far he may be said to have concurred with the great legislator of the Jews; but here the concurrence ends. Job, unfettered by the exclusive system of the theocracy, deals boldly and fully in doctrines which are universal in their scope, and eternal in their nature. He enters intrepidly into the most abstruse considerations respecting the divine mind; he descants on its moral attributes, its metaphysical existence, ubiquity, incomprehensibility, and eternity. He dwells on its justice, mercy, long-suffering, and goodness; and, with a freedom and light worthy of Christian times, determines that it is its unalienable property to dispense at once both riches and poverty, good and evil; and, by the operation of a particular providence, to follow with blessings or cursings, respectively, the good and the evil, whatever their stations in life might otherwise be.

But it is not with religious considerations of the sublimest character only that our author is conversant ; the range of his inquiries is not limited with the word, and abstract properties, of the Deity ; he ventures likewise upon his works, and shews—by deductions, evincing a mind as extensively informed, as it was alive to every thing great and noble—not only that the greatness and goodness of God may be seen in these ; but also, that the contemplation of them cannot but instruct, humble, elevate, strengthen, and adorn the mind of man. At one moment he is conversant with the storms, and seems familiar with the poisonings of the thunder-cloud, and stroke of the thunder-bolt ; at another, he is present with the planetary system, or still vaster firmament of sun and fixed stars ; at another, he conducts us through the mazes of the great deep, surveying its wonders, and expatiating on its riches or its terrors ; at another, he conducts us through the bowels of the earth, and describes with accuracy the mines of silver, gold, copper, or iron ; at another, he dwells with delight on the powers or beauties of the feathered tribes, the courage of the war-horse, the horrors of war, the terrors of the inhospitable desert, or the woes of starving poverty, under the merciless influences of stormy or freezing skies ; or harrows up our souls with the thrilling description of the last receptacle of sin and misery, the grave, and with the everlasting infamy resting on the name and posterity of the wicked.

This, I think I may say, is what Moses has never done, and what the system which he had to establish would scarcely bear, if, indeed, he was qualified to fill so great a range of inquiry, or was endued with the feelings and experience duly to apply it—which may be doubted. The character of Moses was evidently that of a legislator and prophet ; and, although it may be granted that he was skilled in all the learning of Egypt, and might have been a very eminent philosopher, as he certainly was a theologian and statesman ; yet, in none of his writings does any thing like the religious philosopher appear, as it does in those which are here ascribed to Job. He confines himself closely and exclusively to the objects of his mission ; and in these he is at once great, simple, and assiduous ; while Job engages in the whole range of doctrines purely religious, including the sublimest considerations connected with the character of God; and, at the same time, develops those connected with his works in a manner the most affecting, instructive, and comprehensive. Properties, I say, which never did, and never could have united themselves in the same individual, even under inspiration itself; which is never found to change, or entirely to alter, the style and character of the minds on which it acts. I think, therefore, I am justified in concluding, that the same person was not the author of the Jewish law generally, and of the middle portion of this book; and further, that in this last case, Moses was not, and could not here have been concerned.

It may be suggested, perhaps, that, as Job must have led a pastoral life, and have resided in a desert far removed from political considerations, the haunts of philosophy, the elegancies of art, and the general profusion of wealth, necessary for the high philosophical flights just noticed; it could hardly be expected that such a book could have come from him: while Moses, nurtured in a court, instructed in the philosophy and politics of Egypt, and accustomed to the wealth and elegancies of a rich and flourishing people, would have been the most likely, if not the only person, who could produce such a work at such a period. I answer: It is evident from the Book of Job itself, that Job was a prince of great wealth and influence in his day.¹ He resided in a country, moreover, remarkable for its merchandise and wealth: its proximity to the Euphrates and Tigris procured it eminent advantages in this respect.² Many large cities had been built on the banks of these rivers, as Nineveh, Babylon, and others of wealth and note;³ to which the writers of Greece bear the amplest testimony. In Babylon, science was cultivated, perhaps, full as early, and to as great an extent, as it was in Egypt. This city was, moreover, remarkable for its wealth, its arts, its luxury, its prowess in war, and political influence in peace. In its neighbourhood, and by its forces, many a battle had been fought, and many a victory won. The kingdom of Assyria, of which it formed a considerable city, and for a long period the metropolis, abounded in cavalry.¹ The deserts of Arabia abounded with animals, the largest, most various, and most formidable; and particularly with the ostrich, of which Job speaks at considerable length. Arabia, also, had its mines of gold;² and, by its merchandise, had iron and brass in abundance.¹ The philosophers too of Chaldea, in whose neighbourhood Job resided, could supply such a mind as our patriarch manifestly possessed with information on astronomy, natural history, and the like : and it is sufficiently evident from Job himself, that book-writing was no new thing in his times. Every advantage, therefore, possessed by Moses, as it regards information of this sort, was possessed also by Job ; with this difference, that Job was a prince in his own right, and was possessed with wealth and leisure sufficient to enable him to inquire for himself, as far as his inclination might have led him. Moses, during his residence in the court of Egypt, was entirely dependent : he had neither wealth nor liberty to inquire for himself. The time, too, during which he resided at court, must have been limited ; and, after he left it, he had neither wealth nor opportunity to pursue any such inquiries : and, from the nature of his mission, the apparent inclination of his mind, and the nature of his writings, he never pursued such inquiries to any great extent. Job, however, unrestrained as he was with any thing like the theocracy ; qualified as he was with a most discursive and capacious mind ; independent as he was with regard to wealth and personal liberty ; surrounded as he was with opportunity ; exercised as he had been, apparently for the instruction and good of mankind of all succeeding ages ; and, above all, blessed with a long life, and with plenty, — if not actually stimulated by the Divine mind so to enrich his work that it might be the wonder and admiration of all ages, — was, as it appears to me, infinitely better qualified for the task of writing the middle portion of this book than Moses was : not to insist now on the Chaldaisms, and other considerations formerly urged. And my conclusion is, from these considerations also, that Job was the author of this part of the work in question.

¹ Chap. i. 3.

² So Diodorus Siculus, lib. ii. § xi. — Ἴδὲ δὲ Σιμίραμις ἕκτισσι καὶ ἄλλας πόλεις παρὰ τὸν ποταμὸν τὸν τε Εὐφράτην καὶ τὸν Τίγριν, ἐν αἷσι ἐμπορία κατασκίνας τοῖς φορτία διακροῦζουσιν ἐκ τῆς Μεδίας καὶ Παρματακηνῆς, καὶ πάσης τῆς σύνηθους χώρας. Caternam Semiramis alias etiam urbes ad Euphratem et Tigrim condidit, ubi emporia illis constituit, qui merces, e Media et Paractacene, totaque vicinia important.

³ So Strabo: — Ἀπὸ δὲ τοῦ στόματος τοῦ Ἐυφράτου μέχρι Βαβυλῶνος τὸν ἀνάσταλον ὄνει διὰ τῆς οἰκουμένης καλῶς σταδίων πλείονων ἢ τρισχιλίων. “Ab ore Euphratis Babylonem usque navigationem esse per loca bene habitata, supra tria millia stadiorum.”—Lib. xv. Ruins of large cities, too, are at this day found in these parts.

¹ 2 Kings, xviii. 23; Isa. xxxvi. 8, &c.

² Diod. Sic. lib. ii. § 1.—Μεταλλεύεται δὲ καὶ κατὰ Ἀραβίαν καὶ ὁ προσαγορευόμενος ἄπυρος χρυσὸς, οὐχ ὡσπερ παρὰ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἐκ ψηγμάτων κειψάμενος, ἀλλ' ἐνθὺς ἔρυττόμενος ἐρείσκειται, κ. τ. λ. Effoditur in Arabia aurum, quod Apyrum (ignis expers) nominatur. Non enim ex ramentis per ignem excoquitur, ut alibi; sed inter eruendum statim purum invenitur, &c. And a little lower down:—Καὶ γὰρ λέοντας καὶ παρθάλεις ἐν αὐτῇ πολλῶν πλείονας καὶ μίλζους, καὶ ταῖς ἀλκαῖς διαφόρους πεφυκέναι, ἥτις ἐν τῇ Λιβύῃ, συμπίπτει, πρὸς δὲ τούτοις, οἱ καλούμενοι Βαβυλωνίαι τίγρεις· φέροι δὲ καὶ ζῶα διφυῆ καὶ μιμιγμένα ταῖς ἰδίαις, ὧν αἱ μὲν ὀνομαζόμεναι στρουθοκάμηλοι περιεπιλάθουσι τοῖς τύποις μίγματα χηνῶν καὶ καμήλων, ἀκτιούδως τῇ προσηγορίᾳ. Nam leones hic et pardales, numero ac magnitudine, viribusque Africanos longe vincunt: quibus tygres Babylonie adnumerentur. Fert et geminae naturae, mixtaeque formae bestias. Inter quas struthocameli, qui nominantur, confusam ex volatilibus et camelis formam habent, ut nomen sonat. Comp. lib. iii. § xlii. The gold above mentioned is, not improbably, the same as that mentioned in Gen. ii. 11, which is said to have been found in the land of Havilah, and to have been good (ἄπυρος?). This place also produced precious stones (ver. 12). Now, this Havilah must have been situate somewhere in Arabia: comp. Gen. x. 7, 29; xxv. 18; 1 Sam. xv. 7; and 1 Chron. i. 9. Pliny, lib. vi. 32:—“Sabæos ditissimos sylvarum fertilitate oderifera, auri metallis (comp. Ps. lxxii. 15), agrorum regnis: mellis ceraque proventu . . . mirumque dictu, ex innumeris populis pars æqua in commerciis, aut latrociniiis degit: in universum gentes ditissimæ, ut apud quas maximæ opes Romanorum Parthorumque subsistant, vendentibus quæ e mari aut sylvis capiunt,” &c. A little before:—“Scenitæ Sabæi. Insule multæ. Emporium eorum Acila, ex quo in Indiam navigatur.” Ib.—“Littus Hammarum, ubi auri metalla.” Ib.—“Thinaneos . . . Areni: oppidum in quo omnis negotiatio convenit.” Much the same is said by Strabo, lib. xvi.:—Πεῖ δὲ ποταμὸς δι' αὐτῶν ψῆγμα χρυσοῦ καταφέρειν, κ. τ. λ. Compare 2 Chron. ix.; Ezek. xxvii. 21, 22; and Diod. Sic., lib. ii. § liv. Τὴν δ' (i. e. Ἀραβίαν) ἐνδοσίῳ κειμένην νέμεται πλῆθος Ἀραβῶν νομάδων καὶ σκηπήτην βίον ἔχουμένων. Οὗτοι δὲ θερμομαποτροφούντις ἀγέλας μίγλας βοσκημάτων, ἰναυλιζοῦνται τειδίους ἀμιστρούτοις. “Interiora Arabes (Scenitæ) tenent, qui pastores sunt, vitam in magalibus degendam amplevi. Ili magnos pecorum greges alunt, et in vastissimis eumpis diversantur.” Again, in § lii. ib. we have an account of the precious stones which this country produces. Comp. 2 Chron. ix. 1; and 1 Kings, x. 1, 2. See, also, the extracts from Strabo and Pliny above.

¹ Diodorus Sicul., lib. iii. § xlv. ; and Ib. § xlvi. The Sabæans, our שַׁבְאִי, are said to have had gold and silver in abundance.

SECTION VI.

ON THE DOCTRINES FOUND IN THE BOOK OF JOB.

It has been stated in the preceding section, that the doctrines delivered in this book are of a general and universal character, and, in this respect, quite unlike those peculiar to the theocracy. We now come to inquire more particularly what these are.

The first great question necessary to be determined in every case of this sort is, that which treats on the abstract nature of God ; because, just as this shall be fully, correctly, and faithfully, or otherwise, stated ; in the same proportion will the religion taught be profitable, or not, to man : on the principle that, such as the source of any thing is, whether pure or impure, good or bad ; such also will the thing itself necessarily be.

In this book, therefore, GOD is declared to be Almighty, Chh. v. 9 ; vi. 4, 14 ; ix. 5, &c. Mighty in operation, Chh. ix ; x. 4-10, 12 ; xxxvii. 5, &c. Omniscient, Chh. xi. 11 ; xxi. 22 ; xxiii. 10. Wise, Chh. xii. 13, 16 ; xxiv. 1, &c. Inscrutable, Chh. xi. 7-9 ; xxiii. 8, 9 ; xxxvi. 26 ; xxxvii. 23, &c. Invisible, Chh. ix. 11, &c. A just and holy judge, Chh. iv. 17 ; v. 8 ; viii. 3, 20 ; ix. 2, 28-32. Supreme governor of the world, and regulator of all its concerns, Chh. v. 10-13 ; viii. 4, &c. ; ix. 13, 17, 18, &c. Creator of all things, Chh. iv. 17 ; x. 8 ; xxxv. 10 ; xxxviii. 4-12, &c. Independent of any other power, Chh. xv. 15 ; xxii. 2-4 ; xxiii. 13, 14, &c. Immortal and eternal, Chh. x. 5 ; xxvii. 2, &c. A spiritual Being, Chh. ix. 11 ; x. 4 ; xxvii. 3 ; xxxiii. 4, &c. Is all-pure, Chh. xv. 15 ; xxv. 5, &c. Is the King of kings, Chh. xii. 18, 19 ; xxxiv. 19, &c. Is all-bountiful, Chh. xii. 6 ; xxii. 23-26 ; xxix. 3-5, &c. The only effectual Teacher of true wisdom, Chh. xxviii. 28 ; xxxv. 11 ; xxxvi. 10, 22, &c. Gives understanding, Chh. xxxiii. 16 ; xxxvi. 10.—By chastisement as a father, Chh. v. 17 ; xxxiii. 19-22, &c. He deprives of understanding, Chh. xii. 20, &c. Is gracious, both to find a ransom or redemption, and to forgive sin, Chh. xxii. 21-23; xxxiii. 24, 26, 27, 28. Renews and justifies returning sinners, Chh. xxxiii. 25, 26, 28, 30. Hears prayer, ib. 26; Chh. xii. 4; xv. 4; xxii. 27; xxvii. 10: but not of the wicked, Chh. xxvii. 9; xxxv. 13, &c. Makes men and nations either great or small, Chh. viii. 7; xii. 23; xxxiv. 11, 20, 21, 24, 29, &c. Is the author and dispenser of both life and death, Chh. iv. 9; x. 12; xii. 10; xiii. 16; xxxiii. 4, &c.—The doctrine of angels, too, is clearly taught in this book. See Chh. iv. 18; v. 1; xv. 15; xxxiii. 23.

MAN is, in the next place, declared to be in a state of sin and impurity, Chh. iv. 17; vii. 20; ix. 20; xiv. 1. Comp. Chh. v. 6, 7; ib. 4; xv. 14, 16. This is traced to Adam's fall, Chh. xxi. 33. Comp. Ch. xiii. 20-23 (manifestly alluding to Adam's hiding himself and God's calling to him, as in Gen. Ch. iii. 8-10). Ib., i. e. Ch. xiii. 24, 25, is an allusion to Cain's judgment, Gen. Ch. iv. 11-14. Comp. also, Job, Ch. xv. 18-23. Again, Ch. xxxi. 38, contains an allusion to the crying out of Abel's blood mentioned in Gen. Ch. iv. 10; as also does Job, Ch. xvi. 18. In Job, Ch. xxxi. 40, sterility of the earth, the other part of the denunciation, is also alluded to as denounced, Gen. Ch. iii. 18; and Ch. vi. 12, &c. In Ch. i. 21, where the words of Job are given, reference is certainly made to the penalty of death imposed upon Adam, in "Naked shall I return thither" (אֲשׁוּב אֶשְׂמָדָה); alluding to the words, "To dust shalt thou return" (אֶל-עֹפָר תָּשׁוּב): Job passing from the consideration of his birth, abruptly to that of his death; and perhaps pointing at the same time with his finger to the earth. So Ch. x. 9, "Thou wilt bring me to the dust again"—אֶל-עֹפָר תְּשִׁיבֵנִי: the very same phraseology! Compare, also, Ch. xxx. 23. From all which it is evident, not only that man was considered as in a sinful state, but also as in that fallen state which Christianity now teaches us he inherited from Adam.

I shall, perhaps, be thought fanciful in attempting to carry this matter further; but, if the text of my author will bear me out, it can signify but little what may be thought of my proceedings. I now affirm, that the text of Job will bear me out in going much further; and that Job also speaks of the Tempter, in terms not much unlike those used in Genesis, — which I hold to be a prior revelation, as will presently be shewn; — and that much in the same language is this Being spoken of also by other sacred writers. I now allude to Ch. xxvi. 13, where we have this passage: — By His Spirit have the heavens been beautified; His hand hath wounded the fugitive serpent. No one will doubt, I think, that, in the first part of this verse, the declaration given in Gen. i. 2, is had in view; and that what was at that time generally effected, was intended to be presented to the mind of the reader. Now, we are told in the sequel of that narrative, that by the devices of the Serpent the most goodly work of creation was marred; and sin, sorrow, labour, vexation, and death, were consequently entailed upon man. Our author here seems to say, that not only were the heavens permanently adorned by the power of God's Spirit; but, by an exertion of his mercy no less astonishing and effectual, even this deplorable loss should be made up, this lamentable state be effectually provided against. In Gen. iii. 15, this is declared in the promise, that some one to be born of the woman should crush the Serpent's head; while it should succeed in bruising His heel. Here, in Job, we are told, that His hand hath wounded, i. e. shall wound (see note on the place) the fugitive serpent. In Ps. cx. 6, we have a parallel to the latter part of the preceding verse (Job, xxvi. 12), which certainly relates to Christ: and, as St. John manifestly refers the whole work of creation to Him (Ch. i. 3), as also does Solomon, under the title Wisdom (Prov. viii. 14–36), — the person also had in view by Job (Ch. xxviii. 12, &c., see the notes); and as Job, moreover (Ch. xix. 25), also refers to Him in the sense of avenging Redeemer (כֹּסֵף), — relating certainly to the passage in Genesis; it is scarcely possible that the serpent, as the tempter, should not be referred to also in this place, particularly as the term fugitive is applicable to him alone (in James, iv. 7): the Book of the Revelation, moreover (xii. 9), fastening the title of Old Serpent and Devil upon him, evidently with reference to man's temptation. (See my Exposition of that place). In Isaiah, too (Ch. xxvii. 1, as shewn in the notes), we have a passage perfectly parallel to this of Job, and which I cannot help believing was intended to be considered as a repetition of it; and in which the coming of the Redeemer is manifestly foretold. We have here, therefore, not only the fall of man, but the efficient cause of it. The Tempter himself is referred to, and his destruction clearly foretold. So far, then, we have man's sinful and corrupt state; that also which led to this, his fall in Adam, and the agent who succeeded in bringing it about—the Devil; with some intimations of a deliverance from it.

We have, I think, in the next place, a most clear and positive enunciation of man's restoration through a Redeemer in Ch. xxxiii. 23, &c. We have here a mediator interposed between God and man; one who is to announce to man his uprightness, rectitude, righteousness: i. e. to teach him how his salvation is to be effected. In the next verse, favour, or grace, is promised; and then, redemption from falling into destruction, by means of an atonement. The entire renewal, or regeneration, of the man then follows; the efficacy of prayer in this state; man's acceptability; and his delight, or peace of conscience, in a justification from all things. Verse 28 contains a repetition of this, for the purpose, apparently, of supplying a complete confirmation to the whole. Comp. Ps. ciii. 4, 5.

To this Redeemer (or avenger) Job evidently appeals, in Ch. xix. 25, where he also gives a prediction of His appearing in the last, or latter days (see the notes); and here, as a consequence of the victory to be obtained by Him, the doctrine of the resurrection is fully and boldly insisted upon. The patriarch tells us, that, notwithstanding the effects of death having passed upon him—his flesh and body having been consumed, or dissolved—yet, from that very flesh, and with those very eyes, he should for himself look upon, and view, the God of his salvation. I know very well, as remarked in the notes, what efforts have been made and are still making, for the purpose of obscuring this most plain and specific passage; and I also know, as elsewhere observed of prophetic interpretation generally, that nothing but darkness, both visible and tangible, has been the result: both have originated in the application of the principles of heathenism, to the interpretation of authors of a totally different character.

Our author, therefore, teaches that man is a fallen creature ; that he has been brought into this state by the suggestions of an enemy ; and that a restoration from it has been provided. What means, in the next place, does he propose, as best suited to bring about this desirable end ? They are many and various. In some places, he speaks of his own “ integrity ” (Chh. ii. 3, 9 ; xxvii. 5 ; xxxi. 6) ; in others, of his “ confidence ” (Chh. iv. 6 ; xxxi. 24) ; in others, of “ trust ” (Chh. xiii. 15 ; xxxv. 14) : in all which he must necessarily mean “ integrity,” “ confidence,” and “ trust,” in something, which he had the means of knowing was acceptable to God. And this he could entertain of nothing except by an express revelation from Him : for, we should bear in mind, we have nothing like heathenism here. Job is manifestly quite ignorant of the expedients had recourse to by Deists : his language is of a description altogether different from theirs. Philosopher indeed he is ; but his philosophy is based on other principles than those of Deists : his reasonings take a different course, and terminate in a totally different result. And hence, as it will presently be shewn, he has been recognised as a divine teacher, by perhaps every writer of both Testaments.

What, in the next place, are the grounds so taken by our author as authoritative and good, and in the adoption of which he differs so essentially both from heathen and deistical writers ? I answer, A DIVINE REVELATION, given prior to the times in which he lived. We have just seen that certain events and doctrines, stated in the Book of Genesis, are referred to in this book, and cited apparently as involving principles of religious belief. I now say, that, in those instances, the very text of that book, as we now have it, is cited. Not only because I find an identity in the thing inculcated, and that thing such as must have been matter of revelation,—for, otherwise, it could not have been known,—but also an identity in the terms used : not indeed in exact citation always, as is the case among us ; but, while we sometimes have a slight variation in the mode of enunciation, the most important, i. e. the theological terms used, remain still precisely the same (see the passages cited above). It is worthy of remark, that the Redeemer mentioned by Job is not the purchasing Redeemer (פֹּדֵם), as used with reference to the deliverance from Egypt, but the avenging Redeemer לַשֹּׁמֵר), used with reference to the wounding and bruising of the Tempter, as mentioned in Gen. xlviii. 16; and Isa. lix. 20.

But we are not confined in this question to coincidences of this sort; we have either indirect or direct appeals to a prior revelation; also to the circumstances and times under which this was made, and which are manifestly those of the patriarchs, as given in the early histories of the Book of Genesis. In the first place, the name given to the land of Uz (עֲזַר) plainly identifies itself with the patriarchal history; as do also the names and countries of Job's friends: these being deducible, as already shewn, from the genealogies found in the Book of Genesis.

In the next place, the circumstances of some of the patriarchs are evidently alluded to. It is, I think, scarcely possible to read Ch. viii. 5-10, without seeing that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, were in the mind of the writer when this portion was committed to writing (comp. ver. 5 with Gen. xxii. 3; and ver. 7 with Gen. xxii. 17; also with Gen. xxv. 21; xxvi. 3-6, 12-14; and with Chh. xxviii. 14, 18; xxxi. 11-14, 24; xxxii. 10, 11, 28, &c.);—and that, on the facts there related of them, the subsequent reasoning was founded.

Again, in Ch. x. 8, 9, 21, the creation of man (comp. ch. xiv. 15), and the denunciation of his death, as recorded in the Book of Genesis, are dwelt upon; and, as analogous to the former, is the formation of the fœtus in the womb mentioned. Ib., ver. 22, the darkness of the tomb is compared with that of the chaotic state of nature, as also mentioned in Genesis. Again, Ch. xx. 4, we have a manifest allusion to man's (אָדָם) creation; and, in the next verse, to the arts of the hypocrites, as being of a more recent date. In Ch. xxvi. 8, 10, too, we have allusions to the firmament, as mentioned in Gen. i. 6; and the gathering together of the waters, ib. vv. 9, 10; and Ch. xv. 34, to the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah: to the peculiar sins of which, the next verse (35) seems pointedly to allude, as also noticed on Ch. i. 16. And again, Ch. xxxiv. 15, we evidently have an allusion to the flood, and so we have, יָמוּעַ כָּל־בָּשָׂר—all flesh expires, the very words used, Gen. vii. 21, when speaking of that event! Not to insist on the terms following: viz., עָל־עָפָר יָשׁוּב—shall return to dust, noticed above as common to the Book of Genesis. And again, Ch. xxxviii. 27, allusion is also made to the springing of the grass, as first mentioned in Gen. i. 11, and in the same terms; a thing nowhere else done throughout the Bible.

Again, we have, I think, other intimations of a prior revelation. Examine Ch. xv. 18, 19, where relations received from the wise of ancient times are referred to; and in such a manner, as to shew that these must have been the patriarchs. The context following, as I have already stated, appears to allude to the curse and expulsion of Cain, and the overthrow of the cities of the plain, Sodom, Gomorrah, &c. And again, in Ch. xxiii. 11, 12, positive and well-known commandments of God are mentioned; which could not have been done, had no prior revelation existed: the last verse here has, moreover, been cited in substance by our Lord himself, John, iv. 34. In Ch. xxviii. 27, 28, we have similar declarations. In Ch. iv. 12, 13, and xxxiii. 14, 15, we are told in what way revelations were occasionally made: namely, by vision; as it was the case in Jacob's vision at Bethel (Gen. xxviii. 12); the vision afforded to Abimelech, king of Gerar (Gen. xx. 3); and in many other instances during the times of the theocracy.

From what has been here said, it must I think be evident, that a revelation, considered as God's word, existed in the times of our patriarch; and that this was—in substance, at least—that which we now have in the Book of Genesis. That book must, consequently, have been in existence in the times of Job, either as a written document, or as retained in the memory, and detailed by way of oral tradition. This last supposition, however, I consider impossible; and, at the same time, quite unnecessary. It was impossible, because the particulars, recorded in the genealogies generally, are of much too minute and uninteresting a description to have been retained in the memory; and, if we have recourse to inspiration in the case of each succeeding patriarch, for the purpose of retaining these; then, I say, we suppose too much: it being much more rational to suppose inspiration to have suggested in some early patriarch the art of writing, which would have made all safe at once. But we need not even suppose this; for it is quite clear, that in the times of Job, as already remarked, the art of writing was well known: to suppose oral tradition, therefore, to have been had recourse to, in this particular, is likewise unnecessary.

If, then, any reliance can be placed on the foregoing statements, a divine revelation must have existed prior to the times of Job, and have contained the doctrines and history so often referred to by him and his friends; and further, this revelation must have agreed in essentials with that which we now have in the Book of Genesis. It is but reasonable, therefore, to conclude, that revealed religion, as professed before and in the times of Job, was the same in essentials as it now is. If this be the case, then, it is also likely that other doctrines, to be found in our author, will not greatly differ from those now held among ourselves: and this, also, appears to be the fact; e. g.—

Faith and trust in God, as directed by His word, are therefore demanded of man. This is, of necessity, implied in the terms integrity, confidence, trust, &c., already referred to. So also, Hope, Chh. iv. 6; v. 16; vi. 10, 13; vii. 6; xi. 18, &c. Assurance, Chh. v. 24, 25; xi. 16, 19. Self-abasement, Chh. ix. 20, 21, 28, 31; xl. 4, 5, &c. Obedience, Chh. xxxvi. 11, 12, &c. Holiness of life; innocence, Chh. iv. 7; xi. 15, &c. Repentance, Ch. viii. 5, &c. Prayer, Chh. xxii. 23, 27. Delight in God, Chh. xxii. 26; xxvii. 10; xxxiii. 26, &c. Forgiveness of sins, Chh. vii. 21; xxxiii. 24, 28, &c. A particular Providence, Chh. v. 9–16; xxxvi. 7–9. Defence from enemies and dangers, Chh. i. 10; v. 19; xi. 18. Punishment, or correction, when necessary and right, Chh. viii. 4, 13; x. 15; xi. 20; xv. 33, &c. From all which, these things must be evident: first, that the belief inculcated, the holiness of life required, and an eternal state of blessedness beyond the grave, were taught in Job's days,—if not throughout all preceding antiquity,—just as they are now with us: secondly, that this involved principles, and insured practices, unknown and never realised among heathens: and lastly, not only is the theology generally identical, but the theological terms used, and the facts appealed to out of which they originated, are universally the same.

SECTION VII.

ON THE QUOTATIONS, ALLUSIONS, ETC., FOUND IN THE BOOK OF JOB, EITHER AS MADE FROM FORMER REVELATIONS, OR POINTING TO THEM RESPECTIVELY ; AND ALSO ON THOSE FOUND IN THE SCRIPTURES, REVEALED SUBSEQUENT TO HIS TIMES, EITHER AS TAKEN FROM THIS BOOK, OR REFERRING TO IT.

IF it is the property of truth to be at unity with itself, and if it was customary—as we have seen it was with our author—with the sacred writers perpetually to cite, or to refer to, one another; nothing can be more probable than that we shall find the Book of Job so intimately connected, and indeed interwoven, both with the Scriptures that preceded and followed it, that the whole will exhibit one consistent and harmonious whole, not unlike the garment of Christ which would not admit of dilaceration, but required either to be taken wholly or wholly rejected. From what has already been shewn, it will not be necessary to dwell particularly on the first of these questions: we shall now, therefore, proceed to investigate the second, and to inquire whether, and in what way, the sacred writers have generally cited, or referred to, the Book of Job. And if it shall appear that they have actually so cited it, or referred to it; it will follow as a matter of course that they lived at periods subsequent to that in which he lived; and also, that they considered his book as possessing divine authority.

A question will here arise, however, which ought not to be evaded, which may be thus stated:—Suppose it is granted that passages occur in most of the books of Scripture, agreeing both in sentiment and phraseology with others found in the Book of Job; How are we to know in which of these we have the original enunciation, and in which the imitation, citation, or allusion? We have, for example, passages said to have been cited in Job from the Book of Genesis: How are we to know that these were not cited from our patriarch, and inserted in that book? And so of others, hereafter to be adduced. I answer: We are not to imagine that, from the mere comparison of such passages alone, either priority or posteriority of composition can be proved in any case; because, unless we can bring some other considerations to bear on the subject, such comparisons may be cited to prove either the one thing or the other. We must therefore take into the consideration here, one or more of those other particulars already adverted to: namely, the period at which Job appears to have lived; the remarkable fact, that no mention of the theocracy, the deliverance from Egypt, the passage through the Red Sea, &c., occurs in our author: whence it should seem, that his work must have been written before any of these events took place.

Again, from the consideration of Job's country being termed Uz (עֲזָא); his friends, Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shuhite, and Elihu the Buzite, being found (as to family, at least) in the genealogies of Holy Writ, and therefore determinable in some degree, as to the period in which they must have lived; the time in which our author wrote cannot possibly be carried quite so far back as that of Abraham. It is posterior therefore to the subversion of Sodom, and much more so to many of the events recorded in the early part of the Book of Genesis. But, if this were not the case, still it would be highly improbable, that any attempt would be made at any time, to enrich this part of the Book of Genesis from any thing found in the Book of Job: and, further, it would have been next to impossible to do any such thing. In Job, for example, we have no specific historical account, either of the creation of the world, or of man — nothing especially said about the fall, the flood, the dispersion at Babel, or the like: we have, certainly, nothing more than allusions made to these events,—such as to leave no doubt on the mind of any reflecting person, that some real history of them must have existed prior to the time of our author, and that this history was generally well known. From these considerations — to which some others might be added — it must be sufficiently clear, that no citation could have been made from the Book of Job in the Book of Genesis; no, nor yet any allusion whatever: while the contrary is possible, highly probable, and, in fact, certain.

With regard, in the next place, to such citations or allusions as may be found in the other sacred writers, taken from, or referring to, the Book of Job; we should bear in mind, that we know sufficiently well at what periods many of these lived to be certain, that they could not have written prior to the Egress: while we have seen that Job must have died prior to that event. It is not possible, therefore, that Job could, in such a case, have either made citations from them, or have alluded to them in any way: the converse of which is not only possible, but extremely likely. Ezekiel, as we have already seen, has both mentioned Job by name, and alluded to his character, as developed in the book named after him. Job must, therefore, have lived prior to the times of Ezekiel; and if allusion is really made to his book (which is most likely the case), it must also have been in existence before the times of that prophet. And, in like manner, should it appear that David, Solomon, the prophets generally, and even Moses himself, have cited, or alluded to, this book, it should follow that it was in existence, and recognised as of canonical authority, prior to the times of them all; and, moreover, that it was looked upon as a sort of treasury of divinity, and worthy of all acceptance at all times, ever since its first publication.

This mode of comparison, therefore, ought not to be considered as an independent witness on the question, as to when Job lived; but, as tending to shew that this book was throughout the times of the theocracy recognised and appealed to as authoritative, from other and more particular considerations,—which cannot be well misunderstood or misapplied,—determining at what period our author did live; and hence, that the manner in which these citations and allusions are made, is such as entirely to fall in with, and confirm, that view of the question; but is quite unaccountable and unintelligible on any other.

We ought to bear in mind, moreover, in all inquiries of this sort, that where the matter to be investigated is either highly authoritative, or, in any other point of view, excellent, the first writer (if he can be discovered) is legitimately and fairly declared to be the original author. Hence it is, that many of the sentiments of Shakespeare, Milton, and others of our own poets, are traced up to Homer, or some other ancient writer, as the true and original author. In like manner, sentiments, and even many forms of expression, in use among the Latins, are also traced up to the Greeks,—to Homer,¹ Æschylus, Menander, Pindar, and others: and hence the sarcasm of Horace, styling his countrymen an imitating servile herd.² In such cases, indeed, when the imitation is frequent, plagiarism is the name usually given to it as a stigma; and this it justly deserves.

In Holy Scripture, however, the case is wholly different. The writer here seeks no fame, and commits nothing to writing which is not strictly revealed truth. Here divine revelation necessarily forms the ground-work; and, as a revelation once made must have been intended for perpetuity, this would always be treated as authoritative by subsequent writers, and, at the same time, as necessary to give effect to their several messages. It is almost necessary to the character of a revelation, that it should not deliver again and again the same doctrines; and also, that those employed in making such revelation known, should be perfectly unanimous. Now, in the Book of Job we have almost a complete body of divinity. Doctrines the most sublime both as to God and man, as already shewn, are clearly and pointedly dwelt upon. If, then, a revelation could not with propriety deal these out again and again, as just remarked, the proper line to be taken by subsequent writers would be, not to profess to reveal these afresh, but only to cite them, or else allude to them, as already revealed. And this, as we shall presently see, they have done.

¹ Clarke's Iliad and Odyssey will supply examples of this sort in abundance, as will the variorum notes on the Greek and Latin poets. I will notice only one or two. Il. i. 3: "Λιθὶ προΐωψεν. Eurip.: Ψυχὰς δὲ πολλὰς κἀγαθὰς ἀπώλεισται. Virg.: . . demiserit orco—juvencum tot miserit orco—multa virum demittit corpora morti. Odess. i. i.: "Ἀνδρῶν μοι ἔνισται, κ. τ. λ. Virg.: Arma, virumque cano. Hor.: Dic mihi, Musa, virum, capta post mania Trojæ. Qui mores hominum multorum vidit et urbes. Æschyl. Fragm.: Σιγῶν θ' ὄπου δειῖ καὶ λίγων τῶ καίριαι. Eurip.: Σιγῶν θ' ὄπου δειῖ καὶ λίγων τῶ τ' ἀσφαλῆς. We have too, in the variorum notes of Butler's Æschylus, a considerable portion of one of Pindar's odes, cited as an imitation of Æschylus, vol. i, p. 97, ed. quart. The diction, phraseology, tropes, &c., are in these cases continually imitated and borrowed from the primitive writers.

² "Imitatores, servum pecus."—Epist. i. 19, 23. So, in our own language, should we meet with such expressions—either in books or conversation—as "one fell swoop," "the dogs of war," "thereby hangs a tale," &c., no one would doubt that the words were Shakespeare's; if "fairest of stars," "silver lining," "that forbidden fruit," &c., that they were borrowed from Milton; and so of others. So here, had writers on Hebrew literature been half as familiar with the Book of Job as they were with their own authors, these citations and allusions would have been pointed out long ago. I am aware that identity of sentiment has been noticed, but this falls very far short of our question.

In like manner, when any thing peculiarly Mosaic, or referring to the theocracy, is brought up by these writers, they either cite or allude to the revelation and law as already published by Moses; and in no case are any new commandments given. Prophets, historians, and preachers—and this last character Solomon appears to have sustained in the Proverbs and Ecclesiastes, and David partly in the Psalms—had nothing more to do than to urge, illustrate, and enforce the doctrines or precepts already revealed, and to apply these to such new circumstances as the times in which they happened to live made necessary. If plagiarism, therefore, is a fault in poets, in the writers of a divine revelation it is an excellence. In this we naturally look for unanimity, and reasonably for nothing like a repetition of miracle, when no important object could be obtained by it. We might therefore have expected a priori that, if this Book of Job was considered as of canonical authority in ancient times, such references to it, as have been here mentioned, would be made in very many places of the subsequent Scriptures, as would leave no doubt on the mind of the reader, that its authority was intended to be uphelden.

There is one consideration more which ought to have its weight in this question. It is this: It has been customary among the tribes of Arabia,—I believe, from time immemorial, and perhaps originating in the very particulars just now alluded to,—for writers universally to imitate the oldest examples of composition; and this particularly among the poets. It is scarcely possible, I think, for any one to glance over the Arabian poets, without perceiving that the words and phraseology employed, as well as the usages and customs alluded to, are, for the most part, those of the most ancient times. Indeed this is the case with every thing among them: the old usages and fashions are considered the best. And to such an extent has this been carried, that even the Persians, ever since they embraced Mohammedanism, have looked up to the Arabic language, particularly that of the Koran, as the most perfect possible: and, although their own is as unlike this as can well be imagined, they have, nevertheless, so managed matters, that even their grammar is learned from that of Arabia, their style made to resemble that of the Arabs, and a very large number of Arabic words and phrases has been so incorporated with their language, that, to attempt generally to make out a Persian author without a previous extensive stock of Arabian learning, is a completely hopeless task.

The most elaborate Arabian author of this sort that has come to my knowledge, is the celebrated Abu Mohammed Kāsīm Hariri, of Basra;¹ the author of fifty stories, or tales, all written in such a style as to shew, that their author was perfectly versed in the archaisms of Arabia. Many other similar compositions are extant, both in the Arabic and Persic languages; not to insist on the fact, that scarcely a book, or even a letter, is written in these countries, or, indeed, in Hindustan, in which marks of this style are not visible.

This will perhaps conduct us one step farther, as to the style and character of a considerable portion of the text of the Old Testament. It has already been remarked, that there is a manifest difference of style and manner visible in the several parts of the Old Testament. All those portions, for example, which assume the form of song, or are otherwise elevated in sentiment, differ likewise both in style and manner, and also in the words and phrases used, from mere narrative: that is, the language used in expressing elevation of sentiment, is very widely different from that used in mere narrative,—a difference visible enough in Greek poetry, and never departed from, I believe, either in the Arabic or Persic. Now, I suspect that we owe this, in the Hebrew, entirely to the existence of the Book of Job.

If, indeed, this book came through the hands of Jethro

¹ Two valuable editions of this author's works have been published, one in Calcutta, 1811, with a Glossary; another in Paris, 1822, by the celebrated Baron de Sacy, with Scholia and Indexes. It is a great drawback to this latter edition, that some of these Scholia were composed by M. de Sacy himself; and the consequence is, a learner not in possession of the original writers used by him, will seldom know which is the real oriental comment—which that composed in Paris. In other respects, M. de Sacy generally followed the Calcutta edition.

to Moses, as stated above, and was by the latter augmented by adding the two first and the last chapters, and then recommended to the Israelities, as a sort of store-house of divinity; nothing can be more likely than that—like the ancient songs of the Arabs, the Koran, &c.—it would become the great pattern of composition to all future writers, when engaged in composition of the more lofty sort. I say, this is likely; and if it shall appear—as I think it will—that in many cases it has manifestly been imitated, even in the terms and phraseology used, it will be sufficiently certain that this must have been the fact.

I shall now endeavour to point out some instances of this sort; and in doing this, I shall give the passages in the original Hebrew, in order that the coincidences, imitations, citations, allusions, &c. adverted to above, may the more readily be seen.

Tabular View of parts of the first five Chapters of the Book of Job, compared either with some parts of the Book of Genesis, or with others of the subsequent sacred writers.

Job, i. 10.	Lam. iii. 7.
את שכת בעדו ובעד ביתו ובעד כל אשר לו מסביב וגו'	גדר בעדי ולא אשא
Ch. iii. 23.	Ps. xxxiv. 8.
לגבר אשר דרכו נסתרה ויסך אלוה בעדר :	חנה מלאך יהוה כביב ליראיו ויחלשם
Ch. xix. 8.	Comp. 2 Kings, vi. 17.
ארחי גדר ולא אעבור וגו'
Ch. i. 21.	Eecl. v. 14.
ערם ינתי מבטן אמי וערם אשוב שמה	ינא מבטן אמו ערום ישוב וגו' ¹
Ch. iii. 10.	Lam. iii. 8, 9.
לא כגר דלתי בטני ויסתר עמל מעיני	שתם תפלתי : גדר דרכי בגזית גתיבתי עוה :
Ch. iii. 11.	Comp. Ps. xlix. 18; 1 Tim. vi. 7.
למה לא מרחם אמות וגו'	Jer. xx. 18.
Comp. v. 20.	למה זה מרחם ינאתי לראת עמל וגו'
	(See, too, the preceding verse.)

¹ It is impossible not to see, I think, that this is a direct allusion to, and an imitation of, the passage in Job placed against it.

- Job, x. 18.
למה מרחם הוצאתני אגוע ועין לא תראני :
- Ch. iii. 16.
כנפל טמון לא אהיה כעללים לא ראו אור :
- Ch. iii. 21.
ויחפרהו ממטמונים
- Ch. iv. 3, 4.
ידיים רפות תחזק: כושל יקמוון מליך וברכים כרעות תאמץ :
- Ch. iv. 6.
יראתך כסלתך תקוודך ותם דרכיך :
- So ch. v. 16.
ותהי לדל תקוה
vii. 6.
יכלי באפס תקוה
xi. 18.
כי יש תקוה
xiv. 7.
כי יש לעץ תקוה
Comp. ch. vi. 8 ; viii. 13 ; xi. 20 ;
xiv. 19 ; xvii. 15 ; xix. 10.
- Ch. iv. 7.
זכר נא מי הוא נקי אבד ואיפה ישרים נכחדו :
- Ch. iv. 8.
כאשר ראיתי חרשי און וזרעי עמל יקצרהו :
- Ch. xxxi. 8.
- Ecc. iv. 4.
ראיתי אני את כל עמל וגו'
Comp. vv. 2, 3.
- Ps. lviii. 9.
כמו ... נפל אשת בל חזו שמש :
- Prov. ii. 4.
וכמטמונים תחפשנה :
- Isa. xxxv. 3.
חזקו ידיים רפות וברכים כשלות אמנו :
- Comp. Heb. xii. 12.
Ezek. vii. 17 ; xxi. 12.
כל הידיים תרפינה וכל ברכים תלכנה מים :
- Comp. Isa. xliii. 7.
Prov. iii. 26.
יהודה יהיה בכסלך ושמר רגלך מלכד :
- Ps. xlix. 14.
Ruth, i. 12.
כי ... יש לי תקוה
- Prov. x. 28 ; xi. 7.
תאבד תקוה
- Ch. xix. 18.
כי יש תקוה
Comp. xxiii. 18 ; xxiv. 14 ; xxvi. 12 ;
xxix. 20. Jer. xxix. 11 ; xxxi. 17.
Lam. iii. 29. Hos. ii. 17. Ps. ix. 19 ;
lxii. 6 ; lxxi. 5. Ezek. xix. 5 ; xxxvii.
11. Zech. ix. 12.
- Ps. xxxvii. 25.
נער הייתי גם זקנתי ולא ראיתי עדיק נעזב וזרעו מבקש לחם :
- Prov. xxii. 8.
זרע עולה יקצור און וגו'
- Hos. x. 12, 13.
זרעו לכם לעדקה קצרו לפי חכד
... חרשתם רשע עולתה קצרתם
- Ch. viii. 7.
כי רוח יזרעו וסופתה יקצרו
קמה אין לו עמח בלי יעשה קמה אולי יעשה זרים ובלעהו :
- Compare Galat. vi. 7, 8. Ps. cxxvi. 5.
Mich. vi. 15. Jer. xii. 13. 2 Cor.
ix. 6.

Job, iv. 9.

מנשמת אלוה יאבדו ומרוח אפו יכלו :

Ch. xviii. 15-21. יזרה על

נוהו בפרית

Ch. xx. 23 ; xxxvii. 6.

Isa. xxx. 33.

כי ערוך מאתמול-נשמת¹ יהוה
כנחל נפרית בערה בה :

Alluding, perhaps, in each case, to the destruction of Sodom, Gomorrah, &c.,
Gen. xix. 24.

ויהוה המטיר על כדם ...
נפרית ואש וגו'

2 Sam. xxii. 9, 13, 15, 16.

ואש מפיו תאכל גחלים בערו מינו

מננה ננדו בערו גחלי אש

וישלח חצים ויפיעם ברק ויהמם :

בנערת יהוה מנשמת רוח אפו

Comp. Ps. xviii. 9 ; cv. 32 ; and Exod.

xv. 7, 8, 10. Ps. xi. 6. Ezek. xxxviii.

22. Hos. x. 12. 2 Thess. ii. 8.

Ch. iv. 10.

ושני כפירים נתנו

Ps. lviii. 7, 8.

אלהים הרס שנימו בפיו

מלתעות כפירים נתוץ² יהוה :

ידרך חצו כמו יתמללו

Comp. Ezek. xix. 1-9 ; xxxii. 1-16.

Jer. ii. 15. Ps. xci. 13 ; which is manifestly referred to by our Lord in Luke x. 19.

Ch. iv. 11.

ליש אבד מבלי טרף

v. 7, supra, איפה ישרים

נכחדו :

Ps. xxxiv. 11.

כפירים רשו ורעבו ודרשי יהוה

לא יחסרו כל טוב

Nahum, ii. 14.

כפיריך תאכל חרב והכרתני

מארץ טרפך

(In Isa. xxx. 6, the ליש is said to be a beast belonging to the south, i. e. the Arabian deserts south of Judea.)

¹ Isaiah manifestly refers here to something revealed prior to his times ; and, as his expressions are a little more expanded than those in Job,—the sentiments still remaining the same,—I cannot help thinking he must have had this passage in his mind. The same seems to have been the case with David, in 2 Sam. xxii. 9, &c. ; Ps. xi. 6 ; xviii. 9, &c. ; with Ezek. xxxviii. 22 ; and, perhaps, with Moses, Exod. xv. 7, &c. In Job, xviii. 15-21, the fate of Sodom seems particularly to be pointed out as an example ; as it also is in Jude, 7. It may be remarked too, that, as in 2 Sam. above, passages seem occasionally to exhibit lengthened comments, on sentiments delivered in a few words only by our author ; and that in some instances, as ver. 16, different parts of the original passage are combined closely together.

² Here the verb, used by Job in the Chaldee form, is taken by David in the Hebrew form ; and in the next verse, the lightning, as in the original place in Job, is referred to. The text of David, moreover, greatly expands that of Job.

Job, iv. 12.	Comp. Numb. xxii. 20 ; xxiii. 5, 16.
וְאֵלֵי דְבַר יַגְבֵּב	Jer. i. 4. Mich. i. 1. Joel, i. 1, &c.
Ch. iv. 13.	Gen. ii. 21.
בְּנֶפֶל תְּרֻמָּה עַל אַנְשֵׁי־	יִפְלֹ... תְּרֻמָּה עַל הָאָדָם
Ib. xxxiii. 15.	Ib. xv. 12. Prov. xix. 15. Isa. xxix. 10.
Ch. iv. 14.	Gen. xv. 12. Exod. iv. 10 ; xix. 16.
פָּחַד קִרְאֵנִי וְרַעְדָּה ³	Comp. Heb. xii. 21. Isa. vi. 4, 5.
	Jer. i. 6. Ezek. i. 28 ; ii. 2. Dan.
	x. 15-18. Jonah, i. 3, &c.
Ch. iv. 15.	Gen. ii. 7.
וְרוּחַ עַל פְּנֵי יַחֲלֶף וְגוֹ	נִשְׁמַת חַיִּים
Ib. xxxiv. 14.	Ch. vi. 17.
	רוּחַ חַיִּים
	Ch. vii. 22.
	נִשְׁמַת רוּחַ חַיִּים
	Ib. xli. 38. Eccl. xii. 7. 1 Kings, xxii.
	21. 2 Chron. xviii. 20. Comp. Exod.
	xxviii. 3. Numb. xxxvii. 18, &c. See Concord., under the terms רִיחַ, or Spirit .
Ch. iv. 16.	Dan. viii. 15 ; x. 18.
וְלֹא אֲכִיר מְרֻאָהוּ

¹ This seems to be the first place in which this term (רִיחַ) occurs in the sense of a divine revelation ; or, it may be, of one bringing such revelation : for it is worthy of remark, that both the verb, and pronoun following, may be construed as applying to intellectual agents (Gram. Art., 216, 7, 9). Hence, perhaps, this term is so frequently taken as signifying an agent by the Targumists, and interpreted by רִיחַ אֱלֹהִים, the word of God. See, too, Rev. xix. 13.

² It was in visions, seen in a sort of ecstasy (Comp. Acts, x. 10—Ἐπίστασις ἰσὶ ἀὐτὸν ἕκστασις Griesb., the very Hebrew phraseology, ib. xi. 5 ; xxii. 17), that revelations were perhaps most frequently made under both Testaments. The first we have any notice of is that in Gen. ii. 21, as formerly noticed ; the second, ib. xv. 12. In Job, xxxiii. 15-27, we have a very remarkable revelation of this sort ; and in this, not only are the doctrines of redemption, renewal, &c., but also of a Redeemer, particularly dwelt upon. I am inclined to believe, therefore, that the רִיחַ, mentioned here, is the person who appears to be styled רִיחַ, or word, as just now noticed on ch. iv. 12. It is also evident from the context in each place, that רִיחַ, in Prov. xix. 15, and Isa. xxix. 10, signifies either a revelation, or the means of obtaining it.

³ In Gen. xv. 12, we have the first mention, I think, of that extreme terror experienced when revelations were received from above, felt, as it should seem, from a deep sense of unworthiness in the receiver.

⁴ This is, certainly, the earliest passage of the Old Testament in which any mention is made of an unembodied spirit ; and to such spirit reference is made in ch. xxxiv. 14 ; and to an embodied spirit, ch. xxxii. 8. The parallel passages referred to will shew, that the latter was familiar in the earliest times of the patriarchs. We need not, therefore, as the Neologian critics tell us, go to Babylon and the times of the captivity for this notion. In Eccl. xii. 7, the existence of unembodied spirits is manifestly taught.

Job, iv. 17.	Ps. cxliii. 2.
האנוש מאלוה יזדק ¹	לא יזדק לפניך כל חי
Ib. ix. 2; xv. 14; xxv. 4, 6; xxxii. 2; xxxiii. 26, 32; xl. 3, &c.	Isa. xlv. 25.
	ביהוה יזדקן וגו'
Ch. iv. 17.	(Comp. Gen. vii. 1; xv. 6. Jer. xxiii. 6. Ezek. xvi. 51, 52. 2 Sam. xv. 4. Deut. xxv. 1. Prov. xvii. 15. Isa. xxvi. 7; l. 8. Dan. xii. 3, &c.
מעשהו	Gen. i. 26, 31; ii. 1, 3, 4. 18.
Ib. ix. 9; xxxi. 15; xxxii. 22; xxxv. 10.	Ps. xcvi. 5; c. 3; civ. 19. Is. xlv. 24, &c.
Ch. iv. 18.
ובמלאכיו ²	Gen. xvi. 7, 9, 10, &c.; xix. 1, &c.; xxi. 17; xxii. 11, 15; xxiv. 7, 40; xxxi. 11; xlviii. 16. Exod. iii. 2; xiv. 19, &c.
Ib. v. 1; xv. 15; xxxiii. 23.
Ch. iv. 19.	Ps. xc. 3.
ודכאום לפני עש ³	תשב אנוש עד דכא
Ib. v. 4; vi. 9; xix. 2; xxii. 9.	Ib. 5, 6. Comp. Ps. xxxiv. 19; lxxxix. 11; xciv. 5; cxliii. 3. Isa. iii. 15; liii. 5, 10; lvii. 15. Lam. iii. 34. Prov. xxii. 22, &c.
Ch. iv. 20.	Ps. xc. 7.
מבקר לערב יכתרו	מבקר ישיץ וחלף לערב ימולל ויבש:
	Exod. xviii. 13, 14.
Ch. iv. 21.	מין בקר עד ערב ⁴
הלל נסע יתרום במ ימורה ולל בחכמה:	Ps. xxxix. 12; xlix. 15, 17.
Ib. xxxvi. 12.	ותמס כעש חמודו
Ch. v. 1.	Prov. x. 21. Ezek. xxxiii. 8.
ואל מי מקדשים תפנה:	בחסר לב ימורה
	Ps. lxxiii. 25; cxiii. 2.
	מי לי בשמים ועמד לא ⁵ חפצתי בארץ:

¹ The doctrine of justification is certainly first taught in the Book of Genesis, as shewn by St. Paul; but no where in the Old Testament is it so fully entered into as in the Book of Job.

² It is quite evident from these passages, that the doctrine of angels was taught before the times of Job, as well as in his and subsequent times. We need not, therefore, as some will have us, go to the captivity in Babylon for this doctrine.

³ This term, עש, is used in none but the elevated style: it occurs no where in this sense and usage in the Pentateuch, but often in Job; from whom (ch. v. 4) it is imitated in the same phrase, Prov. xxii. 22. The word seems, therefore, to have been peculiar to the usage of Job, and from him to have been adopted by subsequent writers.

⁴ The more usual expression inverts this order, because the evening is considered as preceding the morning naturally. Jethro, Moses, and Job, have here taken the reverse.

⁵ This sentiment, which is rather an unusual one, is here manifestly the same in each place: the psalmist has rendered it rather more specific. The allusion,

- Job, v. 2.
 כי לאויל יהרג כעש ופתה תמית קנאה :
- Deut. xxix. 17, 19.
 לבבו פנה... מעם יהודה...
 יעשן אף יהודה וקנאתו באיש ההוא... ומחה יהודה את שמו מרתת השמים
 Prov. i. 32.
 משובת פתים תהרגם ושלות כסילים תאבדם
 Ch. xiv. 30. Ezek. xxxv. 11.
 ורקב ענמות קנאה :
- Ch. v. 3.
 אני ראיתי אויל משריש ואקוב
 נהו פתאם :
 Ib. ch. viii. 12-20; xii. 6. 14.
- Ps. xxxvii. 35, 36.
 ראיתי רשע ערוץ ומתערה כאזרח רענן : ויעבר והנה איננו
 Ps. cix. 13, 17, 18; cxix. 158; cxxix. 6.
 Prov. iii. 33.
 מארת יהודה בבית רשע ונדה נדיקים יברך :
- Ps. lxxiii. 3, 19.
 שלום רשעים אראה :
 כרגע ספו תמו מן בלהות :
- Zech. v. 3, 4.
 זאת האלה הונצאת על פני
 כל הארץ... ולנדה בתוך ביתו
 וגו' Jer. xii. 1, 2.
 מדוע דרך רשעים עלחה שלן
 כל בגדו בגד : ... גם שרשו וגו' (Comp. ib. xvii. 5, 6.)
- Ch. v. 4.
 ירחקו בניו מישע² וידכאו בשער ואין משיל :
- Ps. cxix. 155.
 רחוק מרשעים ישועה
 Ps. cix. 6.
 שטן יעמד על ימינו :

perhaps, is to the heathen custom of considering remarkable men as endowed with a greater portion of the anima mundi, alias, spirit of God, in their phrase, while living, and when dead, as elevated into deities; and to this the next verse seems strongly to allude. Compare the context of the passages cited from Deuteronomy and the Proverbs, and no doubt can remain on the subject.

¹ The following verse, viz. 37 (כז-הם שיג), contains a manifest allusion to Job's retaining his integrity, and the consequent prosperity enjoyed in his last days. And, on a careful perusal of all the passages cited, it can scarcely be doubted that the text of Job has supplied their ground-work.

² The term ישע, or ישועה, occurs, for the first time in the Bible, in these passages. It is found frequently afterwards, and always I believe in the elevated style: it is remarkable from the circumstance of its giving birth to the proper name JESUS: because the thing meant, viz. salvation, is in every sense intimately connected with him.

Ps. cix. 7, 9, 10.

בהשפמו יטא רשע
יחיו בניו יתומים וכוונ יוכו בניו

Comp. Ps. lxii. 2, 3, 8. Gen. xlix. 18.
Exod. xv. 2. 2 Sam. x. 11. Prov. xi.
14; xxiv. 6. Isa. xlv. 8. Hab. iii. 12.

Job, xiii. 16; xxx. 15.

גם הוא לי לישועה

Isa. lix. 11.

לישועה רחוקה ממנו

Ch. lvi. 1.

קרובה ישועתי לבא

Deut. xxxii. 39.

ואין... מניל

Judg. xviii. 28, &c.,—occurs for the first time in Job.

Ch. v. 5.

אשר קנינו רעב יאכל

Job. xviii. 16; xxiv. 6, 10.

Ps. cxxix. 6, 7.

שלף יבש: שלא מלא כפו קנור

Comp. Joel, i. 10-12. Isa. xvi. 9; xxvii.
11. Jer. vi. 17; viii. 20.

Ch. v. 6.

לא יטא מעפר און ומאדמה
לא יטמא עמל¹

Comp. ch. iv. 8; xv. 35.

Amos, iii. 3-7.

כי לא יעשה אדני יהודה דבר

כי אם גלה סודו אל עבדיו

הנביאים:

Isa. xlv. 7.

יוני אור ובורא חשך עשה

שלום ובורא רע אני יהודה

עשה כל אלה:

Eccles. passim.

Ch. v. 7.

כי אדם לעמל יולד

Gen. iii. 16, 17, 19.

בעשב תלדי בנים....

בעטבון תאכלנה כל ימי חיך:

בזעת אפיך תאכל לחם וגו'

Ps. li. 7, 12.

הן בטוון חוללרני ובחטא יחמתני

אמי:

לב טהור ברא לי אלהים ורוח

נכון חדש בקרבי:

¹ The origin of moral evil was no secret to the author of this book, nor indeed to any sacred writer either before or after his times. The first revelation made by God to man had stated the fact, and the cause of it; hence we discover no difference of opinion in the Scriptures on this otherwise inscrutable mystery. This, I think, is the drift of the passage cited from Amos. He has broadly stated, that nothing of this sort can occur, the cause and grounds of which have not been made known to God's prophets; i e. the publishers of his word and will. The Book of Ecclesiastes generally discusses this question.

Job, v. 8.
 אָדָרְשׁ אֶל אֱלֹהִים וְאֶל אֱלֹהִים
 אֲשֵׁים דְּבַרְתִּי :

Ch. v. 9.
 עָשָׂה גְדֹלוֹת . . . נִפְלְאוֹת עַד אֵין
 מִסְפָּר :

Ib. ch. xxxvii. 5, 14; xlii. 3.

Ch. v. 10.
 הִנָּתַן מָטֵר עַל פְּנֵי אֶרֶץ וְשִׁלָּה
 מִיָּם עַל פְּנֵי הַיַּמּוֹת :

Ib. ch. xxviii. 26; xxix. 23; xxxvi. 27;
 xxxvii. 6; xxxviii. 28.

Comp. Job, xxxviii. 22.

Ch. v. 11.
 לְשׁוֹם שְׁפִלִים לְמִרוֹם וְקִדְרִים
 שִׁבְבוּ יֵשַׁע :

Ib. ch. xx. 6-11; xxxvi. 15, 31.

Comp. Dent. xxxii. throughout. Ps.
 cxxxix, &c. &c. Eccles. iii. 18;
 vii. 14; viii. 2. Ps. cx. 4.

Gen. xviii. 14, &c. Ps. xl. 6; lxxii. 18; lxxxvi. 10; cxlv. 3, 5, 6; civ. generally. Exod. xxxiv. 10. Josh. iii. 5.
 Judg. vi. 13. Jer. xxxii. 17, 27, &c.

Ps. lxx. 10, 11, 12, 13.

פָּקְדָה הָאָרֶץ וְתִשְׁקַקְהָ רַבֵּת תַּעֲשֶׂרְנָה פֶּלֶג אֱלֹהִים מִלֵּא מִיָּם

Ib. Ps. civ. 13-16; cxlvii. 8. Acts,
 xiv. 17.

Jer. v. 24.

הִנָּתַן גֶּשֶׁם וַיּוֹרֶה וּמִלְקוֹשׁ בַּעֲרוֹ
 וְגו'

Ch. x. 13; and li. 16.

לְקוֹל תְּרוֹת הַיּוֹן מִיָּם בְּשָׁמַיִם וַיַּעֲלֶה נְשָׂאִים מִקֶּבֶד אֶרֶץ
 בְּרָקִים לְמִטֵּר עָשָׂה וַיּוֹצֵא רוּחַ מֵאֲצֻרוֹתָיו

Ch. xiv. 22.

הִישׁ בַּהֲבֵלֵי הַחַיִּים מִנְּשָׁמַיִם וְאֵם
 הַשָּׁמַיִם יִתְּנוּ רִבִּיבִים וְגו'

1 Sam. ii. 6, 7.

יְהוָה מִמִּית וּמַחִיָּה מוֹרִיד שְׂאוֹל
 וַיַּעַל :

יְהוָה מוֹרִישׁ וּמַעֲשִׂיר מִשְׁפִּיל אֶף
 מִרוֹמֵם וְגו'

Ps. cxiii. 7, 8.

מִקִּוּי מַעֲפָר דָּל מֵאֲשַׁפֶּת יָרִים
 אֲבוּיֹן : לְהוֹשִׁיבֵי עִם נְדִיבִים
 עִם נְדִיבֵי עַמּוֹ :

Ezek. xvii. 24.

אֲנִי יְהוָה הַשְּׁפַלְתִּי עֵץ גְּבוּהָ
 הִנְבַּחְתִּי עֵץ שְׁבֹל וְגו'

Ps. lxxii. 12; lxxv. 6, 8; cvii. 41.
 Hab. ii. 9.

¹ The particular providence of God is admirably taught in the remaining part of this chapter; a subject, I need not perhaps say, never taught in this way except under divine revelation: and, it is proper to remark here, although the wonderful works of God are particularly appealed to, as they also are in many of the subsequent chapters which treat on the same subject, not so much as one of the miracles performed under the guidance or appointments of Moses, appears to be referred to, as formerly remarked.

² The miraculous mode of giving divine revelations Eliphaz has already noticed, chap. iv. 12, &c. The following wonders recounted are those visible to the eye of faith only, but as obvious to it as any open miracle can be, and quite as convincing. This is sufficient to shew, that religious knowledge was by no means low in those days.

Job, v. 12.

מִפֶּר מַחֲשֹׁבוֹת עֲרוּמִים וְלֹא
תַעֲשֶׂנָה יָדֵיהֶם הַוְשִׁיָּה :

Ps. xxxiii. 10.

יִהְיֶה הַפִּיר עֲנַת גּוֹיִם הַנִּיז
מַחֲשֹׁבוֹת עַמִּים :

Ps. lxxvi. 6.

אֲשֶׁתִּוְלְלוּ אֲבוּרֵי לֵב... וְלֹא מִנְאֵו
כָּל אֲנָשֵׁי הָיִל יָדֵיהֶם :

Isa. viii. 10.

עֲשׂוּ עֲנָה וְתִפֶּר דְּבַרְוֹ דְּבַר וְלֹא יִקָּוֶה וְגו'

Ch. xlv. 25.

מִפֶּר אֲתוֹת בַּדִּים וְקַסְמִים יִהְיֶה מִשִּׁיב חַכְמִים אַחֲרֵי וּדְעָתָם
יִסְכַּל :

Prov. viii. 14, 15.

לִי עֲנָה וְתוֹשִׁיָּה אֲנִי בִּינָה לִי
גְבוּרָה : בּוֹ מַלְכִּים יִמְלְכוּ
וְרוֹזְנִים יַחֲקִקוּ צְדָק : וְגו'
(Comp. Ps. xciv. 11.)

Ch. v. 13.

לִכְד חַכְמִים בְּעֲרָמִים וְעֲנָה
נִפְתָּלִים נִמְהָרָה :

Ps. ix. 16, 17.

טַבְּעוּ גּוֹיִם בְּשַׁחַת עֲשׂוּ בְרִשְׁתָּ זוֹ טַמְנֵנוּ נִלְכַּדָּה רְגַלָּם :
בִּפְעַל כַּפְּיוֹ נִקְשׂ רִשְׁעֵי

Ps. xxxv. 8.

וּרְשָׁתוֹ אֲשֶׁר טַמְנֵן תִּלְכְּדוּ

Isa. xix. 3, 14.

וְעֲנָתוֹ אֲבַלַע...
יִהְיֶה מִסַּךְ בְּקִרְבָּה רוּחַ עוֹשִׂים
וְהִתְעִנוּ אֶת מִצְרַיִם וְגו'
(Comp. I Cor. iii. 19.)

Ch. v. 14.

יוֹמָם יִפְגְּשׁוּ חַשְׁדַּךְ וְכִלְיָלָה יִמְשָׁשׁוּ בְּנִהְרִים :

Dent. xxviii. 29.

וְהָיִיתָ מִמְשָׁשׁ בְּנִהְרִים כְּאֲשֶׁר
יִמְשָׁשׁ הָעוֹר בְּאַפְלָה וְגו'

Isa. lix. 10.

נִגְשָׁשָׁה כְּעוֹרִים קִיר וְכִאִין עֵינַיִם נִגְשָׁשָׁה כְּשִׁלְנוּ בְּנִהְרִים כִּנְשָׁף
וְגו'

Prov. iv. 19.

דֶּרֶךְ רִשְׁעִיִּים כְּאַפְלָה לֹא יִדְעוּ
בְּמָה יִכְשָׁלוּ :

Comp. Jer. xiii. 16 ; xviii. 15 ; I. 32,
&c.

Job, v. 15.	Ps. xvii. 13.
וישע מחרב מפיהם ומיד הזק אביון :	פלטת נפשי מרשע חרבך :
	Ps. xxxv. 10.
	משיל עני מחזק ממנו ועני ואביון מגולו :
	Comp. Ps. lxxii. 4, 13, 14 ; cvii. 41 ; cix. 31 ; cxl. 13, &c.
Ch. v. 16.	See ch. iv. 6 on the first member ; on the second,
ותהי לדל תקוה ועלתה קפצה פיה :	Ps. cvii. 42, וכל עולה קפצה פיה ; Isa. lli. 15, יקפצו מלכים פיהם וגו' ; Lam. iii. 30, ירתן בעפר פיהו אולי יש תקוה :

¹ It is certain that we have a direct citation here ; for, although there is a slight difference in the wording of the two passages, they are in sense perfectly identical. In Job, for example, we have עֲלֵתָהּ, for עֲלֵתָהּ ; that is, a derivative from the root על, with the ה or ת of unity—as the Arabs term it—added, making the sense intensific. In the Psalm we have כל עֵלָה, which I take to be perfectly identical in signification with the passage just noticed, and a good interpretation of it. The phrase is singular, and occurs only once more in the Old Testament, as marked in the table. The passage from the Lamentations seems also to evince that its author had the context of Job in his eye. Let it be observed, too, the former member of this verse in the Psalm will be found, with a very slight difference, in Job, xxii. 19, וְיִאֵץ מִיָּדָהּ וְיִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה ; while we have in the Psalm, וְיִאֵץ וְיִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה, which is, perhaps, sufficiently near to shew that the original author was the same person in each case. It is still more remarkable—and can be explained on no other principle, than that the writer of the Book of Psalms had the Book of Job before him when he wrote—that this very Psalm (viz. cvii.) also cites two other passages verbatim from Job ; for, we have at ver. 40, שִׁנְיָד בְּיַד עֲלֵי־נְיָבִים בְּחַוָּה לֹא־דָדָד ; which stands thus in Job, xii. 21, שִׁנְיָד בְּיַד עֲלֵי־נְיָבִים ; and then a little lower down at ver. 24, we have the remaining member ; viz. בְּחַוָּה לֹא־דָדָד. No one will, I am sure, suppose here that the Psalmist is the original writer ; it being quite obvious, first, that the context in Job is more of a piece, and possesses infinitely more the character of a primitive, simple abstract, and unfettered discussion, than it does in the Psalm, which introduces a portion of the history of the Israelites—a thing never done by our patriarch ;—and here divides and dislocates this passage, in order to make it the more suitable to his combined consideration of both doctrine and experience. Again, if I am not mistaken, we have at ver. 18 of this Psalm an allusion to another part of the Book of Job, viz. chap. vi. 7. The former appears to me both to be an allusion, and at the same time an excellent comment on the latter. We have I think one instance more, at least, of manifest allusion to the Book of Job in this Psalm. In ver. 27, it is said, קָדְמוּ וְהִיטוּ כַּשֵּׁבִי, They turn about, and are agitated like the drunkard. In Job, xii. 25, we have וְהִיטוּ כַּשֵּׁבִי, and he makes them stray (or wander) like the drunkard. The Psalm, it should be observed, enlarges upon the original text, explaining, as it is customary in citing the language of others, in order to give it an application in the new case the more pointed.

Job, v. 17.

אשרי אנוש יוכיחנו אלה ומוכר
שדי אל תמאס :

Prov. iii. 11, 12, 13.

מוכר יהוה בני אל תמאס ואל
תקץ בתוכחתו :
כי את אשר יאהב יהוה יוכיח
וכאב את בן ידמה : אשרי אדם
וגו

(Comp. Heb. xii. 5, 6, 10. Jam. i. 12.
Rev. iii. 19.)

Ps. xciv. 12.

אשרי הגבר אשר תיסרנו יה

Ps. cxix. 67, 68, 71.

טירם אענזה אני שנג ועתה
אמרתך שמרתני :
טוב אתה ומטיב למדני הקיך :
טוב לי כי עניתני למען אלמד
הקיך :

(Comp. Lam. iii. 33. Mic. iv. 6.
2 Cor. i. 6, 7, &c.)

Ch. v. 18.

כי הוא יכאיב ויחבש ימחץ וידו תרפינה :

Deut. xxxii. 39.

אני אמית ואחיה
מחבתי ואני ארפא
(Comp. 1 Sam. ii. 6, 7.)

Ps. cxlvii. 3.

הרפא לשבורי לב ומחבש לעצבותם :

Isa. xix. 22.

ונקף יהוה... נקף רפא ושבו ירפאם :

Ch. xxx. 26.

ביום חבש יהוה את שבר עמו
ומחץ ככתו ירפא :

(Comp. lvii. 17-19. Jer. xvii. 14 ;
xxx. 17 ; xxxiii. 9. Lam. ii. 13.
Exod. xv. 26. Numb. xii. 13. Ps.
vi. 3, &c. Prov. iv. 22, &c. in places almost innumerable.)

Ch. v. 19.

בשש צרות יעולך ובשבט לא יגט בך רע :

Ps. xxxiv. 5, 7, 8.

ומכל צורותי הטיילני :
ומכל צרותיו הושיעני

Ps. xxxiv. 19, 20.

ומכל צרותם הנחלים :

(Ib. liv. 9 (7); xci. 3-8; cxx. 2. Prov. ii. 12, 16; xxiv. 16. Exod. vi. 6. 2 Sam. xii. 7. 2 Kings, xviii. 32, 33, &c. 2 Chron. xxxii. 17. Isa. xix. 20; xxxvi. 18, &c. 2 Cor. i. 10. 2 Pet. ii. 7, 9. Rev. iii. 10, &c. &c.)

Job, v. 20.

ברעב פדך ממור ובמלחמה
מידי חרב :

Ib. vi. 23; xxxiii. 24, 28.

Ps. xxxiii. 19, 20.

להחיל ממור נפשם ולחיותם
ברעב :

עזרנו ומגננו הוא :

Ps. xxxvii. 19, 20.

לא יבשו בעת רעה ובימי רעבון ישבעו :

Ps. lv. 19.

פדה בשלום נפשי מקרב לי וגו'

Prov. x. 3.

לא ירעיב יהוה נפש צדיק וגו'

(Comp. 2 Sam. iv. 9. 1 Kings, i. 29. Ps. xxvii. 3; xxxiv. 23, &c. Isa. xxxv. 10; li. 11. Jer. xv. 21. Hos. vii. 13. Zech. x. 8, &c. &c.)

Ch. v. 21.

בשוט לשון תחבול ולא תירא
משוד כי יבוא :

Ps. lxxiii. 9.

לשונם תהלך בארץ :

Ps. xxxi. 19.

תאלמנה שפתי שקר הדברות
על צדיק עתק וגו'

Ps. l. 19, 20.

לשונך תצמיד מרמה :

באחיד תדבר בכן אמך תתן
דפי :

(Comp. Ps. v. 10; x. 7; xii. 4, 5; xv. 3. Prov. vi. 17, 24; x. 31; xii. 19; xvii. 4, 20, &c. Eccl. x. 11. Isa. iii. 8, &c. as to the second member.)

Deut. vii. 18.

לא תירא מהם

(Comp. v. 17.)

Deut. xx. 1.

וראית סוס ורכב עם רב ממך לא תירא מהם

(Comp. xxxi. 8.)

Isa. xiii. 6.

כשד משדי יבוא

Joel, i. 15, id.

Ps. xii. 6.

משד עניים מאנקת אביונים עתה אקום ואמר יהוה אשית בישע
יפיה לו :

(Vers. 4, 5, contain allusions to the former member : this to the latter.)

Ps. xci. 5, 6.

לא תירא... מקטב ישוד נהרים :

Prov. iii. 25.

אל תירא מפחד... ומשאח
רשעים כי תבא :

(The places are almost innumerable in which the sentiment is found.)

Job, v. 22.

לשד ולכפן תשחק ומחית הארץ
אל תירא :

Prov. xxxi. 25.

ותשחק ליום אחרון :

Ps. lii. 8.

יראו נדיקים וייראו ועליו
ישחקו :

Ps. xci. 5, 6.

לא תירא... מדבר באפל יהלך
מקטב ישוד נהרים :

(As in ver. 21.)

¹ It is hardly possible, I think, to avoid the conclusion—upon considering these and similar passages—that much of the language which is doctrinally true, and is as such applied in this Book of Job, is afterwards also applied to the purposes of particular prophecy in the Old Testament. If, for example, the doctrinal truth contained in this place in Job was familiar to the Jews—when the language in which it is couched was applied to prophecy, as it seems to have been in Isa. xi. xliii. &c. and certainly in Psalm xci. 13—it could not but have had great force with them; just as is the case when the language of Scripture, or of some eminent poet, is applied among ourselves to some subject suitable to its terms. This would properly be termed accommodation; and, certainly a few such instances are to be found in the New Testament, but they are very few. In such cases as these, the language of doctrine would, like that of particular prophecy, receive a sort of fulfilment: in other words, the language of what I term general prophecy, would take the place of that which belongs to particular prophecy.—(See my Sermons and Dissertations on Prophecy, p. 216.)

Job, v. 23.

כי עם אבני השדה בריתך וחית השדה השלמה לך¹:

Ps. xci. 13.

על שחל ופתן תדרך תרמס
כפיר ותנין :

Ezek. xxxiv. 25.

וכרתי להם ברית שלום והשבתי
חיה רעה מן הארץ וגו'

Hos. ii. 20.

וכרתי להם ברית ביום ההוא
עם חית השדה וגו'

(Comp. Gen. ix. 5. Lev. xxvi. 6, 22.
Deut. xxviii. 26; xxxii. 24. Isa.
xi. 6, &c; xxxv. 9; xliii. 20; lxx. 25.
&c. Jer. iv. 7; v. 6; xii. 8, 9, &c.
&c. Parallels more or less direct are almost innumerable.)

Prov. xvi. 7.

ברצות יהוה דרכי איש גם איביו
ישלם אתו :

(Several of the passages above cited on ver. 22, seem allied to this.)

Ch. v. 24.

ידעת כי שלום אהלך ופקדת נוד
ולא תחטא² :
Comp. xxii. 26-29.

Prov. ii. 5, 9, 10.

אז תבין יראת יהוה ודעת
אלהים תמצא :

אז תבין צדק ומשפט ומישרים
כל מעגל טוב :

כי תבוא חכמה בלבך ודעת
לנפשך ינעם :

¹ The first member of this passage must necessarily be figurative, and the term stones might have been intended to signify foundation-stone (see Note on the place); if so, the allusion might be here to the covenant made with Noah (Gen. ix. 9, &c.), in which express mention is made of the beasts of the field. Whence it should seem to have been understood generally, that, as the beasts were originally (Gen. i. 28) placed under the dominion of man; so, in covenant with God, he should at least be safe from their violence. And hence, perhaps, the numerous instances, as in Gen. ix. 5; Lev. xxvi. 6, &c.; Deut. xxviii. 26, &c. in which destructive beasts are threatened as destroyers, and actually sent as such, whenever God's covenant was disregarded: and hence too, perhaps, destructive men, particularly the enemies of religion, are termed beasts, and designated as lions, wolves, bears, &c. in Holy Writ.

² The doctrine of assurance, i. e. of the believer's feeling sure, and having no doubt, that all God's word is true, and shall be realised with him if he persevere, is certainly inculcated here, and in the adjoining context. It is a doctrine at which many Christians never do arrive; but is, at the same time, a doctrine without which revealed religion can be of but little service to man. Compare Acts, xvii. 31. Col. ii. 2. 1 Thess. i. 5. Heb. vi. 11; x. 22.

Prov. ii. 12.

להצילך מדרך רע וגו'

(Comp. John, vii. 17; viii. 28; xiv. 20.
1 John, ii. 20; v. 10, 12, &c. Prov.
xxviii. 5. Isa. xxxii. 4, 17; lii. 6;
lx. 16. Dan. xii. 10. Ezek. xxxiv. 30.
Jer. xxiv. 7; xxxi. 34.)

Job, v. 25.

יודעת כי רב זרעך ושאתאיך
כעשב הארץ:¹

Gen. i. 11.

עשב מזריע זרע וגו'

Ch. xv. 5.

כה יהיה זרעך:

Ch. xxii. 17.

הרבה ארבה את זרעך ככוכבי
השמים וגו'

Ps. lxxii. 16.

יעיצו מעיר כעשב הארץ:

Ps. cxii. 2.

גבור בארץ יהיה זרעו וגו'

Isa. xxii. 24.

כבוד בית אביו הנאשאים והנפעות

(Comp. xliv. 3; xlvi. 19; lxi. 9; lxv. 23.)

Ch. v. 26.

תבוא בכלח אלי קבר כעלות
גדיש בעתו:

Gen. xv. 15.

תבוא אל אבתך בשלום תקבר
בשיבה טובה:

Ch. xxv. 8.

וימת אברהם בשיבה טובה זקן ושבע וגו'

Deut. xxx. 20.

כי הוא חייך וארך ימך וגו'

Ps. xc. 5, 7.

זרמתם שנה יהיו....
כי עלינו באפך וגו'

¹ The cases of Noah and Abraham, and of the latter particularly, seem to be had in view in this place and context.

Ps. xci. 16.

אֶרֶךְ יָמִים אֲשַׁבֵּיעֶהוּ וְאֶרְאֶהוּ
בִישׁוּעָתִי :

(Comp. Prov. iii. 2, 16; ix. 11; x. 27.
Eph. vi. 2, 3. 1 Cor. xi. 30, &c.)

Job, v. 27.

הִנֵּה זֹאת הַקְּרִינָה כֵּן הִיא
שְׁמַעְנָה וְאֶתָּה דַע לְךָ :

Comp. viii. 8; xxviii. 27.

Ps. cxi. 2, 3.

גְּדוּלִים מַעֲשֵׂי יְחֹה דְרוּשִׁים לְכֹל חַפְצֵיהֶם

הוֹד וְהַדָּר פִּעְלוּ וַיִּדְקְתוּ עֲמֹדַת לְעַד : וְנֹ

It would be almost endless to pursue this inquiry throughout the whole of the Book of Job, and it would be unnecessary to my purpose. The more remarkable parallels which have occurred to me, will be found in their places in the margin of the translation; and these the reader may, with the help of the Concordance and of his memory, carry to any extent he may choose.¹ And his conviction must be, unless his mind be constituted very differently from mine, that this mass of undesigned coincidence could never have existed, had there not been some substantial cause for it. That is, either the language and sentiments of this book must have been accessible to the sacred writers ever since the times of Moses, or else the Book of Job must have been written subsequent to them all, and so have borrowed in all this abundance from them: an opinion which the wildest of theorists would scarcely adopt.

Upon the whole, I think it must be evident to every considerate person, that the allusions, noticed above and elsewhere, made to the creation, to the fall of man, and to other circumstances manifestly belonging to the patriarchal times, could not have been made in the writings of Job had he not been familiar with them : and, from the manner in which these allusions are made,—occasionally citing the very words of the Book of Genesis,—it does seem unavoidable that that book was in existence in the times of Job. Other considerations leading to the same result I have proposed elsewhere ; and my opinion is, that the Book of Genesis does undoubtedly present us with a collection of the patriarchal scriptures. And, if such book was then in existence, nothing can be more likely than that it would be cited, and often alluded to, both by Job and his friends. Again, if such a book as this of Job existed in the early times of the Jewish polity, when no other Scriptures were known to the Jews, except the fragments contained in the Book of Genesis ; nothing can be more probable than that—circumstanced as Moses was—it would become a standard and sort of class-book with that nation ; especially as it contained the doctrines necessary to salvation, recognised the preceding revelation, and actually looked forward even to the hope of Israel, the Redeemer who had been promised in the line, and from the very loins, of Abraham. And if this too was the fact, then nothing could be more probable—nay, more certain—than that this book would constantly be referred to, and even cited, by all subsequent sacred writers : which has certainly been done,—if any reliance whatever can be placed on the citations and parallel places adduced above,—just as it was the case with the writers of the New Testament. And the conclusion is: This book is so indissolubly connected in matter, doctrine, style, history, &c.—is so interwoven with every thing that is important in both Testaments—that it must now, as it ever has done, constitute an important part and parcel of God's word, as revealed for the instruction, consolation, and final salvation, of man.

¹ It could be wished that some good Hebrew scholar, who has leisure and judgment sufficient for the task, would thoroughly investigate this question. My engagements — were I otherwise qualified — will not allow of this. The inquiry might further be extended from the Law of Moses to the subsequent sacred writers, and even from one historian to another, with the view of thus also ascertaining the priority, or the contrary, of each respectively. Such a work would confer an immense benefit on the study of the Old Testament.

There is still one consideration which ought to be noticed ; it is, The style and manner in which doctrines are proposed in this book. It is all-important in the proposal of doctrines, that the terms be few and clear, and the manner interesting. Now in this book, the whole has taken the form of friendly controversy :¹ a form the most likely to afford interest to the reader, and at the same time to guard against his mistaking the meaning of his author. Mere dialogue is apt to become dull and vapid, especially on subjects not very inviting in themselves;—which unhappily is found to be the case with revealed religion. It is, when feeling is mixed up with the question—when some one party is suffering under imputed wrong, and another is silenced by the force of argument,—that truth carries with it its greatest interest. And such is the case with this book.

¹ According to Strabo, the kings of Arabia frequently argued causes publicly, and were extremely popular and hospitable. His words, near the end of his

Debate too allows of an extensive range of inquiry, of illustration, of proof, and the like; into which mere dialogue, or narrative, can never enter. In this point of view, the Book of Job is certainly one of the most interesting ever presented to the world. It is the most comprehensive as to its range of inquiry, illustration, and proof; and, what is still of more importance here, it is the most full on the subjects of doctrine and experience ever yet known. It should seem almost incredible that, within the space of nine-and-thirty not very long chapters, it should dwell with such minuteness and accuracy on the character of God, of angels, of man; on the creation, the fall, redemption, death, the resurrection of the body, the immortality of the soul, the renewal or regeneration of man; on past history, and events to happen in futurity; on the mysteries too of nature, and subjects of natural philosophy; the depths of the ocean, the heights of the heavens; the wealth and treasures of the bowels of the earth; the wonders of the starry firmament, the poisonings of the clouds, the stroke of the thunderbolt; the beauties of the feathered tribe, the courage of the war-horse, the horrors of the tempest, of the day of battle, of starving poverty, and wretchedness; the conquests of virtue; and, above all, the inscrutable glories,—necessarily incommunicable to man, but shrouded in clouds and thick darkness,—visible only in the immediate presence of the Deity. I say it is almost incredible, that matters so incomparably good, so intense in interest, so extensive, so varied, and so greatly dilated upon, should be comprehended in this short book. And yet, sixteenth book, are:—"Οὕτω δ' ὁ βασιλεὺς ἔστι δημοτικός, ὥστε πρὸς τῷ αυτοδιακόμφ, καὶ τῷ ἀντιδιάκονον τοῖς ἄλλοις αὐτὸν γίνεσθαι πολλῶν δὲ καὶ ἐν τῷ δήμῳ δίδωσιν ἰσθῆ' ὅτι δὲ καὶ ἕξιτάξεται τι περὶ τὸν φίλον. Adeo rex popularis est, ut ad id, quod ipse sibi ministrat, etiam aliis ministret. Sæpè etiam apud populum causam dicit: nonnunquam in ejus vitam inquiritur. Which seems to me to be almost a literal account of Job.

nothing seems crowded, unnaturally contracted, or short : every discussion grows naturally out of the preceding one ; and — while the whole affects nothing, attempts neither to astonish nor confound — we are insensibly and delightfully conducted into matter the most profound, awful, and instructive. Heavenly wisdom and earthly knowledge are so intimately connected, united, and discussed, that the natural inlets to the one, sense, reason, and reflection, are without any effort on our parts, made also the channels through which the mind is enlightened, refreshed, raised, refined, and delighted, by the other. And it must, I think, be confessed, that no mode of conveying instruction could have been fixed upon, better calculated to insure the ends had here in view, than the controversial character in which this book has been given.

It may also be remarked, that this is the only book of this sort with which antiquity has presented us. Nor do I know of any eastern book whatever written in this form and manner. The tales of Abou Zaid of Surooj, commonly known under the name of the Makamât of Hariri of Basra, are often appealed to, by the modern school of Germany, as affording examples of this sort ; but, in truth, they present us with no such thing. These tales are there recited by a sort of wandering preacher, who, while he declaims most loudly against the vices of others, is himself represented as any thing but the contrary. Generally speaking, we have no dialogue at all ; and in no case have we the friendly religious controversy of the Book of Job. This attempt, therefore, of these our neighbours to bring down this venerable book to the level of a book of Arabian tales, is as groundless and weak, as the other similar efforts already alluded to.

SECTION VIII.

ON THE TRANSLATION AND INTERPRETATION OF SCRIPTURE GENERALLY, AND OF THE BOOK OF JOB IN PARTICULAR, AS ADOPTED IN THIS WORK.

RELIGION, to be binding on man, must necessarily be grounded on Divine revelation; and, on the contrary, were there no such thing as a divine revelation in the world, religion, if such thing haply existed, could not possibly rise higher than a system of moral philosophy, and hence could claim the faith of none. The Scriptures, however, which we possess, contain a Divine revelation: they are such as to admit of the best possible proof that this is the fact; and this proof has been satisfactorily made out times innumerable.

If, then, this is the case, if we really are in possession of a revelation from above; no pains taken to make out its declarations correctly can be too great, no toil superfluous, no inquiry, however lengthened or painful, too much, when we consider the character of the document on which they are to be bestowed. Because, to mistake here would eventually amount to the same thing as making the word of God of none effect, and divesting man of his best inheritance; while it would also thwart, and make null and void, the most gracious of purposes which the Creator has afforded, for the guidance and final happiness of his rational creatures.

If, in the next place, it was the intention of the Creator to make a divine revelation to man, this must have been done in some such way, or ways, as would make it available to him: that is, as would make it intelligible to his mind, whether this was by words, or by signs, or by some secret and unseen influence, singly operating upon his senses, or by several of these conjointly. More means of access than these to the mind of man do not exist; and fewer do not appear to have been had recourse to, as we shall presently see. No available means, therefore, of thus benefiting man, seem to have been left unemployed by his gracious Creator ; and it is for him to take care that the due use be made of them.

As to the first of these means, viz. words, or, which is the same thing, language, it is necessarily subject to much imperfection ; and, therefore, ought to be treated with the greatest possible delicacy and care. Words, as every one must see, are mere arbitrary sounds allowed generally to pass, for the purpose of representing to the mind the names either of certain things, properties, or actions. When these stand for the names of things, and when such language is living and vernacular, there will be a very general agreement on their precise import ; but, when these are metaphorically, or otherwise figuratively, applied, or when the language in which they are used has long ceased to be vernacular or living, the case immediately becomes different : and, should both these accidents concur, the probabilities of mistake would be greatly multiplied : and, the more figurative such language is, and the farther we are removed from the countries and times in which it was in use ; the greater will these probabilities of mistake necessarily be. This I think must be applicable, in a greater or less degree, to all written language, even when vernacular.

Again, as to the language of signs, or symbols. It is felt by every one, I think, that a certain word, or words, accompanied by one sort of sign, action, grimace, &c., adopted at the same time by the speaker, may mean one thing ; while the same word, or words, accompanied by another sort of sign or action, will signify another : and here, the tone, or what is sometimes termed the emphasis, may be considered as partly, or wholly, constituting such sign. Words, then, joined with such signs, or symbols, will be qualified to a certain extent ; and when we know what such signs or symbols imply, we very properly avail ourselves of them : a thing often had recourse to, as far as it can, in interpreting ; the law of Moses, and the prophecies of the Old Testament, as well the Revelation of St. John in the New. When, therefore, we can be sure both of the meaning of the word or words used, together with that of the sign or symbol had recourse to, we are also sure, to a certain extent, that we can ascertain the intention of our author.

Another consideration, intimately connected with the foregoing, is this, viz. Words and signs, or symbols, must have had particular regard to opinions, notions, customs, laws, expectations; the state of knowledge, whether geographical, chronological, astronomical, &c.; of the arts, of agriculture, of commerce, of political economy, of war, of mineralogy, geology, natural and other history; and, above all, of theology. Language, I say, connected with what may be termed the manner or tone of its enunciation, i.e. with certain symbolical actions, grimace, attitude of the body, or expression of the countenance—circumstances attending all living languages when spoken, more or less—is not in much danger, generally, of being misunderstood. When, however, all these accompanying indications of meaning are removed, as in the case of our Scriptures, and men are also far removed from the times and countries in which our documents were first committed to writing, the probabilities of mistake must be fearfully great; and, consequently, the care taken to prevent these ought to be great likewise. Now, I think, it must be evident that, to make out any ancient author well, must greatly depend first on the knowledge of every thing connected with him and his language; and then, secondly, on the skill with which this shall be applied. In other words, whether we consider our author grammatically or exegetically; that is, with reference either to his language or his matter severally, these considerations must be allowed—each and severally, or in the aggregate, and combinedly, as the case may require—to have their due force and influence: because it is a well-known fact, that the opinions, &c. of any people, do necessarily and extensively influence their language; and that, generally speaking, language can never be well understood, translated, or interpreted, so long as the opinions, &c. held by the people speaking it remain unknown. Whether, therefore, the grammar¹ of a language, its lexicography, or its rhetoric, are exclusively made the subjects of our inquiry ; or, whether the theology, laws, customs, expectations, &c., of any people are ; no result can in either case be relied on, because, considerations of the greatest weight and import will have been neglected.

¹ I have dwelt the more particularly on this subject, because the plausibility of what is termed “grammatical interpretation” has, of late years, been made greatly to impose on the unlearned and unwary. It was from this, principally, that Germany has been inundated with infidel principles. Translators and commentators are often little aware, that, when they give up the theological interpretations obvious in the writings of the apostles, they positively adopt the notions of heathenism.

It is true, indeed, the provinces of the grammarian and preacher, considered severally, will differ to some extent. The former is more conversant with the subtleties and nice distinctions of language, certain usages, opinions, &c., with which the latter may have but little to do. His main business is, to dwell on the great principles of revealed truth, and to trace these in their bearings and effects, through the various circumstances and relations of life. Still, both are indissolubly connected in many cases : and occasions will arise, in which the preacher will stand in need of all the aid with which the nicest distinctions of the grammarian can supply him ; and, on the contrary, in which the grammarian will stand in need of similar assistance from the theologian. The truly learned divine will, therefore, combine both to the greatest extent possible. He ought, in order to possess a real right and title to the character of a master in Israel, to possess both in an eminent degree ; because, without these, he cannot possibly be an able minister of the New Testament. I do not mean to say, that every village-preacher ought to be thus qualified ; this would be to call for something at once unnecessary and impossible : but I do, that the able minister of the New Testament must. And further, that, to secure the respect necessary to support a national establishment of religion in any country, the leading members of the clerical body must be thus qualified.¹

We can now see, that the distinction so often and so successfully made, between the grammatical and theological interpretation of Scripture, is at once groundless, and a mere imposition. We may be told, as we occasionally are, when speaking of the times of the Reformation, that the grammarians and theologians were mutually opposed to each other : one party taking one side ; another, another. But this must take for granted, either that the grammarians had thrown off all considerations connected with theology, were ignorant of them, or some such thing; or else, that the theologians were similarly situated with regard to the grammar. We can also see, that those translators and interpreters of Scripture, who attach themselves to some one of these parties, in opposition to the other, are acting a part which a more extended view of the subject would shew them to be erroneous; and not only so but the best calculated to conduct them to a most awful wresting of the Scriptures of Truth from their true and legitimate objects. In Germany, it need not be dissembled, the first of these partial modes of proceeding has succeeded in making a large portion of that once highly favoured nation little less than infidel.¹ Let us, therefore, spare no pains duly to appreciate and duly to apply the more extended, and juster views, which have so long and so happily prevailed among us; and which have made our church, as they have our nation, the wonder and envy of the world. It may be thought, perhaps, a matter of little importance to the general conduct of society, as to how questions of this sort are determined, or acted upon; but the truth is, the moral and social character of men is influenced in a most wonderful degree by the consideration: the difference really is, that of true religion on the one hand, or mere heathenism on the other; and the effects, necessarily, those resulting from rectitude of principle and honesty of conduct, or the entire abjuration of real religious principle, and the adoption of such notions on morality, and thence of such conduct, as the variety of circumstances may suggest for the moment.

¹ I fear it may be said, with too much truth, that the want of respect evinced for a considerable length of time towards the clergy of this country has, in a great degree, grown out of a marked neglect of theological learning in every class of its ministers.

This consideration I deem of the utmost possible importance in the interpretation of Holy Scripture: because, just as the disposition of mind of the interpreter may be, such will also be his interpretation in the main. In many places, such as those of mere narrative, indeed, it cannot signify much what the notions of the translator are; but in others, innumerable: those in which doctrines, allusions to ancient opinions, customs, and the like, are involved, it will be every thing; because here, what the context does not happen to put it out of his power to misunderstand, and then to misinterpret, the bias of his own mind — if his views are partial — effectually will. And this, be it remembered, will not be confined to the faulty and partial system just noticed. It will also indulge in all the varieties of opinion and doctrine, in all the foolish and superstitious notions, of either ancient or modern times. And which of these extremes is most to be feared; viz., that by which the mere grammarian makes the sacred writers talk like heathens, or that by which they are made to sanction every superstitious piece of nonsense which the world has ever heard of or witnessed, it is hard to say. My own opinion is, that not only is each equally bad in itself, but often leads to equally bad, and not seldom to the very same, results. I mean, to heathenism and positive infidelity.

¹ I have just been informed by a letter from Halle, that the veil of rationalism is now thrown off by many of the former leaders of this delusion; and that Pantheism is openly professed by them; and that others have betaken themselves to what is termed an evangelical profession of the Gospel.

The duly attempering, therefore, of these two most important ingredients in the person of a translator, or interpreter, of Holy Scripture, is every thing. I mean a rigid adherence, on the one hand, to the requirements of the idioms and usages of the language from which we translate, or which we interpret; and, on the other, the paying every possible regard to the theology, laws, customs, antiquities, and the like, which are known to have prevailed in the countries and times in which our authors lived and wrote. To illustrate, then, these positions, with particular reference to the book before us. The language of the Book of Job is, as we have seen, that of the best Hebrew times, inclining occasionally to the forms and significations peculiar to the Chaldee. Of both these dialects — for such they may be termed — we have a considerable stock of materials; but of the Arabic, which may also be termed a branch derived from the same parent-stock, our materials are almost inexhaustible: not to insist on the fact, that the ancient versions, particularly the Chaldaic and Syriac, supply us with large stores of very considerable value in this respect; although it will be any thing but prudent, as every one who has studied them must know, to trust to any one or more of these implicitly in translating, or interpreting, the sacred records.¹

¹ I once thought of giving a section to the consideration of each of the ancient versions of the Book of Job; but as this would have swelled my work,

One consideration has occurred to me, as of great importance here; it is this: The duty of ascertaining what is, and was, the precise oriental force and intention of words, thus translates: "Ego quidem scio quod Salvator meus vivens sit, et in consummatione super terra appariturus. Et pellem meam angustarunt hæc, et carnem meam. Si viderint oculi mei Deum, videbunt lumen. Renei mei penitus perierunt de loco meo." &c. The Arabic translator, mistaking the sense of the Syriac here, has, nevertheless, given us a translation which will at once shew both, that he translated from the Syriac, and from the Syriac text as we now have it. His translation is this: وانا فآتي اعلم ان مخلصي حي

وعلي الغناء علي الارض يظهر وعلي جلدي ضاقت هذه وعلي بشري فار ابصرت الله عيني فقد رآت النور كلآي هلاكآ

علي الغناء It is evident, I think, that the Arabic علي الغناء upon wasting, disappearing, &c. will give any thing but the sense of the Syriac ܘܨܘܒܘܬܐ in the end, limit, &c. or, as the Latin gives it "in consummatione," which well enough expresses the συντέλεια τοῦ αἰῶνος of the New Testament,—the thing no doubt meant, but which the Arabic cannot be made to signify. The rest of the passage, in both the Syriac and Arabic, omits, or rather loses sight of, every thing like the resurrection; which, however, both the LXX. and Jerome—and certainly Theodotus—saw clearly enough here. Now, we have a commentary by Ephrem Syrus on this very place, which will serve to prove two things: first, that the Syriac text is the text which was used by him in his day; and, secondly, that it gives the sense just mentioned. The comment is this: "Hic beatus Job Emanuelis in carne manifestationem in fine temporum futuram vaticinatur." He adds, on the next member, "Viderunt lucem renes mei. Id est lux ejus exorietur renibus meis:" which may, perhaps, be thought to allude to Job's resurrection; still it falls very far short of the passage in the Hebrew.

The Chaldee Targum, as printed in the Polyglott, may be ranked next in antiquity and importance; but which, in this place, is perhaps less perfect than either of the preceding versions. It gives our passage thus: אנא ידעיה: דברין קום ימן ביה כדון פיקוקיה על עשרא יקום: ימן ביה דאפסא נשפין תדה דא נמשכין אהמין תוב אהמין: די אנא אהמין לי יענין דהמין יאא דהינין שלמינן כלמינן בעיני: Which is thus rendered: "Et ego scio quia redemptor meus vivet, et post hæc redemptio ejus consurget super pulverem. Et postquam inflata fuerit pellis mea, erit hoc: et de carne mea videbo iterum Deum. Quem ego visurum sum mihi, et oculi mei videbunt, et non alius: consumpti sunt renes mei in sinu meo." One hardly knows which to admire most here, the ability for better things, or the ingenious obscurity with which the Targumist has managed so successfully to involve himself. It brings forcibly to my mind the cloud which moved along with Æneas, and effectually shielded him from mortal view: a circumstance not unfrequently happening to Hebrew commentators, and Chaldee Targumists. I cannot help thinking, moreover, that the text of the Targum has been tampered with here. The term דברין קום redemptio ejus, seems to have been thrust in in no very workmanlike way. One would hardly have expected the masculine form of the verb (יבין) after this; which would have suited extremely well after דברין קום redemptor meus, and, in that case, the Chaldee would have phrases, and sentences. Translators have often thought—particularly those unacquainted with the languages and writers of the East—that, if they could extract a tolerably easy and consistent sense from any passage, they must necessarily have arrived at that of their author; and, as to single words or phrases, if they could find a word or phrase which would suit the one to be translated in most, or all, of the places in which it occurred, they could not be far from the truth. This was manifestly the principle adopted by the Jewish translators and commentators generally: and these were followed by all our early writers with a servility which was truly pitiable. Now this, I will affirm, whatever it may promise, cannot be safely relied upon; because, although a plausible sense or interpretation may thus be arrived at, it may be, nevertheless, as it often has been, any thing but the true one. The same may be said of single words and phrases. My practice has been—as far as my information and abilities would allow me to carry it—to compare ancient and modern oriental usage with Biblical diction and sentiment—availing myself, of agreed with the Hebrew: it would have afforded a good sense, which it does not now. The commentators, too, as published by Buxtorf, take no notice whatever of this word. I think, therefore, it is an interpolation, inserted, perhaps, for the purpose of opposing the interpretation which Christians have generally given to the place. How the following, וַיֵּן בְּתֵר דַּחֲפָא מִשְׁנֵי תַרְדֵּי דָא Et postquam inflata fuerit pellis mea erit hoc, could have been offered, either as a translation or a comment here, I am quite unable to conceive. Again, וַיֵּן בְּתֵר דַּחֲפָא מִשְׁנֵי תַרְדֵּי דָא consumpti sunt renes mei in sinu meo, may be said, perhaps, to be a literal translation of the Hebrew. In the Hebrew, however, there is a manifest ellipsis, which one would have expected a translator, so wordy as this Targumist generally is, to have supplied. This, however, he has not done; and great obscurity is the consequence. The וַיֵּן iterum, occurring in ver. 26, also looks very like an interpolation, both as it is unnecessary to the sense of the place, and also introduces a sentiment quite unaccountable from any part of the context. I would now only direct the reader to Chap. xxxiii. 23, &c.; and, I think I may say, that when he has carefully examined these versions, and compared them with the original, he will be disposed to conclude with me, that in these cases, at least, not much reliance can be placed on them. It will certainly be too much to say the same thing in all such passages; for there are cases in which one of them, or more, will supply a remarkably good and correct rendering. But, before a translator or commentator can adopt any of these, he must have acquired skill enough to enable him to choose the good, and refuse the evil; which goes to prove, that no general dependence ought to be placed on any one or more of these versions, although they may fairly be appealed to, for the purpose of confirming a rendering previously obtained from some other independent source: and, in this way, I have used them.

course, of all the aid I could derive from my predecessors in this way—and then to give the result accordingly. How far I may have succeeded or failed, I leave it to others to say.

As to the grammar generally, I must refer the reader to the second edition of the work on that subject, published by myself; which will enable him to judge of my principles and practices in this respect. As to the lexicography, or precise sense, to be attached to single words, I have made considerable use of a suggestion thrown out by the very learned Hebrew grammarian, David Kimchi, noticed in my Grammar at p. 234, second edition; and which has been followed up with great diligence and success by my very learned friend, Dr. Wm. Gesenius of Halle. I mean, by instituting an extensive comparison with what are termed cognate words; that is, words similar in form and sound which are generally found also to be similar in signification. For example: Suppose I find a word occurring but once in my author, and not again in any part of the Hebrew Bible, or indeed in any of the cognate languages; the question now is, How am I to get at its precise signification? I may have recourse to conjecture, and propose, it may be, twenty different renderings of the place; and, in some of these I may have one or more of the ancient versions with me. But, as conjecture may fail—as we have seen—and, as the ancient versions are manifestly of little use in all such cases—conjecture having been all they may have had to trust to—and, as the contending interpretations so arrived at will be perplexing and unsatisfactory, I have now only two resources left; the one, the parallelism of the place; the other, my comparison of cognate words. In many cases the parallelism will determine nothing; because it will be impossible to say, whether the author intended it to be synonymous with the corresponding member, or directly opposed to it: here, then, I must have recourse to the comparison just mentioned.

Now here, as I have already said, we may not have the identical word in question in any of the dialects, and never occurring again in the Hebrew Bible; but we may have twenty cognate words, all having, apparently, some one primitive notion or idea running through them. It will now be my business carefully to observe this: and then to see, whether this, or some slight modification of it—such as we find obtaining in words so allied to one another—will suit the passage in question, or not. If it will, and this also suit the parallelism with the context generally, I need not doubt that I am not far from the meaning intended by my author. And, if I find one or more of the ancient versions agreeing with me, or the sentiment so arrived at either directly cited, or apparently alluded to, in some other part of Scripture; I shall be sufficiently certain that my translation is not incorrect. Or again, if the passage seems to be proverbial, and I also find some such proverb still in use in the East, I shall, in that case likewise, have pretty good reason to believe, that my rendering is not erroneous.

It should be observed, moreover, that it is not to words termed ἀπαξ λεγόμενα (once occurring) only, that the rule above mentioned will apply. There is good reason for supposing, that the precise signification of many Hebrew words and phrases remains yet unknown; and it is principally, perhaps, from this circumstance, that considerable obscurity still rests on many places of the Old Testament. Many instances will occur in the Notes, which will, I think, satisfy the reader that this is the fact. Now, by this method of comparison, we have the best chance of arriving at what I have termed the precise signification of such words and phrases; and, when this is done, the metaphorical or other figurative use of such terms, will give us but little trouble; as it will be easy to see in what way such signification, when once arrived at, requires to be applied.

It cannot be necessary to say much on the influence exerted on any language by the opinions, religious notions, and the like, of those who speak it. Every one, who has made but the smallest progress in the study of the Latin and Greek authors, very well knows, that to attempt to make them out merely by the assistance of a grammar and dictionary, or with these in addition to the notions, religious opinions, customs, and so on, of the people of Arabia, it may be, would labour wholly in vain. A sense he may, indeed, occasionally extract; but then, the probabilities will be overwhelming, that this will not be the sense of his author. Obscurities, difficulties, doubts, conjectures, will be endless in such a case: and such is precisely the case, where helps no better, views no farther extended, and means of so doubtful a description, have been had recourse to.

In our endeavours, therefore, to be right in this particular, we must, among other things, be careful correctly to inform ourselves of the true and genuine views, creed, &c. of our author. Among Christians we know there is much spurious Christianity. The case is nearly the same among the Muhammedans, Hindoos, and, no doubt, among all other nations and people. Now, we must take care not to interpret the writings of one sect of such people, by the opinions held by another. If we do, how plausible soever our interpretation may appear, nothing can be more certain than that it will be worthless. The same must hold good when applied to the Bible. Among the Jews there was always a large number addicted to idolatry, and to idolatrous practices; which must have grown out of idolatrous notions. In the latter periods of the theocracy, this, or something very like it, almost universally prevailed among them; as is evident from the admonitions of the latter prophets, the writers of the New Testament, and the context of such Jewish writings as have come down to us from those times.

Now, it is as clear as it can possibly be made, or wished, that the genuine Hebrew writers—the sacred penmen of both Testaments—were altogether opposed to such men, both in principle and practice; and that it was the business of their lives to inveigh, in the strongest terms, against their errors. What then but error must be the result, should I be absurd enough to take the sentiments, notions, creed, &c. of this spurious portion of the Hebrew community, for the sentiments, doctrines, and the like, of the opposite party, and this for the purpose of interpreting their writings? That is to say, What could be expected but error from the translator or interpreter of Holy Writ, who should take the sentiments, creed, and opinions, of apostates, hypocrites, and the like, for those of their determined opponents; and then proceed to interpret the genuine writers accordingly? Would it not strike every man, not quite out of his senses, that he must be either a fool or a madman?

I do not see how some such conclusion could possibly be avoided; and yet this is precisely the line of conduct adopted by the great—ay, and very learned—majority of our neighhours in Germany at this very moment! They have no doubt—and in this their folly and madness they glory—that the apocryphal books of the Old Testament, added to the writings of modern infidel Jews, are the best possible means of making out the sacred texts of both Testaments! For this purpose, and with special respect to this end, grammars, dictionaries, commentaries, scholia, &c. innumerable, are daily published and sent over in shoals to this country. And, what is still more strange, men are not wanting even among ourselves—whose abilities and learning, however, are certainly not of the highest order—who exhaust our vocabularies for terms of praise to heap on these crude and indigested masses of biblical learning.

From what has already been advanced, I think it must be certain, that the author of the Book of Job was a genuine and faithful believer in revealed religion; and that his book has been recognised by every writer, perhaps, of the Scriptures, as canonical; that the doctrines therein propounded are identical with those elsewhere taught throughout the sacred code. According to my notions, therefore, the Book of Job ought, in every respect, to be treated accordingly. That is, the passages touching on doctrines ought to be illustrated by similar passages in other parts of Holy Writ; no disposition evinced either to obscure these, or to explain them away; but, on the contrary, to bring them out to their full extent and bearing: and thus to restore, and keep up, that harmony of sentiment, opinion, belief, expectation,—those themes of instruction, reproof, consolation, and heavenly-mindedness,—so universally prevailing throughout the most obvious declarations of Holy Writ. I doubt whether a translator or commentator would differ essentially from a betrayer, were he, for the sake of meeting infidels at a sort of half-way house, to give up or merge any thing whatever which God has intended should be retained. I believe, I say, he would act the part of a Judas, and could expect nothing less for his perfidy than his portion, were he to act in a way, in any respect, like this.

It is not intended to be affirmed, nevertheless, that much and good illustration of Holy Writ is not to be had from both Jewish and heathen authors; and this, both as it regards sentiment and phraseology. It is quite certain, I think, that heathenism was originally nothing more than an apostasy from true religion; that it took many of its rites, notions, usages, ceremonies, and even religious belief, from revelation at some period. And hence, nothing can be more likely than that in many things, either of these may serve to illustrate and explain the other. In diction, too, where nature alone has been followed, no one will be surprised in finding much alike in each. The wonder, indeed, would be, should the case be otherwise. In all such cases, therefore, illustration is not only allowable, but highly proper and praiseworthy. It is when aid of this sort is called in—not for the purpose of illustrating an author—but in order to force him out of his native and genuine creed and opinions, and to make him speak those of foreigners and aliens, that it becomes wrong, and a source of error and falsehood. It is then that learning becomes the aider and abettor of ignorance; and the translator or interpreter, thus abusing it, the author of public and private mischief, and the originator of every thing derogatory to the honour of God, and the good and happiness of man; and that even revealed religion itself is made to convey the sentiments, and to propound the worship, of the very prince of darkness.

I am very well aware, on the other hand, of the great danger to which minds highly alive to religious impressions are continually exposed; and, that there is nothing, not even the Odes of Horace, or the genealogies of the Bible, out of which it has not been attempted to extract the pure doctrines of the Gospel. I am well aware, I say, of this fact, as I also am of the mischief which has accrued to real religion from it. I have, therefore—while I guard against the faults just noticed—carefully guarded against this also; otherwise, my anxiety to avoid the one extreme—as it indeed is often the case—would be converted into the means of hurrying me into the other. For this purpose, and to avoid every inlet to error, the mind of the interpreter of Scripture ought to be kept under a constant and rigid system of discipline; to be continually watched and kept in check: otherwise its very virtues may become its bane; and, what is worse, be made the means of poisoning the minds of thousands of others. In all cases of this sort, an ardent love of truth, united with the Scriptural fear of God, seems to be the best preservative. This will deliver the mind from entertaining too great an admiration on the one hand, and too great a neglect on the other, of any school of biblical critics; and will enable the friend of truth to avail himself of the best aids to be found among them all. And this, I hope I may say, without being charged with arrogance or egotism, is the state of mind which I have endeavoured to cultivate. How far I may have succeeded, it is not for me to say.

I must be allowed to offer one remark more on this important subject: it is this: Every one must see the necessity and importance of just views, just notions, the love of truth, and extensive knowledge, in the interpreter of Holy Scripture. My remark now is: To these must be added long experience. I mean, continual exercise in reading and interpreting the context of Scripture. Without this, a recourse to what are termed the Hermeneutiæ sacræ,—i. e. books treating on Scriptural interpretation,—will be of but little use; for these reasons. First; The mind requires exercise in the use and application of these helps, as it also does in the application of the grammar, the dialects, the antiquities, and the theology, of the Bible; just as much as the eye does in seeing, the feet in walking, or the hands in handling, before any correct judgment can be formed of the distance, magnitude, &c. of any object, in the first case; a steady gait, in the second; or dexterity in the thousand things that come before us, in the third. Without this, the interpreter is very apt to be taken with what may be termed splendid novelties; things which, at first sight, promise every thing glorious, but which are, eventually, productive of the greatest possible evils to society. Under this delusion, resemblances are usually taken for identities: and, in such a case—as tastes will differ,—who shall say what is, or is not, a resemblance? From this faulty source, Prophecy—which was once considered the “more sure word” and evidence of the truth of Christianity—has, within the last two or three hundred years, been made the most unsure thing imaginable. From the same cause, St. Paul has been made to appear a most perplexing and inconsistent metaphysician; and the Book of the Revelation, in particular, the part of Scripture which it was considered wise not to touch! And lastly, without this experience, error once imbibed will be persevered in; the mind, unconscious of the many ways in which it may be mistaken, will naturally cling to its first imperfect impressions; and, what is still more unhappy, will often convert the error, which a little more experience would have saved it from, not only into a revealed truth, but a revealed truth of the very first importance. Proofs of all this need not be given.

Very intimately connected with the consideration respecting the religious opinions, customs, &c. of any author, or set of authors, is that of the immediately preceding and succeeding context. For, if the more remote context will afford illustration to any particular passage, that which is more near, so as to be connected with it in the train of thought entertained by the author, cannot fail of doing so in a still greater degree. It has appeared to me, that all translators and commentators have taken far less advantage of this source of assistance than they might have done; and to this I ascribe very many of the difficulties under which they have laboured. Seldom, I believe, have they looked beyond the verse with which they have been immediately concerned, or at farthest beyond that immediately preceding, or succeeding it. While it is certain that, from the introduction of parentheses, or the like, the context, still farther removed from that immediately under investigation, may be in strict and close connexion with it: and this is often found to be the case, as will appear in the following sheets. I will adduce one instance only, in illustration of this, from the New Testament. We have in Rom. xi. 26, “And so all Israel shall be saved;” και οὕτω πάντες Ἰσραὴλ. σωθήσονται. Now this, without any farther inquiry, is usually taken as a prophecy, intimating that the Jews shall certainly be converted to the Christian faith. If, however, any one will take the trouble to look back to the 23d verse, and then consider the context up to the place, he will discover, I think, that this is, beyond all possible doubt, not a prophecy, but a doctrine; stating that if the Jews remain not in unbelief, they shall, in the manner there described — they shall thus — be saved, οὕτω πάντες Ἰσραὴλ. σωθήσονται: even as it had likewise been declared by the prophets, and by that very means (comp. 2 Cor. iii. 16). I say, this must be obvious to every one who has a stronger attachment to truth, than to previously received notions; as it also must, that neglect of the context has been the sole cause of the long-continued, and widely propagated, mistake just mentioned.

I may now, perhaps, say what my endeavours have been, as to the style and manner of the Translation here presented to the public. It has been usual, both in this country and on the Continent, since the times of Bishop Lowth, to arrange both the original text and translations of what are usually termed the poetical Books of Scripture, so as to appear to the eye, as if the whole was written in verse. This has been done, apparently, for the purpose of shewing the more clearly how the parallelism affected the sense; and hence, perhaps, the more clearly also to present the meaning of the author to the reader. Lowth, who had a highly wrought poetical imagination, seems to have thought that, as this parallelism was a distinguishing feature of Hebrew poetry, so this mode of exhibiting such author was almost necessary to his being thoroughly understood: and the same seems to have been the opinion of many of his followers.

Now, although it is true that the elevated style—termed by Lowth and others, the poetic style—of the Hebrews, and, indeed, of the Arabs, Syrians, and Persians, abounds in parallelisms of this sort; yet, it is equally true, that in no case does this constitute poetry. The Arabs and Persians have, besides this parallelism, their measured verse, not unlike that of the Greeks and Romans; while the Syrians, I believe, know nothing of measure. Besides, the parallelism, which has been so taken for a mark, and indeed a constituent part, of poetry with the Hebrews, is also found in their style of narrative, as it also is in that of the Arabs, Syrians, and Persians. The late Bishop Jebb¹ found it also in the Gospels; and Mr. Boys² contends that it is likewise to be found in the greatest abundance in the Epistles of the New Testament.

One would, I think, be inclined to conclude from all this, that the existence of parallelism was no good proof that the context, in which it was found, was decidedly, and beyond all doubt, poetry. It may, I believe, also be shewn, that this said parallelism really exists in all written composition to some extent; and that it is a necessary appendage to human speech. And if this be true, then, either all human composition and conversation must be poetry—which some indeed are whimsical enough to hold—or else parallelism and poetry have no necessary connexion: and this last is, I think, the true state of the case. I have, therefore, attempted no such arrangement of the text of my Translation, as that recommended by Lowth and others: first, because I believe it to be unnecessary; secondly, because it tends in no way to present the sense of any author in a clearer point of view than might be done without it; thirdly, because it tends to give the reader an idea that the work he is reading is poetical, when it is really no such thing; and fourthly, because such a notion tends to lower the estimation in which Holy Scripture ought to be held.

¹ Sacred Literature.

² Tactica Sacra.

I do not know how others might be affected, but this I can say for myself: Were Lowth's Isaiah, or any other translation of the Scriptures, so arranged as to look like poetry, placed before me to be read either in a family or in the church, I should feel the greatest possible reluctance to do so. I should feel, either that I was approaching the Almighty with something beneath the dignity of His Person, and therefore unworthy of His presence; or else, that I had a copy of His Holy Word burlesqued and travestied before me. This, perhaps, might be mere prejudice: still, I doubt whether I should ever be able to overcome it. And when I know that it has been had recourse to on no good grounds, and has tended greatly to lower the estimation in which the Scriptures ought to be holden, I am induced to believe that I have something more than prejudice on my side.

In the next place, as to the sort of language adopted. Our translators evinced, I think, the greatest good sense in adopting that plain and simple style, and those short and pure English words, which mark their translation throughout. In both these, indeed, they may truly be said to have followed, as far as they could, the example of the divine original which they had before them; and, in doing this, to have conferred an inestimable benefit on our language, and to have done more towards fixing and improving it, than ever was done, either before or since their times. But they did more; they brought it much nearer, both in idiom and in the theological use of single words, to the Hebrew, than it had ever been brought before: which, although it must have had its disadvantages in those times, has greatly facilitated the labour of translators in these. Because, now they will find the idiom and usages of their own language,—which were originally very far removed from those of the Hebrew,—made, to a considerable extent, to correspond with them; and, so far, we may consider ourselves as writing and speaking in a language not very far removed from that of the Bible itself. The translation of Luther has, as it has often been remarked, conferred a similar benefit and power on the German language; and the same has been the case with that of the Persians and Turks, in some degree, since their adoption of the Koran of Mohammed: so materially does the imitation of any highly authoritative and well-written book affect the language of any people.

In two or three things, however, and those very important ones, our translators failed; as, also, did Martin Luther in his great work. One is this: The elevated style of the Hebrews presents a remarkably copious stock of language; not to insist on its archaisms, as already remarked: that is, its palpable imitation of a style, and adoption of words, of a much higher¹ antiquity apparently, than those used in mere narrative. And so copious is the language of the Hebrew Scriptures from this circumstance only, that the labour of forming its grammar, and of composing its lexicon, is perhaps not less than that required for the whole range and compass of the Greek, the Arabic, or of any other language, in which the books preserved to our times are exceedingly voluminous and numerous. Its variety and extent, in this respect, is truly astonishing; and of this any one may convince himself, by a perusal of Psalm cxix. only.

¹ I say a higher antiquity, because plain narrative appears never to have contained words almost innumerable, occurring in the elevated style; and because in the oldest portions of Scripture, such as Lamech's address to his wives (Gen. iv. 23), which is probably a citation, and the extract given in the Book of Numbers from a work entitled the "Wars of the Lord" (ch. xxi. 14), are some of this description. Besides, as the Book of Job is so highly a finished work in this respect, and as Moses and the Israelites seem to have been familiar with this style at the times of the egress (comp. Exod. xiv. and Deut. xxxii.); and, before that period, Jacob in blessing his sons (Gen. xlix.); it seems next to certain that such style, as well as the language peculiar to it, was much older than even the times of Job. I will not say, because barbarous nations first used poetry and afterwards prose, that therefore the patriarchs must have done this; for the Bible recognises no ancient times of barbarism: but I may, that it is likely doctrines, praise, and the like, were from the first detailed in the elevated style now adverted to.

Now, it was manifestly impossible for our translators to follow their original in this respect; their language, with that of Luther, was altogether unequal to the task. It wanted both extent and ancient authoritative documents to give it any thing like the abundance, variety, and force, found in the Hebrew. In the Greek, indeed, or the Arabic, this property of the Hebrew Bible might have been imitated; and, it is curious enough to observe, the Greek translator of Job has certainly attempted it:¹ but without the least discernible particle of success.

There is one point more in which, as it seems to me, our translators have often failed: but in this, too, their language was perhaps more in fault than they. I mean, in their use of many English words, in any thing but their precise signification. This has made their version—which is certainly one of the best in existence—in many places obscure; and in others, ambiguous.² In some places it is obvious, I think, they have not been able to ascribe any specific sense to their original. In these they have done the best they could, as it appeared to them; and have given a literal translation according to the grammars, dictionaries, and commentaries, then in use. They then left them—mere transcripts of the Hebrew text thus metamorphosed—to the learning and ingenuity of their successors to make out and explain. In the two former particulars just mentioned, all translators must necessarily fail. In the latter, a greater extent of oriental¹ learning than was possessed in their days, may enable others to supply their deficiencies. This it has been one of my endeavours, with my small stock in this way, to effect; leaving, no doubt, quite room enough to future labourers to supply the deficiencies, which I shall also leave behind me.

¹ It is evident that the language of the Greek poets has occasionally been imitated in the LXX. version of Job, as already noticed from Broughton.

² Instances of this sort are extremely numerous in our authorised version of the Bible throughout, and in none are they more frequent than in the Book of Job. See the following places:—Chap. iii. 8, “Who are ready to raise up their mourning;” marg., “a Leviathan.” Ib. 14, “desolate places,” &c. Ib. 26, “I was not in safety.” Ch. iv. 6, “this,” erroneously introduced, makes the whole obscure. Ib. 19, “which,” has the same effect. Ch. v. 3, “I cursed.” Ib. 12, “enterprise.” Ch. vi. 3, “therefore,” &c., has no visible connexion with the context. Ib. 13, “in me:” obscure. Ib. 15–20, seem to have no definite meaning, and no very close connexion. Ib. 26, “imagine to reprove words,” &c. Ib. 28, “it is evident:” will be evident would give a clear sense. Ib. 29, “let it not be — my righteousness is in it:” obscure. Such instances are exceedingly numerous, so that it would be almost endless to point them all out. See ch. viii. 19, “out of the earth,” &c; ix. 6, 13; xii. 4, “who,” ambiguous; xiii. 15, “own,” too much; xx. 20, “belly,” vague, as is very often the case with this word; xxvi. 5, “dead things are formed,” &c., which appears to me to contain no definite idea whatever. It will be unnecessary to pursue this question farther.

So far, then, as our translators have appeared imitable, I have made it my business to imitate them. I have, as far as I could, retained their translation; and where I could not, I have endeavoured to imitate their style, terms, phraseology, cadence. In many instances, indeed, I have been compelled to adopt a more extensive vocabulary; and have often been obliged to use modern terms, because ancient ones were not to be had. Difference of opinion will, of course, exist as to the felicity of my choice in these, as in many other respects. I can only say, I have spared no pains to render the whole as perfect as frequent interruptions, and various other occupations, would, with my measure of information and ability, allow. I cannot say I have succeeded, in every particular, even in satisfying myself. All I will count upon, therefore, shall be—what, I hope, will not be too much to say—that my author has not left my hands more obscure than he came into them; and that, if I have not succeeded in every thing, I have pointed out means by which others of greater leisure, talent, and learning, may, in time to come, more thoroughly elucidate this most ancient, instructive, and wonderful book.

¹ I have not thought it necessary to adorn my pages with citations from the Syriac, Arabic, &c. of the Polyglott—a practice most profusely indulged in by Rosenmüller, and others of the modern German school—unless, indeed, I thought citation absolutely necessary: for, in most cases, the reader who understands Latin can consult the Polyglott for himself. By this practice is acquired more reputation for oriental learning, than by any other that I know of: because, forsooth, a book abounding with a great number of unknown letters must, of necessity, shew that its author is very learned! I will only say, Were all that is useless of this sort struck out of many books now in circulation, they would make a much less imposing figure than they do, and their authors suffer immensely in popular estimation.

SECTION IX.

ON THE SCOPE AND OBJECT OF THE BOOK OF JOB.

A LITTLE consideration will enable us to see, that the primary object of this book is, to shew that there is a power attendant on true religion, sufficient to enable its possessor eventually to overcome every temptation and every trial. This, I say, is its primary object. For, in the first and second chapters, which were apparently given as a key to the whole, we are informed that Job was a just and perfect man, and one who feared God. This was manifestly his character. It is suggested, however, by the great adversary of mankind, that, whatever appearances might be, a little trial would prove the contrary. The sacred penman assures us, by means of a vision (as already shewn) that, in order to prove the falsehood of this, Job is allowed to be exposed for a season to trials of the severest kind: but still he retained his integrity; and in the end came off victorious, to the entire approval of Almighty God, who restored him, and gave him wealth double in value to that of his former state of prosperity. He is also accepted in making a sort of atonement for the errors of his friends. I think, therefore, no doubt can remain, that this was the primary object of this book.

A secondary object seems to have been, to shew how very imperfect the notions even of good men are on the moral economy of God. The friends of our patriarch meet, as we are told, for the purpose of condoling with him; and there appears no reason, as far as I can see, for questioning their sincerity. The sufferer proceeds, in the first place, to state his afflictions, and then to pour out those lamentations and complaints which are natural to such a state. His friends—men evidently acquainted with revealed religion, and apparently very much in earnest as to accurate views respecting it—proceed to correct him: they professedly take the side of God, and their main endeavour is to vindicate His wisdom, justice, and mercy. For this purpose they argue from revelation, from experience, and from very extensive and just views of God's works; and, as they are too well informed to suppose that there can be any effect without an adequate cause, particularly where there is an all-powerful, wise, and good God overruling all things; their conclusion is, that Job's sins must have led to his sufferings. The patriarch very justly and very successfully combats their conclusions, without at all calling in question their several general doctrines;—for these were no doubt true, and worthy of all acceptation:—and in this, God himself eventually declares for him. Their great fault was, the misapplication of truth. They knew not the real cause which led to Job's trials, and the consequence was, they supposed one which was false; and to this were their arguments universally directed. The pertinacity and warmth with which they pressed their opinions, could not but have added considerably to Job's sufferings; who evidently had a greater insight into the general dealings of God with believers than they had. Still there is no reason, as far as I can discover, for calling in question either their fidelity, good intentions, or sorrow for their friend. They only did what thousands daily do—they misapprehended the question at issue; and, as they were more willing to believe themselves right, than to stop and consider in how many ways they might be wrong, and, in fact, how very little they could know on the subject; they pressed their sentiments to an extent which real religion, good sense, and the sympathy due to a friend, would hardly justify: and of this, Job's mission to them from the Almighty (ch. xlii.) must have more than convinced them; and have shewn them to demonstration that, although He was truly no less mighty, wise, and good, than they had represented Him, yet that His wisdom was unsearchable, and His ways past finding out, to men such as they were.

A third object apparently was, to provide a book of doctrine, as already remarked, adequate to the wants of believers for ever; illustrating, as just now stated, both the economy of God with his people, and their ignorance as to his thoughts and ways: to keep alive the doctrine of salvation through a Redeemer, the immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the body, and the certainty of a judgment to come. It might seem superfluous, after what has already been said, to dwell on the other doctrines, promises, and experience, inculcated throughout this book, and so frequently appealed to in the subsequent books of the Old Testament, as well as in the New. I shall conclude, therefore, merely by remarking, that the most severe inquiry into its contents, the most careful comparison of it with the rest of Holy Scripture; the genuineness of its piety, the purity and beauty of its morality, the great extent of its range, the exquisite chasteness at once of its style and sentiments, and, above all, the solidity and depth of its devotion, cannot but conspire to recommend it as one of the most valuable productions of antiquity; at the same time, as a book of undoubted inspiration, and of the most unquestionable canonical authority. And my sincere prayer is, that every reader of it may receive as much pleasure and edification in perusing its declarations, as I have in this endeavour to translate and elucidate them.

TRANSLATION
OF
THE BOOK OF JOB.

TRANSLATION

OF

THE BOOK OF JOB.

CHAPTERS I. II.

FORMING THE INTRODUCTION TO THIS BOOK.

SUMMARY.

Job's place of residence, character, wealth, 1-4: his children, his religious care for them, 4-6: cause of his trials, 6-12: loss of his wealth and children, 12-20: his pious resignation to all this, 20-22. II.—The real cause of Job's afflictions, 1-7: his afflictions, and integrity under them, 7-10: the visit and surprise of his friends, 10-13.

1 * THERE was a man in the land of ^aUz, whose name was ^bJob: and that man was ^cperfect and 2 upright, ^dfearing God, and departing from evil. * And there were born to him ^eseven sons and three daughters. * His ^fsubstance also was seven thousand sheep, and three thousand camels, and five thousand yoke of oxen, and five hundred she-asses, and a very great ^ghousehold: and that man was great above all the children of the ^hEast.
 4 * And his sons went and made a ⁱfeast in the house of each on his day; and they sent and called for their
 5 three sisters to eat and to drink with them. * And it came to pass when the days of the feast had gone ^jabout, that Job sent and ^ksanctified them, and rose up early in the morning, and ^loffered up burnt offerings to the number of them all: for Job said, It may be my sons have sinned, and blessed the ^mgods in their hearts. Thus did Job continually. ||
 6 * And it came to pass, as it might be to-day, that the ⁿsons of God came in to stand before Jehovah,

Before Christ, about 1680 years.

^a Gen. xxii. 20, 21.

Jer. xxx. 20.

^b Ezek. xiv. 14.

James, v. 11.

^c Gen. vi. 9; xvii. 1.

ch. ii. 3.

^d Prov. iii. 7;

viii. 13;

xiv. 16;

xvi. 6.

^e 1 Sam. ii. 5.

Ps. cxxvii. 5.

|| Or, stock.

† Or, service.

^f Gen. xxix. 1.

Numb. xxiii. 7.

Judg. vi. 3, 33;

vii. 12, &c.

^g Gen. xix. 3;

xxi. 8, &c.

^h Jos. vi. 3, 11.

ⁱ Exod. xxxii. 13.

Lev. xx. 8.

^k Gen. viii. 20;

xxii. 3, 6.

^l Exod. xx. 3, 20.

Deut. iv. 26.

Isa. lxvi. 3.

1 Kings. xxi. 10,

16.

|| All the days.

^m Gen. vi. 2.

ch. ii. 1;

xxxvii. 7.

Hos. i. 10.

1 Kings, xxii. 19.

- ⁿ Lit. the adversary.
 1 Chron. xxi. 1.
 Ps. cix. 6.
 Zech. iii. 1.
 Luke, x. 19.
 Rev. xii. 9.
^o Numb. xi. 8.
 ch. ii. 2.
 2 Sam. xxiv. 2.
^p Gen. iii. 8.
 ch. xxii. 14.
 || Lit. heart.
^q ch. i. 1; ii. 3.
- 7 and that ^bSatan also came in among them. *And Jehovah said unto Satan, Whence comest thou? And Satan answered Jehovah, and said, From ^orunning to and fro in the earth, and from ^pwalking about in it.
- 8 *And Jehovah said unto Satan, Hast thou set thy || mind upon my servant Job,—for there is none like him in the earth,—a ^qperfect man and upright, fearing
- 9 God and departing from evil? *And Satan answered Jehovah, and said, Doth Job fear God for naught?
- 10 *Hast thou not made a ^rhedge about him, and about his house, and about all that he hath on every side? The work of his ^shands thou hast blessed, and his
- 11 || substance is ^tspread abroad in the earth. *But, put forth thine hand now, and ^utouch all that he hath:—if not, then in thy presence will he bless thee.
- 12 *And Jehovah said unto Satan, Behold, all that he hath is in thy ^whand; only upon him put not forth thy hand. So Satan went forth from the presence of Jehovah.
- 13 *And it came to pass, as it might be to-day, that both his sons and his daughters were eating, and
- 14 drinking wine, in their eldest brother's house; *and a messenger came to Job, and said, The oxen were ploughing, and the she-asses feeding beside them:
- 15 *and the people of ^xSheba fell upon them, and took them: the young men also they smote with the edge of the sword; and I have hardly escaped alone to tell thee.
- 16 *While he was yet speaking another came in, and said, The ^yfire of God is fallen from heaven, and hath burned up the flock and the young men, and consumed them; and I have hardly escaped alone to tell
- 17 thee. *While he was yet speaking another came in, and said, The ^zChaldeans appointed three captains, and rushed upon the camels, and took them; and the young men they smote with the edge of the sword;
- 18 and I have hardly escaped alone to tell thee. *While he was yet speaking another came in, and said, Thy sons and thy daughters were eating, and drinking
- 19 wine, in their eldest brother's house; *and behold, a great wind came on from the passage of the desert,
- ^r Ps. xxxi. 8.
 Jer. xv. 20.
 2 Kings, vi. 17.
^s Ps. cxxviii. 2.
 Deut. ii. 7;
 xiv. 29;
 xvi. 16, &c.
 || Stock.
^t Gen. xxviii. 14.
 1 Chron. iv. 39.
 Isa. liv. 3.
^u ch. ii. 5; xix. 21.
^v Gen. xvi. 6.
 1 Sam. xii. 9.
^w Gen. x. 7;
 xxv. 3, &c.
^x Gen. xix. 24.
 Numb. xi. 1, &c.
 1 Cor. iii. 15.
^y Ezek. xxiii. 23.
 2 Kings, xxv. 4.
 Jer. xxi. 9, &c.

and came in contact with the four corners of the house, and it fell upon the young men, and they died; and I have hardly escaped alone to tell thee.

- 20 *Then Job arose, and ^arent his || mantle, and shaved ^a Gen. xxxvii. 29.
 21 his head, and ^bfell on the earth and worshipped, *and ^b Ezra, ix. 3.
 said, ^cNaked came I forth from my mother's womb, ^c Or, robe.
 and naked shall I return thither. The LORD ^dgave, ^b 2 Chron. xx. 18.
 and the LORD ^ehath taken away. ^d Blessed be the 22 name of the LORD.—*Notwithstanding all this, Job ^e Ps. xlix. 18.
 sinned not, nor charged God with wrong. ^f Eccl. v. 14, 15.
^g 1 Tim. vi. 7.
^h Eccl. v. 18.
ⁱ James, i. 17.
^j Gen. xxx. 23;
^k xxxi. 9.
^l Gen. xiv. 20.
^m 2 Sam. xxii. 47.
ⁿ Ephes. v. 20.
^o 1 Thess. v. 18.

[CHAP. II.]—1 *And it came to pass, as it might be ^ato-day, that the sons of God came in to stand

- before Jehovah, and that Satan also came in among 2 them to stand before Jehovah. *And Jehovah said unto Satan, Whence comest thou? And ^bSatan answered Jehovah, and said, From running to and fro

- 3 in the earth, and from walking about in it. *And Jehovah said unto Satan, Hast thou set thy mind upon my servant Job,—for there is none like him in the earth,—a ^cperfect man and upright, fearing God and

- departing from evil; and still ^dstrengthening himself 4 in his integrity, although thou stirrest me up against him, to || destroy him ^ewithout a cause. *And Satan answered Jehovah, and said, ^fSkin for skin; yea, all

- 5 that a man hath will he give for his life. *But, ^gput forth now thine hand, and touch his ^hbone and his flesh:—if not, then in thy presence will he bless thee.

6 *ⁱAnd Jehovah said to Satan, Behold, he is in thy hand, only preserve his life.

- 7 *So Satan went forth from the presence of Jehovah, and smote Job with a burning disease, from the ^ksole

8 of his foot unto his crown. *And he took him a pot-9 sherd to scrape himself withal, and he ^lsat down

- among the ashes. *And his wife said unto him, Dost thou still ^mstrengthen thyself in thine integrity? Bless

10 the gods, and die. *But he said to her, Thou speakest as one of the corrupt women speaketh. ⁿTruly, we receive good of God; and shall we not receive evil?

- ^oNotwithstanding all this, Job ^psinned not with his lips.

11 *And Job's three ^qfriends heard of all this evil that ^a Gen. xxxvii. 29.

 Ezra, ix. 3.
 Or, robe.
 2 Chron. xx. 18.
 Ps. xlix. 18.
 Eccl. v. 14, 15.
 1 Tim. vi. 7.
 Eccl. v. 18.
 James, i. 17.
 Gen. xxx. 23;
 xxxi. 9.
 Gen. xiv. 20.
 2 Sam. xxii. 47.
 Ephes. v. 20.
 1 Thess. v. 18.

ch. i. 6.

ch. i. 7.

ch. i. 1, 8.

ch. xxvii. 5, 6.

Lit. to swallow him up.

ch. ix. 17.
 Exod. xxi. 23, 24.
 Lev. xxiv. 20,
 &c.

ch. i. 11.
 ch. xix. 20.

ch. i. 12.

Isa. i. 6.

2 Sam. xiii. 10.
 ch. xlii. 6.

Ezek. xxvii. 30.
 Matt. xi. 21.
 ver. 3.

Prov. xix. 1.

ch. i. 21.
 Rom. xii. 12.
 James, v. 10, 11.

ch. i. 22.
 Ps. xxxix. 1.

Prov. xvii. 7.

had come upon him; and they came each from his place, ^r Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the ^sShuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite: and they agreed together to come ^tto bemoan him, and to comfort him.

- 12 * And they lifted up their eyes from afar, and knew him not; and they lifted up their voice, and wept: and they rent each man his || mantle, and ^usprinkled
- 13 dust upon their heads towards heaven. * And they sat with him on the ground ^wseven days and seven nights, but no one spake a word unto him, for they saw that || his affliction was exceedingly great.

CHAPTER III.

SUMMARY.

Job reviles the day and circumstances of his birth, 1-6: he, in like manner, denounces the night of his conception, 6-11: laments his existence, 11-17: describes the freedom and rest of the dead, 17-20: laments that light and life are supplied to the miserable, 20-24: states his own deplorable but innocent case, 24-26.

- 1 * AFTER this Job opened his mouth, and reviled
- 2,3 his day. * And Job spake, and said, * Let the
- 4 day ^aperish in which I was born, and the night in
- 4 which one said, a man ^bhath been conceived. * As to
- 5 that day, let it be ^cdarkness; let not God regard it
- 5 * Let ^cdarkness and the shadow of death pollute it;
- 5 let a ^fcloud dwell upon it; let the blackest terrors of
- 6 day affright it.
- 6 * As for that night, let thick darkness seize upon it;
- 6 let it not || be united with the days of the year, into
- 7 the number of the months let it not enter. * Behold,
- 7 let that night be joyless; let no ^esong enter into it.
- 8 * Let them who ^bcurse the day stigmatise it, who are
- 9 ready to ⁱstir up the leviathan. * Let the stars of its
- 9 twilight be darkened; let it ^hwait for light, but there
- 10 be none; and let it not look upon the ^leyelids of the
- 10 morning. * Because it closed not up the doors of my
- 10 mother's womb, and ^mconcealed not trouble from mine
- 11 eyes.
- 11 * Why ⁿdied I not from the womb? Why came I

^r Gen. xxxvi. 11.
Jer. xlix. 7.
^s Gen. xxv. 2.

^t ch. xlii. 11.
Rom. xii. 13.

| Or, robe.
^u Neh. ix. 1.
Lam. ii. 1.
Ezek. xxvii. 30.

^w Gen. i. 10.

| Lit. the.

^a Jer. xx. 14.

^b ch. x. 10.

^c Eccl. vi. 4; xi. 8.
Isa. lx. 2.

^d Job. ii. 15.

^e Amos. v. 20.

^f Isa. xlii. 10.

^g Ps. cvii. 10.

^h Exod. x. 22.

ⁱ ch. x. 22.

^j Ps. xxi. 4;

^k Lam. ii. 1; iii. 44.

^l Ezek. xxx. 11;

^m xxxviii. 9, 16.

ⁿ Al. rejoice.

^o Ps. xxx. 6.

^p Isa. xli. 10; hv. 1.

^q ch. xxxv. 10.

^r Ps. xlii. 9.

^s Jer. xx. 14, 15.

^t ch. xli. 2.

^u Isa. lx. 9.

^v Jer. xlii. 16.

^w ch. xli. 19.

^x Jer. xv. 10;
xx. 17.

^y ch. x. 18.
Jer. xx. 16.

- forth from the belly, and gave not up the ghost?
- 12 *Why went the ^oknees before me? And why the
- 13 breasts that I should suck? *For now had I lain ^o Gen. xxx. 3.
Isa. lxxvi. 12.
- down and been quiet: I had slept; then had I been
- 14 at rest, *with kings and counsellors of the earth, who
- 15 built for themselves places now ^pdesolate: *or with ^p ch. xv. 20.
- princes who had gold, and who filled their houses
- 16 with silver. *Or, as a hidden ^auntimely birth, I had
- not remained; as sucklings which never ^rsaw the light.
- 17 *There the wicked cease from troubling; and there
- 18 the wearied mightily rest. *The prisoners sweetly repose ^stogether; they hear not the voice of the ^texactor.
- 19 *Small and great is there, and the slave is free from his lord. ^r Eccl. vi. 6.
ch. xxx. 123.
^t ch. xxxix. 7.
Isa. lx. 17.
- 20 *Why is light given to the miserable, and life to
- 21 the ^ubitter of soul; *—who ^wwait for death, but it
- cometh* not; and dig for it more than for ^xhidden
- 22 treasures; *who are glad to exultation, and rejoice, ^o 1 Sam. i. 10.
^p Prov. xxxi. 6.
^r Rev. ix. 6.
^s Prov. ii. 4.
- 23 when they find the grave?—*To the man whose way
- is covered, and about whom God hath set a ^yhedge?
- 24 *For before my bread my sighing cometh, and my
- 25 roarings are poured forth as the waters. *For I
- feared greatly, yet it came upon me; and although I
- 26 was afraid, yet it came unto me: *I slackened not, neither was I quiet, neither took I rest; yet trouble came.
- ^r ch. xix. 8.
Lam. iii. 7, 9.

CHAPTERS IV. V.

SUMMARY.

Eliphaz apologises for speaking; commends Job's former conduct, but deploras his dejection on this occasion, 1-6: reminds him of the power of faith; of God's particular providence over good men, and severity against the wicked, 6-11: describes a vision afforded to him, 11-16: gives its substance, 16-21.

V.—Declares that God is the only sure refuge; that the foolish who seek safety elsewhere fail, 1-6. Sin natural to man, 6-9. The great power and goodness of God set forth, shewing that he confounds the wise, but saves the humble, 9-17. The blessedness of him whom God chastises; his safety under all circumstances, 17-24: the assurance of such an one, that he shall prosper, and his family after him, 24-27.

- 1 THEN answered Eliphaz the Temanite, and said.
- 2 *Wilt thou be offended at a word taken up against thee?—But restraint of argument who can 3 bear? * Behold thou hast corrected many, and the 4 ^a weak hands hast thou strengthened. * The stumbler have thy decisions raised, and the ^b bowing knees hast 5 thou confirmed. * But now it cometh to thee, and thou faintest; it toucheth even unto thee, and thou art perplexed.

6 * Is not thy ^c fear of God thy confidence, and the 7 perfectness of thy ways thy ^d hope? * Remember now, ^e What innocent man hath perished? and where 8 have the righteous failed? * Even as I have seen, ^f the ploughers of iniquity, and the sowers of misery, 9 do gather it. * By the ^g breath of God they perish, and by the blast of his wrath they come to an end.
 10 * The roaring of the lion, the noise of the fierce lion, 11 and the ^h teeth of the stout lions, are broken. * The ⁱ old lion perisheth from lack of prey, and the whelps of the lioness are scattered abroad.

12 * Now, a ^k word was brought secretly to me, and 13 mine ear received a portion of it. * In the perplexings of the night visions, when ^l ecstatic slumber 14 falleth on man, * ^m fear and trembling came on me, 15 and made ⁿ my bones greatly to shake. * Then a ^o spirit passed before my face; the hair of my flesh 16 stood up. * It stood still; but I knew not its ^p appearance: an image was before mine eyes: there was silence, and ^q I heard a voice, saying,—

17 * Is mortal man ^r just with God? Is a stout man 18 pure with his ^s Maker? * Behold, He putteth no trust in His servants; and His ^t angels He chargeth 19 with folly: * much more the inhabitants of ^u houses of clay whose foundation is in the dust, who are beaten 20 to pieces before the ^v moth! * From the dawn to the dusk are they ^w cut down: they perish wholly, without any laying it to heart. * Hath not their ^y abund-21 ance passed away with them? They die, but not in ^z wisdom.

[CHAP. V.]—¹ Call now: Is there any that will answer thee? And to which of the saints wilt thou 2 ^a turn? * For vexation slayeth the foolish, and ^b envy putteth the silly man to death.

* Isa. xxxv. 3.
 Heb. xii. 12.
 b Ezek. vii. 17;
 xxi. 12.
 Isa. xiii. 7.

c ch. i. 1.
 Prov. iii. 26.
 d ch. v. 16, &c.
 Ruth. i. 12.
 Prov. x. 20;
 xxxiii. 10.
 e Ps. xxxvii. 25.

f Prov. xxii. 8.
 Hos. x. 12, 13;
 viii. 7.
 Gal. vi. 7, 8.
 g Isa. xxx. 33.
 ch. xviii. 15, 21.
 2 Sam. xxii. 16.
 Exod. xv. 7-10.
 2 Thes. ii. 8.
 h Ps. lvi. 7.
 Ezek. xix. 9, &c.
 i Ps. xxxiv. 11.
 Nah. ii. 11, 13.

k Num. xxii. 20;
 xxiii. 5, 16.
 Jer. i. 4, &c.

l Gen. ii. 21.
 Prov. xix. 15.
 Isa. xx. 10.
 ch. xxxiii. 15.
 m Gen. xv. 12.
 Exod. iv. 10.
 Heb. xii. 21, &c.
 n Hab. iii. 16.
 o Eccl. xii. 7.
 p 1 Kings, xxii. 21.
 Dan. vii. 15;
 x. 18.

q Dan. viii. 16.
 r Ps. cxliii. 2.
 Gen. vii. 1.
 ch. ix. 2, &c.
 s Gen. i. 26, 31.
 Ps. xvi. 5, &c.
 t Gen. xix. 1;
 xxi. 17.
 ch. xv. 15.
 u 2 Cor. iv. 7; v. 1.

v Ps. xxxix. 12.
 Isa. i. 9.
 w Ps. xc. 3, 5, 6, 7.
 Exod. xviii. 13,
 14.
 y Ps. xxxix. 12;
 xlix. 15.

z ch. xxxvi. 12.
 Prov. v. 23.

a Ps. lxxvii. 25.
 Deut. xxix. 17.
 b Deut. xxix. 19.
 Prov. i. 32;
 xiv. 30.

- 3 * As for me, ^c I have seen the foolish taking root, and instantly I denounced his ^d habitation, saying,
- 4 * His children are ^e far from safety, and are beaten down in ^f the gate, and there is ^g no deliverer.
- 5 * Whose ^h harvest the hungry devoureth, even from out of the thorns doth he take it; and the starving panteth for their wealth.
- 6 * But ⁱ iniquity proceedeth not forth of the dust, neither from the ground springeth up sin: * for man is ^k born to sin, even as the winged are raised in flight.
- 8 — * But I will ^l inquire respecting God, yea of God will I make my ^m plea.
- 9 * He doeth ⁿ great things and unsearchable, wonderful things beyond number. * He ^o giveth rain upon the face of the earth, and sendeth forth waters
- 11 upon the plains, * to place the humble on ^p high, and that the distressed may be raised to safety. * He ^q annulleth the devices of the crafty; and their hands
- 13 make no wealth. * He ^r taketh the wise in their craftiness; and the counsel of the circumventing is
- 14 brought to confusion. * By ^s day they stumble as in darkness; and, as in the night, they grope at noon-day. * So the poor is saved from the ^t edge of their
- 16 sword, and from their cruel hand. * So, also, the ^u humble hath hope, and iniquity hath stopped her mouth.
- 17 * Behold, ^w Blessed is the man whom God chasteneth. Despise not thou, therefore, the chastening of
- 18 the Almighty. * For He ^x afflicteth, and He bindeth up: He bruiseeth, and His hands make whole. * In ^y six troubles He will deliver thee, and in seven shall
- 20 no evil touch thee. * In famine He shall redeem thee from ^z death, and in war from the power of the
- 21 sword. * In the running to and fro of the ^a tongue shalt thou be hidden; and thou shalt not be ^b afraid
- 22 of violence when it cometh. * At violence and famine thou shalt ^c smile: neither shalt thou be afraid
- 23 of the ^d wild beasts of the earth. * For with the ^e stones of the plain is thy covenant; and the wild beasts of the plain are delivered unto thee.

^b Deut. vii. 17, 18; xx. 1. Isa. xlii. 6. Prov. iii. 25. ^c Prov. xxxi. 25. Ps. lii. 8; xci. 5, 6. ^d Ps. xci. 13. Ezek. xxxiv. 25. Hos. ii. 18, 20, &c. ^e Prov. xvi. 7.

^f ch. iv. 8. Ps. xxxvii. 35; cxix. 150; cix. 13-18; cxix. 6. Jer. vi. 2, 3. ^g Prov. iii. 33. Ps. lxxii. 3, 19, &c. ^h Ps. cxix. 155; cix. 8, 12. ⁱ Ps. cxix. 6, 7. ^j 2 Sam. xiv. 6. Ps. vii. 3. ^k Ps. cxxix. 6, 7. Isa. xxvii. 11. ch. xviii. 16; xxiv. 6. ^l Amos, iii. 7. ch. iv. 8; xv. 35. Gen. iii. 16, 17-19. ^m Gen. iii. 16. Ps. li. 7, 12. ⁿ Deut. xxxii. 3, &c. ^o Eccl. iii. 18; vii. 14, &c. ^p Gen. xviii. 14. Ps. xl. 6; lxxii. 18; lxxxvi. 10. ch. ix. 10. ^q Ps. lxx. 10, 11; civ. 13-16; cxlvii. 2. Acts, xiv. 17. Jer. v. 24. ch. xx. 23, &c. ^r 1 Sam. ii. 6. Ps. cxiii. 7. Ezek. xvii. 24. ^s Ps. xxxiii. 10; lxxvi. 6. Isa. viii. 10; xlv. 25. ^t Ps. ix. 16, 17; xxxv. 11. Isa. xix. 3, 14. 1 Cor. iii. 19. ^u Deut. xxviii. 29. Isa. lix. 10. Prov. xiv. 9, &c. ^v Ps. xvii. 13; xxxv. 10; lxxii. 4, &c. ^w ch. iv. 6. Ps. cvii. 42. Isa. lii. 15. Lam. iii. 30. ^x Deut. viii. 5. Prov. iii. 11, 12, 13. Heb. xii. 5, 6, 10. James, i. 12. Rev. iii. 9. Ps. xciv. 12. ^y 1 Cor. i. 7. ^z Deut. xxxii. 19. 1 Sam. ii. 6. Ps. cxlvii. 3. Isa. xix. 22; xxx. 26. ^a Ps. xxxiv. 5-8, 19. Prov. ii. 12, 16; xxiv. 16, &c. ^b Ps. xxxiii. 19, 20; xxxvii. 19; lv. 19. Prov. x. 3. ch. xxxiii. 24, 29. ^c Ps. lxxiii. 9; xxxi. 21; l. 19. ^d Ps. xci. 13.

- ^c Ps. cvii. 43. 24 * So shalt thou ¹ know that thy tent shall be in
 Isa. xxxviii. 1. peace: so shalt thou order thy habitation, and shalt Prov. ii. 5, 9, 10, not ^e err. * Thou shalt also know that thy ^h seed shall 12. be many, and thine offspring as the grass of the earth.
 John. vii. 17; 25 * Thou shalt ⁱ enter the grave in honour, like the viii. 26; &c. offering up of a heap of corn in its season.
^e 1 John. iii. 9. 26 * Thou shalt ⁱ enter the grave in honour, like the Prov. xix. 2; offering up of a heap of corn in its season.
 viii. 36. 26 * Thou shalt ⁱ enter the grave in honour, like the ch. xxii. 26-29. offering up of a heap of corn in its season.
^h Gen. xv. 5; 27 * Behold, this we have ^k searched out: so it is: hear xxii. 17. it, therefore, and be assured for thyself.
 Ps. lxxii. 16; 27 * Behold, this we have ^k searched out: so it is: hear cxii. 2. it, therefore, and be assured for thyself.
 Isa. xxii. 24. 27 * Behold, this we have ^k searched out: so it is: hear
 Gen. xv. 15; it, therefore, and be assured for thyself.
 xxxv. 8.
 Deut. xxv. 20.
 Ps. xci. 16;
 Prov. iii. 2, 16.
 Ephes. vi. 2, 3.
^l Ps. cxl. 2, 3.
 Prov. xxv. 2.
 ch. xxxviii. 27.

CHAPTERS VI. VII.

SUMMARY.

Job insists on the severity of his afflictions, 1-5:—the insipidity of his friend's reasoning; requests that God would consider his case; his determination to believe in Him at all events, 5-11: confesses his weakness as a man, but insists on an inward source of help, 11-14: the duty of a friend; the unfaithfulness of Job's friends, 14-16: favours deeply felt by the distressed; but if injuries are inflicted, they are easily reduced to silence, banished, and destroyed, 16-21: Job's friends wearied without any just cause, 21-25: the arguments of a poor and afflicted man allowed to have no weight, 25-28: an intreaty to reconsider Job's case, 28-30.

VII.—The state of man a warfare: as the slave hopes for a season of rest, and the hireling looks for his wages, so Job's days and nights were full of expectation, but were followed only by still greater pains, intimating his approaching death, 1-9. No earthly return to be expected from the grave. Job, therefore, requests permission to give vent to his sufferings; recites the distresses of his couch, and desires to be let alone, 9-17: man's worthlessness stated. Job requests a remission of his sufferings; and, as he cannot atone for his sins, deprecates the punishment, and prays for the pardon of them, believing that he soon must die, 17-21.

- 1, 2 * THEN answered Job, and said, * Would that my ^a vexation were well weighed, and my cala-3 mity taken up in the balances together. * For now would it be ^b heavier than the sand of the sea; there-4 fore have my words been ^c rash. * For the ^d arrows of the Almighty are with me, the poison of which drinketh up my spirit; the ^e terrors of God are set in array against me.
 5 * Doth the wild ass bray over his ^f grass? or loweth
 6 the ox over his fodder? * Is curd eaten without ^g salt? or Is there flavour ^h in the whey of cheese?

* Ch. v. 2; x. 17;
xxxii. 2.

Ps. vi. 8;
xxxi. 10;
lviii. 3.

Isa. xxvi. 7.
Dan. v. 27.

^b Prov. xxvii. 3.
^c Eccl. v. 2.

Isa. xxxii. 4.
^d Ps. xxxviii. 3.
Deu. xxxiii. 23, 24.

Ps. vii. 14;
xlv. 6;
cxx. 4.

^e Ps. lxxxviii.
16, 17; v. 5.

^f Jer. civ. 14.
Jer. xiv. 6.

Joel. i. 10, 20.

^g Mark ix. 50. ^h Col. iii. 6. Jam. iii. 12. ⁱ Prov. xi. 22; xxxi. 18. ^j Ps. xxxiv. 9; cxix. 66.

- 7 * But my soul hath refused to touch victuals; they 8 are to me as ⁱpolluted food. * Oh that my ^krequest would come, and that God would grant me my ^lwish!
 9 * Even that God would vouchsafe to ^mbreak me to 10 pieces; put forth his hand, and ⁿcut me off! * Still should my consolation ^oremain: I would ^pharden myself in the affliction in which He spared not: seeing I have not ^qwithholden the words of the ^rHoly One.
- 11 * ^sWhat is my strength that I should hope! and 12 what my ^tlimit that I should extend my ^udesire! * Is my ^wstrength the strength of stones? Is my flesh like 13 ^xbrass? * Is not my ^yhelp within me, although ^zwealth hath been thrust away from me?
- 14 * To the wasted is ^afavour shewn by his friend, though he have forsaken the fear of the Almighty:
 15 * but my brethren have dealt ^bfaithlessly like the torrent; like the stream of the torrents they have passed away.
- 16 * Can the ^csnow be hidden upon men who are 17 ^dblack with cold!—* When they are ^ehardly pressed, they are brought to ^fsilence; when one burneth against them, they are ^gextinguished and driven from 18 their place. * In ^hcompanies they bend their devious way; they go up into the wilderness, and they perish.
 19 * They looked towards the roads of ⁱTema; they ex-20 pected the passes of ^kSheba would be theirs. * They were put to ^lshame, because they had been confident:
 hitherto they proceeded, and were put to ^mconfusion.
 21 —* But now ye are ⁿwearied: ye have seen the stroke, 22 and are afraid. * Is it that I said, ^oGive me! Or 23 of your might ^pbribe for me! * Or ^qdeliver me from the hand of the oppressor? Or ^rredeem me 24 from the hand of the violent? * ^sShew me, and I will be silent: and cause me to understand in what I have erred.
- 25 * How have the ^twords of truth been enfeebled; ^u

ⁱ Hos. ix. 3, 4.

Ps. cii. 10.

Mal. i. 7.

^k Ps. xxi. 3;

cvi. 15.

^l Sam. i. 17.¹ Zech. ix. 12.

Ps. lxxii. 6;

lxxi. 5.

^m Ps. cxliii. 3;

lxxxix. 11.

Isa. liiii. 10.

¹ Kings, xix. 4.

Jon. iv. 3.

Gen. xxx. 1.

ⁿ Isa. xxxviii. 12.

Num. xi. 15.

^o ch. xiii. 15;

xix. 25-27.

Isa. lviii. 1, 2.

Ps. xvi. 10, 11.

^p Ezek. iii. 9.

Isa. i. 7.

^q Ps. xl. 10, 11.

ch. xxxi. 20.

^r Lev. xi. 44.¹ Sam. ii. 2.

Ps. xxii. 4.

^s ch. vii. 17-19;

ix. 19.

Ps. xviii. 4;

xc. 6;

cxliv. 3.

¹ Sam. xxiv. 15.² Sam. vii. 18.

Isa. xl. 6, with

ch. iv. 19.

^t Ps. xxxix. 5;

xc. 10;

ciii. 15.

^u Ps. xlii. 3;

lxiii. 2.

Prov. vi. 30.

^w ¹ Sam. ii. 9.² Kings, xviii. 20.

ch. ix. 19.

Ps. xxxi. 7;

lxii. 12.

Isa. xlv. 12.

^x ch. xl. 18.

Dan. ii. 32.

Mich. iv. 13.

Dan. x. 6, with

Rev. i. 15.

Isa. xlvi. 4.

^y Isa. vi. 13.

Ps. xxvii. 9;

xlvi. 2;

xciv. 17.

Hos. xiii. 9.

^z ch. xxxi. 25.

Ps. xlix. 6;

xxxvii. 16.

Prov. xi. 4;

xxiii. 5;

xxvii. 24.

^a Eccl. v. 13.

Ps. cxii. 5, 9.

Prov. xiv. 9;

xxi. 10;

xxxi. 6.

Matt. v. 45.

Ps. cxlviii. 9.

Prov. xii. 10. Heb. xlii. 3. ^b Isa. xxxiii. 1. Jer. xv. 18. Ps. xxxviii. 12; lxxxviii. 19. Lam. i. 2. Luke, x. 31. ^c Ps. li. 9; lxxviii. 15. Isa. i. 18. Prov. xxv. 13. ^d ch. xxx. 30. Jer. viii. 21. Lam. v. 10. ^e Amos, iv. 1. ch. xxxv. 9. Ps. lxxiv. 21. ^f Ps. xciv. 17. Amos, xiii. 3. ^g Isa. xliii. 17. Prov. xx. 20. ^h Isa. xxi. 13. Gen. xxxvii. 25. Jer. xviii. 6, 7. ch. xxiv. 5. Heb. xi. 38. ⁱ Isa. xxi. 14. Jer. xxv. 23. ^k ch. i. 15. Gen. xxv. 3, &c. ^l Jer. xiv. 3. Prov. xi. 2. Jer. iii. 25. ^m Ps. xxxv. 4; cix. 20. Jer. vii. 19. ch. xii. 24, 25. ⁿ Gen. xxxvii. 46. ch. x. 1; xv. 7. Ps. vi. 6. Prov. iii. 11; xxv. 17. Isa. i. 14; xliii. 22. ^o Gen. xiv. 21. Hos. iv. 18. Prov. xxx. 15. ^p ¹ Sam. viii. 3; xii. 3. Isa. xxxiii. 15. Amos, v. 12. ^q Gen. xxxiii. 12. Jer. xxi. 12; xxii. 3. Judg. xlii. 5. ^r Jer. xv. 21. Ps. cvl. 10. ^s ch. xxiv. 32. Ps. xxvii. 11; xxxix. 5; cxix. 33, 34. Prov. iv. 4, 5. ^t ² Sam. xxiv. 4. ¹ Kings, viii. 36. Prov. xv. 23. Isa. xlii. 26. Jer. xviii. 18. Deut. xvi. 19. Prov. xix. 27.

- 26 and What can ^u reproof avail with you? * Do ye not esteem ^w assertions as convincing? And the words 27 of one in ^a despair as wind? * Ye even cast lots upon the ^y orphan, and ^z plot against your friend!
 28 * But now ^a look favourably upon me, and it shall 29 appear to your faces if ^b I lie. * ^c Turn ye now; let there be no ^d unrighteousness: nay, turn ye: still in 30 this is my ^e justification: * whether there be unrighteousness in my ^f tongue; or, whether my sense ^g discerneth not injurious things.

[CHAP. VII.]—1 Is there not a ^a warfare for man upon earth? And are not his days like the days of an 2 ^b hireling? * As a slave panteth for the ^c shadow,
 3 and as an ^d hireling looketh for his reward; * so am I made to possess ^e months of vanity, and ^f nights of 4 misery are numbered to me. * If I have ^g lain down, I have said, When shall I arise? For the ^h evening is a season of distraction: yea I am ⁱ filled with distracted 5 thoughts even to the dawn; saying, * My ^k flesh shall put on the worm with the clod of dust: soon shall my ^l skin 6 waste away. * My ^m days are filled up more speedily
 7 than the web, and close without ⁿ hope. * Remember that my ^o life is as wind: mine eye shall no more 8 ^p see prosperity. * The ^q eye of the beholder shall not look upon me: thine ^r eyes are upon me, and I am no more.

- 9 * As the ^s cloud wasteth and passeth away; so he that 10 goeth down to the ^t grave, cometh up no more. * He returneth no more to his house; nor doth his place 11 any more ^u acknowledge him. * But, as for me, let me not ^w restrain my mouth; let me ^x speak in the anguish of my spirit; let me ^y complain in ^z bitterness of my soul, saying:—

- 12 * Am I a sea, or a sea-monster, that Thou placest a 13 ^a restriction upon me?—* That, when I have said, My ^b couch shall console me, my bed shall ease my ^c com-

Ps. xxii. 16. 1 ch. xiv. 20. Ps. cii. 5. Lam. iii. 4; iv. B; v. 10. = ch. ix. 25. Deut. iv. 26. Ps. xxxvii. 2;
 xc. 10. = ch. xi. 20; xix. 10. Isa. xxxviii. 12. Prov. xiii. 12. Isa. lviii. 10. Lam. iii. 19. = Ps. lxxviii. 39; lxxxix. 46. Isa. xli. 16; lvii. 13. ch. xxx. 22. = Lam. iii. 17. ch. ix. 25. Ps. iv. 7; xxxiv. 13; cvl. 5; cxviii. 5. Eccl. vi. 6. = ch. xx. 9. Prov. xx. 12. Jer. xxii. 12. = Ps. xxxix. 11. Isa. iii. 8. ch. xvi. 9.
 Ps. x. 11; xi. 4; xxx. 22. Prov. v. 21. = ch. xxx. 15. Isa. xlii. 22. = Ps. xviii. 13. Jam. iv. 14. = Gen. xxxvii. 35.
 Ps. xxx. 3; xlii. 12; lxxxviii. 5, 6. = Ps. cii. 16. ch. x. 21; xvi. 22. = Ps. xl. 10. ch. iv. 2.
 Jer. iv. 19; xxxi. 16. Isa. xlii. 14. = Isa. lix. 11. Ps. xxxviii. 9. = Ps. iv. 3, &c.; lxxvii. 3, 4, 7; cxlii. 2, &c.
 ch. x. 1. = 1 Sam. i. 10. ch. ix. 11; x. 1. Prov. xiv. 10. Isa. xxxvii. 15, &c. = Gen. i. 9. ch. xxxviii. 11-11.
 Ps. lxxv. 7; cxlviii. 6, 7. = Prov. viii. 29. Jer. v. 22. Isa. li. 15; xxxvii. 1. ch. iii. 1-11. = Ps. iv. 4; lxxiii. 7, 8.
 Cant. iii. 1. = ch. ix. 27. Isa. xxxviii. 14. Ps. cxix. 50, 62. Jer. viii. 11.

- 14 plaint, * Thou hast confounded me with ^d dreams, and ^d Dan. iv. 2 (5); 15 affrighted me with visions; * yea strangling hath ^d vil. 15;
^e tried my soul, and from my ¹ bones the pains of ^e x. 16;
 16 death?—* I am ^e wasted away: I shall not ^b live ^e Jer. ix. 6. always: let me alone, for ⁱ vain are my days. ^e Zech. xlii. 9.
 17 * What is ^k man that thou shouldest magnify him? ^e ch. xxxiii. 19.
 and that thou shouldest set thine ¹ heart upon him? ^e Ps. cxli. 3; 18 * Or, that morning after morning Thou shouldest ^e lxxi. 10.
 19 ^m visit him; moment after moment ⁿ try him? * Why ^e 1 Pet. 1, 7, &c.
 then ^o turnest Thou not thine eyes from me, until I ^e Isa. xxxviii. 13.
 20 shall have ^v swallowed down my spittle? * Have ^o I ^e Ps. li. 10 (9). sinned? What then can ^r I do for Thee, O Thou ^s ob- ^e ch. xxxiii. 19.
 server of man! Why hast Thou placed me for a ^e Ps. vi. 3; 21 ^u burden to myself? * And why takest Thou not ^e xxxi. 11; off mine ^w iniquity, and causest not my sin to pass ^e xxxviii. 4;
 away? For even now shall I lie ^x down in the dust; ^e cii. 4, &c.
 and, though Thou ^y seek me early, I shall be no ^e Jer. lviii. 9.
 more. ^e ch. vii. 5.
^e Ps. cxlii. 15.
^e lxxviii. 3.
^e b Ps. lxxxix. 49, 49;
^e xlix. 10.
^e Eccl. vi. 12;
^e vii. 15.
^e Ps. cxliv. 4.
^e k Ps. cxliv. 3;
^e viii. 5, 7.
^e l Cant. viii. 6.
^e Jer. xxiv. 6.
^e Amos. ix. 5.
^e m Ps. lxxxiii. 14.
^e Zeph. iii. 5.
^e Isa. xxxiii. 2.
^e n Ps. xi. 4.
^e Jer. vi. 27;
^e ix. 6, 8.
^e o Ps. lxxvi. 10, &c.
^e p Cant. vi. 5.
^e ch. xxiv. 23;
^e xxxiv. 21.
^e Deut. ix. 27.
^e Isa. xxii. 4.
^e q Ps. xxxix. 11, 14.
^e r Isa. liv. 7, 8.
^e s Ps. xxxii. 5.
^e 1 Sam. ii. 25.
^e 2 Sam. xxiv. 10;
^e xii. 13.
^e ch. x. 14.
^e Ps. xli. 5; li. 6.
^e t ch. xi. 8.
^e Isa. x. 3.
^e Jer. iv. 30;
^e v. 30;
^e xlii. 3.
^e u Gen. xxxi. 49.
^e ch. xiv. 16.
^e Jer. xxxi. 28.
^e Dan. ix. 14.
^e t Ezek. iii. 20.
^e Jer. vi. 21.
^e Isa. xxxviii. 7.
^e v 2 Sam. xv. 33.
^e Ps. xxxviii. 5.
^e w Gen. iv. 13.
^e Ps. xxv. 11;
^e xxx. 11;
^e li. 2, &c.
^e Isa. xxvii. 9.
^e x Deut. xxxi. 16.
^e Ps. xliii. 4.
^e y Prov. i. 28;
^e viii. 17.
^e Ps. xxxix. 14;
^e xxxvii. 36.
^e z ch. ii. 11;
^e xviii. 1;
^e xxvi. 1.
^e ah ch. xv. 13;
^e xvii. 2.
^e Ps. lxxi. 4;
^e d Gen. xlviii. 25.
^e Lam. iii. 36, 59.
^e Mich. i. 5. Isa. liii. 11.
^e Ps. lxxxix. 33. 1 Chron. ix. 1; x. 13. ^e ch. v. 8. Ps. lxxviii. 34. Prov. viii. 17. Hos. v. 14. ^e Ps. xxx. 9; cxli. 2. Hos. xii. 5.

CHAPTER VIII.

SUMMARY.

Bildad rebukes Job on God's behalf, declaring that God is just, and that if he duly seek Him, his miseries shall come to end, 1-7: refers Job to the experience of past ages, and instances their sentiments by allusions to natural and historical events, to shew that the wicked are of short duration, and of rapid decay and succession, 8-19: and concludes by declaring, that the faithful are never forsaken of God, neither are the sinful encouraged; and that, if he were faithful, such should be his experience, 20-22.

- 1 * THEN answered ^a Bildad the Shuhite, and said, ^e Gen. iv. 13.
 2 * How long wilt thou ^b affirm these things? ^e Ps. xxv. 11; and the words of thy mouth be like a mighty ^c wind? ^e xxx. 11;
 3 * Doth God ^d pervert judgment? Or doth the Almighty ^e li. 2, &c.
 4 pervert justice? * If thy ^e children have sinned against ^e Isa. xxvii. 9.
 Him, and ^f He have dismissed them for their ^g trans- ^e x Deut. xxxi. 16.
 5 gression; * If then thou wouldest ^b seek early unto ^e Ps. xliii. 4.
 God, and make thy ⁱ supplication to the Almighty,— ^e y Prov. i. 28; lxxiv. 10; lxxxii. 2; xciv. 3. ^e ch. vi. 25. Mich. ii. 11. Mal. iii. 13. Ps. lv. 8, 9. ^e viii. 17.
 Deut. xxxii. 4. 2 Chron. xviii. 7. Deut. xxiv. 17. Prov. xvii. 23. Ps. cxix. 78. ^e Ps. xxxix. 14; ^e ch. xxxiv. 12; i. 5, 11. Jer. xxxviii. 6. Gen. iii. 23; xlv. 3. ^e Prov. xxix. 6. Mich. i. 5. Isa. liii. 11. ^e xxxvii. 36.
 Ps. lxxxix. 33. 1 Chron. ix. 1; x. 13. ^e ch. v. 8. Ps. lxxviii. 34. Prov. viii. 17. Hos. v. 14. ^e Ps. xxx. 9;
 cxli. 2. Hos. xii. 5.

- ^a ch. ix. 30; xl. 4; xxxiii. 9.
^b Prov. xx. 9, 11.
^c Ps. xlv. 24; lix. 5.
^d Isa. li. 9.
^e 2 Chro. xxxvi. 22.
^f Joel, ii. 25.
^g Ruth, ii. 12.
^h Prov. xiii. 21; xxv. 22.
ⁱ Ezek. xxxiv. 14.
^j Exod. xv. 13.
^k Jer. xxxi. 23; i. 7.
^l Prov. iii. 33; xxiv. 15.
^m ch. xlii. 12.
ⁿ Eccl. vii. 8.
^o Ezek. xxxvi. 11.
^p Ps. xcii. 13.
^q Isa. xvii. 11.
^r Deut. iv. 32; xxxii. 7.
^s Hag. ii. 11.
^t Jer. vi. 16; ch. xv. 18.
^u Ps. ix. 8; ch. xxviii. 27.
^v Ps. xc. 4.
^w Mich. ii. 8.
^x 1 Sam. xix. 7; ch. xx. 4; xxxviii. 21.
^y Ps. cii. 12; ckliv. 4.
^z 1 Chro. xxix. 15; ch. xiv. 2.
^{aa} Eccl. viii. 13.
^{ab} ch. xii. 7, 8.
^{ac} Deut. xxxii. 7.
^{ad} Isa. xlv. 4; lviii. 11.
^{ae} Gen. xiii. 10.
^{af} Jer. ii. 13; xxxi. 12.
^{ag} Prov. xi. 25.
^{ah} Ezek. xviii. 9, 24; xix. 12.
^{ai} Isa. xix. 6, 7.
^{aj} Ps. xc. 6; cxxix. 6.
^{ak} Ps. xxxvii. 2.
^{al} Isa. xl. 24.
^{am} Ps. cxii. 10; cxlvi. 4.
^{an} Isa. xxvi. 14.
^{ao} Jer. xxv. 10.
^{ap} Prov. x. 20.
^{aq} Lam. iii. 18.
^{ar} ch. xxiv. 24.
^{as} Ps. xxxvii. 20, 30; lxxv. 11; lxxvi. 13.
^{at} Isa. lix. 5, 6.
^{au} Or, House. ^a Isa. xxxvi. 6. Ezek. xxix. 7. Amos, v. 19. ^b Prov. xii. 7. Ps. lxxii. 4. Isa. xxx. 13. Ezek. xiii. 14. ^c Isa. vii. 7; viii. 10. ^d Ps. xxxvii. 35, 36; xc. 6; xcii. 8. Eccl. xii. 2. ^e Ps. xvii. 10; lxxiii. 4. ^f Gen. xlix. 22. ^g Ps. lxxx. 12. ^h Isa. xvi. 8. Ezek. xvii. 6; xxxvi. 8. ⁱ Ezek. xxxi. 7. ^j Jer. xvii. 8. ^k Isa. lviii. 6. ^l Ps. lxxx. 10. ^m Ps. xxi. 10. Eccl. x. 12. ⁿ Isa. v. 24; ix. 15; xiv. 30. ^o Ps. lli. 7. ^p Prov. ii. 22. ^q Heb. swallowed up. ^r ch. vii. 10. ^s Ps. cii. 16; xxxvii. 26. Ezek. xxvi. 21. ^t ch. xx. 5. ^u Prov. xv. 21. ^v Isa. xvi. 10; xxiv. 11. ^w Jer. xlviii. 33. ^x Lam. v. 15. Ezek. xxiv. 25. ^y Ps. xlix. 11-14. ^z Gen. xiii. 16. ^{aa} ch. xxii-24; xxvii. 16. ^{ab} Gen. vi. 8, 9. ^{ac} ch. i. 1, 9; ii. 3. ^{ad} Ps. xviii. 26; xv. 2. ^{ae} Prov. xi. 5; xxviii. 18. ^{af} 2 Chro. xix. 2. ^{ag} Isa. lxxiii. 5. ^{ah} Ps. cvii. 12. ^{ai} ch. xii. 21. ^{aj} Ps. cxxvi. 2. ^{ak} ch. v. 22; xxii. 19. ^{al} Ps. lii. 8. ^{am} Isa. xxxvii. 22. ^{an} Ps. xlvii. 2. ^{ao} Isa. xii. 6; xlii. 11-13; xlv. 23. ^{ap} Ps. xlv. 8. ^{aq} Isa. lxxvi. 5. ^{ar} Ps. xxxiv. 22; xxxv. 26; lxxxix. 24; cix. 28, 29. ^{as} ch. xxi. 28. ^{at} Jer. iv. 20. ^{au} Ps. lix. 25. ^{av} Lam. ii. 2. ^{aw} Prov. xiv. 11. ^{ax} Jer. xlix. 29.
- 6 * And if thou wert ^k pure and upright; — surely now would He ^l stir Himself up for thee, and ^m restore the 7 ⁿ peaceful habitation of thy righteousness. * Though thy ^o beginning were small, thy latter end should greatly ^p increase.
8 * But ^q ask now of former generations, and ^r prepare ^s thyself to search as to their fathers; — * for we are of ^t yesterday, and know not; because our days upon the 9 earth are as a ^u shadow. — * Will not they ^v teach thee, and say to thee — and from their hearts put forth sentences — * Will the reed ^w flourish without mire? Will
10 the marsh-weed increase without water? * Is it not cut off while yet in its greenness, and ^x withered before 11 any grass? * ^y Such are the paths of all that forget God; and so the hope of the profane ^z perisheth:
12 * whose confidence is ^a cut off, and the place of his trust as the ^b spider's || web. * He ^c leaneth on his house, but it ^d standeth not: he taketh hold upon it,
13 but it ^e endureth not. * He is ^f fresh before the sun, and beyond his garden doth his branch ^g shoot forth:
14 * near the stream are his ^h roots intertwined; among the ⁱ stones are they seen. * Nevertheless he shall be ^k || rooted out from his place, and it shall ^l deny
15 him, saying: I have never seen thee. * Lo, this is the ^m joy of his way; and, as from the dust, ⁿ others spring up.
16 * Behold, God despiseth not the ^o perfect; neither 17 ^p strengtheneth He the hands of evil doers. * While He filleth thy mouth with ^q laughter, and thy lips 18 with ^r shouting; * Those who ^s hate thee shall put on shame, and the ^t tent of the wicked shall be no more.

CHAPTERS IX. X.

SUMMARY.

Job accedes to the reasoning of Bildad, as to God's power and man's inability to plead with Him, and recounts many of His wonderful works: stating, at the same time, his own ignorance and weakness, 1-15. He further enlarges on his own weakness and unworthiness, introducing his afflictions, and affirming that were he even just—what his opponents charge him with assuming—that would only serve to humble him the more. He concludes the paragraph by maintaining the strict justice of God, 16-24. He laments the rapid, unprofitable, and painful lapse of his time; his inability to shake off his sorrows; his consciousness of his own sin; and the inability of his afflictions to wash this away, 25-31. He acknowledges the greatness of God; and concludes by praying that God would take away his afflictions, 32-35.

X.—Job continues his complaint, desiring to be informed on what principle it is that God chooses to afflict him, 1-7. Declares that God had wonderfully constructed him, and had dealt favourably with him, 8-13. Confesses his own sin, and maintains God's good providence. Speaks, too, of His occasional severity and favour. Laments his own birth, but desires to be restored before his departure.

1, 2 * THEN Job answered, and said, * Truly ^a I know that it is so; for how should man be ^b just with 3 God? * If he would ^c contend with Him, he should 4 not answer Him one thing of a thousand. * Of the ^d wise of heart, and stout of strength, Who hath ^e hardened himself against Him, and been at peace?
5 * Him, who ^f removeth mountains, and they know not 6 that He in His wrath overthroweth them? * Who ^g troubleth a land degrading it from its station, so that 7 the pillars thereof greatly shake? * Who ^h commandeth the sun, and it riseth not; and sealeth up the 8 ⁱ stars!—* Boweth down the ^k heavens alone, and 9 walketh on the ^l heights of the sea!—* Is the ^m maker of ⁿ Arcturus, Orion, and the Pleiades, with the cham-10 bers of the ^o south?—^v * Doeth great things surpassing 11 search, and ^q wonderful things beyond number? * Behold, He passeth near me, but I ^r see Him not: He 12 also passeth by, but I perceive Him not. * When He ^s taketh away, Who shall ^t turn Him back? Who 13 shall say to Him, ^u What doest Thou? * As to God,

^a Ps. cxix. 75, 152; cxi. 14.
^b ch. iv. 17; xxv. 4. Ps. cxliii. 2;
cxxx. 3.
^c Rom. iii. 19, &c.
^d Isa. xlv. 9; l. 3. ch. xl. 2;
xxxiii. 13.
^e Jer. xii. 1.
^f Ps. xxxv. 22, 23.
^g Isa. v. 21-23; xix. 13-15.
^h Jer. xviii. 18, 19.
ⁱ Prov. xxiv. 5.
^j Prov. xxviii. 14; xxix. 1.
^k Ps. xlv. 3, 4; cxiv. 4.
^l Hab. iii. 6.
^m Zech. xiv. 4.
ⁿ Isa. xiii. 13.
^o Amos, ix. 5.
^p Ps. lxxxv. 4; lxxxii. 5.
^q 1 Sam. ii. 8.
^r Joel, ii. 2.
^s Eccl. xii. 2.
^t Isa. xxiv. 23.
^u Jer. xv. 9.
^v Ezek. xxxii. 7.
^w Eccl. xii. 2.
^x Ezek. xxxii. 7.
^y Joel, ii. 10.
^z Ps. civ. 2, 3.
^{aa} Isa. xl. 22; xlv. 24; li. 13.
^{ab} Zech. xii. 1.
^{ac} Ps. lxxxix. 10.
^{ad} Hab. iii. 15.
^{ae} Amos, iv. 13.
^{af} Ps. lxxxix. 13.
^{ag} ch. v. 9; xxxvii. 8. Ps. cvl. 21. Exod. xv. 11. Ps. lxxvii. 15; cxxxvi. 4. ^{ah} ch. v. 9. Ps. lxxxvi. cxlvi. 5. Jer. xlv. 23. ^{ai} ch. xxiii. 8, 9. 2 Kings, vi. 17. Exod. xxxiii. 20-22. Amos, vii. 3. ^{aj} ch. xxxvi. 18. Ps. lvi. 7; lviii. 10. Isa. v. 5; xl. 24. Hos. v. 13. ^{ak} Isa. xiv. 27. ch. xi. 10; xxiii. 13.
^{al} Isa. x. 15; xlv. 9, 10. Eccl. viii. 4. Dan. iv. 34.

- when He ^wturneth not away His wrath, beneath Him 14 sink down the helpers of the ^xinsolent. * Much less then should ^yI answer Him; should I choose out my 15 words with Him. * Because, were ^zI just, I should not reply; I ^ashould only make supplication to my judge.
 16 * Had I called, and He answered me, yet could I not be confident that He had ^bhearkened to my voice.
 17 * For he ^cbreaketh me with the tempest, and multi-18 plieth my ^dbruises to no purpose. * He suffereth me not to ^erefresh my spirit, but filleth me with ^fbitter 19 things. * If I speak of ^gstrength, behold, He is strong; and, if of judgment, Who shall make ^hap-20 pointment for me? * If I were ⁱjust, mine own mouth would condemn me: if I were perfect, then would it 21 convict me of ^kperverseness. * Were I perfect, should I not ^lknow myself, and ^mdespise mine own life?
 22 * The matter is ⁿone; therefore I said, The perfect and 23 the wicked He ^obringeth to an end.—* Should the ^pscourge kill instantly, Would He then ^qlaugh at 24 the wasting of the innocent? * Were a ^rland given up into the hand of the wicked, Would He screen the face of its judges? If not, then ^sWhat is He?
 25 * But my days are ^tswifter than a courier; they flee 26 away, they see no good. * They pass away swiftly with the ^ureed-vessels, or like the ^veagle rushing on 27 its food. * If I said, Let me forget and forsake my ^xcomplaint, let me even make my ^ycountenance joy-28 ful; * then was I in ^zdread of all my sorrows:—for
 I knew that Thou wouldest not consider me ^ainnocent:
 29 —saying, * I am ^bsinful; why ^clabour I thus in vain?
 30 * If I say, I have ^dwashed me in waters of snow, and 31 cleansed my hands with soap; * then Thou ^eplungest me in corruption, so that mine own clothes abhor me.
 32 * But He is not a ^fman like me, that I should answer Him; that we should even ^gcome together in ^w ch. xlii. 6. ver. 31. ^x ch. xxiii. 13. Eccl. ii. 14; iii. 19, 20; vi. 6. Ezek. i. 16. ^y Eccl. ix. 2.

^z Isa. x. 24, 25; xxviii. 15, 18. ^a Deut. xxxii. 43. Hos. i. 4. Ps. x. 8, 12. Prov. i. 11, 18. ^b Lev. xviii. 25; xxvi. 43. Job, xxxi. 39. ^c Prov. xxvii. 2. Isa. i. 10; xiv. 15; xxii. 3; xxix. 10. ^d Prov. xxx. 4, 9.
^e ch. vii. 6. ^f Ps. xxxix. 6; xc. 7, 9; ciii. 15, 16. Lam. iv. 18. ^g Ps. xxxix. 13; cvi. 5. ^h Isa. xlviii. 2.
ⁱ ch. xxiv. 18. ^j Deut. xxviii. 49. ^k Prov. xxii. 5. Jer. xlviii. 40. Hos. viii. 1. Hab. i. 8. ^l ch. vii. 13; x. 1.
^m Ps. lv. 3, 7, 9. ⁿ xlii. 6, 12. ^o ch. xxi. 6; xxiii. 15. ^p Ps. cxix. 129. ^q ch. xiv. 14; xv. 14, 15; xxv. 4.
^r Prov. xxv. 2. ^s Ps. xiv. 1. Rom. iii. 12. ^t ver. 20, 26. ^u Ps. xxxii. 5; xxxviii. 5; li. 5. ^v Prov. xxviii. 13.
^w Ps. xxxviii. 1, 3. ^x Prov. xxiii. 17; xxiv. 1, 19. ^y Ps. xxxix. 7; xliii. 2; xlviii. 3. ^z Ps. lxxiii. 13. Jer. ii. 22.
^a Kings. v. 12. Ezek. xxiii. 40. ^b Prov. xxx. 12. ^c Ps. xxxviii. 5-8; xxxix. 12; xlii. 6; cii. 11. ^d Eccl. vi. 10.
^e Eccl. xiv. 9. Jer. xlix. 19. ^f Num. xxiii. 19. ^g 1 Sam. xv. 29. Mal. iii. 6. Isa. xlvii. 3. ^h Ps. i. 5. Jer. xlix. 19.
ⁱ Mal. iii. 3. ^j ch. xiv. 3; xxi. 4. xxxiv. 23. ^k Ps. cxliii. 2.

33 judgment. * There is no common ^h pleader between 34 us who can lay his hand upon us both. * O that He would ⁱ take away His rod from me, and the dread of 35 Him no more affright me! * Then would ^k I speak, and not be afraid of Him.—^l But as for me, it is not so with me.

[CHAP. X.]—¹ My soul is ^a pained with my life:
 let me ^b give myself up to complaint; let me speak in 2 the bitterness of my soul. * Let me say to God, ^c Condemn me not: shew me why Thou ^d contendest with 3 me. * Is it good for Thee that ^e Thou oppress, that Thou ^f despise the work of Thine own hands, and ^g shine favourably on the counsel of the wicked?
 4 * Hast Thou ^h eyes of flesh? or ⁱ seest Thou as man
 5 seeth? * Are Thy ^k days as the days of mortals? or 6 Thy ^l years as the days of the mighty, * that Thou ^m inquirest after mine iniquity, and searchest for my 7 sin? * Thou ⁿ knowest that I am not guilty, and that none can ^o deliver out of Thine hand.

8 * Thine ^p hands have at once formed and fashioned me round about; and now Thou ^q destroyest me!
 9 * Oh, remember that as ^r clay Thou hast fashioned me;
 10 and now to ^s dust Thou caustest me to return! * Hast
 Thou not poured me out as milk, and ^t compacted me 11 as cheese? * Clothed me with skin and ^u flesh, and 12 fenced me with bones and sinews: * ^w granted life and favour unto me? and hath not Thy providence 13 ^x preserved my spirit?—* But the cause of these things Thou hast ^y hidden in Thine own heart: I know that the whole of this remaineth ^z with Thee.

14 * If I have sinned, Thou hast ^a observed me; and from mine iniquity Thou wilt not consider me ^b clean.
 15 * If I have done ^c wickedly, Woe unto me! But if ^d righteously, I shall not lift up my head, full as I am 16 of vileness, and sensible of my wretchedness!—* ^e But the wicked triumpheth!—As a fierce lion Thou ^f hunt-est me: then Thou turnest again, and shewest Thyxxix. 16. Jer. xviii. 6-8. * Gen. iii. 19. ch. xxxiv. 15. Ps. xxii. 15; civ. 29. Eccl. iii. 20. * Ps. cxxxix. 1, 23. Jer. xliii. 10. Amos, ix. 3. Zeph. i. 12. * Dan. vi. 23. Ps. xviii. 21, 25; xix. 14. * Ps. vii. 3. Isa. v. 29, &c. * Ps. cxix. 73. Isa. xliii. 7; xlv. 2. * Ps. lxxxviii. 6, 7; cxliii. 7. * ch. vii. 7. Isa. lxi. 7, 8; cxxxix. 20. * Ps. xl. 12; xli. 3; xcvi. 10. * Jer. xxxii. 17. Deut. xxxii. 34. Ps. xxv. 14; xxxi. 20. Prov. iii. 32. Jer. xxiii. 18. * Dan. ii. 20. Rom. xi. 33. * ch. xiv. 16. Ps. lxi. 6; xc. 3; cxxx. 3. * Exod. xxxiv. 7. * Ps. cxliii. 2. * I Sam. xii. 25. * 2 Sam. xxiv. 17. Ps. vii. 4-6. Isa. iii. 11. * ch. ix. 15, 20, 21; xi. 14, 15. * Ps. cx. 7. ch. xl. 4. Lam. i. 11. * Ps. xvii. 16, 19. Isa. iii. 6, 12; lxxxix. 10. ch. xxii. 29; xxxv. 12. Isa. xlii. 11. * Lam. iii. 10. Hos. xiii. 7, 8. Amos, iii. 8.

^b I Sam. ii. 25. Gal. iii. 19, 20. I Tim. ii. 5. * Ex. xl. x. 17; xxxii. 25. Numb. xxi. 7. Isa. ix. 4. Lam. iii. 1. ch. xii. 21; xxxiii. 7. * Gen. xviii. 27. Exod. xxxiv. 35. Ps. xl. 6; cxix. 172. * Ps. cxix. 83, 87; cii. 7, 8. * Lam. iii. 20, 54. ch. vi. 9; vii. 15. Ps. vi. 4; xxxi. 9; xlii. 7; lvii. 7. Jer. iv. 31. * ch. vii. 11, &c. xiii. 13. * Ps. vi. 2; xxxvii. 33; cxliii. 2. Ruth, i. 20. Lam. iii. 15. * ch. vi. 24; vii. 20, 21. Ps. lxxxviii. 14. * Lam. iii. 38, 43. Ps. lxxxiii. 14; lxxxvii. 8, 9. * ch. xiv. 15; xxxiv. 19. Isa. lxiv. 7. Ps. cxxxviii. 3; cxlv. 9. * Ps. lxxxii. 4. Prov. xviii. 5. Jer. xii. 1. Mic. vi. 11. Ps. v. 5. * 2 Chron. xvi. 9. Prov. xv. 3; xxii. 12. Jer. xxxii. 19. * I Sam. xvi. 7. Ps. cxxxix. 16. Jer. xx. 12. ch. xxviii. 10, 24. * Ps. lxxxix. 31; ciii. 15; cxliv. 4. * ch. xxxvi. 26. Ps. lxi. 7; xc. 4, 9, 10; cii. 25, 27, 29. * Ps. x. 16; xlv. 22; cxxxix. 1, 23. Jer. xliii. 10. Amos, ix. 3. Zeph. i. 12. * Dan. vi. 23. Ps. xviii. 21, 25; xix. 14. * Ps. vii. 3. Isa. v. 29, &c. * Ps. cxix. 73. Isa. xliii. 7; xlv. 2. * Ps. lxxxviii. 6, 7; cxliii. 7. * ch. vii. 7. Isa. lxi. 7, 8;

Ps xxxi. 22.
 Isa. xxxviii. 29;
 xxxix. 14.
 Joel. ii. 26.
 # ch. xvi. 8-12;
 xix. 6-13.
 Ps. iv. 19.
 # Ps. xxxviii. 4;
 lxxxviii. 50.
 # Hab. iii. 16.
 Jer. xviii. 22.
 Isa. xxvii. 4.
 # ch. iii. 11; vii. 8.
 Jer. xv. 19;
 xx. 14-18.
 Matt. xxvi. 24.
 Ps. lviii. 8, 9.
 # ch. iii. 13, 16.
 Jer. xx. 17.
 ch. vii. 6, 7, 16;
 viii. 9;
 ix. 25, 26.
 Ps. xxxi. 6, 13;
 ciii. 15, 16.
 ch. xix. 21.
 1 Sam. vi. 3.
 Lam. ii. 8.
 Ps. xxxi. 14.
 ch. xiv. 10, 14.
 2 Sam. xiv. 14.
 Ps. lxxxviii. 6, 11.
 Eccl. xii. 5.
 # Exod. x. 23.
 Isa. v. 20;
 viii. 22;
 ix. 1.
 Amos. iv. 13;
 v. 8.
 Lam. iii. 6.

17 self ^emarvellous towards me. *Thou renewest Thy ^bwitnesses before me, and increasest Thine ⁱanger with me: reinforcements, yea an ^karmy, are before me.—
 18 *But why ^lbroughtest Thou me forth from the womb?
Why gave I not up the ghost, and no eye seen me?
 19 Why* was I not—as though I had not been—^mcarried 20 from the womb to the grave? Are* not my days ⁿfew? O that He would cease to lay His ^ohand upon 21 me, and that I might refresh myself a little, *before ^pI go—and return no more—to a land of obscurity and 22 of the shadow of death: *a land ^qwhose night-fall is as the thick darkness, as the shadow of death and without order, and giveth out light but as the gross darkness.

CHAPTER XI.

SUMMARY.

The first answer of Zophar the Naamathite, in which he accuses Job of much and loud profession of his own purity: wishes that God would answer him, and shew him the transcendent value of wisdom, and the sin under which he so blindly laboured. Asserts the incomprehensibility of the Almighty, and man's imperfections, 1-12. Affirms that, if Job had duly regulated his own mind, and put away iniquity from him, he might have looked up in innocence; that, with his sin, his misery would have ceased; and that, although he might have felt occasional distress, yet, on the whole, he should be in safety and peace, while the wicked should entirely fail.

ch. ii. 11; xx. 1.
 # ch. xvi. 3;
 xviii. 2.
 # Ps. cxl. 12.
 Prov. x. 19.
 James. i. 19.
 # Heb. both lips.
 # Isa. xvi. 6;
 xlviii. 20.
 Ps. xxxi. 19;
 xxxix. 3.
 1 Pet. ii. 15.
 # ch. vi. 10, 30;
 ix. 15, 22.
 2 Sam. xxii. 21.
 Ps. xviii. 24.
 # ch. xxiii. 5;
 xxxi. 35.
 Hab. i. 13.
 Ps. lxxxiii. 2;
 cix. 1;
 cxviii. 1.
 # ch. xv. 8;
 xxvii. 13-20.
 Deut. xxxix. 29;
 xxxii. 24. Ps. xxv. 14; h. B. Matt. vi. 20. Prov. xvi. 16. Eccl. vii. 19. # ch. xv. 31. Jer. iv. 10; xx. 7.
 1st. xlvii. 20. Ez-k. xiv. 9. Obacl. 3. Rom. vii. 11. # ch. xxvi. 14; xxxvii. 23. Ps. lxxvii. 20; cxlv. 3.
 Eccl. iii. 11. Isa. xl. 26. Rom. xi. 32-39.

1 THEN answered ^aZophar the Naamathite, and 2 said, *Shall a multitude of ^bwords not be an-
 3 swered? or is a ^cman of || much profession necessarily
 4 just? *Shall thy ^dstrange sayings put men to silence?
 or shalt thou laugh, and none put thee to shame?
 5 *For thou sayest, ^ePure is my doctrine, and I am 6 clean in Thine eyes! *Nevertheless, O that God would speak, and open His ^flips with thee; *and shew thee that the treasures of ^gwisdom are twofold the worth of substance: then shouldest thou know that God considered thee ^hdeceived of thine own iniquity.
 7 *Canst thou by searching find out ⁱGod? or canst

8 thou find out the Almighty unto perfection! * He is in the ^kheights of the heavens: What canst thou do! ^k ch. xxii. 12;
In the depths deeper than hell: What canst thou ^{xxvi. 6;} 9 know? * In the length whose measure exceedeth ^{xxxv. 5, 6.}
 the ²earth; and in the breadth, wider than the ocean. ^{2 Chron. vi. 18.}
 10 * If He ^mattack, and shut up, and drive together, then ^{Ps. ciii. 11.}
 11 Who can turn Him back! * For He ^uknoweth the ^{cxviii. 8-11.}
 men of vanity, and seeth iniquity: and Shall not He ^{Isa. lv. 9.} 12 understand? * But ^aproud man is daring; for as an ^{Amos. ix. 2.} ass, even as a wild ass, is man born. ^{1 ch. xxxiii. 24, 25.}
 13 * If thou hadst ^pprepared thine heart, and stretched ^{Ps. cxxxix. 9, 10.}
 14 out thine hands to Him:—* if ^qiniquity is in thine ^{ch. ix. 4, 12, 13;}
 hand, put it far away; and suffer not ^rwickedness to ^{xxxiv. 29.}
 15 dwell in thy tent:—* Then indeed thou shouldest ^{Ps. xxxi. 9.}
 16 ¹lift up thy face without spot; yea, thou shouldest be ^{Isa. xiv. 27.}
 17 ¹pure, and not fear. * For thou shouldest forget ^{Dan. iv. 35.}
^umiser; or remember it as waters that have passed ^{Rom. ix. 19.}
 18 away. * Thy period also should continue ^wmore ^{ch. xxi. 13, 14.}
 19 bright than noon: and, hadst thou suffered ^xobscurity, ^{Ps. x. 11, 14;}
 20 thou shouldest be as the dawn. * Thou shouldest also ^{xxxv. 22;} be assured that there was ^yhope: and, though thou ^{xciv. 11.}
 hadst been put to ^zshame, in confidence shouldest ^{Ecc. v. 8.} 19 thou lie down. * Yea, thou shouldest ^alie down, and ^{Jer. xvii. 10.}
 none make thee afraid: and many should ^bseek thy ^{Hos. vii. 2.} 20 countenance! * But the ^ceyes of the wicked do fail; ^{Hab. i. 13.}
 their ^drefuge perisheth, and their ^ehope is despised. ^{John. ii. 24, 25.}

Mic. vi. 10. Jer. ix. 6. Amos, vi. 3. ^a ch. x. 15; xxii. 26. Gen. iv. 5, 6. Ps. xxiv. 7; xxvi. Luke, xxi. 28. James, iv. 10. Ephes. v. 27. Heb. ix. 14. 2 Pet. iii. 14. ¹ ch. viii. 6. Prov. xv. 26; xvi. 8.
 Rom. xiv. 20. 1 Tim. v. 22. Titus, i. 15. ^u Prov. xxxi. 7. Lam. i. 7. Gen. xli. 51. ch. ix. 27.
 Isa. liv. 4. ch. vi. 15. ^w Ps. xxxvii. 6; cxii. 4. Prov. iv. 18. Isa. lviii. 8, 10. Hos. vi. 3. Mic. vii. 8, 9.
 Mal. iv. 2. Luke, ii. 26-32. Rev. xxi. 23. ^x Isa. ix. 2; xlii. 16; lviii. 8, 10; lix. 9. Ps. cxxxix. 12.
 Mic. vii. 8. John, viii. 12, 46. ch. xxii. 28. ^y ch. v. 16; vii. 6; xiv. 7; xxii. 29. Ecc. ix. 4. Jer. xxxi.
 17. Lam. iii. 21, 29. Joel, iii. 16. Acts, xxiv. 15; xxviii. 20. Ps. lxxi. 5. ^a Ps. iv. 3, 4; xlv. 8; lix. 20.
 Isa. xxx. 15; liv. 4; lxi. 7. Jer. iii. 25. Ezek. xxviii. 26; xxxiv. 29. Prov. iii. 24-27. ^a Lev. xxvi. 6;
 Ps. xxxii. 2. Prov. iii. 24. Isa. xiv. 30; xvii. 2. Ezek. xxxiv. 14, 28. Hos. ii. 18. Jer. xxx. 10;
 xlv. 27, &c. ^b Ps. xiv. 13; cxix. 58. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 12. Zech. vii. 2; viii. 21, &c. ^c Deut. xviii. 32;
 65. Prov. xxx. 17. ch. xvii. 5; xxxii. 16. Ps. lxxix. 4; cxix. 82, 123. Isa. xxxviii. 14. ^d Ps. cxlii. 5.
 Isa. xxviii. 17. ^e ch. viii. 13; xxvii. 8; xli. (i.) 9. Prov. xi. 7. Isa. lvii. 10. Ezek. xix. 5; xxxvii. 11, &c.

CHAPTERS XII. XIII. XIV.

SUMMARY.

Job replies, justifying his right and fitness to do so, 1-4: complains of neglect from his friends, 4-6: allows the truth of their doctrines, and that it is obvious the hand of God is in this matter, 6-11: dwells still more particularly on the marks of God's overruling power, as discoverable from events, 11-25. — XIII. Affirms his own fitness, as before, to judge of these matters, and accuses his opponents of ignorance, 1-6: reproves them for attempting to justify God's doings on sinful principles, 6-13: presumes that the awful situation in which he places himself ought to evince his sincerity; and, therefore, requests they would give him a patient hearing, 14-18: calls earnestly on God to afford him an answer, requesting however a remission of his sufferings in the interval, in order that he may be able to give the deeper consideration to his own case; hopes that the various causes of his trials will be specified; and then briefly enumerates his sufferings, 18-27. — XIV. Details the frailty, imperfection, short-lived, and hopeless state of man as such, 1-6: requests that Divine justice would relax its severity with such an one; being, as to futurity, less hopeful than the stump of a tree which may be buried in the earth, 6-12: prays that even the grave may prove a hiding-place for him; justifies his hoping still in God, and trusts that his sins shall be forgiven, 13-17: concludes by stating the miserable life and death of those who are altogether differently circumstanced, 18-22.

1,2 * THEN answered Job, and said: * Truly ye are 3 ^a wise, and wisdom shall die with you! * I have, nevertheless, an ^b understanding heart as ye have: ^c I fall not short of you. But ^d who hath not 4 things such as these!—* As one who is a ^e derision to his neighbour am I: as one who ^f calleth upon God, and whom He will answer.—The ^g just, the 5 perfect man, is a derision!—* As the lamp of the ^h despised is to the tauntings of the dissolute, so am I ready for the ⁱ thrustings of the foot.
 6 * The ^k tents of the violent are indeed in peace, and great is the ^l confidence of those who vex God; because 7 God hath brought to their ^m hand. * But, ask now the ⁿ beasts, and they will teach thee; and the ^o fowls of 8 heaven, and they will tell thee: * or the twig of the ground, and it shall instruct thee; the fishes of the 9 sea and they shall declare unto thee, saying, * Who

* Prov. xxviii. 11. 3
 Isa. v. 21.
 Eccl. ii. 9.
 Isa. xxix. 14.
 Deut. v. 26 (29);
 xxix. 3 (4).
 ch. xxxviii. 36.
 ch. xiii. 2.
 ver. 9.
 Ps. l. 16, 17.
 ch. xxx. 1.
 Ps. xlv. 14;
 lxxix. 4;
 cxix. 51.
 Jer. xx. 7.
 Lam. iii. 14.
 Ps. ii. 4;
 xviii. 7;
 xci. 15.
 f Ps. xxxii. 9, 9.
 Gen. xix. 9.
 Acts. iii. 14.
 Eccl. vii. 15.
 Amos, v. 12.
 b Ps. xviii. 28;
 xxii. 7.
 Prov. xxxi. 18.
 2 Sam. xxi. 17.
 ch. xix. 19, 20.
 Deut. xxxii. 35.
 ch. xviii. 11;
 xxx. 12.
 Ps. lvi. 14;
 lxxi. 9.

1 Sam. ii. 9. ^k ch. xxi. 7. Ps. xvii. 11; xxxvii. 35; lxxvii. 12; xcii. 8. ^l ch. xv. 1; xxxix. 11. Ps. xv. 8; xlix. 7, 14. Isa. xxx. 12. ^m Eccl. iv. 1. Isa. x. 5; xix. 4; xx. 5. Mic. ii. 1. Ezek. xxx. 12.
 n Prov. vi. 6. Isa. i. 3. Jer. viii. 7. ch. xxxv. 11. ^o Eccl. x. 20.

^p knoweth not in all these things; that the hand of 10 Jehovah hath ^q wrought this; * seeing that in His hand is the soul of all living, even the ^r spirit of the flesh of all men?

11 * Doth not the ^s ear try sentences, as the ^t palate 12 tasteth its food? * Is not ^u wisdom with the ancient?
13 and with length of days understanding? * Are not ^w wisdom and ^x might with Him?—^y Counsel 14 and understanding His? * Behold, He ^z breaketh down, and it can no more be built: He ^a shutteth up against a man, and it can no more be opened.
15 * Behold, He ^b restraineth the waters, and they dry up:
He also sendeth them forth, and they ^c overwhelm a 16 land! * With Him are strength and ^d wealth: His 17 are ^e the deceived and the deceiving. * He leadeth away counsellors as ⁱ spoil, and maketh judges ^g mad.
18 * The discipline of kings He ^h relaxeth, and ⁱ bindeth
19 a girdle about their loins. * He leadeth away ^k priests 20 as spoil; He also overthroweth the ^l mighty. * He causeth the reputation of the ^m trusty to depart, and 21 the ⁿ decision of the aged to pass away. * He poureth out contempt upon ^o princes, and turneth to weakness 22 the insolence of the ^p haughty. * He ^q layeth open the deep things of darkness, and bringeth forth to 23 light those of the shadow of death. * He ^r increaseth the nations, and ^s destroyeth them: He also ^t spreadeth 24 abroad the nations, and He reduceth them. * He taketh away the ^u heart of the popular chieftains of the earth, and maketh them to ^w wander in a track-25 less desert. * So they ^x grope in darkness, for there is no light: He even maketh them to stray like the drunkard.^y

[CHAP. XIII.—] 1 * Behold, all this hath mine eye

2 ^a seen, mine ear heard, and considered for itself. * As

^p ver. 3, above.
^q Deut. xxxii. 20.
^r Prov. xxi. 4.
^s Gen. ii. 7;
v. 17;
Ps. civ. 29;
Ecl. iii. 21;
viii. 9;
xi. 5; xii. 7.
ch. xxvii. 3;
xxxiv. 14, 15.
Dan. v. 23.
^t Prov. xxii. 17, 18, 21.
^u ch. vi. 30;
xxxiv. 3.
^v ch. xv. 10;
xxxii. 7.
^w ch. xxviii. 23;
xxxvi. 5.
^x Ps. lxxv. 7;
lxxxix. 14.
Dan. ii. 20.
1 Chr. xxix. 11, 12.
Ecl. ix. 16.
^y Isa. xi. 2;
xxxvi. 5;
xl. 13.
Prov. viii. 14.
Jer. x. 12.
^z Isa. xxii. 22.
^a Rev. iii. 7;
ch. xi. 10;
xvi. 11.
Jer. xvii. 18;
xxxii. 23;
xl. 4.
Mal. i. 4.
^b 1 Sam. xvii. 46;
xxvi. 8.
^c 2 Sam. xviii. 28.
Isa. xxii. 22.
Gen. vii. 16.
Deut. xxxii. 20.
Ps. xxxi. 9.
^d Deut. xi. 17.
^e 1 Kings, viii. 35.
2 Chron. vi. 26;
vii. 13.
Isa. xix. 5, 6.
Jer. i. 38.
Ps. lxxiv. 15;
cvii. 35.
^f Isa. xxviii. 2, 17.
Jer. xlvi. 2.
ch. xxxviii. 24.
Ezek. xlii. 11;
xxxviii. 22.
Amos, v. 7.
^g Prov. ii. 7;
viii. 14, 18.
Isa. xxviii. 29.
Ps. civ. 24.
Prov. iii. 16.
^h Ecl. ix. 1, 2.
ch. xxvi. 12-14.
Ps. xc. 4.
ⁱ Mich. i. 8.
Ps. lxxvi. 6 (5).
Isa. xlii. 24;
xlix. 25.
2 Kings, xxi. 14.

Ezra, ix. 7. Jer. ii. 14. * Ps. cxli. 6. Prov. viii. 16. Isa. xl. 23. Zeph. iii. 3. ^b Ps. cxvi. 16. Isa. lii. 2.
^c ch. xxxvi. 13. Jer. xl. 1. Isa. xli. 1. Ps. cxlix. 8. Hos. x. 10. 2 Kings, xvii. 4; xxv. 7, &c. ^k Ps.
lxxvii. 64. Jer. i. 18; ii. 26; xiii. 13; xlviii. 7. Zeph. i. 4. Mal. ii. 2. ^l ch. xxxiv. 20. Ps. xciii. 4; cxxxv. 10. Isa. xlix. 25. Ezek. xvii. 30. Amos, ii. 16. Zech. xi. 2. ^m Ps. xii. 2. Isa. x. 12, 18;
xiii. 19; xvi. 14; xvii. 4; xxi. 16. ⁿ Jer. xvii. 11, 12. ^o Ps. cvii. 40. ^p ch. ix. 13; xxvi. 12;
xl. 11. Ps. ci. 5; cxix. 21. Prov. xv. 25. ^q Dan. ii. 22. Matt. x. 26. 1 Cor. ii. 10; iv. 5. Isa. xxx. 15.
Jer. xlix. 3. Ps. cxxxix. 12. ch. xxviii. 3. Ps. xlv. 20, 22; cvii. 14. Jer. ii. 6. Amos, v. 7. ^r Ps.
cv. 24; cvii. 39, 39. Isa. ix. 2; xxvi. 15. ^s Jer. xii. 17; xliii. 14. Deut. viii. 20. Isa. xxiii. 11. Zech.
xii. 9. 1 Chron. v. 25. ^t Gen. xxviii. 14. Zech. i. 17. Ezek. v. 10; xxix. 15. ^u Ps. deut. xxviii. 65.
Isa. x. 12; xlii. 7. Jer. iv. 9. Dan. iv. 16. ch. xvii. 4. Ps. cv. 25; cvii. 12. ^w Ps. cvii. 4, 40. Gen.
xx. 13. Numb. xiv. 33. Ps. lix. 16. Amos, viii. 12. Hos. ix. 17. Lam. iv. 14. ^x Deut. xxviii. 29.
ch. v. 14. Isa. lix. 10. ^y Isa. xix. 4; xxxviii. 7. Ps. cvii. 24, 27. ^a Deut. iii. 21; xi. 7. Ps. xxxv. 21.
Isa. lxiv. 4. Ecl. viii. 9; ix. 13. Zech. ix. 8. ch. xvi. 2.

is your ^b knowledge, so have I known: I fall not short of you. * I will nevertheless speak of the ^c Almighty; I desire also to reason of God. * For ye are glozers of ^d falsehood; ^e idolatrous physicians are ye all. * O that ye were altogether ^f silent! for this would be to you for wisdom.

* ^g Hear ye now my argument, and attend to the pleadings of my lips. * Will ye speak ^h wickedly for God, and talk deceitfully for Him! * Will ye ⁱ accept His person? Will ye thus contend for God? * Is it good that he ^k search you out? or that ye practise ^l hypocrisy with Him as with a man?—* He shall ^m assuredly convict you, if ye secretly accept the persons of any. * Shall not His ⁿ majesty affright you? and His dread fall upon you? * Are not your ^o memorials parables of ashes? Your mounds as ^p mounds of clay? * Be ye ^q silent, cease from me and let me speak; then come on me what will!

* Wherefore should ^r I take my flesh in my teeth? and ^s place my life in mine own hand? * Were He to slay me, should I not ^t hope? Only of my ^u spiritual ways would I dispute in His presence. * This should moreover ^w turn to my salvation; for no ^x hypocrite cometh before Him. * ^y Hear ye then diligently my conclusion, and receive my reproof in your ears.

* Behold now, I have ^z set my cause in order; and I know that I am ^a just. * O that ^b He would plead with me! for now am I ^c silent, and ready to give up the ghost. * Only ^d two things do not Thou with me; then will I not ^e conceal myself from Thy presence. * Remove Thine ^f hand from off me, and let not thy terror affright me. * Then ^g call Thou, and I will answer: or I will ^h speak, and answer Thou me; saying, * How many mine ⁱ iniquities and sins are: shew me how great my transgression and sin is.—* Why Thou ^k hidest thy face, and ^l countest me for Thine enemy.—

h ch. xii. 3.
 c ch. v. 8.
 d Ps. cix. 69;
 cix. 2.
 e Zech. xi. 17.
 f Prov. xvii. 20.
 Amos. v. 13.
 g ch. xxi. 2, 3.
 h Isa. xxviii. 23;
 xxxiv. 1.
 i Prov. iv. 14;
 vii. 24.
 j Lev. xix. 15.
 Ps. lxxviii. 36.
 k 2 Chron. xix. 7.
 ch. xvii. 4.
 l Ps. xliii. 1;
 ci. 7.
 m ch. xxxiii. 21;
 xxxiv. 19.
 n Deut. x. 17.
 o 2 Sam. xiv. 14.
 p Ps. xlii. 22.
 q Jer. xvii. 10.
 Amos. ix. 3.
 r Zeph. i. 12.
 s Rom. viii. 27.
 t 1 Cor. ii. 10.
 u Rev. ii. 23.
 v Hos. xii. 1 (xi. 12).
 w Prov. xii. 2.
 x Ps. cix. 7.
 y Matt. xii. 37;
 ch. xv. 6.
 z Ps. l. 21.
 a Prov. xx. 6.
 b Isa. xi. 3.
 c Ps. lxxv. 9;
 lxxvii. 17;
 lxxxiii. 17.
 d Hab. iii. 2.
 e Exod. xv. 16.
 f Exod. xvii. 14.
 g ch. xxx. 19.
 h Isa. xlii. 20.
 i Mal. iv. 3.
 j 2 Pet. ii. 6.
 k Num. xiv. 9.
 l Isa. xix. 6.
 m Zech. xi. 2.
 n Ezek. xvii. 17.
 o ver. 5.
 p ch. vii. 11; x. 1;
 xxi. 3.
 q Ps. xxviii. 1.
 r ch. xviii. 4.
 s Eccl. iv. 5.
 t Isa. ix. 19;
 xlii. 26.
 u Ps. xxvii. 21.
 v Judg. xii. 3.
 w 1 Sam. xix. 5;
 xxxviii. 21.
 x Ps. cxix. 109.
 y Ps. xxxii. 4;
 xlii. 22.
 z Prov. xiv. 32.
 a Rom. vii. 26, &c.
 b ch. xxvii. 5, 6;
 xvi. 17, 21;
 xxiii. 7, 10;
 xxxi. 37.
 c Ps. lxxx. 20, 32.
 d Isa. xii. 1, 2.
 e Ps. l. 5; v. 5;
 cxi. 14.
 f Gen. iv. 16.
 g Lev. xxii. 3.
 h Isa. lv. 3, ver. 6. ch. xxxiii. 1. * ch. xxiii. 4. Ps. l. 21. Isa. xlii. 7. * ch. xxiii. 7. Isa. xliii. 26; l. 7.
 i ch. xvi. 21; xxiii. 3, 6. Isa. l. 8. * Ps. xxxix. 3. * ch. ix. 34. Prov. xxx. 7. * Gen. iii. 6. ch. ix. 35.
 j Isa. ii. 10; xxvi. 20. * ch. xxxiii. 7. * Ps. xxxi. 11; xxxii. 4; cxix. 120. * ch. xiv. 15. Ps. xxvi. 1-3.
 k ch. xxxviii. 3; xl. 5; xli. 4. * ch. xxii. 5; xxxi. 9. * Ps. xix. 13; cxxxix. 23, 24. Isa. lviii. 1.
 l Ezek. xxi. 2; xliii. 10. Hab. i. 3. * Deut. xxxii. 20. * Ps. xiii. 2; xxx. 8; xlv. 25; lxxxviii. 15.
 m l. viii. 17. * Deut. xxxii. 42. Ruth. i. 21. ch. xvi. 9; xix. 11; xxxii. 10. Lam. ii. 4.

- 25 * Whether Thou crushest the ^m driven leaf, or pursuest ^m Isa. xvii. 13 ;
 26 the dried stubble. * For Thou writest down ⁿ bitter ⁿ Isa. x. 1 ; things against me, and investest me with the ^o sins of ^o xxx. 8 ; 27 my youth. * Thou also ^p condemnest my feet to the ^p Jer. xxii. 30 ;
 shackles, and observest all my paths : on the soles of ^p xxxvi. 2, 17, 28 ;
 my feet Thou settest a deep mark. ^p Ps. xxxv. 7 ; 28 * So ^q wasteth he away as rottenness, as a garment ^q Jer. xxxi. 19 ; which the ^r moth consumeth, [CHAP. XIV.] — 1 * Even ^r ch. xxxiii. 11 ;
^a man, the child of woman, few of days and full of ^a xxxvi. 8 ;
 2 trouble ! * Like the ^b blossom he cometh forth, and is ^b 2 Chro. xvi. 10, 12 ;
 cut off : he fleeth also like the shadow, and never stand- ^b Ps. cv. 18 ; 3 eth fast. * Upon such moreover Thou ^c openest Thine ^c cvii. 10 ; eyes ;—even me Thou bringest into ^d judgment with ^d cxlix. 8 ;
 4 Thee ! * Who shall of the unclean pronounce one ^e clean ? ^e Isa. i. 9 ; li. 6 ;
 5 No man !—* Surely his days are ^f determined, a small ^f Ps. cii. 27 ;
^g number are his months in ^g respect of thee : his ^g ch. vii. 9 ; iv. 19 ;
 6 Thou hast appointed, and this he shall not pass. * ^h Turn ^h Eccl. ii. 23 ; away thine eyes from him, and let him ⁱ cease from his ⁱ ch. vii. 1, 6 ;
grief, until he satisfy his day as an ^m hireling. ^m xxxv. 4 ; 7 * For there is hope even of a ⁿ tree ; if it be cut ⁿ Gen. xlvii. 9 ;
 down, still shall it renew, and its suckers not fail.— ⁿ Ps. xxxix. 6 ;
 8 * If its root grow old in the earth, and its stump die ^o Ps. xc. 5, 6 ; 9 in the dust ; * still from the refreshing of the ^o waters ^o cii. 12 ;
 shall it flourish, and shall produce like the plant. ^o ciii. 15 ;
 10 * But stout man dieth ; yea man groweth ^p feeble and ^p cxliv. 4 ; 11 giveth up the ghost : and then Where is he ? * Waters ^q Isa. xl. 6 ;
 may have run from the sea, and a river have become dry ^q Jam. i. 10, 11 ; 12 and parched ;—* but man ^q lieth down, and ariseth no ^q iv. 14 ; more. Until the ^r heavens shall fail they ^r awake not, ^r ch. viii. 9 ;
 neither are they stirred up out of their sleep. ^r I Chro. xxix. 15 ; 13 * O that Thou wouldest ^s hide me in the grave, and ^s Eccl. viii. 13 ; conceal me until Thine ^t anger had turned away ; that ^t Isa. lxiii. 15 ;
 Thou wouldest decree for me, and ^w remember me !— ^w lxxi. 2 ; 14 * If a stout ^x man die, shall he revive ?—All the days ^x Deut. xxvi. 15 ;
then of my warfare will ^y I hope, until my renewal ^y lxxx. 15 ; 15 come. * Call Thou, and I will then ^z answer Thee ; ^z Lam. iii. 50 ; extend Thou Thy desire unto the ^a work of Thine own ^z Exod. v. 21 ; 16 hands ! * Though now Thou ^b numberest my footsteps ; ^z 2 Sam. xvi. 12 ;
 2 Chro. xxiv. 22, &c.

Eccl. xii. 3-7. Ps. xxxi. 12. ^q Ps. lxxxviii. 5, 6 ; cxi. 11. Isa. xxvi. 14, &c. ^r Ps. lxxii. 7 ; cii. 27. Isa. li. 6.
^s Judg. v. 12. Isa. xxvi. 19. Jer. li. 57. ^t ch. xl. 13. Ps. xxvii. 5 ; xxxi. 21 ; lxxiv. 3. Isa. xxvi. 20. ^u Isa.
 xii. 1 ; xxvi. 21 ; lvii. 1, 2. ^w Gen. viii. 1. Ps. cvi. 4. ^x Ps. xxxvii. 5, 6 ; xlix. 9, 10, 19. ^y ch. xiii. 15 ;
 xix. 25, 26. Ps. xxvii. 13, 14 ; xl. 1. ^z ch. xiii. 22. Ps. i. 4-6. ^a Ps. cxxxviii. 8. ^b ch. xiii. 19.
^b ch. x. 6, 14 ; xiii. 27 ; xxxi. 4. Ps. lvi. 9 ; cxxxix. 1-4. Prov. v. 21. Jer. xxxii. 19 ; xvii. 10.

c Ps. cxxx. 1-3. d Deut. xxxii. 34.
 e Ps. xxxii. 1.
 f Rom. iv. 7.
 g Ps. lxxxv. 3.
 h Isa. xli. 15, 16.
 i Jer. iv. 10;
 Jer. iv. 24;
 Jer. v. 25.
 k Rev. viii. 8.
 l ch. xviii. 4.
 m Nah. i. 6.
 n Ps. lviii. 8.
 o Prov. xix. 13.
 p Amos. vi. 11.
 q Mich. i. 4.
 r 2 Sam. v. 20.
 s ch. iii. 24;
 xxxv. 20;
 xxx. 14.
 t Isa. xvii. 12.
 u Amos. v. 8.
 v Gen. vi. 17.
 w Prov. xi. 7, 23;
 x. 28.
 x Ps. ix. 19.
 y ch. viii. 13.
 z Ezek. xxxvii. 11.
 a ch. xv. 24.
 b Eccl. vi. 10.
 c Isa. xlvii. 11, 12.
 d Jer. xxvii. 7.
 e Lam. i. 13.
 f Gen. xxxi. 2, 5.
 g 1 Sam. i. 18.
 h Neh. ii. 2, 3.
 i ch. xxix. 24.
 j Ps. xxi. 7.
 k Dan. v. 6.
 l Eccl. vi. 3, 12;
 ix. 5.
 m 1 Sam. iv. 20.
 n Ps. xxxix. 7;
 xlix. 11.
 o Eccl. ii. 18, 19.
 p ch. xix. 19, 20;
 xxxiii. 19.
 q Prov. v. 10;
 xiv. 32.
 r Eccl. viii. 6.
 s Hos. x. 5.

17 yet then wilt Thou not ^c reserve my sin. * My ^d transgression shall be sealed up in a bundle; and Thou wilt cast a covering over mine iniquity.
 18 Or else as the falling ^e mountain, or ^f rock removed 19 from its place, wasteth away; * as ^g waters wear away the stones, and their ^h rushings forth carry away the dust of the earth; so Thou makest the ⁱ hope of 20 man to perish. * Thou ^k puttest forth Thy power against him continually, and he departeth: Thou makest his ^l countenance to change, and dismisses 21 him. * His children come to honour, but he ^m knoweth it not: or are brought low, but he perceiveth it not 22 of them. * Only that his flesh is ⁿ pained upon him, and that his own soul mourneth over him.

CHAPTER XV.

SUMMARY.

Eliphaz rejoins, stating that the arguments of Job are worthless, but nevertheless such as to convict him of impiety, 1-6: demands whence it is that he lays claim to so much knowledge; why God's known mercies and declarations are so little regarded by him; and why he is so bold and ready to contend, 7-13: contrasts the character of God with that of man; and then proceeds to argue from known revealed truths, 14-19: which declare that the vicious man cannot but be miserable, hopeless, and always beset with fear; and this because of rebellion against God; that, whatever might be his state, it must end in destruction. He ends with an exhortation to live and to act differently, 20-35.

a ch. ii. 11;
 iv. 1, &c.
 b ch. vi. 26;
 viii. 2;
 xi. 2, 3;
 xiii. 2;
 xviii. 3.
 Hos. xii. 2.
 Jer. v. 13.
 c Heb. Knowledge of winds.
 d Gen. xli. 6.
 e Gen. xvii. 21.
 f Hos. xii. 2;
 xiii. 15.
 g 2 Kings. xix. 4.
 h Isa. xxxvii. 4.
 i Jer. xxxii. 32.
 j Isa. xxx. 5.
 k Prov. x. 2.
 l Ps. xxxvi. 2, 4;
 cxix. 126.
 m Prov. i. 25, 29.
 n Jer. ii. 19.

1 * THEN answered ^a Eliphaz the Temanite, and said,
 2 * Should a wise man answer ^b vain knowledge,
 3 and fill his belly with the ^c cast wind, * by disputing
 4 with ^d words that will not profit, and with speeches
 5 wherewith he can do no good? * But thou even 6 castest off ^e fear, and takest away complaint from 7 before God. * For thine own ^f mouth proclaimeth 8 thine iniquity, and thou chooseth the tongue of the 9 crafty. * Thine own mouth ^g condemneth thee, and 10 not I: yea, thine own lips ^h testify against thee.
 11 * Wast thou the ⁱ first man born? or, Wast thou a Mal. i. 6. Rom. iii. 18. Ps. cxix. 97, 99. f Ps. i. 19, 20. Prov. xv. 2, 21. Jer. ix. 3, 5.

 b Luke. xix. 22. ch. ix. 20. Ps. lxxv. 9. h Gen. xxx. 33. i 2 Sam. i. 16. Hos. v. 5. Isa. iii. 9. j Prov. viii. 23, 24. Ps. xc. 2. Mich. v. 1.

8 brought forth before the hills? * Hast thou ^b heard the secret counsel of God, and secured ^l wisdom to 9 thyself? * What then ^m knowest thou which we know not? what understandest thou which is not clear with 10 us? * The ⁿ gray-headed also, and the ancient are 11 with us, each more aged than thy father! * Are the ° consolations of God small with thee? and is His 12 ^p word unavailing with thee? * What hath thy ^q heart received for thee? and What have thine ^r eyes laid 13 hold upon, * that thou ^s refreshest thy spirit against God? and bringest forth from thy mouth vain ^t speeches?
 14 * What is ^u man that he should be clean? or ^w the child of a woman that he should be just? * Lo, He 15 ^v putteth no trust in his saints; and the heavens are 16 unclean in his sight. * ^y Much more the abominable and corrupt,—man who ^z drinketh in iniquity as water!
 17 * Let me then shew thee; ^a hear me, and that which 18 I have seen let me now relate; * which ^b wise men have told from their fathers, and have not withhelden: 19 * to whom alone the ^c earth was given, and among whom no stranger passed, saying,— 20 * All the ^d days of the wicked are painful, and a 21 small ^e number of years is laid up for the violent. * A sound of ^f terrors is in his ears; even in ^g peace the des-22 troyer cometh in upon him. * He hath no assurance of a return from ^h darkness; and he is ⁱ way-laid for 23 the sword. * Wheresoever he ^k wandereth for bread, he knoweth that the day of ^l darkness is ready at his 24 hand. * Distress and ^m anguish affright him; they press hardly upon him as a king ready for the 25 assault.—* Because he hath stretched out his hand against God, and strengthened himself against the 26 Almighty; * He shall rush upon ⁿ him, even upon his 27 neck, upon the thick bosses of his bucklers.—* Though he have covered his face with ^o fatness, and made 28 wealth his confidence; * Yet shall he dwell in cities to be ^p destroyed, in ^q houses which shall not be in-29 habited, and which are about to become heaps. * He shall not grow ^r rich, nor shall his power endure,

^a Prov. viii. 22-31.
^b Jer. xxiii. 14, 22.
^c Rom. xi. 34.
^d Deut. xxxix. 29.
^e Prov. iii. 32.
^f Isa. xl. 13, 14.
^g ch. xii. 2;
 xxxiii. 13.
^h ch. xiii. 1, 2.
ⁱ ch. xxvii. 6, 7.
^j Prov. xvi. 31.

^k Isa. lxxvi. 11.

^l Prov. xiii. 13.
^m ch. xii. 3;
 xxxviii. 56.
ⁿ Prov. xv. 32;
 xviii. 15.
^o Isa. xl. 12.

^p Ps. xvii. 2;
 xxvii. 4.

^q ch. ix. 18.
^r Ps. xxxiii. 3.

^s ver. 3.

^t 1 Kings, viii. 46.
^u ch. ix. 2; xiv. 4.

^v Ps. xiv. 3; li. 7.
^w Prov. xx. 9.

^x Eccl. vii. 20.
^y ch. xiv. 1.

^z Isa. vi. 5.
^a ch. iv. 18;
 xxv. 5.

^b ch. iv. 19.
^c Ps. xiv. 3;
 liii. 3.

^d ch. xxxiv. 7.
^e Prov. xix. 20.

^f ch. v. 27.
^g ch. viii. 8-10.

^h Ps. lxxi. 18;
 lxxviii. 3-6.

ⁱ Isa. xxxviii. 19.
^j Ps. xl. 10.

^k Gen. x.
^l Joel, iii. 17.

^m ch. xxx. 16.
ⁿ Ps. lxxviii. 33;
 xc. 9.

^o Ps. lv. 24;
 xc. 12.

^p Eccl. ii. 3;
 vi. 12.

^q Ps. xiv. 5.
^r Prov. x. 24.

^s 1 Thes. v. 3.
^t Deut. xxviii. 29.

^u 1 Sam. ii. 9.
^v Ps. lxxxii. 5.

^w Prov. xx. 20.
^x Eccl. ii. 14;
 vi. 4.

^y Ps. xxxvii. 32.
^z Deut. xxxii. 25.

^a Jer. vi. 25;
 xv. 2, 3, 9.

^b Ezek. vii. 15.
^c Ps. lix. 16;
 cix. 10-21;
 xxxvii. 25.

^d ch. x. 21, 22;
 xviii. 12.

^e Eccl. xi. 4.
^f Joel, ii. 2.

^g Gen. xlii. 21.
^h Zeph. i. 15.

ⁱ Deut. xxviii. 53.
^j Lev. xxvi. 25.

^k Isa. x. 13-16.
^l Dan. v. 23.

^m Ps. xvii. 10;
 lxxiii. 4.

ⁿ Hos. xii. 9.

^p Ps. lxxx. 26. Jer. xxvi. 9; xlvi. 19. ^q Ps. xlix. 12. Isa. xliii. 21. Zeph. i. 13.
 Isa. xiv. 20, 21.

neither shall their wealth be extended over the land.

- 30 * He shall never depart out of ^s darkness : ' the flame of God shall dry up his branches, and by the ^u blast of His mouth shall he pass away.
- 31 * Let not the deceived then ^w trust in falsehood ; for falsehood shall be his ^x recompense. * Before his day be ^y accomplished shall it be complete ; so that his
- 32 ^z branch shall not flourish. * He shall force off his ^a untimely fruit like the vine, and cast off his ^b flower
- 33 as the olive. * For the congregation of the profane shall be ^c desolate, and fire shall ^d consume the tents
- 34 of bribery : * ^e conceiving sin, and bringing forth iniquity,—yea their bowels are ever framing deceit.

CHAPTERS XVI. XVII.

SUMMARY.

Job again answers Eliphaz ; reproaches him and his friends with want of sympathy and knowledge, 1-5 : affirms that similar arguing on his own part would be unprofitable ; that God has really afflicted him, and that hence it is, his enemies have power to oppress and injure him, 6-11 : enlarges on his afflictions, 12-14 : describes his afflictions more particularly ; dwells on his innocence ; affirms that his best witness, mediator, judge, and friend, is above, where his cause shall be tried ; and looks with hope to the period of his departure.—XVII. Renews his complaint ; calls on his friends for fidelity ; complains of their ignorance and perfidy ; restates the greatness of his affliction ; the effect which his case shall have upon good men generally ; the case different with his friends ; entreats them, therefore, to change their minds, 1-10 ; complains of the unprofitableness of his time, and the ignorance of his friends ; looks to the end of his course as the only source of hope, 11-16.

- 1,2 * THEN Job answered, and said, * Many such things as these I have ^a heard : miserable comforters are ye all ! * Is there no end to ^b vain || words ? Otherwise, What ^c stirreth thee up that thou answerest ? * I might also talk as you do, were your persons in the place of mine ; I might string sentences together against you, and ^d shake my head at you : * I might prevail against you with ^e my mouth, and the moving of my lips might restrain you.
- 3 4 5 6 * Should I thus ^f speak, yet would not my pain be ^a Ps. xxxv. 6 ;

Ecc. vi. 4.
Nab. i. 8.
Deut. xxviii. 29.
^b Ezek. xxi. 3.
Ps. lxxxiii. 15 ;
cvi. 18.
Isa. v. 24 ;
xxix. 6.
^c 1 Sam. ii. 33.
^d ch. iv. 9.
Ps. cxlvi. 4.
Isa. xi. 4 ;
xxx. 33.
^e Ps. ciii. 16.
^f Isa. xxx. 2, 12 ;
xxxi. 1 ;
xlii. 17 ;
lix. 4.
Ps. lxii. 11.
^g Prov. xii. 14.
Isa. xxxv. 4.
Joel, iv. 7 (iii. 7).
^h ch. xxii. 16.
Ps. iv. 24.
Ecc. vii. 17.
Amos, viii. 9.
ⁱ ch. xviii. 16.
Isa. ix. 13 ;
xiv. 19 ;
xxv. 3.
^j Rev. vi. 13.
Deut. xxviii. 40.
Isa. xvii. 6.
^k ch. xiv. 2.
^l Ps. ciii. 15, 16.
Isa. xviii. 5 ;
xxviii. 1 ;
xl. 7.
Jam. i. 10, 11.
^m Lev. xxvi. 23, 31, 32.
Isa. xxvii. 10.
Jer. l. 13.
ⁿ Gen. xix. 24.
Lev. x. 2.
Num. xi. 1, 2.
Deut. xxxii. 22.
Ps. xxvii. 3.
Isa. ix. 5, 16 ;
x. 16 ;
xxx. 33 ;
xlvii. 14.
^o Ps. vii. 15.
Isa. lix. 4, 13.
Hos. x. 13.

assuaged ; and should I forbear, How much of it 7 would then depart from me ?—* Surely now hath He brought me to nothing. All my ^bcompany hast Thou 8 brought to desolation ! * So Thou coverest me with wrinkles :—this hath become a witness, and hath arisen against me : and my want supplieth an ⁱanswer 9 to my face. * His wrath hath ^ktorn and dealt cruelly with me : mine enemy gnasheth upon me with his 10 ^lteeth ; he sharpeneth his eyes upon me.—* They ^mgaped upon me with their mouth : with reproach have they ⁿsmitten my cheeks : they are altogether 11 ^ofully set against me. * God hath ^pshut me up unto the sinful ; and into the ^qhands of the wicked hath he cast me down.

12 * I was at ease, but He ^rhath troubled me ; He hath also taken hold of my shoulders, and ^sshaken me to 13 pieces ; yea He hath set me up for His ^tmark. * His ^uarrows compass me round about : He ^wharroweth up my loins, and spareth not : He ^xpoureth out my gall 14 upon the ground : * He ^ybreaketh me with breach upon breach : He rumeth upon me ^zlike a mighty man.

15 * I have sewed ^asackcloth upon my skin, and laid 16 mine ^bhorn in the dust. * My cheeks are flushed with ^cweeping, and upon mine eyelids sits the shadow 17 of death.—* ^dBecause there was no violence in my 18 hands, was my ^eprayer pure. —* O ^fearth ! cover not thou my blood, neither let place remain for my 19 cry. * Behold now also ^gmy witness is in the hea-20 vens, yea mine eye-witness is in the highest. * My ^hmediator there is my friend : unto God therefore 21 doth mine eye weep. * For he shall ⁱplead for a man with God ; even the ^kSon of man for his friend, 22 * when a few years are come, and ^lI shall have departed by a path by which I shall not return.

[CHAP. XVII.]—1 * My ^aspirit is oppressed ; my days are few ; the chambers of the ^bgrave are mine.
 2 * Surely continual ^ctears are with me ; and in their 3 ^dembitterings doth mine eye remain. * ^eLay down now thine hand, and pledge me with thee. Who is xiv. 17. Lam. ii. 11, 18. ^d Ezek. xxvii. 31. Zech. xii. 10. ^e Gen. xxiv. 2 ; xlvii.
 xvii. 18 ; xxii. 26.

^c Jer. x. 24.
^b Prov. xxi. 16.

ⁱ Deut. xix. 16.
 Isa. iii. 9, &c.

^k Hos. vi. 1.
 Lam. i. 12, 13 ;
 ii. 4, 5.

^l ch. x. 16.
 Ps. xxii. 14.

^m Ps. xxxv. 16 ;
 xxxvii. 12,
 cxii. 10.

ⁿ Lam. ii. 16.
 Ps. xxii. 14.

^o Lam. iii. 30.
 Isa. i. 6.

^p Ps. xxxv. 15.
 1 Sam. xvii. 46 ;
 xxiv. 18 ;
 xxxvi. 8.

^q Ps. xxxi. 9.
 Isa. xix. 4.

^r Ps. cii. 10.
 2 Kings, xxi. 14.

^s Neh. ix. 28.
 Lam. iii. 17.

^t Jer. xlviii. 11, 12.

^u Amos vi. 1.
 Lam. iii. 11.

^v Lam. iii. 12.
 Deut. xxxii. 23.

^w ch. vi. 4.
 Ps. xxxviii. 3.

^x Ps. cxxxix. 3.
 Lam. ii. 11, 19.

^y Ps. xxii. 15.
 Isa. liii. 12.

^z ch. xix. 2 ;
 xxxiv. 24.

^a Jer. i. 17 ;
 i. 20-22.

^b ch. xv. 20.
 Gen. xxxvii. 34.

^c 1 Kings, xxx. 31 ;
 xxi. 27.

^d Ps. lxxix. 12, &c.
 Lam. ii. 3.

^e Ps. lxxv. 11.
 Gen. xxxii. 4.

^f Isa. xliii. 30, 31.
 Isa. liii. 9.

^g Prov. xv. 8.
 Ps. lxxvi. 18, 19.

^h Gen. iv. 10.
 Rom. i. 9.

ⁱ Gen. xxxi. 50.
 Jud. xi. 10.

^j Jer. xxix. 25 ;
 xlii. 5.

^k 1 Sam. xii. 5.
 Mic. i. 2.

^l ch. xxxiii. 23.
 Gal. iii. 19, 20.

^m 1 Tim. ii. 5.
 1 John. ii. 1.

ⁿ Isa. lix. 16.
 Dan. vii. 13.

^o Eccl. xii. 5.
 1 Prov. xv. 13 ;
 xvii. 22.

^p 1 Sam. i. 15.
 Ps. lxxxviii. 4, 5.

^q Jer. ix. 1 ;
 29. Prov. vi. 1 ;

- 4 he that will strike my hand? * For their ^fheart hast
 Thou shut up from understanding; therefore Thou 5 ^cexaltest them not. * One pointeth out even ^hfriends for the spoil; and the eyes of his children ⁱfail.
 6 * Me also hath he set up for a ^kbye-word of the people,
 7 and I am become an ^labomination to ||them. * So mine ^meye languisheth from vexation, and all my 8 members are as a ⁿshadow. * ^oUpright men shall be confounded at this, and the innocent be stirred up 9 against the profane. * The righteous shall ^phold fast on his way, and he that hath ^qclean hands shall in-10 crease in strength. * But, O all of you, ^rturn ye I pray and come in; for I find not a ^swise man among you.
 11 My days are ^tpassed; my ^upurposes, — the pre-12 possessions of my heart, — are broken off. * They put 13 ^wnight for day; light as nearer than darkness! * But I look to the ^xgrave as my house; in darkness would 14 I make my bed. * To corruption I have cried, My father! to the worm, My mother, and my sister!
 15 * Where then is now my ^yexpectation? and, as to my 16 hope, Who shall behold it? * To the grave-clothes shall they go down; surely to the dust shall they descend together.

CHAPTER XVIII.

SUMMARY.

Bildad offers his second reply: complains of the length of the dispute, and that they had been treated too unceremoniously by Job, 1-4: proceeds to recount the failures of the wicked, in a strain not unlike that resorted to in his former discourse, ch. viii. His arguments are, therefore, quite general, and by no means applicable to the case of the patriarch, 5-21.

- * ch. ii. 11;
 VIII. 1, &c.
 2 ch. viii. 2; xi. 2,
 Prov. xviii. 13.
 3 ch. xii. 7;
 xvii. 4, 10,
 Ps. lxxviii. 22,
 4 ch. v. 2,
 Ezek. ix. 9,
 Isa. liv. 10,
 ch. xiv. 18.
 1 * THEN answered ^aBildad the Shuhite, and said,
 2 * When will ye set limits to ^bwords? Consider,
 3 and afterwards we will speak. * Wherefore are we 'considered as the beast, — and are polluted in your 4 eyes — * tearing himself to pieces in his ^danger! — Shall ' the earth be forsaken for thee? or the ^erock be removed from its place!

- 5 *The ^alight of the wicked shall indeed go out ;
- 6 neither shall the flame of his fire shine forth. *The ^blight shall be dark in his tent, and his lamp over him
- 7 shall fail. *The ⁱstrides of his might shall be straitened, and his own ^kcounsel shall cast him down.
- 8 *For he shall be cast into a ^lnet by his own feet,
- 9 yea he shall walk upon the snare. *The ^mgin shall take him by the heel, and the noose shall lay fast hold
- 10 upon him. *His ⁿcord shall be concealed in the
- 11 earth, and his trap on the path. *^oTerrors shall affright him round about, and shall confound him at his
- 12 very feet. *So shall his strength be faintness, and
- 13 destruction be made ^pready at his side. *He shall eat up the coatings of his ^qown skin ; the first-born of
- 14 death shall devour his members. *The ^robject of his confidence shall be cast away from his tent, and shall
- 15 dismiss him to the king of terrors. *It resideth in his tent :—no longer to be his,—for burning ^sbrimstone shall be sprinkled on his dwelling. *His ^troots shall wither from beneath ; and from above shall his
- 17 crop be cut off. *His ^umemory shall perish from the earth, yea no name shall remain to him without.
- 18 *|| He shall be driven from light to darkness, and be
- 19 ^wexpelled from the world. *Neither ^xdescendant nor posterity shall remain to him among his people ; yea
- 20 no remnant in his dwellings. *After-generations shall be astounded at his ^yday, as former ones || were horror-
- 21 stricken. *Such only are the habitations of the wicked ; and this is the state of him who ^zacknowledgeth not God.

⁶ Prov. xiii. 9 ;
xx. 20 ;
xxiv. 20.

Isa. i. 11.

^b ch. xxi. 17 ;

Rev. xiii. 23.

¹ Ps. xliii. 37.

Prov. iv. 12.

^k ch. v. 13.

2 Sam. xv. 31 ;

xxii. 14.

Ps. vii. 16.

Hos. x. 6.

^l ch. xxii. 10.

Ps. ix. 16 ; 17 ;

xxxv. 8.

Prov. v. 22 ;

xxix. 6.

^m Isa. viii. 14, 15.

ⁿ Prov. v. 22.

^o ch. xv. 21 ;

xx. 25.

Jer. vi. 25 ;

xx. 3, 4 ;

xlv. 5 ;

xlix. 29.

^p ch. xv. 23.

^q Isa. ix. 20.

Ps. xlix. 15.

^r ch. viii. 14 ;

xi. 20.

Ps. cxii. 10.

Prov. x. 26.

^s Ps. xi. 7.

^t ch. xxix. 19.

Isa. v. 24.

Amos. iii. 9.

Mal. iv. 1.

^u Ps. xxxiv. 17 ;

cxv. 13.

Prov. ii. 22 ; x. 7.

|| Heb. They shall drive him.

^w Ps. cix. 10

ch. vi. 17, &c. ;

xii. 24 ;

xv. 23.

^x Isa. xiv. 22.

Jer. xxii. 30.

^y Ps. xxxvii. 13.

|| Heb. laid hold on horror.

^z Jer. ix. 3 ; x. 25.

1 Thess. iv. 5.

2 Thess. i. 8.

Titus, i. 16.

CHAPTER XIX.

SUMMARY.

Job, in his reply to Bildad, complains of contemptuous treatment, and perseveres in declaring that his affliction is from God, 1-6: complains also that his cause is disregarded; that he is beset on every side, attacked, and injured, 7-11: that hosts encompass him, that his friends are put far away from him; that his kinsfolk and friends have deserted him; that his servants, inmates, wife, had all taken part against him; that even the abjects spoke openly against him, and his familiar friends had turned from him, 12-19: laments his emaciated state of body, and solicits pity; deploras the insensibility of his friends; and wishes that his sufferings were recorded, 20-24: declares his faith in the Redeemer, who should appear in after-times on the earth; his assurance that he should in his flesh see God and be justified; and warns his friends of the judgment to come.

- 1, 2 THEN answered Job, and said, * How long will ye vex my soul, and ^abreak me in pieces with 3 words? * These ^bten times have ye reproached me;
 ye are not ashamed to treat me contemptuously.
 4 * And have I indeed erred? With me then will mine
 5 error remain. * If indeed ye will ^cmagnify yourselves against me, and plead my abasement against me; 6 * know then that God hath bowed me down, and hath spread his net about me.
 7 * Behold I ery out of violence, but am ^dnot an-8 swered: I cry aloud, but there is no judgment. * My ^eway hath He walled up, and I cannot pass; and 9 upon my paths hath He put darkness. * My ^fglory hath He stripped from off me, and the crown of my 10 head hath He taken away. * He ruineth me on every side, and I depart; yea He putteth away my hope as 11 a tree. * He hath also kindled his wrath against me, and ^gconsidered me—as His enemies—against Him.
 12 * His troops come in together, and ^hcast up their way against me; yea they encamp round about my 13 tent. * My ⁱbrethren hath He put far away from me;
 and those who knew me are wholly estranged from 14 me. * My kinsfolk have failed; and my familiar 15 friends have disregarded me. * The sojourners of my house, and my handmaids, account me as a stranger; 16 I am become a foreigner in their eyes. * I called my servant, but he answered not: with my own mouth 17 have I entreated him. * My breath was strange to ^a ch. viii. 2;

 xviii. 2.
 Judg. xvi. 16.
^b Gen. xxxi. 7.
 Lev. xxvi. 26.

^c Ps. xxxviii. 17.

^d Ps. xxii. 2, 3.

^e ch. iii. 23.
 Ps. lxxxviii. 9.
^f Ps. lxxxix. 45.

^g ch. xiii. 24.
 Lam. ii. 5.
^h ch. xxx. 12.

ⁱ Ps. xxxi. 12;
 xxxviii. 12;
 lxi. 9;
 lxxxviii. 9, 19.

- my wife, and my entreaties to the children of my own 18 bowels. * The vile moreover have now despised me:
 19 when I have arisen they have spoken against me. * All mine ^k intimate friends have abhorred me, and those ^k Ps. xh. 10 ;
lv. 13, 14, 21.
whom I loved are turned against me.
- 20 * My ^l bone cleaveth to my skin and to my flesh, so ^l ch. xxx. 30.
Ps. cii. 6.
Lam. iv. 9.
 21 that I escape with the skin of my teeth. * Be gracious, be gracious unto me, O ye my friends ; ^m for the ^m ch. i. 11.
Ps. xxxviii. 3.
 22 hand of God hath touched me. * Why do ye ⁿ pursue me as a mighty man, and are not satisfied with my 23 flesh ? * O that my words were now written ! O that 24 they were even graven in a book ! * were cut with an iron tool and with lead in the rock for ever !
- 25 * But, I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that 26 he shall stand hereafter upon the earth : * and that after this my skin shall have been pierced through, 27 still in my ^o flesh shall I see God :—* that I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold Him, and not a stranger, when my reins shall have been consumed 28 within me. * When ye shall say, How did we persecute him !—and the root of the matter shall have 29 been found in me. * Be ye afraid of the sword : for the fury due to transgressions is the sword. Know ye therefore that there is ^v a judgment. ^v Ps. xvii. 15.
1 Cor. xiii. 12.
1 John, iii. 2.

^f Ps. lxxiii. 11, 12.

CHAPTER XX.

SUMMARY.

Zophar's apology for his reply, 1-3 : dwells, as before, ch. xi., on the vanity of wickedness, and the excellency of true religion—particularly here on the former, insisting that ill-gotten wealth shall be rendered back, and ill-won honours soon descend to corruption, 4-11 : dwells on the bitter effects of sin, its natural progress to poverty and misery ; on the principle of God's overruling providence, 12-18 : insists that oppression in principle, shall be followed by its own fruits, distress in experience ; and so quick shall this be, that it shall take effect in the very height of one's enjoyments ; shall fall from heaven above, and be generated in the earth beneath, in all the dreadful visitations derivable from these sources ; and which shall follow him into another world, while his posterity falls in this, 19-28 : concludes by declaring, that such is the universal portion of the wicked, and that God is the author of it, 29.

- 1 * THEN answered ^a Zophar the Naamathite, and ^a ch. ii. 11 ;
xi. 1 ;
xii. 9.
 2 ^a said, * Therefore my thoughts cause me to an-

- 3 swer, and on this account I am in haste,—*because I hear chastisement which is my reproach:—and the spirit of my discretion urgeth me to reply.
- 4 *Hast thou known this from of old, since the
- 5 ^bplacing of man upon the earth, *that the ^cexulting of the wicked is of short duration, and the joy of the
- 6 ungodly but for a moment? *Though he raise his
- 7 ^ddignity to the heavens, and make his head to touch the cloud; *yet, like his own ^edung, shall he utterly perish: they who have seen him shall say, Where is he? *As a ^fdream shall he fly away, and none shall find him; yea he shall be made to wander as a vision
- 8 of the night. The* ^geye also which saw him shall see him no more; neither shall his place any more behold
- 9 him. *His children shall give satisfaction to the poor; yea his own hands shall ^hgive back his wealth. *His
- 10 ⁱbones shall be filled with the vanities of his youth; and with him shall they ^klie down in the dust.
- 11 *Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth, and he
- 12 retain it beneath his tongue; though* he spare it, and forsake it not, but keep it within his palate; yet* shall his bread be turned in his ^lbowels; the gall of
- 13 adders shall be within him. *He hath swallowed down wealth; yet shall He make him ^mvomit it forth: God shall dispossess his stomach of it. *He shall suck the ⁿpoison of adders; the tongue of the viper
- 14 shall slay him. *He shall never look upon the ^orivulets—the streams of the valleys—of honey and butter.
- 15 *He shall give back the profit of his labour, and shall not ^pconsume it: as his wealth is, so shall his restitution be; and he shall not rejoice.
- 16 *Because he hath crushed and forsaken the poor; hath taken a house by violence, and not built it:—
- 17 *because he hath known no ^qpeace within, and hath not escaped with his desire;—*no survivor shall remain for his provision: thus shall none exult in his prosperity.
- 18 *In the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be distressed; the whole force of the wretched shall come in upon
- 19 him. *So shall it come to pass that, ^rwhile his belly is filling, God shall send the burning of His wrath upon him, yea He shall rain it upon him while he is
- 20
- 21
- 22
- 23
- ^b Gen. ii. 8.
^c Ps. xxxvii. 35, 36.
- ^d Isa. xiv. 13, 14.
^e Job. 3. 4.
^f Ps. lxxxix. 9.
^g Ps. lxxxviii. 11.
- ^h Ps. lxxxiii. 20;
xc. 5.
- ⁱ ch. vii. 3, 10;
viii. 18.
^j Ps. xxxvii. 36;
ciii. 15.
- ^k ver. 18.
- ^l ch. xiii. 26.
^m Ps. xxv. 7.
ⁿ ch. xxi. 26.
- ^o Rev. x. 9.
- ^p Hab. ii. 16.
- ^q Jer. viii. 14;
ix. 14.
^r Acts. viii. 23.
^s Ps. xxxvi. 9, 10.
Jer. xvii. 6.
- ^t vv. 10, 15.
- ^u Eccl. v. 13, 14.
^v Isa. lix. 8.
^w Rom. io. 17.
- ^x Numb. xi. 33.
^y Ps. lxxxviii. 29, 31.

- 24 feasting;—* while he fleeth from the iron weapon, the 25 brazen bow shall pierce him through: * the sword shall be drawn, and shall go forth from his body, and the 'glittering spear from his gall: horrors " shall come 26 upon him. * The aggregate of darkness is reserved for his treasures; an unblown * fire shall devour him: " Ps. xxi. 10.
 27 in his tent shall his survivor be broken. * The heavens shall reveal his iniquity, and the earth shall be 28 [^] raised up against him. * So shall the increase of his house go into captivity; his treasures shall be dispersed in the day of God's anger.
 29 * This is the [^] portion of the wicked man from God; * ch. xxxiii. 13;
 yea the heritage of his rule from the mighty One. xxvi. 2, 3.

CHAPTER XXI.

SUMMARY.

Job requests attention to his reply as a right; and which, if granted, could not but administer to his friends' satisfaction: asserts that, if he had considered man as his judge, the treatment he had met with would be reasonable enough, 1-5: allows that the prosperity of the wicked, their growing strength, wealth, health, and family, had greatly perplexed him. Concludes, nevertheless, that he chose not their counsels, 6-16. He next proceeds to shew that, still they were subject to calamities, afflictions, and other dreadful visitations from God; and that this they themselves saw and felt: and concludes that their experience is, after all, truly miserable, 17-21. In the next place, he shews that a common fate seems, in these respects, to attend upon all; which is the pure result of Divine Providence, the ways of which are inscrutable to man, 22-26. In the last place, he shews that his opponents had applied this sort of inconclusive reasoning, as sufficient to determine his real character; deprecates the vanities of the rich ungodly man; and concludes that perverseness and error alone had directed the replies of his opponents, 27-34.

- 1, 2 * THEN answered Job, and said, * Hear ye diligently my speech, and let this be your 3 great consolation. * Bear with me, and I will speak;
 4 and, after my speaking, thou [^] mayest mock on.—* As for me, Is my complaint of man? And, if it were * ch. xvi. 10; 5 so, Why then should I not be impatient? * Look on xxvi. 2.
 me therefore and be astonished, and ^h lay your hand upon your mouth.
 6 * When indeed I have ^c remembered, — I have been ^d perplexed, and trembling hath laid hold on my flesh, b. Judg. xxi. 19.
 ch. xxxix. 9; xl. 4.
 Ps. xxxix. 10.
 c. Ps. lxxvii. 16.
 Ps. xxxvii. 1.

- 7 —* How the wicked are ^evigorous, grow old, and even 8 become mighty in wealth : * their ^fseed is established in their presence, yea with them, and their numerous 9 offspring before their eyes : * their ^ghouses are safe 10 from fear, neither is the rod of God upon them : * his ox gendereth and faileth not ; his heifer calveth safely, 11 and ^hcasteth not her young.—* How they send forth their sucklings like the ⁱflock, and their children leap 12 for joy : * they take up the tabret and lute ; and re-13 joice to the sound of the lyre : * they wear out their ^kdays in prosperity ; and in a ^lmoment they descend 14 to the grave ! * But to ^mGod they say, Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways.
 15 * ⁿWhat is the Almighty, that we should serve Him ?
 and What shall ^owe profit, if we appear before Him ?—
 16 * Behold, their prosperity is not in their own power.—
 As to the ^pcounsel of the wicked, therefore, be it far from me !
 17 * How oft, nevertheless, is the ^qlight of the wicked put out : doth their destruction come upon them, 18 and God ^rapportion their pains in His wrath ? * Do they become as ^sstubble before the wind, and as chaff 19 which the whirlwind snatcheth away ? * How oft doth God lay up || his iniquity ^tfor his children ; repay 20 him, and he ^uknow it ? * Do his own eyes view his destruction, and he ^wdrink of the wrath of the Al-21 mighty ? * What then can his desire be as to his house after him, when the number of ^xhis months shall have been decided ?
 22 * ^yShall one then teach God knowledge, when He 23 judgeth the lofty ? * For this man ^zdieth in his en-24 tire strength, being wholly at ease and quiet, * his bottles full of new milk, and his bones watered with 25 marrow ! * And that dieth in bitterness of soul, and 26 never ^aate in prosperity ! * Together do they ^blie down upon the dust, and the worm covereth them !
 27 * Behold, I know your devices, and the surmisings 28 which ye force upon me, * when ye say, ^cWhere is now the house of the prince ? yea Where the tent, the 29 habitations, of the wicked ? * Have ye not asked them who ^dpass by the way ? And are ye ignorant of
- ^e ch. xii. 6.
 Ps. xvii. 10 ;
 xlix. 7 ;
 lxxiii. 4, 12, 13.
 Jer. xii. 1.
 Hab. i. 16.
^f Ps. xvii. 14.
^g Ps. lxxiii. 4, 5 ;
 xlix. 12.
^h Exod. xxiii. 26.
ⁱ Ps. cvii. 41.
^k ch. xxxvi. 11.
^l Ps. lxxiii. 19.
^m ch. xxii. 17.
ⁿ Exod. v. 2.
 ch. xxxiv. 9.
^o ch. xxxv. 3.
 Mal. iii. 14.
^p ch. xxii. 18.
 Ps. i. 1.
^q ch. xviii. 6.
^r Luke, xii. 46.
^s Ps. i. 4 ; xxxv. 5.
 Isa. xvii. 13 ;
 xxix. 5.
 Hos. xiii. 3.
^t i. e. the reward of his iniquity.
^u Ps. xvii. 14 ;
 xciv. 23.
 Exod. xx. 5.
^w Ps. xxxvii. 12.
^x Ps. lxxv. 9.
 Isa. li. 17.
 Jer. xxv. 16.
 Rev. xiv. 10 ;
 xix. 15.
^y ch. viii. 14, 15 ;
 xx. 20 ;
 xxvii. 18.
^z Isa. xl. 13 ; xlv. 9.
 Rom. xi. 24.
^a 1 Cor. ii. 16.
^b Ps. xlv. 11.
^c Eccl. v. 16.
^d Ps. xlix. 15, 20.
 ch. xx. 11.
 Eccl. ix. 2.
 Isa. xiv. 11.
^e ch. xx. 7.
^f Jer. xxii. 8.
 Lam. i. 12.
 Prov. ix. 14.

- 30 their intimations? *That the wicked is reserved for the ^eday of destruction?—are led on for the day of ^f Prov. xvi. 4.
 31 great wrath? * Yet who hath denounced his way to ^g Pct. ii. 9.
 his face? And for what he did, ^f who hath rendered ^h Rev. xiii. 4.
 32 retribution? * Nevertheless for the chambers of the grave was he led on, and for the tomb was he watch-33 ful. * To him seemed the stones of the valley sweet :
^e after him also draweth he all men, as of those ^g Ps. xlix. 14.
 before him there was no number.
 34 * Why then offer ye vain consolations to me, when perverseness remaineth in your own answers?

CHAPTER XXII.

SUMMARY.

Eliphaz here commences a third series of arguments; and, as before, is profuse in excellent remarks, not one of which is applicable to the case of Job. He first dilates on man's unprofitableness to God; then on the small importance of Job's case; then on what he deems his positive sins; and then concludes, that, on this latter account, he was both mentally blinded, and deservedly visited with affliction, 1-11. He next accuses him with supposing that, as God is very highly exalted above the heavens, He could not, of necessity, judge a cause so far removed from Him, 12-14. He next adopts some of Job's expressions, in the preceding chapter, and retorts their import upon him, 15-18. He next dwells on the views which the good must take of these occurrences, among whom he evidently includes himself; alludes apparently to the fall of Sodom, &c. by way of illustration; and exhorts Job accordingly, 19-22: concludes by affirming, that if Job will so return to God's service, he shall be restored to wealth, religious assurance, and real happiness; that his prayers shall be heard, his influence extended, and that by this means he shall be relieved and supported, 23-30.

- 1 * THEN answered Eliphaz the Temanite, and said,
 2 * Is a man ^a profitable to God, because the prudent 3 is profitable to himself? * Is it a pleasure to the Almighty that thou be just, or indeed an advantage 4 that thou make thy ways perfect? * Shall He contend with thee of thy piety? or enter with thee into 5 judgment? * Is not thy wickedness great?—Yea,
 6 there is no end to thine iniquities? * For thou ^b pledgedst

^a ch. xxxv. 7.
 Ps. xvi. 2.
 Luke, xvii. 10.
 Ps. l. 8, &c.
 Mic. vi. 6, 7.

^b Exod. xxii.
 26, 27.
 Deut. xxiv. 10.

thy brethren for naught, and strippest off the clothing 7 of the destitute. * Thou givest no water to the weary to drink, and from the hungry thou withholdest 8 bread. — * So the powerful man maketh the earth his own, and the honoured of men dwelleth in it. — 9 * Widows hast thou sent empty away, and by thee
 10 have the arms of orphans been broken. * Snares are therefore round about thee, and sudden fear per-11 plexeth thee. * Or else darkness, and thou seest not;
 and an inundation of waters covereth thee.
 12 * Is not God in the height of the heavens? View 13 then the summit of the stars, for they are high! * So thou hast said, How should God know? Can He 14 judge through the thick darkness? * Thick clouds are His covering, and He seeth not; and He walketh 15 on the circumference of the heavens. * Dost thou retain the ancient path, which the men of iniquity 16 have trodden? * Who withered away untimely: — the stream was poured out upon their foundation! — 17 * Who said to God, Depart from us; and demanded 18 what the Almighty could do for them; * when He had filled their houses with prosperity! — Be therefore the counsel of the wicked far from me!
 19 * The righteous shall see, and rejoice, and the 20 pure shall laugh them to scorn, saying: * Surely our adversary is restrained, and the fire hath consumed 21 their abundance! — * Dwell thou then with Him, and 22 be at peace: in these things shall thine income be prosperous. * Receive now instruction at His mouth, and lay up his words in thine heart.
 23 * If thou return to the Almighty, thou shalt be built up; thou shalt put iniquity far away from thy 24 tents: * and on the earth thou shalt lay up wealth;
 25 and in the rock gold of the valleys of Ophir. * So shall the Almighty be thy strength, yea as treasures of 26 silver to thee. * For then thou shalt delight thyself in the Almighty, and shalt lift up thy face unto God.
 27 * Thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him, and He shall hear thee; and thou shalt pay thy vows. * Thou 28 shalt decide a matter, and it shall be established to thee; so shall the light shine upon thy ways. * When c ch. xxxi. 17.

 Deut. xv. 7.
 d II. b. conténances.

d ch. xxxi. 21.
 Isa. x. 2.
 Ezek. xxvii. 7.
 e ch. xviii. 8-10;
 xix. 6.

f Ps. lxxix. 2, 3;
 cxxiv. 5.
 Lam. iii. 54.

g Ps. x. 11;
 lxxiii. 12;
 xciv. 7.
 Ezek. viii. 12;
 ix. 9.

h Ps. xcvi. 2;
 cxxxix. 12, 13.
 Jer. xxiii. 24.

i Gen. vi. 5, 11, 13.
 2 Pet. ii. 5, 6.
 k ch. xv. 32.

l ch. xxi. 14.

m Mal. iii. 14.

n ch. xii. 6.
 Ps. xvii. 15.
 Jer. xii. 2.
 o ch. xxi. 16.

p Ps. xlviii. 12;
 lii. 8;
 lviii. 11;
 cvii. 42.
 Prov. xi. 10.
 Rev. xviii. 20;
 xix. 1-3.

q Isa. xxvii. 5.

r Ps. cxix. 11.

s ch. viii. 5, 6;
 xl. 13, 14.

t 2 Chro. i. 15.
 Prov. xv. 6.

u ch. xxvii. 10.
 Isa. lviii. 14.

v ch. xi. 15.

w Ps. l. 15.
 Isa. lvi. 9.
 Prov. xv. 29.

x Eccl. v. 3, 4.

y Prov. iv. 16.

others cast down, then shalt thou command exaltation:
 30 and the ^a meek shall be saved. * Whoso is pure, him shall God deliver; yea thou shalt be delivered by the cleanness of thy hands.

* Prov. xxix. 23.
 Isa. lvi. 15;
 lxxi. 2.
 Ezek. xxi. 26.

CHAPTERS XXIII. XXIV.

SUMMARY.

Job complains of the weight of his affliction, and desires to bring his case before God, 1-5: declares that under His mercy he shall be safe; and laments that he cannot find Him, 6-9: insists that he shall eventually be delivered, because he has treasured up God's commands, and has not swerved from them in his conduct, 10-13: argues that God is independent, and will fulfil all His will; declares that hence he is confounded, knowing, as he does, that all his afflictions come from Him primarily, and from no other power, 13-17.—XXIII. Renews this argument, and affirms that believers are necessarily ignorant of many of God's purposes. He then proceeds to recount some of the vicious practices in which men are allowed to indulge, 1-12: he states and exemplifies their wicked principles, as centering in a hatred of the light, and as exerting themselves in the works of darkness, 13-17: the active and rapacious character of such, and their certain fate, 18-20: recounts their injurious but insinuating properties, their success, their consequent jealousies and anxieties, their short triumph, and final destruction; and concludes by challenging a refutation of his sentiments, 21-25.

1,2 * THEN Job answered, and said, * Even to-day is my ^a complaint bitter, my hand is heavy 3 because of my sighing. * O that I had knowledge, and could find Him! that I could enter in even to His 4 appointed place! * That I could ^b lay the case in order before Him, and ^c fill my mouth with arguments!
 5 * That I could know the words He would answer me, and consider what He would say unto me!— 6 * Would He ^d contend with me in the greatness of His power! No: He would only place His love on me!—
 7 * There should the upright be tried before Him: and 8 I should be ^e delivered for ever from him who judged me. * Behold, I go forward, but He is not ^f discernible; 9 and backward, but I perceive Him not. * On the left hand in ^g His operations I perceive Him, but I comprehend Him not: on the right hand He is veiled, and I see Him not.

^a ch. vi. 2; x. 1.
 Lam. iii. 19.
 Ps. lxxvii. 3.

^b ch. xiii. 3, 18;
 xvi. 21;
 xxxi. 35, 37.
 Ps. xliii. 1.
 Isa. xliii. 26.
 Gen. xviii. 25, &c.

^d ch. ix. 19.
 Isa. xxvii. 4, 5, 8;
 lvii. 16, 18;
 l. 18.
 Jer. xli. 1.

^e Ps. lxxix. 15.
 2 Sam. xxii.
 18, 49, &c.

^f Ps. x. 1;
 xiii. 1-3;
 lxxxix. 46.
 Isa. xlv. 15.
 Ps. cxxxix. 5, 6.

- 10 * But He ^b knoweth my way : He shall ⁱ prove me, 11 and I shall come forth like gold. * On his ^k footstep hath my foot taken hold : I have kept His ^l way, and 12 have not declined ; * neither have I ^m put away the precept of His lips from ⁿ being my law : I have treas-13 * But He is intent on one thing ; and Who shall ° turn Him back ? His soul hath ^p desired, and He 14 will do it. * For He shall ^q fulfil my law ; and 15 ^r like these, many things rest with Him. * Wherefore
^s I am confounded at His presence ; I consider, and 16 am afraid of Him. * For God ^t hath unnerved my 17 heart, yea the Almighty hath confounded me. * For I have not been put to silence at the presence of ^u darkness, nor by the || power of the thick darkness.
 1 [CHAP. XXIV.] WHAT ? Are not times ^a treasured up by the Almighty ? They who know Him there-2 fore perceive not His days.—* They come up to the ^b boundaries, they take the flock by ^c force, and they 3 pasture it. * The ass of the orphans they drive away ;
 4 they cast a cord on the ox of the widow. * They put ^d down the needy from the way : together are the meek
 5 of the earth hidden. * Behold, as ^e wild asses they go forth into the wilderness after their reward, rising ^f early for the prey : to such is the desert bread for his 6 children. * In the ^g field of others do they cut each
^h one his fodder ; yea the vineyard doth the wicked
 7 strip. * ^h Naked therefore do men remain from want of clothing, and are without ⁱ covering in the frost !
 8 * With the showers of the mountains are they wet ; and for want of a place of refuge they embrace the ^k rock !—
 9 * With violence they take away the ^l orphan from 10 the breast, and take pledges of the poor. * In nakedness they drive them destitute of clothing ; and the 11 famishing carry the ^m sheaf. * Within their walls they make the fine oil : they tread the vats, and suffer 12 thirst. * Men ⁿ roar from the city ; yea the soul of the ^o wounded crieth out : and ^p God marketh it not as wrong !
 13 ch. xviii. 19.
 2 Kings, xx. 3.
 Ps. i. 6 ;
 c xxxix. 1-3.
 2 Tim. ii. 19.
 d Deut. viii. 2.
 Ps. xvii. 9 ;
 lxxi. 10.
 Prov. xvii. 3.
 Zech. xiii. 9.
 ch. xlii. 8.
 k Ps. xviii. 22.
 l Ps. cxix. 1, 2, 11.
 ch. xvii. 9.
 m Ps. xviii. 23.
 n Ps. cxix. 5, 8, 11, 16.
 o ch. ix. 12, 13 ;
 xi. 10 ;
 xii. 14.
 p Ps. cxv. 3 ;
 cxxxv. 6.
 Isa. xiv. 24, 27.
 q Ps. cxix. 17.
 r Isa. xl. 27, 28.
 ch. xii. 3, 16.
 Rom. xi. 33.
 s ch. x. 15 ;
 xxxi. 23.
 Ps. lxxviii. 4 ;
 cxix. 120.
 Hab. iii. 2.
 t Ps. xxvii. 15.
 ch. xxvii. 2.
 u Ps. cxxxix. 11.
 Luke, xxii. 53.
 Col. i. 13.
 1 Thes. v. 5.
 Rev. xvi. 10.
 v Heb. thorne.
 w Ps. xciv. 20.
 xxxi. 16.
 Eccl. iii. 17 ;
 viii. 6, 7.
 Isa. lx. 22.
 Luke, xxi. 22, 24.
 Acts, i. 7 ;
 xvii. 26, &c.
 x Deut. xix. 14 ;
 xxvii. 17.
 Prov. xxv. 28 ;
 xxxiii. 10.
 Hos. v. 10.
 y ch. i. 15, 17.
 z 1 Sam. xii. 3.
 aa ch. xxxi. 16.
 Prov. xxii. 16 ;
 xxx. 14.
 Isa. x. 2.
 Prov. xxviii. 12,
 26.
 ab Jer. ii. 24.
 Hos. viii. 9.
 ac Prov. iv. 16.
 ad Mic. ii. 1.
 ae Judg. vi. 3.
 ad Mic. vi. 15.
 af ver. 10.
 ag Gen. xxxi. 40.
 ah Judg. vi. 2.
 ai Heb. xi. 38.
 aj 2 Kings, iv. 1.
 ak Neh. v. 5.
 al Deut. xxv. 4.
 am Jer. xxii. 13.
 an Mal. iii. 5.
 ao Jam. v. 4.
 ap Ps. xli. 6.
 aq Ps. lxxix. 27 ;
 cix. 23.
 ar Ps. i. 21.
 as Eccl. viii. 11, 12.
 at Mal. ii. 17 ;
 iii. 14, 15. Rom. ii. 4, 5. 2 Pet. iii. 15.

- 13 * They are among those who rebel against the P light; they neither acknowledge its Q ways, nor P John, iii. 19, 20; 14 abide in its paths. * With the light the R murderer Ix. 41;
 ariseth; he slayeth the poor and needy: and in the Xv. 22, 24.
 15 night he is therefore as a thief. * The eye also of the Rom. i. 32.
 the adulterer observeth the twilight, saying, No eye shall Q Prov. iv. 19.
 16 see me: so layeth he a covering over men's faces. * In John, xii. 35, &c.
 the dark he diggeth into houses, which by day they P Ps. x. 11-10.
 had sealed for themselves; they know not the light. Mic. ii. 1.
 17 * For to them is the dawn altogether as the shadow of S Prov. vii. 9, 10.
 death; as when one beholdeth the terrors of the shadow of death!
 18 * Swift is he upon the face of the waters; then is W Isa. xviii. 2.
 the X portion of them who are in the land worthless: S Prov. xxix. 2.
 19 no one turneth his face towards his vineyards. * In the drought, even in the heat, they bear violently away like the snow-waters: unsparing as the Y grave do S Isa. xxxi. 6.
 20 they sin. * So shall mercy disregard him: his Z so- Ps. lxxiv. 7.
 lace shall be the worm: no more shall he be remem- Job, xii. 22.
 bered: as a A tree shall iniquity be shivered to pieces. 2 Cor. viii. 12.
 21 * He B injureth moreover the barren who beareth C ch. xxi. 26, 33.
 22 not; and doeth no good to the E widow. * He also Ps. xxix. 5.
 D draweth forth the mighty by his power: one ariseth, b 1 Sam. i. 6.
 23 and hath no confidence in life. * It is given to him C ch. xxix. 13;
 to be in assurance, and he is E upholden; and his eyes XXXI. 16.
 24 are upon men's ways. * A little while are they lifted E Est. iii. 4, 10.
 up, and then are F no more: as all others are they Dan. vi. 4, 9.
 driven along, and then G shut up; even as a head of John, xix. 12.
 25 corn are they H cropped off. * But if not, let some one Rev. xvi. 14.
 now convict me of I falsehood, and set down my speech C Ps. lxxiii. 6, 9, for naught. 10, 16.
 F Ib. ver. 19.
 G Ps. xlix. 20.
 H Isa. xvii. 5.
 I Rev. xiv. 14-20.
 J ch. xi. 3.

CHAPTER XXV.

SUMMARY.

Bildad now offers his third and last reply (see chh. viii. xviii.), asserting the all-comprehensive power, majesty, wisdom, and goodness of God. He then compares with this, briefly but pointedly, the weakness, meanness, ignorance, and impurity of man; and asks, Can such a being be just with God? He then calls the attention of Job to the more splendid portions of the universe; all of which he pronounces dull and unclean, with reference to their Maker: and concludes by observing, that much more is man, who, with respect to these, sinks necessarily into the character of a worm!

- 1 * THEN answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said,
 2 * Dominion and fear are with ^aHim; He main-
 3 taineth peace in His high places. * Is there any num-4 ber to His ^bforces? and upon whom doth not His ^clight arise? * ^dHow then shall man be just with ^eGod? and how can the child of a woman be ^fpure?
 5 * Observe, even to the moon, and it putteth forth no ^gbrightness; and the stars are not clean in His sight.
 6 * Much more mortal man, a ^hworm! and the son of man, the dye-worm!

CHAPTERS XXVI. — XXXI.

SUMMARY.

Job objects to Bildad's want of charity, and of wisdom: compares the efficacy of his reasoning with the heathenish notion that dead heroes are still possessed of power; and to this opposes the wisdom and power of God, as evinced in the world about him, 1-14. — XXVII. Job calls God to witness,—affirming that he is in sound and sane mind,—that nothing but truth shall have utterance with him; and that, at all events, he will never give up his faith, 1-7. He then refutes the position that his affliction must have arisen from his own wickedness; because the fact is, wicked men do grow rich; and although they may then pass themselves for just and good men, on this faulty hypothesis; still God's judgments shall, first or last, fall on them and their children, 8-22. — XXVIII. Job now allows that men do possess much learning, and put forth much industry. He dwells on their range both of science and of art; and on the effects and benefits thence derived, 1-11. He then proceeds to shew, that still true wisdom — such as is calculated duly to deal with this question — is as far beyond the reach of man, as it is more valuable than earthly wealth, 12-19. He repeats his assertions, adding, that there is a report indeed of this, among the rulers of the darkness of this world,—heathenism itself containing some traditions respecting it;—but that it is known only from God's revelation. The reason is this: His knowledge is infinite: it is the source of all the wisdom visible in His creation: and He has declared that, as far as man can realise it, the fear of God is the ground on which he must proceed. — XXIX. Job laments his fall from prosperity, during which he had so much power, and did so much good; when he was, consequently, so highly venerated, and had so much reason to expect that his days would end in the happiness usually granted to such a life, 1-25. — XXX. But now, he continues, every thing is reversed: now the very dregs of society

ch. ix. 10.
 1 Chron. xxix.
 11, 12.
 Ps. xcix. 1;
 cxlviii. 6.
 Jer. x. 6, 7.
 Dan. iv. 34, 37.
 Matt. vi. 13, &c.
 Isa. lvii. 15, 19,
 &c.
 Ps. ciii. 21, 22;
 cxlviii. 2, 4.
 Isa. xl. 26, &c.
 ch. xxxviii. 12.
 Gen. i. 3-5.
 Ps. xix. 5-7.
 Matt. v. 45.
 ch. iv. 17-19, &c.
 Ps. cxxx. 3;
 cxlii. 2.
 om. iii. 19, 20,
 &c.
 ch. iv. 17, &c.;
 xv. 14, &c.
 Ps. li. 7.
 Zech. xiii. 1.
 Eph. ii. 3, &c.
 Isa. lx. 19, 20,
 2 Cor. iii. 10.
 Ps. xxii. 7.
 ch. iv. 19.
 Gen. xviii. 27.
 Isa. xli. 14.

laughed him to scorn: men who had formerly been banished for their wickedness to the inhospitable deserts, 1-8. He recounts instances of their insolence, and of his own feelings, 9-22: states his disappointment, that his usual care and prayers for others had not prevented his affliction; and that thus unaccountably—on vulgar views—his happiness had ceased, 23-31.—XXXI. Gives up all hope of a future family. Joins Bildad in declaring, that God's judgments are eventually the portion of the wicked; and consequently would be his own, if he had followed their ways. Maintains, nevertheless, that God knew his course to have been different, and yet had laid these afflictions on him. Desires that God would undertake for him, and that all his cause should be carefully gone into, 1-40.

- 1, 2 * THEN Job answered, and said, * In What hast thou holpen the weak? How saved the powerless arm? * In What hast thou counselled the ignorant? and made ^asound wisdom known even to abundance? * To whom hast thou declared ^bsentences? and Whose ^cbreath hath gone forth of thee?—
- 3 ^a Ps. lxxi. 15.
- 4 * Can the ^dRephaim or their neighbours wound from beneath the waters? — * Naked is ^ehell before him, and destruction hath no covering!
- 5 ^b Prov. i. 6.
- 6 * He spreadeth out the north on a wilderness, and suspendeth a land upon ^fwant. * He bindeth up the waters in His thick clouds, and the spreading cloud is not rent beneath them. * He maketh fast the presence of His ^gthrone; having spread out His cloud upon it. * He hath circumscribed a ^hlaw on the face of the waters, for the ⁱlimiting of light with darkness.
- 7 ^c Gen. ii. 7.
- 8 * The cloudy pillars tremble, and are ^kconfounded at His rebuke. * By His power He ^lcalmeth the sea; and by His understanding He ^mbreaketh the insolent in pieces. * By ⁿHis Spirit have the heavens been beautified; His hand ^ohath wounded the fugitive serpent.
- 9 ^d Gen. xxi. 29, 30.
- 10 ^e Gen. xiv. 5.
- 11 ^f Num. xxi. 29, 30.
- 12 ^g Deut. ii. 11, 19, 20.
- 13 ^h Ps. lxxxviii. 11.
- 14 ⁱ Prov. xv. 11.
- 15 ^j Prov. viii. 20.
- 16 ^k Gen. i. 6-8.
- 17 ^l Ps. xviii. 12, 13.
- 18 ^m ch. xxxvi. 29.
- 19 ⁿ Prov. viii. 27.
- 20 ^o Isa. xl. 22.
- 21 ^p ch. xxxviii. 24.
- 22 ^q Ps. xviii. 10, 16;
- 23 ^r xxxix. 7;
- 24 ^s cvii. 25-29.
- 25 ^t Isa. li. 15.
- 26 ^u Jer. xxxi. 35.
- 27 ^v Ps. lxxxix. 11.
- 28 ^w Gen. i. 2.
- 29 ^x Gen. iii. 15.
- 30 ^y Isa. xxvii. 1.
- 31 ^z Ps. xix. 4, 5.
- 32 ^{aa} Ps. xc. 11.

[CHAP. XXVII.] — 1 * JOB moreover again ^atook up his parable, and said, * As God liveth, who hath put ^baway my judgment, and the Almighty, who hath ^cembittered my soul; — * For still is the whole of my ^dbreath within me, and the spirit of God in my nos-

2 ^a Numb. xxiii. 7.

3 ^b ch. xxxiv. 5.

4 ^c Isa. xl. 27.

5 ^d 2 Kings. iv. 27.

6 ^e Ruth. i. 20, 21.

7 ^f 2 Sam. i. 9.

8 ^g 1 Kings. xvii. 17.

9 ^h &c.

10 ⁱ Gen. ii. 7.

^e Ps. xvii. 1, 3.
Prov. xxiv. 2.

^f ch. ii. 9; xiii. 15.

^g 1 Sam. xxv. 26.
2 Sam. xviii. 32.
ch. iv. 8, &c.

^h Matt. xvi. 26.
ch. xi. 29, &c.

ⁱ Ps. xviii. 42;
lxxvi. 18.
Prov. i. 28.
Ezek. viii. 18.
John. ix. 31.
James. iv. 3.
^k ch. xxii. 26, 27.
Ps. xxxvii. 4;
xliii. 4.

^l Isa. viii. 11.
^m ch. xii. 13.
Ps. lxxii. 12.
ⁿ ch. xxi. 29-30.
Ecc. viii. 12, 13, 14.
ix. 1, 2.

^o ch. xx. 29;
xxxii. 3.
Ps. xi. 6.
Isa. iii. 11.
^p ch. xxi. 11, 19.
Deut. xxviii. 32,
41.
Ps. cix. 10, 13.

^q Ps. lxxviii. 64.
Jer. xxii. 18, 19.

^r Hab. ii. 6.
Zech. ix. 3.
Matt. vi. 19.

^s Prov. xlii. 22;
xiv. 19;
xxviii. 8.

^t ch. viii. 14.
Isa. l. 8;
xxxviii. 12;
li. 8.

^u Lam. ii. 6.
^v ch. xv. 21;
xxviii. 11;
xxii. 16.

^w Ps. lxxix. 16.
^x Ps. lviii. 10.
ch. xx. 23;
xxi. 10.

^y ch. xxx. 22.
Jer. xviii. 17.
Hos. xii. 15.
^z Exod. ix. 14.
Deut. xxxii. 23.

Josh. x. 11.
Deut. xxix. 20.
Ezek. iv. 5, 6.
^a ch. xx. 24.
Exod. xiv. 25.
Judg. iv. 17.

^b Isa. x. 3. ^c Prov. xi. 10.
Prov. xvii. 3; xxvii. 21.

4 trils.—* If my lips speak ^ewickedness, or my tongue
5 mutter deceit, * Wo unto me! If I justify you—Until I expire will I not put away mine ^fintegrity from me:
6 * on my righteousness have I taken fast hold, and will not let it go: from the events of my days shall not 7 my heart blaspheme.—* Then mine ^genemy be as the wicked, and he that riseth up against me as the unrighteous.

8 * For what is the ^hhope of the ungodly when he groweth rich, and when God giveth ease to his soul?
9 * Will ⁱGod hear his cry when trouble cometh upon 10 him? * Or can he ^kdelight himself in the Almighty?
11 Will he call upon God at any time? * Let me then ^linstruct you in the power of God: I will not with-12 hold that which is ^mwith the Almighty. * Behold, ⁿ*this* have ye,—all of you,—seen, Why then do ye so very vainly?

13 * This is the ^oportion of a wicked man with God, yea the heritage which violent men receive from the 14 Almighty. * Should his ^pchildren become great, the sword is theirs; and, as for his numerous offspring, 15 they shall not be satisfied with bread. * His survivors shall be shut up in death, and his ^qwidows shall not 16 weep for them. * Should he ^rtreasure up silver as the dust, and prepare raiment as the clay:—* he might 17 prepare,—but the just shall put it on: and the silver shall the innocent divide;—* He would have built his 18 ^shouse like the moth, or as the ^ttent which the vinedresser maketh. * In wealth he lieth down, but it 19 shall never be gathered: he openeth his eyes, and it is no more! * For ^uterrors overtake him as the waters; by night the ^wtempest stealeth him away.
20 * The east wind ^xtaketh him up, and he departeth;
yea as a whirlwind it snatcheth him out of his place.

22 * So God casteth forth upon ^yhim, and spareth not:
23 from His hand doth he continually ^zflee. * Men ^aclap their hands at him, and ^bhiss upon him out of his place.

[CHAP. XXVIII.]—1 * THERE is indeed an outlet for the silver, and a place in which they ^afuse the gold.

^b Lam. ii. 15. ^c 1 Kings, ix. 8. ^d Jer. xix. 8. ^e Mich. vi. 16. ^f Zeph. ii. 15. ^g Ps. xii. 7.
Isa. xlviii. 10. ^h Rom. xii. 20.

- 2 *^b Iron is taken out of the dust, also the stone from 3 which one fuseth the copper. * Man hath determined the boundary of darkness; and of every limit doth he make ^cinquiry: of the stone-weight of thick darkness, 4 and of the shadow of death: * of the ^dtorrent's breaking forth, so that none could sojourn:—people were forgotten of the foot; they wasted or wandered away.
 5 —* Of the ^eearth from which bread cometh forth, and 6 whose ^flower parts are turned up like fire. * Of places of which the ^gsapphire are the stones; and 7 whose ^hdust is gold. * Of paths which the hawk hath not known, and which the ⁱeye of the vulture 8 hath not seen; * which the fierce beasts have not trodden; which the strong lion hath not passed.
 9 * Upon the flinty rock he casteth forth his hand;
 10 he turneth over mountains from the root. * In the rocks he cutteth out rivers; and upon every ^kprecious 11 thing hath his eye looked. * He hath restrained ^lrivers from flowing, and ^mhidden things hath he brought forth to light.
 12 * But as to ⁿwisdom, Whence is it to be discovered?
 13 And where is the place of understanding? * Man knoweth not ^oits equal: nor is it ^pdiscoverable in the 14 land of the living. * The ^qdeep hath said, “It is not in me:” and the sea hath said, “It is not with me.”
 15 * ^rPure gold cannot be given for it, nor silver be 16 weighed as its price. * It cannot be compared with the fine gold of ^sOphir, with the precious ^tonyx, or 17 the sapphire. * Neither gold nor crystal can be set against it; nor as its ^ubarter the vessel of pure ^wgold.
 18 * The lofty and massive cannot be mentioned:—yea 19 the getting of wisdom is better than ^xpearls.—* The ^ytopaz of Cush equaleth it not: nor can the finest pure gold be set against it.
 20 * ^zWhence then cometh wisdom? And where is 21 the place of understanding? * It is hidden even from the eyes of all living, and concealed from the birds of 22 heaven. * Destruction and death have said, “In our 23 ears we have heard its report:”—* God alone ^ahath made known its way: He only hath known its place.

b Gen. iv. 22.

c Eccl. i. 13;
vii. 25.

ch. xi. 12.

1 Kings. iv. 29, 33.

(Heb. v. 9-14).

Prov. xviii. 1.

d ch. xxx. 14.

Ps. cxxiv. 4, 5.

e Gen. i. 11.

Ps. civ. 13, 15.

Isa. xxviii. 24-29.

f Ezek. xxviii. 13,

14.

g ver. 16.

Exod. xxiv. 10.

h Gen. ii. 12.

i ch. xxxix. 29.

k Prov. xxiv. 4.

Eccl. i. 10, 13.

l Isa. xxxvii. 25;

xliv. 27.

m Isa. xlv. 2, 3.

n 1 Cor. iv. 5.

o vv. 20, 28.

p Prov. ii. 6.

q Eccl. vii. 24.

r 1 Cor. i. 19, 20.

s Ps. cxix. 72.

t Ezek. viii. 16, 17.

u Rom. xi. 33, 34.

v Prov. iii. 14.

viii. 10;

xvi. 16.

y 1 Chro. xxix. 4.

Ps. xlv. 10.

z Isa. xlii. 12.

a Exod. xxviii. 9.

b Ezek. xxviii. 13.

c Prov. viii. 19.

d Ps. xix. 11.

e Prov. iii. 15;

viii. 11;

xxxi. 10.

f Exod. xxviii. 17.

g xxxix. 10.

h Ezek. xxviii. 13.

i Rev. xxi. 29.

j See ver. 12.

k Prov. ii. 6.

^b 2 Chro. xvi. 9.
^c Prov. xv. 3.
 Zech. iv. 10.
 Rev. v. 6.
^d Ps. CXXXV. 7.
 Isa. xl. 12.
^e ch. xxxvi. 27.
^f ch. xxxviii. 25.
^g Ps. xviii. 13-14.
^h Prov. viii. 22-29.

24 * For ^b He seeth to the extremities of the earth : He 25 looketh upon all beneath the heavens ; * to ^c appoint a weight to the wind, and to establish the waters in 26 their measure. * When he made a law for the rain, 27 and a ^d way for the thunderbolt ; * then saw ^e He, and declared it : He established it, and searched it out.
 28 * And to the man He said, Behold, the ^f fear of the Lord that is wisdom, and to depart from evil, understanding.

ⁱ Prov. xviii. 13.
^j Ps. cxi. 10.
 Prov. i. 7 ;
 ix. 10.

[CHAP. XXIX.]—1 * JOB moreover continued his

2 parable, and said, * O that I were as in former
 * months, as in the days when God preserved ^b me ;
 3 * when His ^c candle shone upon my head ; and at His 4 ^d light I walked through darkness ; * as I was in the days of my vigour, when God set a ^e fence about my 5 tent ; * when the Almighty was yet ^f with me, and 6 my ^g children round about me ; * when my steps were washed with ^h milk, and the rock poured me out rivu-7 lets of oil ; * when I went forth from the gate to the ⁱ pulpit, and prepared my seat in the broad place !—

^a ch. i. 5, &c.
^b ch. i. 10.
 Ps. xxxvii. 29.
 Jude i.
^c ch. xxvii. 6.
 Ps. xviii. 29.
 Prov. xiii. 9, 20, 26.
 xxiv. 20.
^d ch. xxii. 29.
 Ps. vii. 7 ;
 xxvii. 1 ;
 lxxxiv. 12, &c.

^e ch. i. 10.
 Ps. xxv. 14.
 Prov. iii. 32.
^f Deut. xxxiii. 27.
 Josh. i. 9.
 Judg. vi. 12, 13.
 Ps. xlii. 12.
^g ch. i. 2, 5.
 Prov. xvii. 6.
^h ch. xx. 17.
 Gen. xlix. 11.
 Deut. xxxii. 13,
 14 ; xxxiii. 24.
ⁱ Prov. viii. 2 ;
 ix. 3, 14 ;
 xi. 8, c.

^k Lev. xix. 32.
 1 Pet. v. 5.
 1 Ps. CXXXVII. 6.
 Ezek. iii. 26.
^l Prov. xxix. 2.
 Luke, iv. 22 ;
 xi. 27.

^m Ps. lxxii. 12 ;
 lxxxii. 2-4 ;
 Jer. xxii. 16.
ⁿ ch. xxxi. 19.
 Prov. xxxi. 6, 9.
^o Ps. CXXXII. 9.
 Isa. lix. 17 ;
 lxi. 10.

Rom. xiii. 14, &c.
^p Isa. xxxviii. 5.
 lxxii. 3.
 Num. x. 31.
^q Ps. lxxviii. 6.
^r Deut. xiii. 14 ;
 xvii. 8, 9.
 Prov. xxv. 2 ;
 xxix. 7.
^s Ps. iii. 8 ;
 lviii. 7.
 1 Sam. xvii. 35.
 Ps. CXXIV. 6.
^t Ps. xxx. 7, 8.
 Jer. xxii. 23 ;
 xlix. 16.
 Obad. 4. Hab. ii. 9.

8 * The youths saw me and ^k retired : and the aged 9 arose, they stood up. * Princes refrained from speak-10 ing, and laid their hand upon their mouth. * As to utterance, the nobles were as hidden : and their tongue 11 as ^l cleaving to their palate. * When the ear heard, then it ^m blessed me ; and when the eye saw, then it gave 12 witness to me. * For I delivered the ⁿ poor that cried out, yea the orphan and him that had no helper.
 13 * The blessing of the ^o perishing came upon me ; and I 14 caused the widow's heart to sing. * I put on righteousness, and it ^p clothed me : my judgment was as a 15 robe and a ^q diadem. * I was ^r eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame. * I was a ^s father to the needy ;
 and the dispute which I knew not, ^t I searched out.
 17 * So I brake the ^u fangs of the wicked, and cast forth the prey from his teeth.

18 * Then I said, ^w with my nest shall I expire, and 19 shall multiply my days as the ^x sand. * My root is laid open to the ^y waters, and the dew lodgeth on my

* Gen. xxxii. 12 ; xli. 49. * Ps. i. 3. Jer. xvii. 8. Hos. xiv. 5-7.

20 crops. * My glory is ^a new with me, and my ^a bow 21 renewed in my hand. * To me gave they ear and 22 ^b homage, and kept silence at my counsel. * After my words they ^c spake not again; for my speech ^d dis-23 tilled upon them as the dew. * They also waited for me as for the ^e rain, and opened their mouth wide as 24 for the latter ^f rain. * Unless I smiled upon them, they had no confidence; but at the ^g light of my coun-25 tenance, they were not cast down. * I chose out their way, for I sat ^h chief; yea, I dwelt as a ⁱ king among troops, as one who ^k comforteth mourners.

[CHAP. XXX.]—1 * BUT now my ^a juniors deride me, they whose fathers I would have scorned to rank with 2 the dogs of my flock! * But what is their power to 3 me? With them shall their insolence perish. * Who but yesterday, hardly beset with want and hunger, 4 fled into the desolate and waste ^b wilderness: * who cropped off the salt-shrub on the branch, and whose 5 bread was the ^c broom-root. * From society were they ^d thrust out;—men shouted after them as after the 6 thief,—* to dwell in the ^e cliffs of the valleys, the 7 holes of the dust, and the rocks. * Among the bushes did they bray ^f as wild asses; beneath the broom-pea 8 were they congregated. * As ^g children of the corrupt, nay, as the progeny of the infamous, were they beaten out of the land!

9 * And now am I become their ^h song, yea I am be-10 come a bye-word to them. * They ⁱ abhor me; they withdraw from me; and in my presence they forbear 11 not to spit. * Because He hath ^k loosed my cord and afflicted me, they also cast off the ^l bridle before me.
 12 * On the right hand they ^m arise with insult; they thrust my feet aside, and ⁿ cast up their destructive 13 roads against me. * My path do they cut off: they 14 profit at my ruin.—They had none aiding. * As a wide ^o breaking in of waters they come; because of 15 the desolation they roll on as the waves. * ^p Terrors are turned upon me; they pursue mine innocency as the wind: and as a rain-cloud hath my welfare 16 ^q passed away. * So now is my soul ^r poured out upon

^c ver. 14.
^d ch. xix. 9.
^e Gen. xiv. 13.
^f Ps. iii. 4.
^g Gen. xlix. 24.
^h Ps. ciii. 5.
ⁱ Isa. xl. 31.
^j 2 Cor. iv. 16.
^k vv. 9, 10.
^l ch. xxxii. 11, 12.
^m ch. xxxii. 15, 16.
ⁿ Deut. xxxii. 2.
^o Cant. ii. 11.
^p Ezek. xx. 46.
^q Amos, vii. 16.
^r Mich. ii. 6.
^s Ps. lxxxii. 6.
^t Hos. vi. 3.
^u Zech. x. 1.
^v Ps. iv. 7; xxi. 7.
^w Prov. xvi. 15;
 xxxvii. 17.
^x 1 Chron. xiii. 1, 4.
^y Gen. xiv. 14, 15.
^z Deut. xxxiii. 5.
^{aa} ch. iv. 3, 4.
^{ab} Isa. lxi. 1-3.
^{ac} Isa. iii. 5.
^{ad} 2 Kings, ii. 23.
^{ae} ch. xix. 13.

^b ch. xxiv. 5.

^c 2 Kings, iv. 38.
 39.

^d Gen. iv. 14.
 Ps. cix. 10.
^e Judg. vi. 2.
 1 Sam. xxii. 2.
 Isa. ii. 19.
 Rev. vi. 15.

^f ch. vi. 5.
 Gen. xvi. 12.
^g Isa. i. 4.

^h Ps. xxxv. 16;
 lxi. 12.
 ch. xvii. 6.
 Lam. iii. 14, 63.
ⁱ Ps. lxxxviii. 9.
 ch. xix. 13.
 Prov. xix. 7.
 Num. xii. 14.
 Deut. xxv. 9, &c.
^k ch. xii. 13, 21.
^l Ps. xxxv. 21.
 Matt. xxvi. 67.
^m ch. xlx. 18.
 Isa. iii. 5.
ⁿ ch. xix. 12.

^o ch. xxii. 16;
 xxxviii. 4.
 Ps. xxiii. 5;
 lxi. 16.
^p ch. vi. 4; vii. 14.
 Ps. lxxxviii. 16.

^q Hos. vi. 4;
 xiii. 3.

* Ps. xl. 13.

† ch. xxxiii. 19.
Ps. vi. 3, 7 ;
xxxviii. 4.
Isa. xxxviii. 13.
" ch. ii. 7 ; vii. 5." ch. ix. 31.
Ps. lxxix. 3.
* ch. ii. 8.
Gen. xviii. 27.
† ch. xix. 7.
Ps. xxii. 3.
Lam. iii. 8, 44.
|| Heb. turned." ch. xxi. 16.
Ps. i. 4.
Isa. xvii. 13.
Jer. iv. 11, 12.
Ezek. v. 2.
Hos. xiii. 3.* Gen. iii. 19.
Eccl. ix. 5 ;
xli. 7.b Exod. xxii. 27.
Ps. iv. 2.
Isa. xxx. 19.
Mal. i. 9.
Ps. lxxx. 5.c Rom. xii. 15.
Ps. xxxv. 13.
Jer. xiii. 17.
xviii. 20.d Luke, xix. 41.
Isa. lviii. 7, 8.
Dan. iv. 27.e ch. iii. 26 ;
xxix. 18.
Jer. viii. 15 ;
xiv. 19.Mic. i. 12.
Isa. i. 10.
Lam. iii. 2.f Ps. xxii. 15.
Jer. iv. 19 ;
xxx. 20, .
Lam. i. 20 ;
ii. 11.g Ps. xxxviii. 7 ;
xlii. 10, &c.h Ps. xlv. 20 ;
cii. 7.
Mic. i. 8.
Mal. i. 3.i Ps. cxix. 63.
Lam. iii. 4 ;
iv. 8 ;
v. 10.k Ps. cii. 4.
l Ps. cxxxviii. 2.
Isa. xxiv. 8.
Lam. v. 15.m Gen. vi. 2.
n 2 Sam. xi. 2.
Ps. cxix. 37.o ch. xx. 29 ;
xxvii. 13.p Ps. iv. 24 ;
lxxiii. 18.

q Prov. i. 27, &c.

r 2 Chro. xvi. 9.
ch. xxxiv. 21.
Prov. v. 21 ;
xv. 3.s Ps. vii. 4, 6.
t 1 Sam. ii. 3.
Ps. vii. 10.

u Num. xli. v. 21, 22.

v Num. xv. 39. E'cl. xi. 9. Ezek. vi. 9.

me : the days of affliction take fast ^v hold on me.
17 * By night are my ¹ bones pierced through by my pains, 18 and my nerves take no rest. * With much violence doth my ^u clothing bind me ; it girdeth me as the 19 throat of my vesture. * He hath cast me down to the 20 ^w mire, and I am likened to ^x dust and ashes. * I cry out unto Thee, but Thou ^y answerest me not : I stand 21 up, but Thou dost not consider me. * Thou art || become very cruel to me, with the might of thy hand 22 dost Thou fiercely pursue me. * Thou ^z carriest me off ; on the tempest dost Thou cause me to ride : Thou makest me to waste entirely away.

23 * But I know that Thou wilt bring me back to death, and to the ^a house appointed for all living.— 24 * Nevertheless, I said, upon ^b prayer will He not send forth His hand ; surely, when He destroyeth, in this 25 is there safety. * If I had not ^c wept for him whose day was hard ; my soul had not grieved for the 26 ^d needy ; * when I looked for good, ^e evil had justly come ; or expected light, thick darkness had then come 27 on. * But my bowels were ^f troubled, and rested not :
28 the days of affliction went before me. * In gloom ^g I proceeded onward without the sun ; I arose in the con-29 gregation, and cried out. * ^h I became brother to the monsters of the desert, and neighbour to the ostriches.
30 My skin ⁱ blackened with my disease, and my ^k bones 31 burned with heat. * So was my ^l lute turned to mourning, and my lyre to the voice of them that weep.

[CHAP. XXXI.]—1 * I HAVE made a covenant for mine

2 ^a eyes : Why then should I think upon a virgin ? * And what ^b portion of God is from above, or heritage of the 3 Almighty from on high for me ?—* Is not ^c destruction for the wicked ? and punishment for the workers of 4 iniquity ?—* Doth not He ^d look upon my ways, and 5 count all my steps ? * If I have ^e walked with vanity, —so that my foot have stumbled because of guile ; — 6 * He will ¹ weigh me in the balances of righteousness ;
yea God will recognise mine integrity.

7 * If my footstep hath declined from the ^e way, or my heart hath walked after mine ^h eyes, or any spot hath 8 ⁱcleaved to the palms of my hands; * then should I sow, and another ^keat: yea my abundant produce be 9 rooted up. * If my heart had been ^lintent upon woman, and I had ^mlaid wait at my neighbour's door;

 10 * then should my wife ⁿgrind for another, yea others
 11 should ^obow down upon her. * For this is a ^psin, yea 12 it is an ^qiniquity to be punished of the judges; * for it is a ^rfire burning even to destruction, and which would root out all mine increase.
 13 * If I ^sdespised the cause of my male or female 14 slave, when they pleaded with me; * What then should I do when God ^tarose; and when He ^uvisited, 15 What should I answer Him? * Did not He who ^wmade me in the belly make him? and did not One fashion us both in the womb?
 16 * If I have ^xwithholden the poor from their desire, 17 or have caused the eyes of the widow to ^yfail; * or have eaten my morsel alone, and the ^zorphan hath not 18 eaten thereof:—* for God brought me up from my childhood as a ^aFather, so that from the belly of my 19 ^bmother I have found comfort:—* If I have ^clooked upon any perishing for lack of clothing, or upon the 20 needy without covering: * if his loins ^dblessed me not, and he hath not been warmed with the fleece of my 21 lambs: * if I have waved my ^ehand over the orphan, 22 when I saw my help in the gate; * then should my shoulder ^ffall from the shoulder-blade, and mine 23 arm be broken off at the elbow. * For ^gdestruction from God was a terror to me; and His ^hma-24 jesty I could not eulure. * If I have made ⁱgold my confidence, or have said of the pure gold, It is my 25 trust: * if ^kI rejoiced when my power was great, or 26 when as a mighty man my hand prevailed: * if I looked on the sun when it shone, or on the ^lmoon 27 moving ^mgloriously onwards, * and my heart was ⁿse-cretly tempted, and my hand kissed my ^omouth;— 28 * even this were iniquity to be punished of the ^pjudges;
 29 for I should have ^qdenied God from on high. * If I rejoiced at the ^rdestruction of him who hated me, 30 or was excited when evil overcame him:—* but I xliii. 6. ^a 1 Kings, xix. 10. Hos. xliii. 2. ^e ver. 11. Deut. xii. 2, 7, 9. Judg. xi. 27. ^p Josh. xxiv. 27. Prov.

 xxx. 9. Titus, i. 16. ^q 2 Sam. i. 12; iv. 10, 11; xvi. 8. Ps. xxxv. 13, 14; 26. Prov. xvii. 5; xxiv. 17, 16.

- † Matt. v. 44.
 Rom. xii. 14.
 Eccl. v. 2, 6.
 † 2 Kings, viii. 13.
 † 2 Sam. iii. 4.
 Ps. xxvii. 2.
 † Gen. xix. 2, 3.
 Judg. xix. 15, 20.
 Isa. lviii. 7.
 Matt. xxv. 35.
 † Gen. iii. 8.
 † Prov. xxviii. 13.
 Hos. vi. 7;
 xx. 27.
 † ch. xxx. 5.
 Gen. xix. 4-11.
 Prov. xi. 26;
 xxiv. 24;
 xxviii. 27.
 † ch. xiii. 3, 22;
 xxiii. 3, 7;
 xxxiii. 6;
 xxxviii. 1.
 † ch. xiii. 26;
 xix. 23, 24.
 † Exod. xxviii. 12.
 Isa. xxii. 22;
 lxii. 3.
 Phil. iv. 1.
 † ch. xiii. 15.
 † 2 Sam. xv. 2.
 1 Kings, iii. 22.
 Esth. iv. 16.
 † ch. xx. 27.
 Hab. ii. 11.
 James, v. 4.
 † Gen. iv. 12.
 † Gen. iii. 17, 18.
 Isa. vii. 23.
- gave not up my mind to sin, to call for a ^rcurse on his 31 person:—* if the men of my tent said not, Would to 32 God we may never ^prey upon him!—* no sojourner 'lodged in the street; I opened my door to the travel-33 ler:—* if I concealed my transgression as ^aAdam, to 34 hide iniquity in my bosom; * then I should ^wgreatly have feared the multitude, and the contempt of the tribes would have broken me to pieces; yea I should have been silent, and not gone forth of the door.— 35 * O that ^sHe would give ear unto me! Behold, my desire is that the Almighty would answer me, and 36 that mine adversary had ^wwritten a book! * Surely I would carry it on my ^zshoulder, would bind it on as 37 my crown. * I would tell Him the ^anumber of my steps; I would ^bapproach Him as a prince.— 38 * If my ^cland had cried out against me, or its fur-39 rows wept together: * if I had eaten of its ^dstrength without money, or despised the person of its lords; 40 * instead of wheat should the ^ethorn have shot forth, and instead of barley, hemlock.

The words of Job are ended.

CHAPTERS XXXII. — XXXVII.

SUMMARY.

Elihu, seeing that Job's friends failed to give him a satisfactory answer, is emboldened to shew his views of the subject, 1-5: apologises for doing so from the consideration of his youth, 6-22. XXXIII.— Declares his sincerity, and challenges Job to refute whatever he may now advance, 1-8: adduces instances of Job's rashness, 8-11: charges him with error, on the ground that the counsels of God are too high for him; and adduces some things in proof, 12-22: affirms that there is an Intercessor, who undertakes for man in such cases; by whom he obtains redemption, and returns to a state like that of youth, in which he is humble and dependent, 23-28: claims attention to this, 29-33. XXXIV.— Elihu commences his argument as before, by adducing some of Job's assertions; which he condemns, 1-10: enters on the abstract character of God, and vindicates His proceedings, 10-15: argues against the wickedness and folly of contending with Him; and recounts instances of His justice, omnipresence, goodness, and power, 16-28: speaks of His dealings with men; reprobates the practice of approaching Him with confessions flattering to self, and hence prescribing in some degree to His wisdom and power; and concludes here, that Job had spoken in ignorance and impiety, 29-37.

XXXV. — Elihu denies that Job is just with God ; calls in question some of his arguments advanced on this point ; reprobates them on the ground of Job's ignorance and weakness, alleging that such considerations can apply only between man and man ; and concludes that the assumption is false, 1-16. XXXVI. — Elihu resumes, craving attention from the consideration, that his words shall be sincere, and convincing, 1-4. Asserts God's power, mercy, and justice ; speaks of His ways, as proving this, 5-12. Declares the fate of the ungodly, as contrasted with the experience of the humble ; affirms that Job's punishments were intended to bring him to repentance, and prosperity ; and warns him not to overlook this. Speaks of God's power to relieve, and reprobates the disposition to dispute this. Exhorts Job to magnify His doings for the instruction of others, 13-25. Appeals to the operations of the heavens in proof of His great power and goodness, and of His hatred of sin, 26-33. XXXVII. — The terrors conceived at the discharge of the lightning and noise of the thunder ; the wonders of the falling snow and rain : the object of these is, that men may acknowledge Him, 1-7. Dilates on the habits of the wild beasts ; on the action of the elements heat and cold ; the spreading out of the rain-clouds : all for the fulfilment of the Divine will, 8-13. Contrasts this with the ignorance and weakness of man ; and concludes that, as He cannot be answered as to any of His counsels or ways, it is the duty of man to fear Him.

- 1 * SO these three men ceased from answering Job, because he was ^arighteous in his own eyes. ^a ch. vi. 29 ;
X. 2, 7, &c.
- 2 * Then was kindled the anger of Elihu, the son of Barachel the ^bBuzite, of the family of Ram : against ^b Gen. xlii. 21.
Job was his anger kindled, because he ^cjustified himself with God. * Also against his three friends was ^c ch. x. 2, 7.
his anger kindled, ^dbecause they had found no answer, ^d ch. xxiv. 25 ; 4 but had ^econdemned Job. * Now Elihu had waited ^e ch. viii. 6 ;
for Job, — as to his words, — because they were his ^e xv. 34 ; 5 elders. * So Elihu saw that there was no answer in ^e xxii. 5.
the mouth of the three men, and his ^fanger was ^f Exod. xxxii. 19.
kindled.
- 6 * Then answered Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite, and said, I am young in days, but ye are ^gold. Therefore I tarried ; for I was afraid to shew ^g Lev. xix. 32.
7 unto you my knowledge. * I said, Let days speak, ^g Rom. xiii 7.
and the multitude of years shew forth wisdom. ^g 1 Tim. v. 1.
- 8 * There is indeed a ^hspirit in man, and the breath of ^h Gen. ii. 7 ; 9 the Almighty giveth him understanding. * The ^h vii. 22.
ⁱmany are not wise ; but the ⁱaged understand judg- ⁱ Eccl. iii. 21.
10 ment. * Nevertheless I said, Hear me now ; let me, ⁱ Isa. ii. 22.
11 even me, shew unto you my knowledge. * Behold, I ^j Exod. xxiii. 2.
^j ver. 7.
^k 1 Kings. xii. 6, 8.
^k ch. xii. 12.

waited for your words: I gave ear during your arguments, until ye had examined Job's conclusions.

12 * So I considered your testimonies, and behold, none 13 of you reproved Job by answering his words; * lest ye should ¹say, We have found out by wisdom that God ^mdriveth him, not man.

14 * But he hath not opposed his arguments to me, 15 neither with your sayings will I answer him.—* They were ⁿconfounded; they could answer no more: they 16 put away the statements from them.—* So ^oI waited; and, because they spake not, because they stood 17 still, and answered no more, * I said, Let me also answer on my part: let me, even me, shew my know-18 ledge. * For I am filled with arguments: the ^pspirit 19 of my bowels constraineth me. * Behold, my bowels are as unopened wine: as new ^qwine-skins are they 20 rent. * Let me speak: it will give me ^rrelief: let me 21 open my lips, and ^sanswer. * Let me now not ^taccept the person of the respectable, nor ^uflatter the mean 22 man:—* For, I know not how to ^wflatter:—or soon would my Maker take me off.

[CHAP. XXXIII.]—1 * HOWBEIT, hear now my ^aar-guments, O Job; yea give ear unto all my words.

2 * Behold now, I have ^bopened my mouth, my tongue
3 hath spoken on my palate. * The ^ctruth of my heart shall my words be; my lips ^dshall utter my opinion in 4 sincerity. * As the ^espirit of God hath made me, and 5 the breath of the Almighty given me life; * if thou canst, answer me, ^fset thy cause in order before me;
6 stand up. * Observe, I am, ^gaccording to thy word, 7 for ^hGod: out of the ⁱclay have I been taken. * Behold, therefore, the ^kdread of me shall not affright thee; nor my ^lburden press heavily on thee.

8 * Surely thou hast said in mine ears—and the sound 9 of thy words I still hear—* ^m“ Pure am I, and without transgression: I am clean, and ⁿno iniquity cleaveth
10 unto me:” * “ Behold, He ^odiscovereth heavy things 11 against me: He counteth me ^pfor his enemy:” * “ He putteth my feet in ^qshackles; He ^robserveth all my ways.”

12 * Behold, in this thou ^sdoest not justly. I will

¹ Gen. xiv. 23.
Judg. vii. 2.
Isa. xlvi. 5, 7.
= ch. i. 21.
Ps. i. 4.

^o ch. vi. 24, 25;
XXIX. 22.

^o ver. 6.

^p Ps. xxxix. 3.
Jer. xx. 9.
Ezek. iii. 14.
^q Matt. ix. 17.

^r ch. xiii. 13, 19.
Jer. xiii. 6, 7.
^s ch. xiii. 8;
xxxiv. 19, &c.
^t 2 Sam. xiv. 17, 20.
Acts. xii. 22, 23.
^u ch. xvii. 5.
Ps. xii. 2, 3.
Prov. xxix. 5.
^v 1 Thess. ii. 5.
^w ch. xiii. 6;
xxxiv. 2.

^x Ps. lxxviii. 2.
Matt. v. 2.
^y Prov. viii. 7-9.

^z Ps. xxxvii. 30, 31.
Prov. xv. 2, 7;
xx. 15.

^a Gen. ik. 7.
ch. x. 12;
xxxii. 8.

^b Ps. i. 21.
ch. xxiii. 4, 5;
xxxii. 14.

^c ch. ix. 32-35;
xii. 3.

^d Exod. iv. 16.
Gen. ii. 7; iii. 19.

^e Gen. xv. 12.
Heb. xii. 21.

^f Exod. xviii. 22.
Numb. xi. 11.
Deut. i. 12.

^g 2 Sam. xv. 33, &c.
^h ch. ix. 17;
x. 7;
xi. 4;
xvi. 17.

ⁱ Ps. cv. 3.
^j ch. ix. 30, 31;
x. 15, &c.

^k ch. xii. 24; xvi. 9.
^l Ps. cv. 13.
Jer. xx. 22.

^m Acts. xvi. 24.
ⁿ ch. xxxi. 4.
^o Eccl. viii. 25.

therefore answer thee, that 'God is in this greater than 13 man. * Why "contendest thou against Him? — Be-14 cause He "answereth not for all His matters? — * For God speaketh in ^xone thing, yea in two, and one 15 ^sperceiveth Him not: * in a dream, — a ^zvision, — of the night, when ^astupor falleth upon men; in slumber-16 ings upon the bed. * Then is ^bopened the ear of men, 17 and He ^csealeth them for their correction. * To put away from the mean his ^dworks, and to conceal 18 ^epride from the eminent man. * To withhold his soul from destruction, and his life from passing over to 19 contempt. * So is he chastised with ^tsickness upon his bed, and the shooting of his bones is violent.
 20 * His life also abhorreth bread, and his soul desirable 21 ^gfood. * His flesh therefore ^hwasteth from the view, and his bones hitherto unseen ⁱbecome prominent:
 22 * and his soul ^bdraweth near to destruction, and his life to the destroyers.
 23 * But there is an ^lAngel on his part, an ^mInter-cessor, — one out of a thousand, — to ⁿshew unto man his 24 righteousness. * And He shall surely be ^ogracious unto him, and shall say, ^p“ Redeem him from going down 25 to destruction: I have found a ^qransom.” * His ^rflesh shall then be fresher than childhood: he shall ^sreturn 26 to the days of his youth. * He shall ^tpray unto God, and He shall accept him: then shall he behold His ^ucountenance with shouting. And He shall ^wrestore his righteousness unto man, even by ^vshewing truth to 27 men. * Then shall one say, ^yI have sinned, I have 28 perverted justice, and have been iniquitous. * So shall He ^zredeem his soul from passing over to destruction; and his life shall ^abehold the light.
 29 * Behold, all these things worketh God ^btwice, yea 30 thrice, with man: * to bring back his soul from ^cdestruction, that he may be ^denlightened with the light 31 of life. * Attend, O Job, and hear me: be silent, 32 and I will yet speak. * If thou hast arguments, answer me: speak on; for I desire to justify thee.

^w Ps. xxxiii. 3. ^x John, iii. 19, 20; vli. 17; xvi. 8. James, ii. 9. Ps. xxvii. 1. ^y ch. vii. 20. Numb. xii.
 11. ^z Sam. xii. 13. Prov. xxviii. 13. Ps. xix. 7, 8. ^a vv. 18, 24. ch. v. 20; vi. 23. Ps. xxv. 22; xxvi.
 11, &c. ^b Isa. ix. 2. John, xi. 9. ^c vv. 14, 17. Deut. xxxii. 27. Prov. xvi. 4. ^d vv. 24, 26. Ps. xl. 2, 3; cxviii. 17, 18. ^e Ps. lvi. 14. Isa. ii. 5; xxxviii. 17. John, viii. 12. ^f ch. xii. 6; xviii. 2, &c.

† Ps. xxxiv. 12.
Prov. iv. 1, 2;
v. 1, 2.
Ps. xlix. 4.

33 * If not, ¹give thou ear unto me: be silent, and I will teach thee wisdom.

[CHAP. XXXIV.]—1 * So Elihu answered and said,

† Prov. i. 5.
1 Cor. x. 15;
xiv. 20.
† ch. vi. 30; xii. 11.
1 Cor. ii. 15.
Heb. v. 14.
† Judg. xix. 30;
xx. 7;
Isa. xl. 2, 5.
John. vii. 24.
ch. x. 7;
xi. 4;
xvi. 17, &c.
† ch. ix. 17;
xxvii. 2.
† ch. xxvii. 4-6.
† ch. vi. 4; xvi. 13.
† ch. xv. 16.
Prov. iv. 17.
† Ps. i. 1;
xxvi. 4;
i. 10.
Prov. i. 15;
ii. 12, &c.
ch. ix. 22, 30, 31.
vv. 2, 3, 34.

2 * Hear mine opinions ^aye wise, and ye that have 3 knowledge, give ear unto me: * for the ear ^btrieth
4 sentences, as the palate tasteth food. * Let us ^cchoose
5 that which is good. * For Job hath said, “^e“I have 6 * “Should I ^glie respecting my case?”—“^hMine
7 ^harrow is mortal, without transgression!” * What man
8 therefore is like unto Job, who ⁱdrinketh up scorning
9 as water; * and goeth on to ^hherd with the workers 10 of iniquity, yea to walk with the men of sin? * For he hath said, “^lIt profiteth not a man to be accepted with God!”—* Harken therefore unto me, ye ^mmen of understanding.

ch. viii. 3;
xxxvi. 23.
Gen. xviii. 25.
Deut. xxxii. 4.
2 Chro. xix. 7.
Ps. xcii. 16.
Ps. lxxii. 13.
Prov. xxiv. 12.
Jer. xxxii. 19.
Rom. ii. 6.
Prov. i. 31.
Gal. vi. 7, 8.
† Ps. xl. 4;
cxlv. 17.
Hab. i. 12, 13.
† ch. viii. 3.
† Jer. xlix. 19.
† ch. vii. 17.
† Ps. xxxiv. 29.
Isa. xxxvii. 4.
Gen. vi. 17.
ch. xxx. 23.
Ecc. xii. 7.
Isa. lvii. 16.
† ch. xii. 3;
xiii. 2, 6.

Far be it ⁿfrom God to do wickedly, and from the 11 Almighty to do perversely. * For in the ^owork of a man shall He repay him, and according to each man’s 12 ^pway shall He cause him to find. * Nay verily, ^qGod will not condemn unjustly, neither will the Al-13 mighty ^rpervert judgment. * Who hath ^sset a land in order against Him? yea, Who so appointed the 14 whole world? * If He should set ^tHis heart upon him,
He would gather back His ^uspirit and His breath unto 15 Himself; * all flesh should ^wexpire together, and man return to the dust.

† Gen. xviii. 25.
2 Sam. xxiii. 3.
Rom. iii. 5, 7.
† ch. xl. 4.
† Rom. ix. 14.
Exod. xxii. 28.
Ecc. x. 20.
Acts, xxiii. 5.
ch. xii. 8.
Deut. x. 37.
2 Chro. xix. 7.
Acts, x. 34.
Rom. ii. 11.
Gal. ii. 6, &c.
† ch. xxxvii. 19.
Ps. xlix. 7, 8.
Jam. ii. 5.
† ch. xxxi. 15.
Prov. xiv. 31;
xxii. 2.

16 * If therefore there is any ^xdiscretion, hear this:
17 give ear to the utterance of mine opinions. * Doth even he who hateth ^yjudgment rule? or, Wilt thou 18 condemn the ^zJust and the Mighty? * Is it to be said to a ^aKing, “It is vain?”—“It is wicked,” to 19 Princes?—* To ^bHim who accepteth not the persons of princes; neither preferreth the ^cmagnificent to the humble;—For they all are the ^dwork of His hands?— 20 * In a ^emoment do they die, and in the portions of the ^fnight are a people troubled, and pass off; yea a 21 mighty people depart without ^ghand. * For His eyes

† Ps. lxxiii. 19. Isa. xxx. 13. † Exod. xii. 29, 30. Isa. xxxvii. 36. Matt. xxv. 6. † 2 Sam. xxx. 37-39; xxvi. 10. Isa. x. 16-19; xxx. 30-33. Dan. ii. 34, 44, 45. Zech. iv. 6.

are on the ways of every man, yea He ^blooketh upon 22 all his steps. * There is neither ^ldarkness nor shadow of ^kdeath, where the ^lworkers of iniquity 23 can be hidden. * It is not therefore for man again to ^mset his heart on entering into judgment 24 with God. * For He breaketh the ⁿmighty to pieces without inquiry, and establisheth ^oothers in their 25 stead. * So ^ptaketh He knowledge of their deeds, overthroweth them in a ^qnight, and they are beaten 26 to pieces * beneath the wicked: they are derided 27 in the ^rsight of many.—* Because they so ^sdeparted from Him, and would not ^tconsider any of His 28 ways.—* To bring unto Him the ^ucry of the humble; and that He might ^whear the cry of the afflicted.

29 * So He ^xgiveth rest. Who then shall ^ycondemn?
 So He ^zhideth His face. Who then can ^abehold Him!
 30 And this as to a ^bnation, or as to one man: * that no ^cungodly man should bear rule; nor a ^dpeople 31 practise treachery. * Is it then to be said to God, 32 “^eI have borne,” “I have not injured?”—* “What ^fexceeds my apprehension, teach Thou me?” “If I have done wickedly, ^gI will not do so again?”— 33 * Is it by ^hthee that He should repay it, seeing thou hast ⁱdespised; and because thou so choosest, but not I?

34 What thou knowest therefore ^kspeak out. * Men of ^lunderstanding will declare for me,—yea, every 35 wise man will hear me,—saying, * Job speaketh ^mwithout knowledge, and his words are without 36 consideration. * Would therefore that Job were thoroughly ⁿexamined, because of the ^oanswers to 37 wicked men. * But he addeth ^prebellion to his error:
 he ^qclappeth his hands in our presence, and ^rmultiplieth his words against God.

[CHAP. XXXV.]—1 * ELIHU also answered and 2 said, * Countest thou this for judgment? Thou hast
 3 said, “^aMy justification is with God.”—* When thou sayest, moreover, What profit is there to ^bThee!

z Prov. xxviii. 13. ^b ch. xxxviii. 4, 12, 20, 31, 33, &c. ⁱ ch. v. 13, 15, 31, 35. ^k ch. xxxiii. 5, 32.
^l Prov. xv. 2, 7. ^m Hos. xiv. 9. ⁿ ch. xiii. 2; xv. 2; xxxv. 16; xlii. 3. ^o Ps. xviii. 2. ^p Job. v. 11. ^q ver. 11, 9. ^r ch. xii. 6; xxi. 7; xxiv. 1. ^s 1 Sam. xv. 23. ^t Isa. i. 19, 20. ^u 1 ch. xxvii. 23.
^v ch. viii. 2, 3; xi. 2, 3. ^w ch. ix. 27; x. 7; xvi. 17, &c. ^x ch. ix. 21, 22; x. 15; xxi. 15, &c.
 Ps. lxxiii. 13. Mat. iii. 14.

^b ch. xxxi. 4.
 Gen. xvi. 12.
 2 Chro. xvi. 9.
^c Ps. cxxix. 12, 13.
 Isa. xxi. 15.
 Jer. xliii. 24, &c.
^k ch. iii. 5;
 xxxiv. 27.
 Isa. ix. 2.
^l ch. xxxi. 3.
 Ps. v. 6.
 Prov. x. 29, &c.
^m ver. 14.
 ch. xxxiii. 13, &c.
ⁿ ch. xix. 2.
^o Ps. ii. 9;
 xxxii. 4;
 xciv.
 Jer. ii. 20-23.
 Dan. ii. 21, &c.
^p 1 Sam. ii. 50-56.
 xv. 28.
 1 Kings, xiv. 7.
 II. 14.
 Ps. cxlii. 7, 8.
 Dan. v. 20-31.
^q Ps. xxxiii. 15.
 Isa. lxxvi. 15.
 Hos. vii. 2.
 Amos, vii. 7.
 Rev. xx. 12.
^r ver. 20.
 Isa. xv. 1.
 1 Thes. v. 2.
^s Exod. xiv. 30.
 Deut. xiii. 9, 11.
 Ps. lxxiii. 11, 12.
 Isa. lxxvi. 24.
^t 1 Sam. xv. 11;
 cxxxv. 5.
 Zeph. i. 6.
 Luke, xvii. 31,
 32, &c.
^u Ps. xxviii. 5;
 cvii. 43.
 Prov. i. 29, 30.
 Isa. i. 3, &c.
^v ch. xxii. 9, 10;
 xxiv. 12.
 Exod. ii. 25, 24.
 Ps. xii. 6.
 Isa. v. 7.
^w Exod. xxii. 23-27.
^x Isa. xiv. 3-8;
 xxvi. 31;
 xxxii. 17.
 John, xiv. 27, &c.
^y Rom. viii. 34.
^z ch. ix. 6, 9.
 Ps. xiii. 2;
 xxxv. 9;
 xxx. 8.
^a ch. xii. 14;
 xxxiii. 13.
^b 2 Kings, xviii. 12.
 2 Chro. xxxiii. 17.
 Jer. xxvii. 3.
^c 1 Sam. xxviii. 17.
^d 2 Kings, xxi. 11, 12.
 Hos. v. 10, 11.
^e Ps. lxxv. 11;
 cxlv. 2.
^f ch. xxxi. 5, 13,
 16, &c.
^g ch. x. 2.
^h Ps. xix. 13;
 xxv. 4, 5;
 xxxii. 11;
 cxxxix. 24, 25.
ⁱ ch. xxxiii. 5, 32.
 1 Jano. v. 2.
^j ch. xxvii. 23.

4 “What advantage have I from my sin?” * I will answer thee, yea rather thine opinions which attend thee. * Look, then, at the heavens, and see; observe also the ^dclouds: they are higher than thou.

6 * If thou hast ^esinned, What canst thou have done against Him? and, if thy transgressions were many, 7 What canst thou have done to Him? * If thou ^fhast done justly, What canst thou have rendered unto Him? or What can He have received at thy hand? —

8 * For a man such as thou art, is thy ^gwickedness; and 9 for the son of man, thy righteousness.—* From excess may men have caused the oppressed to ^hcry out; from 10 the arm of the mighty may they have complained; * and one not have said, “Where is God my ⁱMaker, 11 the giver of ^ksongs in the night? * who teacheth us by the ^lbeasts of the earth, and maketh us 12 wise by the ^mbirds of heaven?”—* There may they have cried out because of the haughtiness of evil men, 13 and He ⁿnot have answered. * But God ^oheareth it, not in vain; neither in vain doth the Almighty behold 14 it. * Even when thou sayest, thou canst not ^psee Him, ^qjudgment is before Him. Wait thou therefore for Him.—* But now, because it ^ris not so, He hath visited in His anger, but hath not animadverted in its excessive spread. * So Job openeth his mouth in ^vvanity: in ignorance he multiplieth words.

[CHAP. XXXVI.]—1 * ELIHU moreover continued,

2 and said, *^a Wait for me a little, and I will shew thee 3 that there are still arguments on ^bGod’s behalf. * I will now take up my ^cknowledge from afar; and to 4 my Maker I will ascribe ^drighteousness. * For truly my assertions shall be ^eunfeigned, and wholly acknowledged by thee.

5 * Behold, God is mighty, yet He despiseth ^fnone: 6 great in ^gpower, in mercy. * He granteth not strength to the ^hwicked; but rendereth judgment to the 7 ⁱafflicted: * He ^kwithdraweth not His eyes from the just; whether as to kings on the ^lthrone,—giving ch. xxx. 12; xxxv. 5, 6; xxxvi. 26-33; xxxvii. 1-5; Ps. viii. 4, 5; Isa. xl. 22, 23; Iv. 9; ch. xxxvi. 29; xxxvii. 16; Nahum. i. 3; Prov. viii. 7; ix. 12; J. r. vii. 19; ch. xxxii. 2, 3; 1 Chro. xxix. 14; Ps. xvi. 2; Prov. ix. 12; Rom. xi. 35; Josh. vii. 1-5; xxii. 29; Eccl. ix. 13; Job i. 12; ch. xxxiv. 12; xxxiv. 21; ch. xl. 9; Ps. x. 15; Isa. li. 13; liv. 5; ch. xxxii. 22; xxxvi. 3; Ps. xlii. 9; lxxvii. 7; cxix. 62; cxlix. 5; Acts. xvi. 25; 1 Prov. xxx. 24-26, 29-32; Prov. xxx. 19; i. 17; vii. 23; xxvii. 8; Amos. iii. 5; Ps. xxii. 3; xlv. 25; lxxviii. 15; Exod. ii. 23; iii. 7; Ps. ix. 13; xviii. 6; xxxiv. 16; cii. 18; cvi. 44; ch. ix. 11; xxxi. 3, 8-10; ch. ix. 19; xix. 7; Ps. lxxvii. 6-11; xvi. 2; Isa. xxx. 19; liv. 17; Mich. vii. 7-9; ch. iv. 5; ix. 15; Num. xx. 12; Ps. ii. 12; Hos. xi. 9; Luke. i. 20; ch. iii. 1; xxxiii. 2, 8; xxxiv. 35-37; xxxviii. 2; ch. xxi. 3; xxxiii. 33; ch. xiii. 7, 8; ch. xxxvii. 12, 13; Prov. ii. 4, 5; ch. xxxiv. 10, 12; Deut. xxxii. 4; Ps. xl. 7; cxiv. 17; Jer. xli. 1. Dan. ix. 7, 14. ch. xiii. 4, 7; xxi. 27, 31. Prov. viii. 7, 8. 2 Cor. ii. 17. ch. x. 3; xxxi. 13. Ps. xlii. 25; cxxxviii. 6. ch. ix. 4, 19; xii. 13-16. Num. xiv. 18. Ps. ciii. 11; cxlv. 8. ch. xxi. 7, 9, 20. Ps. iv. 24. Jer. xli. 1, 2. ch. xxix. 12-17. Ps. ix. 13; x. 14, 15, &c. ch. xvi. 9. Ps. xxxiii. 18; xxxiv. 15. Zeph. iii. 17. 1 Sam. ii. 8. Ps. lxxviii. 70-72; cxlii. 7, 8.

them continual stability, so that they are exalted;—

- 8 or when bound in ^m chains, and taken in the bonds of ⁿ affliction. * So He bringeth their works ⁿ before them, even their transgressions when they have ^o done proudly: * and their ^p ear is opened for correction; and He commandeth that they ^q return from iniquity.
- 11 * If indeed they hear and ^r obey; they finish their ^s days in prosperity, and their years in plenty. * But, if they hear ^t not; then they pass over to contempt, and give up the ghost ^u in ignorance.
- 13 * But the ungodly in heart ^v lay up wrath: they call ^w not when He ^x bindeth them. * Their desire dieth in ^y youth, yea their strength among ^z catamites.
- 15 * He delivereth the humble in his affliction; and their ear is laid open in ^a oppression. * Even so hath He urged thee by means of necessity, to find plenty,—the ^b place of which knoweth no restraint,—that He might fill the provision of thy table with ^c fatness.
- 17 * But thou hast ^d filled up the judgment of the wicked: both judgment and justice will uphold this.
- 18 * But let not ^e anger, neither much ransom, so cause thee to decline, that it urge thee on to contempt.
- 19 * Can thy ^f affluence then be opposed to Him?—No: neither wealth, nor all the ^g confirmed in might. * Pant not for the night, for the rising of the populace from ^h their places. * Take heed: ⁱ regard not iniquity; for on this thou hast placed thy ^j choice, rather than on affliction. * Behold, God ^k exalteth by His power:
- 23 Who teacheth like Him? * Who shall set up his ^l way against Him? or Who shall say, “Thou hast done ^m wickedly?” * Remember that thou ⁿ magnify His work, so that men may look upon it,—* all men may perceive it,—mortal man may ^o see it, from afar. * Behold, God is ^p great, and we cannot ^q comprehend Him;
- 27 yea the number of His years is ^r unsearchable. * For He draweth off the ^s water-drops: they are fused in rain instead of ^t His mist, * so that the clouds flow ^u down, they distil upon man abundantly. If, more—

Dan. iii. 16-18; vi. 10. Matt. xiii. 21. * 1 Sam. ii. 7, 8. Ps. lxxxv. 8. Isa. xiv. 5. Jer. xxvii. 3-8.
 Dan. iv. 25, 32. † ch. xxxiv. 13. ‡ ch. viii. 3; xxxiv. 10; xl. 8. Rom. iii. 5; ix. 14. § Ps. xxxiv. 3; lxxii. 10; lxxxvi. 8-10; xcii. 5, 6. ¶ 1 Chro. xxix. 12, 13, &c. †† Exod. xiv. 13. Ps. xxxiv. 8. Ps. xl. 4;
 lxxi. 5; xcvi. 6; cxlv. 10-12. ‡‡ ch. xxxvii. 5. Ps. cxlv. 3. ††† ch. xi. 7-9; xxvi. 14; xxxvii. 23; 1 Kings, vii. 27. †††† Ps. xc. 2; cii. 25-28. Heb. i. 12. ††††† ch. v. 10; xxxviii. 25-28. Ps. lxxv. 10-14.
 Isa. v. 6. †††††† Gen. ii. 6. ††††††† ch. xxxvii. 11-13. Prov. iii. 20.

* ch. xxxvii. 16 ;
 xxxviii. 9, 37.
 1 Kings, xviii.
 44, 45.
 Ps. civ. 3.
 * ch. xxxvii. 2-5.
 Ps. xviii. 14 ;
 xxix. 3-10.
 * ch. xxxviii. 25, 34, 35.
 * ch. xxxviii. 8-11.
 * ch. xxxviii. 13 ;
 xxxviii. 22, 23.
 Gen. vii. 17-24 ;
 xix. 24.
 Exod. ix. 23-25.
 Josh. x. 11.
 * ch. xxxviii. 26, 27.
 Ps. lxx. 10-14 ;
 civ. 13-15.
 Acts, xiv. 17.
 * ch. xxvi. 9.
 Ps. xviii. 12-14 ;
 cxlviii. 8.
 * ch. xxxvii. 2.
 2 Sam. xxi. 14, 15.
 * ch. lv. 14 ; xxi. 6.
 Exod. xix. 16.
 Ps. cxix. 120.
 * ver. 5.
 ch. xxxvi. 29, 33.
 Exod. xix. 16-19.
 Ps. civ. 7.
 * Ps. xcvi. 4.
 Matt. xxiv. 27.
 Rev. xi. 19.
 * Ps. xxxix. 3-5 ;
 lxxviii. 34.
 * Exod. xv. 7, 8.
 Deut. xxxiii. 26.
 * Ps. lxxvii. 20.
 * ch. xxxv. 27-33.
 2 Sam. xxi. 14, 15.
 1 ch. v. 9 ; ix. 10 ;
 xi. 7.
 Eccl. iii. 11.
 Isa. xl. 29.
 Rom. xi. 33.
 * ch. xxxviii. 22.
 * Ps. cxlviii. 16, 17 ;
 cxlviii. 8.
 * ch. xxxvi. 27.
 1 Gen. vii. 12.
 Ezra. x. 9, 13.
 Prov. xxviii. 3.
 * ch. xxxvi. 24.
 Ps. xli. 9 ;
 lxxiv. 9 ;
 clx. 27.
 Eccl. viii. 17.
 * Ps. civ. 22.
 * ch. ix. 9.
 Ps. civ. 13.
 ch. xxxviii. 1.
 Isa. xxi. 1.
 Zech. ix. 14.
 * ch. xxxviii. 29, 30.
 * Ps. lxxviii. 47 ;
 cxlviii. 16-18.
 * ch. xxxvi. 27, 28.
 * ch. xxxvi. 30, 32.
 Isa. xviii. 4.
 * Ps. lxx. 10, 11 ;
 civ. 24.
 Jer. xiv. 22.
 Joel. ii. 23.
 * Ps. cxlviii. 8.
 Jam. v. 17, 18.
 Rev. xi. 6.
 * ch. xxxiv. 29.
 Ps. lxx. 9, 10.
 * Exod. xiv. 13.
 Ps. xli. 11.
 Hab. ii. 20.
 * ch. xxxvi. 6-11. Ps. cxi. 2 ; cxlv. 5, 6. * ch. xxxviii. 24, 25. Ps. cxix. 9. Isa. xl. 26. * ver. 11. ch. xxxvi. 30 ;
 xxxviii. 24, 25. * ch. xxxvi. 3 ; xxxvii. 29. Ps. civ. 2, 3.

over, one could understand the spreadings of ^w the thick cloud, or the ^x rumblings of His pavilion!—
 30 * Behold, He ^y spreadeth His light over it: He also 31 ^z covereth the foundations of the ocean!—* For with these He ^a judgeth nations; He also giveth food to 32 ^b abundance. * With the palms of His hands He covereth the ^c lightning, and layeth His commands 33 upon it to destroy. * By it He ^d enounceth His will,
 the fierceness of His wrath against iniquity.

[CHAP. XXXVII.]—1 * At this, moreover, my ^a heart 2 beateth, and leapeth from its place. * Hearken attentively when His ^b thunder rageth, and when mur-3 murs proceed from His mouth. * Beneath the ^c whole heavens doth He dismiss it; and His lightning to 4 the extremities of the earth. * After it ^d roareth the thunder: He rumbleth with the ^e voice of his majesty:
 and none can trace ^f them, though His voice be heard.
 5 * God, I say, ^g thundereth wonderfully with His voice, working ^h mighty things which we understand not.
 6 * For to the ⁱ snow He saith, “ Fall thou to the earth,”
 —to the showering ^k rain also, and to the drenching 7 rains ^l of His might.—* For the sake of all men He sealeth it, that ^m all men of His creating may know.

8 * So the wild beast entereth into the ⁿ ambush-9 ment, and resteth in its dwellings. * From the ^o southern quarter cometh the whirlwind, and from the north-10 ern the cold. * By the blast of God is the ^p frost 11 given, and the sheet of waters congealed. * For 12 ^q irrigation moreover is the thick cloud stretched out: the spreading cloud ^r disperseth abroad His lightning. * So He ^s by His counsels turneth them perpetually about, that they may do whatsoever ^t He commandeth them for the earth, on the face of the 13 whole world: * whether for a ^u tribe, or for its land:
 surely for mercy He sendeth it forth.

14 * Hear this, O Job; ^w stand still, and consider ^x the 15 marvellous things of God. * Knowest thou when God setteth His mind on ^y them? and causeth His cloud to 16 send forth the ^z lightning? * Art thou acquainted with ^a the poisonings of the thick cloud,—things miracu-

* ch. xxxvi. 6-11. Ps. cxi. 2 ; cxlv. 5, 6. * ch. xxxviii. 24, 25. Ps. cxix. 9. Isa. xl. 26. * ver. 11. ch. xxxvi. 30 ;
 xxxviii. 24, 25. * ch. xxxvi. 3 ; xxxvii. 29. Ps. civ. 2, 3.

17 lous with the perfect in knowledge!—* because thy 18 clothes are warm, when the land is at ^b rest from the 19 south? * Canst thou ^c stretch out the clouds with 20 Him, ^d unyielding as the molten mirror? * Shew us what we ^e shall say of Him; for we cannot oppose Him 21 by reason of ^f darkness! * Shall it be told Him when I ^g speak? Or if a man have commanded that one 22 should be ^h destroyed?—* But now they cannot look upon the light, when it breaketh through the clouds;
 nor when the wind hath passed, and cleared them 23 away!—* From the north, indeed, cometh gold:—but upon God resteth fearful ⁱ majesty. * As for the Almighty, we ^k cannot discover Him. Great in ^l might and judgment, and infinite in ^m righteousness, He can-24 not be ⁿ answered. * Let men therefore ^o fear Him, for He ^p respecteth none of the wise of heart.

^b Luke, xii. 56.

^c ch. ix. 8, 9.

Gen. i. 6, 8.

^d Ps. civ. 2.

^e ch. xxvi. 8.

^f Ps. cxxxix. 7.

^g Prov. xxx. 2-4.

^h ch. xi. 8;

xxvi. 14.

ⁱ Ps. cxxxix. 7.

12, 13.

^k Ps. cxxxix. 5.

^l Ps. cxxxix. 20.

^j ch. xl. 10.

^k 1 Chron. xxix. 11.

^l Ps. lxxvi. 5;

xciii. 1.

^m Isa. ii. 10, 19, &c.

ⁿ ver. 19.

^o ch. xi. 7;

xxvi. 14.

^p Prov. xxx. 3, 4.

^q Eccl. iii. 11.

^r ch. ix. 19;

xii. 13;

xxxvi. 5.

^s Ps. lxxii. 12.

^t Ps. xxxvi. 6, 7, 8.

^u Isa. l. 2; lxxvi. 4.

^v Ps. cxxx. 4.

^w Jer. xxxii. 39;

xxxiii. 9.

^x Hos. iii. 5.

^y Matt. x. 28.

^z ch. v. 13.

^{aa} Eccl. ix. 11.

^{ab} Isa. v. 21.

^{ac} Matt. xi. 25, 26.

CHAPTERS XXXVIII.—XLII.

SUMMARY.

Jehovah himself now proceeds to determine the question at issue. He answers, therefore, from the whirlwind. By calling into question Job's knowledge, on the grounds of his recent birth and excessive impotence; hence averring, that ignorance lay at the bottom of all his complaints, 1-11. Enters particularly into these considerations, in order to convince Job of the folly of his reasonings, 12-15. Interrogates him as to the secrets of the deep, 16-18: as to the phenomena of the light; as to the treasures of snow and hail; as to the distribution of the light, the winds, the rains, and the course of the thunderbolt, 19-28: as to the production of the rain, the cold, the frost, the influences of the heavenly bodies on the earth; and whether Job can, by his command, direct their proceedings, 29-39. He next presses him as to his knowledge and influence, with respect to things on the earth. Whether he can undertake to provide for the ravenous beasts and birds; XXXIX. Whether he knows the times, seasons, and practices of the fugitive mountain tribes; of the fiercer and swifter beasts of the deserts, 1-7. Enquires whether he can command the more powerful animals to render him service, or can trust to them to secure his profits, 8-18: whether he has made the horse such as he is, courageous, powerful, and swift, 19-25: whether he regulates the properties of the more powerful birds, 26-30. XL.—Jehovah continues His interrogatories; and Job confesses his vileness and ignorance, 1-5. Jehovah resumes, calling upon Job to give evidence of his power; and declares that, when this is done, then will He justify and praise him, 6-14. Calls upon him to view His power, as evinced in the formation of the more powerful quadrupeds: states their astonishing properties, 15-24. Directs his attention to the monsters of the deep, and to their terrific characters, 25-32. XLI.—Digresses, in order to impress on Job the greater danger of contending with Him who formed these; and proceeds with an enumeration of their astonishing powers, fearful properties, and invincible tempers, 1-26.

- 1 * THEN Jehovah answered Job out of the whirl-
 2 wind, and said, * Who is this that darkeneth
 3 counsel by ^a words without knowledge? * ^b Gird up now thy loins like a man; for ^c I will ask of thee, and 4 shew thou unto me. * Where wast thou when ^d I founded the earth? Tell, if thou knowest distinctly.
 5 * Who hath appointed its ^e measures? for thou know-6 est: or Who laid down the ^f line upon it? * On what are its ^g bases fixed? or, Who laid its ^h corner-7 stone, * when the morning ⁱ stars sang together, and 8 all the ^k sons of God shouted?—* And He ^l fenced in the sea as with doors, when He brought it forth, and 9 it came out as from the ^m womb?—* When I appointed the cloud its clothing, and thick darkness its 10 ⁿ swaddling-band; * and brake over it my ^o decree, 11 and appointed a bar and doors, * and said: ^p Hitherto shalt thou come, and no farther; and here shall be stayed the pride of thy waves?
 12 * Hast thou since thy days commanded the ^q dawn, 13 and made the day-break to know its place? * To ^r take possession of the extremities of the earth; and 14 that the ^s wicked may be shaken out of it? * That it be changed as the clay of the signet, and that men be 15 set up as if accoutred for battle; * and from the wicked their light be ^t withholden, and the proud ^u arm be broken?
 16 * Hast thou entered into ^w the mazes of the sea, or 17 traversed, ^x searching out, the great deep? * Have the ^y gates of death been laid open to thee? or Hast 18 thou viewed the doors of the ^z shadow of death? * Hath thine understanding extended even to the ^a breadths of the earth? Tell, if thou knowest it all.
 19 * Where thou is the path on which the ^b blight rest-20 eth? And where is the station of ^c darkness? * That thou mightest seize it on its boundary, and that thou

^a ch. xxxiv. 35;
xxxv. 16;
xlii. 3.

^b ch. xl. 7.
Exod. xii. 11.
1 Kings. xviii. 46.
Jer. i. 17.

^c ch. xiii. 15, 22;
xlii. 4.

^d Gen. i. 1.
Prov. viii. 29, 30.
Ps. cii. 26;

^e civ. 5.
Heb. i. 2, 10.

^f ch. xi. 9;
xxviii. 25.
Prov. viii. 27.

^g Isa. xl. 12.
^h Gen. i. 9.
Comp. Ps. xix. 4:

ⁱ 2 Cor. x. 16.
^j 1 Sam. ii. 8.
Ps. xxiv. 2;
xciii. 1;

^k Zech. xii. 1.
^l Ps. cxviii. 22.

^m ch. xix. 2.
ⁿ ch. i. 6; ii. 1.

^o Gen. vi. 2.
^p ver. 10.
Gen. i. 9.

^q Ps. xxxiii. 7;
civ. 9.
Prov. viii. 29.

^r Jer. v. 22.
^s ver. 29.

^t Gen. i. 2.
^u ch. xxvi. 10.
Gen. i. 9, 10.

^v Ps. lxxv. 8;
lxxxix. 10
xciii. 3, 4.

^w Prov. viii. 29.
Mark. iv. 41.

^x Gen. i. 5.
Ps. lxxiv. 16.
vv. 4, 21.

^y ch. xv. 7.
Ps. xix. 5, 7
cxxxix. 10, 11.

^z ch. xxiv. 13.
Exod. xiv. 27.
Ps. civ. 22, 35.

^a ch. v. 14;
xviii. 5, 10.

^b Prov. iv. 19.
Isa. viii. 22.

^c Ps. x. 15;
xxxvii. 17.
Ezek. xxx. 22.

^d Ps. lxxxvii. 20.
^e ch. xxvi. 6.

^f Ps. ix. 14;
cvii. 10.

^g ch. iii. 5; xii. 22.
Matt. xvi. 18.
^h ver. 5.
Ps. lxxxiv. 17.

ⁱ Isa. xl. 29. Jer. xxxi. 37.

^j vv. 12, 13. Isa. xlv. 7. ^k Ps. xviii. 12; civ. 20. Amos, iv. 13.

- mightest make known the paths to its house ?
- 21 * Knowest thou this, because thou wast then ^dborn, ^d ver. 12.
- 22 and because the number of thy days is great ? * Hast ch. xv. 7.
- 23 thou entered into the ^etreasures of the snow, or viewed ^e ch. xxxviii. 6.
- 24 the treasures of the hail ; * which I have reserved for Ps. cxxxv. 7.
- 25 By what way is the ^glight distributed ? or the ^g ch. xxxvi. 31 ;
- 26 east wind dispersed over the earth ? * Who hath xxxvii. 13.
- 27 ^hdivided a channel for the waterspout, and a path for Exod. ix. 18, 24.
- 28 the ⁱthunderbolt ? * To give rain on a land, where Josh. x. 11.
- 29 there is no man, on the ^kdesert in which there is no Isa. xxx. 30.
- 30 human being : * to saturate the desolate and waste Ezek. xliii. 11.
- 31 place, and to make the pasture to send forth ? ^l vv. 12, 13.
- 32 * Hath the rain a father ? or, Who hath brought ^m ch. xxxviii. 26 ;
- 33 forth the vessels of dew ? * Of Whose ⁿbelly came xxxvi. 27, 28 ;
- 34 forth the cold ? and Who begat the hoary frost of xxxvii. 6.
- 35 heaven, * by which the waters are ^ohidden as ^o ch. xxxiii. 26.
- 36 with a stone, and the surface of the deep is taken cap- ^p Ps. civ. 10-14 ;
- 37 tive ? * Wilt thou bind to thee the sweet influences cvii. 35 ;
- 38 of the ^qPleiades ? or loose the bands of Orion ? * Wilt cxlvii. 8, 9.
- 39 thou bring out the ^rplanets each in its season ? or con- Isa. xli. 18.
- 40 sole ^sAyish for her children ? * Knowest thou the ^r ver. 8.
- 41 ^tlaws of the heavens ? Wilt thou appoint to each ch. xxxvii. 10.
- its ^urule on the earth ? * Canst thou lift up thy voice Ps. cxlvii. 16, 17.
- to the clouds, so that an ^vinundation of waters shall ^m ch. xxxviii. 10.
- cover thee ? * Canst thou send forth the ^vlightnings, ⁿ ch. ix. 9.
- that they shall proceed, and say to thee, Behold Amos, v. 8.
- us ?—* Who hath placed wisdom in the tempest ? or ^o 2 Kings, xxiii. 5.
- 37 Who given intelligence to the ^wthunder-storm ? * Who ^p ch. ix. 9.
- 38 can number the clouds by wisdom ? And who pour ^q Gen. i. 16 ;
- 39 out the ^xvessels of the heavens, * when the dust is ^q vv. 22,
- 40 compressed into hardness, and the clods have become ^r Ps. cxix. 90, 91.
- 41 united ? ^r Jer. xxxi. 35, 36 ;
- ^s Gen. vii. 4, 11, 12. ^s xxxiii. 25.
- ^t vv. 12, 13. ^t 1 Sam. xii. 18.
- ^u Amos, v. 8. ^u Zech. x. 1.
- ^v James, v. 18. ^v Exod. ix. 23-25,
- ^w Lev. x. 2. ^w Numb. xi. 1.
- ^x 2 Kings, i. 10, 14. ^x ch. xxxvi. 31, 32 ;
- ^y xxxvii. 3, 13. ^y Gen. vii. 4, 11, 12.
- ^z ch. iv. 11.
- ^z Ps. xxxiv. 11 ;
- ^z civ. 21 ;
- ^z cxlv. 15, 16.
- ^z Gen. xlix. 9.
- ^z Numb. xxiii. 24 ;
- ^z xxiv. 9.
- ^z Ps. civ. 27, 28 ;
- ^z cxlvii. 9.
- ^z Matt. vi. 26.

[CHAP. XXXIX.]—1 * Knowest thou the season in ¹ Sam. xxiv. 2.

which the ^zmountain-goats bear ? Observest thou Ps. civ. 18.

^a Ps. xxxix. 9.
^b Jer. xiv. 5.
^c Jer. ii. 24.

2 that of the calving of the ^bhinds! * Countest thou the ^cmonths they fulfil? or Knowest thou the time of their 3 bringing forth,—* when they couch down, give birth 4 to their young, and dismiss their pains?—* When they feed their young, nourish them without; and they go forth, and return unto them no more!

^d ch. vi. 5;
 xi. 12;
 xxiv. 5.
 Gen. xvi. 12.
 Ps. civ. 11.
 Isa. xxxii. 14.
 Jer. ii. 24;
 xiv. 6, &c.

5 * Who hath sent forth the ^dwild ass free? or, Who 6 hath loosed the ^ecords of the mule, * whose home I have made the wilderness, and his dwelling-places the 7 ^f'marsh-land? * He smileth at the multitude of the city; the tumult of the ^g'oppressor he regardeth not.

^h Gen. xlix. 14.
ⁱ Deut. xxix. 13.
 Ps. cvii. 34.
 Ezek. xlvii. 11.
^j ch. iii. 18.
 Isa. xxxi. 4.

8 * Of the abundance of the mountains is his ^hpasture, 9 and after every green herb doth he seek. * Is the ⁱOryx willing to serve thee? Will he lodge near thy ^k ch. xl. 15, 20-22.

 Gen. i. 30.
 Ps. cv. 14.

10 ^kcrib? * Wilt thou bind him with his cord for the furrow? or Will he harrow the valleys after thee?

^l Numb. xxiii. 22.
^m Deut. xxxiii. 17.
 Ps. xxii. 22;
 xci. 11.

11 * Wilt thou trust in him because his strength is great?
 12 or Wilt thou leave thy labour to him? * Wilt thou confide in him, that he will secure the return of thy 13 seed, and gather it into thy barn?—* In the exulting ⁿ ch. xxx. 20.

of the wings of the ^lostriches? Or in her choice fea-14 thers and head-plumage, * when she leaveth her eggs to the earth, and hatcheth them on the dust;

^o Lam. iv. 3.

15 * and ^mforgetteth that the foot may crush them, or the 16 wild beasts of the plain trample on them!—* when her young are so hardened as to seem not hers; her 17 labour ⁿin vain, and she without fear?—* when God hath ^owithheld wisdom from her, and hath not 18 endued her with understanding?—* When she is highly provoked, she ^plaugheth at the horse and his rider!

^q vv. 7, 22.
 ch. xli. 29.
 2 Kings, xix. 21.

19 * Givest thou ^qmight unto the horse? ^rClothest 20 thou his neck with ^sscorn? * Dost thou make him to rush on like the ^tlocusts, and the vehemence of his ^q Ps. xclvii. 10.

^r Ps. xciii. 1;
 civ. 1.
^s ver. 25.
^t Joel. ii. 5.

21 snorting ^ufearful?—* They ^wdig into the valley, and ^vglory each in his strength:—he ^xrusheth forth upon 22 the weapon! * He ^ylaugheth at terror, and is un-

^u Jer. viii. 16.
^v Judg. v. 22.
^w Jer. ix. 23.
^x Prov. xxi. 31.
^y Jer. viii. 6.
^z ver. 18.

daunted; yea he turneth not back from the face of 23 the spear! * Over him ring the quiver, the blade of 24 the spear, and of the lance. * In his rush and wrath he ^zdrinketh up the earth; and standeth not still ^z Hab. i. 8, 9.

- 25 when the trumpet soundeth ! * At the blast of the trumpet he saith ^b Ahah ! and scenteth the battle from afar, the raging and shouting of the princes. ^b Ezek. xxxvi. 2 ; xxxvi. 2.
- 26 * Is it of thine intelligence that the hawk moulteth, and spreadeth out his wings ^c to the south ? * Or is it at thy command that the ^d eagle mounteth up, and raiseth his nest on high ? That he inhabiteth the rock, and maketh his lodging on the ^e crags of the rock, and the fastness ! * That he spy out from thence his ^f food, and his eyes view it from afar ? * His nestlings too gulp down blood ; and where the ^g slain are, there is he ? ^c Jer. viii. 7. ^d Exod. xix. 4. Ps. ciii. 5. Prov. xxiii. 5. Isa. xl. 31. Hos. viii. 1. ^e 1 Sam. xiv. 4. ^f ch. ix. 26. ^g Ezek. xxxix. 17-19. Matt. xxiv. 28. Luke, xvii. 37. Rev. xix. 17, 18, 21. ^h ch. xxxviii. 1. ⁱ ch. xxxiii. 13 ; xxxiv. 33 ; xxxvi. 23 ; xxxviii. xxxix.
- [CHAP. XL.]—1 * JEHOVAH, moreover, ^a answered Job, and said, * Shall one by contending with the ^b Almighty correct this ? The impleader of God answer it ?
- 3,4 * Then Job answered Jehovah, and said, * Behold, I am ^c vile ! What then shall I answer Thee ? I will lay mine ^d hand upon my mouth. * Once have I spoken, ^e but I cannot answer ; yea ^f twice, but I will do so no more.
- 6 * Then Jehovah answered Job out of the ^g whirlwind, and said, * ^h Gird up now thy loins like a man : I will ⁱ ask of thee, and inform thou me. * Wilt thou even annul my judgment ? Wilt thou ^k condemn me, that thou mayest be just ? * Or Hast thou an ^l arm like God ? and Canst thou thunder ^m with a voice like Him ? * Deck thyself now with pride and ⁿ excellency ; yea, put on splendour and majesty.
- 10 * Disperse abroad the ^o fierceness of thine anger ; yea ^p look upon every proud man, and bring him down.
- 12 * Look, I say, upon every proud man, and fell him ; yea ^q overthrow the wicked in their place. * ^r Hide them in the dust together : close up their persons in safety. * Then will I also praise thee, because thine own right ^s hand can save thee.
- 15 * Behold now, the ^t beasts which I have made are with thee, each eating ^u grass like the ox. * Behold now, his strength is in his loins ; and his vigour in the firmness of his bowels. * He maketh his tail to
- ^c ch. xlii. 6. ^d Gen. xviii. 27 ; xxxii. 10, &c. ^e ch. ix. 31-35 ; xvi. 21 ; xxi. 5 ; xxxix. 9. ^f Judg. xviii. 19, &c. ^g ch. xxxiv. 31, 32. ^h Rom. iii. 19. ⁱ ch. xxxiii. 14. ^j Ps. lxxii. 12. ^k ch. xxxviii. 1. ^l Ps. i. 3, 4. ^m ch. xxxviii. 3. ⁿ ch. xlii. 4. ^o ch. x. 3 ; xxxvii. 2, 6. ^p Ps. lxxxix. 11, 14. ^q 1 Cor. x. 22. ^r ch. xxxvii. 4, 5. ^s Ps. i. 2 ; ciii. 1. ^t civ. 1, 2. ^u Isa. lix. 17. ^v 1 Chro. xxix. 11. ^w ch. xx. 23 ; xxxvii. 22. ^x Deut. xxxii. 32. ^y Ps. lxxxviii. 49, 50 ; cxliv. 6. ^z Rom. ii. 8, 9. ^{aa} Exod. ix. 17 ; xv. 6 ; xviii. 11. ^{ab} Isa. ii. 11, 12, 17, &c. ^{ac} Ps. lx. 13. ^{ad} Prov. xv. 25. ^{ae} Isa. x. 6. ^{af} Zech. x. 5. ^{ag} Mal. iv. 3. ^{ah} Rom. xvi. 20. ^{ai} ch. xiv. 13. ^{aj} Ps. lxx. 15. ^{ak} Isa. ii. 10. ^{al} Ps. lxxxix. 14, &c. ^{am} Gen. i. 24, 25 ;

^a ch. xli. 23.

^a Isa. xlviii. 4.

^b Ps. civ. 24.
Prov. iv. 7;
iii. 19;
viii. 22.

^c ver. 15.
Ps. civ. 14;
cxlviii. 8, 9.

^a Isa. xix. 6, 7;

xxxv. 7.
^b Lev. xxiii. 40.
Isa. xv. 7.
Ezek. xvii. 5.

^c ch. xxxix. 24.

^d ver. 26.

CHAP. XLI.
in the common Bibles.

^c ch. iii. 8.
Ps. lxxiv. 14;
civ. 26.

Isa. xxvii. 1.
^f Isa. xxx. 28;
xxxvii. 29.
Ezek. xxix. 3, 4, 5.

^f Ps. lv. 22.
Isa. xxx. 10.

^h ch. xxxix. 9-11.
ⁱ Exod. xxi. 6;
Deut. xv. 17;
ch. xxxix. 9.
^k ch. xxxix. 10.

ⁱ Ps. lxxiv. 14.

^m ch. xl. 4.

ⁿ ch. xl. 5.

^a Heb. xii. 21.

^b ch. iii. 8.
Gen. xlix. 9.

Num. xxiv. 9.
ch. xxxiv. 19.
Jer. xv. 5.

^d ch. xv. 8.
Isa. xl. 13.

^e Exod. xix. 5.
Deut. x. 14.
1 Chron. xxix. 11,
14.

Ps. xxiv. 1;
l. 12; cv. 16.
1 Cor. x. 26, 28.

^f 2 Kings. xix. 28.
Ps. xxxii. 9.
Jam. ii. 3.

^g Ps. lvi. 5;
lviii. 7.
Prov. xxx. 14.

^h Exod. xxviii.
11, 17, 21;
xxxix. 14.
Hag. ii. 23.

bend like the cedar: the sinews of his ^w thighs are 18 woven together. * His bones are as tubes of ^x brass, 19 his solid bones as bars of iron. * He is of the ^y first of the ways of God: his Maker hath given him his 20 weapon; * for the ^z mountains bring forth his provision, though all the wild beasts of the plain do gambol there.

21 * Beneath the wild lotus doth he couch, in the 22 covert of the ^a reeds, and in the mire. * The wild lotus covereth him with its shade; the ^b osiers of the 23 torrent surround him. * Should the river swell, he would not fear; he trusteth that he can ^c draw the 24 Jordan into his mouth. * Can one take him in his sight? or bore through his ^d nose when in the toils?

25 1 * Canst thou draw forth the ^e Leviathan with a ^f hook! or his tongue with a cord which thou lettest 26 2 down? * Canst thou place a reed in his nose? or 27 3 bore his jaw through with a thorn? * Will he multiply his supplications unto thee? Or will he say 28 4 "soft things unto thee? * Will he make a ^h covenant with thee? Wilt thou take him for a ⁱ servant for 29 5 ever? * Wilt thou play with him as with a sparrow? Or wilt thou ^h attach him to thy maidens?
30 6 * Will the companies bargain over him? Will they 31 7 ⁱ divide him among the merchants? * Wilt thou fill his skin with pikes? or his head with fish-spears?
32 8 * Lay thine ^m hand on thy mouth respecting him:
remember the contest, and go no ⁿ farther.

[CHAP. XLI.]—1 9 * BEHOLD, his hope shall fail.—
Shall not one be cast down even at the ^a sight of 2 10 him? * There is none so fierce as to ^b stir him up.—
3 11 Who then can stand before ^c me? * Who hath gone before ^d me, that I should fulfil his will; for 4 12 all beneath the heavens is ^e mine?—* But I will not be silent as to his powers, the relation of his might,
and the destructiveness of his array:—

5 13 * Who hath laid open the face of his coating?
Who can draw near to double his ^f nose-curb?

6 14 * Who shall open the doors of his face, when the 7 15 circuits of his ^g teeth are so dreadful? * His back is as the embossings of shields,—^h shut in fast as the 8 16 stone of a signet;—* one to another do they cleave, 9 17 so that a breath entereth not between them. * Each is united with its fellow; they are fast holden, they cannot be separated.

10 18 * His neesings give out light; and his eyes are 11 19 as the ^leyelids of the dawn. * From his ^kmouth proceed burning lamps, sparks of fire do escape. ^l ch. iii. 9.
^h Ps. xviii. 9.
12 20 * From his nostrils issueth smoke, as from a fire-13 21 blown ^lpot with burning reeds. * His breath en-kindleth ^mcoals, yea a flame proceedeth from his ^m 14 22 mouth. * In his ⁿneck lodgeth strength; and be-15 23 fore him doth ^osorrow exult! * The muscles of his flesh ^pstick fast together; each as metal fused upon 16 24 him cannot be moved. * His heart is firm as a 17 25 stone, yea hard as the nether ^qmillstone. * At his rising up the mighty are afraid; at his breakings 18 26 forth they are ^rconfounded. * He who approacheth him with a ^sweapon, spear, dart, or lance, shall not stand.

19 27 * He counteth iron as straw; brass as rotten wood.
20 28 * The arrow will not put him to flight; the stones 21 29 of the sling are turned with him into ^tstubble. * As stubble are clubs esteemed; and he laugheth at the ^t 22 30 noise of the spear. * Beneath him these are as points of the potsherd: he reclineth upon the spike 23 31 as upon the mire. * He causeth the deep to boil as a ^upot: the sea he maketh like a boiling pot of oint-24 32 ment. * After him shineth a path; one would think 25 33 the deep were hoary with age. * There is not his like upon the dust,—the creature made to be un-26 34 broken. * He looketh down upon every high thing;
he is sovereign over all the progeny of the fierce.

CHAPTER XLII.

SUMMARY.

Job, humbled by the consideration of the greatness and wisdom of God, ascribes all power to Him, and to himself ignorance and shame; affirming that now indeed he saw God in His true and all-overruling character, 1-6: Eliphaz is now addressed as to himself and friends; and on their part the judgment is, that their error was much greater than that of Job, 7-9: Eliphaz, and his friends, therefore now offer up their sin-offering by Job, who acts as priest; and the offering is accepted, 9-10. After this, the relatives and friends of Job resort to him; and, in addition to his great wealth, which was now double of what it had been, each makes him a suitable present, 11-12: a second family is given to the Patriarch; and he is blessed with an extraordinary long life in the enjoyment of it.—Upon the whole, Job's natural feelings had led him to complain, where his faith ought to have produced acquiescence and thanksgiving. Ignorance of God's great object in this, was undoubtedly the cause of all the errors of the Patriarch. Job's friends were still more to blame, because they had, by the scanty measure of their own understanding, attempted to determine what God would, or would not, do. While Job, therefore, peevishly lamented and complained of the ways of God, they determined, and impiously circumscribed, them.

- 1, 2 * THEN Job answered Jehovah, and said, * I know that Thou canst *do every thing, and that no imagination can be withholden from ^tThee.
- 3 * Who then shall thus darken counsel without ^e knowledge? But I have advanced,— and I perceived it not, —things too ^dwonderful for me; yea, I knew it not,
- 4 * Saying, ^eHear now, and I will speak; I will ask of thee, and inform thou me!—* By the hearing of the ^fear I have heard of Thee; but now hath mine eye
- 5 seen Thee. * Wherefore I am ^hvile, and I repent in dust and ashes.
- 7 * And it came to pass that, after Jehovah had spoken these words to Job, Jehovah said to ⁱEliphaz the Temanite, Mine anger is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends, because ye have not spoken of me that
- 8 which is right, as my servant Job hath. * Take unto you now, therefore, ^kseven heifers and seven rams, and ^lgo ye to my servant Job, and ^moffer up for yourselves a burnt-offering; and my servant Job shall ⁿpray for

* Gen. xviii. 14.
1 Chro. xxix. 11.
Isa. xliii. 13.
Jer. xxxii. 17.
Matt. xix. 26.
Luke, xviii. 27.
^b Ps. xlv. 22;
cxxxix. 3.
Jer. xvii. 10.
Ezek. xxxviii. 10.
John. ii. 24, 25.
^c ch. xxxviii. 2.
^d Ps. xl. 6;
cxxx. 1;
cxxxix. 7.
Prov. xxx. 2, 3.
^e Gen. xviii. 27, 30-32.
ch. xxxviii. 3;
xl. 7;
xxxiv. 32.
^f ch. iv. 12;
xxviii. 22.
Rom. x. 18.
^g ch. xxiv. 8, 9.
Num. xii. 8.
Isa. vi. 1.
John. i. 18, 14.
^h ch. ix. 31;
xl. 4.
Ezra. ix. 6.
Ps. li. 4, 10, &c.
ⁱ ch. iii. 11;
iv. 1, &c.
^j Num. xxii. 1, 14, 29.
1 Chro. xv. 26.
2 Chro. xxix. 21.
Ezek. xlv. 23.
Ezek. xiv. 14.

Matt. v. 2, 3, 24. ^m ch. i. 5. Exod. xviii. 12. ⁿ Gen. xx. 17. Jer. xiv. 11; xv. 1.
Heb. vii. 25.

you,—for his person will I ° accept,—lest I destroy you: for ye have not spoken of me that which is right as my servant Job hath.

* ver. 9.
 † Ps. ciii. 11.
 ‡ 2 Tim. iv. 14.

9 * So Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite went, and ° did according as Jehovah had said unto them: and Jehovah † ac-10 cepted the person of Job. * And Jehovah ‡ turned the captivity of Job, when he † had prayed for his friends:
 and Jehovah increased all that was Job's, to the ° double.

¶ Exod. viii. 27;
 xviii. 23, &c.
 † ver. 8.
 ‡ ch. xxii. 27.
 Eccl. ix. 7.
 * ch. v. 18-20.
 Deut. xxx. 3.
 Ps. xiv. 8;
 liii. 7;
 cxxvi. 1, 4.
 † Gen. xx. 17.
 Exod. xvii. 3, 4, 5.
 Num. xii. 2, 13,
 &c.

11 * Then came to him all his ° brethren, and all his sisters, and all who knew him before; and they ate bread with him in his house; and they ° bemoaned him, and comforted him over all the evil that Jehovah had brought on him: and they gave, each man, to 12 him one ° shekel, and each one ear-ring of gold. * So Jehovah ° blessed the latter times of Job, more than his beginning: for he had a flock of fourteen ° thousand, and camels six thousand, and a thousand yoke of oxen,
 and a thousand she-asses. * And he had ° seven sons ¶ ch. viii. 6, 7;

 xi. 6;
 xxii. 24, 25.
 Deut. viii. 18.
 1 Sam. ii. 7.
 2 Chro. xxv. 9.
 Prov. xxii. 4.
 Isa. xl. 2; lxi. 7.
 Jer. xvi. 18.
 Hag. ii. 8.
 Zech. ix. 12.
 ch. xix. 13, 14.
 Prov. xvi. 7.
 * ch. ii. 11;
 xvi. 5.

13 and a thousand she-asses. * And he had ° seven sons 14 and three daughters. * And he called the name of the first Jemima, and the name of the second Kezia, 15 and the name of the third Keren-happuk. * And it was not found, that there were women so beautiful as the ° daughters of Job in all the land. And their father gave them ° inheritance among their brethren.
 16 * And Job lived after this an ° hundred and forty years, and saw his sons, and his sons' ° sons, even four generations. * So Job died old and ° full of days.

Gen. xxxvii. 35.
 Isa. xxxv. 3, 4.
 † Gen. xxiv. 22.
 * ch. viii. 7.
 Deut. viii. 16.
 Prov. x. 22.
 1 Tim. vi. 17.
 Jam. v. 11.
 ° ch. i. 3.
 Gen. xxvi. 12-14.
 Ps. cvii. 38;
 cxliv. 13-15.
 † ch. i. 2.
 Ps. cvii. 41;
 cxxvii. 3.
 Isa. xlix. 20.
 ° Ps. cxiv. 12.
 † Num. xxvii. 7.
 Josh. xv. 18, 19.
 * Gen. xi. 32;
 xxv. 7;
 xxxv. 20;
 xlvii. 20;
 l. 26.

Deut. xxxiv. 7. Josh. xxiv. 29. Ps. xc. 10. † Gen. l. 23. Ps. cxxviii. 6. Prov. xvii. 6. § ch. v. 26. Gen.

xv. 15; xxv. 8. Deut. vi. 2. Ps. xci. 16. Prov. iii. 16.

END OF THE TRANSLATION.

A COMMENTARY
ON THE
BOOK OF THE PATRIARCH JOB,
CRITICAL AND EXEGETICAL.

A COMMENTARY

ON THE

BOOK OF THE PATRIARCH JOB.

CHAPTER I.

1. בַּאֲרָצֵי עֵינָן. In the land of Uz. See Introd. p. 28 et seq. קָם וְיָשָׁר, perfect and upright. The first of these seems to be synonymous with the Greek $\tau\acute{\iota}\lambda\epsilon\iota\omicron\varsigma$, 1 Cor. ii. 6; xiv. 20, &c.; and to signify, complete in every requisite of true religion, “thoroughly furnished unto all good works,” rather than perfect in the abstract; and hence, הַמִּצְוָה, ch. ii. 3, is rather the exercise of true religion than perfection, or integrity, in the abstract. Integrity, however, provided it be understood in a religious sense, is a very suitable word. The second, true, upright, or, “integer vitæ scelerisque purus,” as Horace expresses himself. Ib. וַיִּירָא, for וַיִּירָא, in constr. for וַיִּירָא, lit. and fearing of God. Gram. Art. 143, 3, and 106, 1. Ib. וַיִּסָּר, and departing. Participial noun of סָר, as קָם of קָם. Arab. وَالصُّورُ الْقَرْبُ, i. e. وَالصُّورُ, a horn; hence perhaps as a verb, صَارَ, inclinarit, fecit ut propenderet, convertit aliquod vultum: cogn. صَبَّرَ, icit, vergit, &c.

3. מִקְנֵהוּ, lit. his acquisition, i. e. wealth. Gen. xiii. 2, &c. r. קָנָה. Arab. قَنَى, acquisivit sibi oves, &c. Ib. וַיַּעֲבְדָהּ, and a great service, lit. i. e. retinue of servants. The first of these words occurs only in Genesis and in his book. Ib. בְּנֵי־הַמִּזְרָח, children of the East. See Introd. p. 30, &c. Strabo, Diodorus Siculus, and Pliny, tell us that these Scenite Arabs abound in herds, flocks, and camels.

4. וַהֲלֹכוּ וְגו'. And they went, &c. Used here, and occasionally elsewhere, like our own verb, go, went, signifying, go on, proceed with, &c. Gram. Art. 146, 2. Ib. מִשְׁתֵּהוּ, lit. a drinking, r. נִשְׁתֵּהוּ. Arab. شَتَّى, pluria hyemalis. Some have supposed these to have been birthday-feasts: but, as we read of no such things ever kept among the followers of revealed religion, I am inclined to believe that no such thing is intended. From the occurrence of the term הַיָּמִים, in the next verse, it is highly probable that, as these sons were seven in number, and each had his day, the coming about of a week is meant. The period of weeks was instituted in the very earliest times,—see Gen. ii. 2; vii. 10; viii. 10, 12; xxix. 27; L. 10; and my Sermon on the Sabbath, —and the probability is strong that a weekly period is here meant; and that each of Job's sons had, according to the order of seniority, his particular day of the week assigned to him for his feast. It appears from the subsequent context, that Job suspected this as evincing an inclination to idolatrous observances; and hence offered up burnt-offerings for each of them. Now, if this feasting consisted of nothing more than the mere enjoyment of one another's society at an ordinary meal, one can hardly see how Job could imagine his children to be chargeable with sin: but, if their assembling was attended with excess, he might fairly suppose that their practices were heathenish. This, however, does not appear from the text; still, to my mind, the probability is strong that they were chargeable with these practices: otherwise it is difficult to account for the mention of Job's offerings for them. It is certain, that among the ancient Persians it was customary to feast daily in the temples of each of those deities, respectively, after which the days of the week had been named: and if so, this might also have obtained in Chaldea; where, we find, the days were so named, as well as in those parts of Arabia in which Job resided. See Pococke's Specimen, Hist. Arab., p. 308, ed. 1806.¹ The best accounts which I have seen of these ancient heathen rites, is to be found in a work named the Dabistāni mulhāhib (دَبِستَانِ مَذَاهِبِ), or School of Religious. The author of this work tells us, in that part of it which treats of the religion of the ancient Persians,—and after describing the astrological properties, the colours, days, &c. ascribed to each of the seven planets,—that, در خورساري که جاي خوردن,

¹ The Arabs tell us, very learnedly of course, that their Friday (جمعة, Jumah, lit. coming together) was so called, because people assembled on it for the purpose of public worship. It may be doubted, whether any such reverence was paid to this day in Arabia, before the times of Mohammed; who, in imitation of the Christians in all probability, made this day a day of prayer. According to the author of the Dabistan, it was the day sacred to آناهيد, or Anāhid, or Nāhid, i. e. the Venus of the Persians, and Αφροδιτης of the Greeks: the Western Frige; whence our Friday. It is not improbable, therefore, that the جمعة, Jumah of the ancient Arabs, was named from a consideration altogether different from that of assembling for public worship.

بود در هر کده عام روز سفره کسفرده بود واقسام اطعمه واشربه
آماده هبج کس را منع نکردند ي هر که خواستي بخوردي—
In the khoodsār, which was the eating-room, a table was spread the whole day in each temple, and various sorts of meats and drinks prepared: they prohibited no one from eating; whatever he wished, he took. I cannot help thinking, therefore, that, as the feasting of Job's sons appeared to be so much of a piece with that of the idolaters of his neighbourhood, the patriarch had well-grounded fears that they were secretly inclined to idolatry.

5. וְהִצִּילָהּ וְגו'. And offered up, &c., i. e. as a priest, which could be done by none but the sons of Aaron under the law. It is also worth remarking, that Job here offered up a sacrifice for each of his children; which will shew that these were piacular sacrifices, carrying with them the true character of sin-offerings. *Ib. וַבְּרַכּוּ אֱלֹהִים, And have blessed
(the) gods, or idols, &c.:* Auth. Vers., "And cursed God," &c.; which has proved a monstrous difficulty to translators and commentators. I think this rendering is objectionable; because, in the first place, it would be perfectly unintelligible to any Oriental of this family. According to them, a curse was an imprecation, denouncing God's wrath upon some person or thing; but how such an imprecation could be made to be executed by God on God himself, is not easy to be imagined. See Isa. viii. 21, where a very different verb (קָלַל, revile) is used. In the next place, אֱלֹהִים was a very common name applied to false gods and idols, as every one knows who has looked into the Hebrew Bible. And again, to bless an idol is phraseology in use under the Old Testament: see Isa. lvi. 3. In 1 Kings, xxi. 10, 13, we have identically the same expression, probably meaning the same thing: for, take אֱלֹהִים in what sense we will here, the crime ascribed to Naboth merited death. For first, If אֱלֹהִים be here taken in the sense of idol, then, to give that to an idol which belonged solely to God, was, as above, a crime worthy of death; and, secondly, If אֱלֹהִים be taken in the sense of the true God, then, as the same blessing is said to have been ascribed to the king, the act was plainly idolatrous, and liable to be punished with death. My belief is, that the first of these is the sense in which the passage ought to be taken.

We have, with reference to this use of קָלַל, a remarkable passage in Exod. xxii. 27; viz., קָלַל לֹא תִקְלַל, lit. Revile thou not God; which our translators have rendered, "Thou shalt not revile the gods." Into this great mistake they were, no doubt, led by the Jewish commentators, &c.;

who told them, that by שֹׁפְטִים, judges were meant in this place:—a position which will, perhaps, hold good in no place, upon a little consideration. Besides, it is by no means necessary, that both members of the verse should signify the same thing. St. Paul's citation in the Acts (xxiii. 5), moreover, does not necessarily belong to the first member. All that Moses means here is, that no one should speak lightly or irreverently of God.

It may be objected, however, that, as idol-worship is not specifically mentioned in this book, but only the worship of the sun and moon, it would be to assume too much, to suppose that idols could have been intended in this place. I answer: In ancient heathenism, the sun and moon were, on principle, the primary objects of worship under the all-pervading deity then recognised. Images, or idols, were only supposed to represent these in one sense or other, and to contain, after consecration, some portion of the all-pervading spirit. Now, before Job's time, we have mention of Laban's gods (Gen. xxxi. 30), which he styles אֱלֹהֵי, my gods. Comp. ver. 32. In ver. 34, these are termed Teraphim, תְּרָפִים; which is only another name for an image, or idol. And, again, ch. xxxv. 2, Jacob commands his household to put away the strange gods that were among them; and, ib. ver. 4, Jacob is said to have buried them under a certain tree. That they were abominations, the context is sufficient to shew. If, then, these idols existed in the times of Laban and Jacob, and had been brought out of Mesopotamia, there can be no good reason for supposing, that they were unknown in the times and country of Job.

6. וַיָּהִי כַּהַיּוֹם הַזֶּה, which is elliptical for וַיָּהִי כַּהַיּוֹם הַזֶּה, So it comes to pass as on this day; i. e. the narrator is speaking of the event, as if it were present with him. See Gen. xxxix. 11, and Job, iv. 5; in the latter of which places we have עָתָה, restraining the tense to the absolute present. Gram. Art. 231, 10. On this usage Rosenmüller says, “הַיּוֹם Die quodam, ut pluribus aliis locis, He emphaticum aliquem designat, vid. Storr,” &c.; proving, beyond all possible doubt, that Rosenmüller, and before him Storr, had no just conception of this expression.—This, as I have shewn in the Introduction, is the account of a vision, intended both to give canonical authority to this book, and also to shew the reader its real scope and object. It is no objection to this view of the passage, that no mention of a vision occurs. No such mention occurs 1 Kings, xxii. 19, where the relation is very similar to this; and yet no one can doubt that it was a vision. The same may be said of Isa. vi. 1, &c., and of several other places. The passage may thus further be supplied — וְנִיחֵי בְּהֵיֹם הַזֶּה נִצְרָהּ וְנִבְלָא וְגו'; which will be necessary, in whatever sense we take it; and will fully assimilate it to the passages just pointed out. The best comments I have seen on places of this sort, are given by Theodoret, on Ezekiel, ch. i., where we have, Οὐκ αὐτὰς ἐθεώρουσιν τῶν ἀοράτων τὰς φύσεις οἱ θεσπέσιοι προφῆται, ἀλλ' εἰκόσματα τινα, καὶ ἐκτυπώματα εἰς χρεῖαν ἐκάστην ὑπὸ τοῦ μεγαλοδώρου δεικνύμενα. “Non ipsas vidisse divinos prophetas eorum qui cerni nequeunt naturas, sed similitudines, et formas ab eo qui magna largitur ad unumquemque usum ostensas:” and on Zech. i. 8–11: — Οἱ μὲν ὁρθόντες ὁῖλον ὅτι ἀόρατοι δυνάμεις ὑπάρχουσιν, εἰς διακονίαν ἀποστελλόμενοι, κατὰ τὸν θεῖον ἀπόστολον, διὰ τοῦς μέλλοντας κληρονομεῖν σωτηρίαν ὁρῶνται ὅς αὐτῶν οὐχ αἱ φύσεις ἀσώματοι γὰρ αὐταί· ἀλλὰ κατὰ χρεῖαν ἐκάστην ἐκτυποῖ τούτων τὴν θεωρίαν ὁ τούτων καὶ τῶν ἀπάντων θεσπέτης· καὶ τοῦτο ἡμῶς σαφῶς ἡ θεία διδάσκει γραφή, διάφορα αὐτῶν ὑποδεικνύσα τὰ σχήματα, κ. τ. λ. “Plurimum est, quos vidit, invisibiles virtutes esse, in ministerium missas, juxta apostolum, propter eos, qui hæreditatem capient salutis. Videntur autem earum non naturæ, sunt enim hæ incorporeæ: sed prout in singulis est opus, illarum speciem conformat qui et illarum ac rerum omnium est Dominus. Idque nos aperte divina scriptura docet, diversas earum figuras ostendens,” &c. See the Introduction, p. 13, &c.

Ib. בְּנֵי הָאֱלֹהִים. The sons of God; i. e. as in Gen. vi. 2, where these terms evidently mean the religious part of society, as opposed to the irreligious, in the sense in which these terms are used in the New Testament: but here, perhaps, as angels removed to the heavenly kingdom. In ch. xxxviii. 7, the angels seem to be meant; and the same is probably the case here, either as the spirits of good men, or not. Ib. וְהַשָּׂטָן, lit. the adversary. See 1 Chron. xxi. 1; Zech. iii. 1, 2; Rev. xii. 9, 10. It is absurd to object, as the modern Germans do, that this name could not have been known in the sense of a spiritual enemy before the time of the captivity. As well may any one attempt to prove, that no English word, not found in the authorised version of the Bible, was in use in England before the times of King James I. The existence of a tempter, and, in this sense, an enemy, was known as early as the times of the fall (see the Introduction, as above); and it can be of but little consequence, whether he was called בְּלִיַּעַל or וְהַשָּׂטָן, when both the words will designate the same person: and yet, it is on mere quibbles such as this, that the whole system of modern rationalism rests!

7. בְּרַחֲמֵי בְּרָחֵי. From running to and fro. Arab. شَوَّطَ تَشْوِيطًا طَالَ سَعْرَدَ — “Longius iter ingressus est.” Schul-tens in loc. Cogn. ^{שׁוֹאֵץ}, flamma fumi expers,—calumnia, contumelia. Whence, perhaps, Job, v. 21, שׁוֹאֵץ לְשׁוֹן, the reproach of the tongue. Comp. Ps. lxxiii. 9, and the passages cited in the Introduction, p. 82; in which the attack, running about of the tongue in a hostile manner, seems rather to be meant. Ib. cogn. ^{סֹוֹט}, scourge. Ib. וּמִהֲהִלְכָה בָּהּ, and from walking about in it. The verb in this form occasionally signifies the being accustomed to, or persevering in, any thing: as, Gen. v. 22, &c. It also means, when construed with ב, to walk about throughout any place, &c.: as, Gen. iii. 8; Zech. i. 10, 11, &c. Comp. 1 Pet. v. 8, which seems to be an allusion to this place.

8. הֲשִׁמְתָּ לִבְךָ עַל וְגו'. Hast thou set thy heart, or mind upon, &c., i. e. either for good or bad; but here evidently for bad. Ib. כִּי אֵין, “That there is none,” &c., as in the Auth. Vers., seems very ill to suit the context. I take it to be equivalent to the Latin nam or enim—see Noldius, ed. 1734, Jenæ, p. 370—and the passage to be parenthetical.

10. אַף שָׂכַרְתָּ, lit. Thou, thou hast hedged, or fenced about; the repetition of the pronoun is emphatic. Gram. Art. 223, 2. Ib. בְּעֵדוֹ, lit. for him; as in Gen. vii. 16; Exod. viii. 24; Lev. xvi. 6, &c.: which could hardly be expressed in English here.

11. וְאַיִלָּם. But, nevertheless, &c., adversatively, שָׁלַח יָדָךְ, lit. Send forth now thy hand, i. e. to strike and injure; as, Gen. xxii. 12, &c. Ib. אִם-לֹא עַל וְגו', If not, &c. Auth. vers. “And he will curse thee to thy face.” Marg. “If he curse thee not,” &c. It has already been intimated, that there appears to be no good reason for rendering בָּרַךְ by curse (ver. 5): I now say, certainly this place presents no such necessity; and further, no passage, requiring such a rendering of it, can to the best of my knowledge be found. See my Heb. Dictionary under this word. In the present instance, Satan recurs, abruptly indeed, to the former thread of his discourse (vv. 9, 10); insinuating that, so long as God gave prosperity to Job, so long indeed he would remain religious enough: so long he would be loud in his public services of praise and thanksgiving:—for, from ver. 5, it appears that he publicly officiated as a priest. “But,” says he, ver. 11, “put forth thine hand,” &c. He then suddenly changes his theme: אִם-לֹא—If not, &c., i. e. if Thou put not forth thy hand; if thou continue thy favours, וּבְבָרְכָהּ, then, i. e. accordingly (Gram. art. 235, 3), he will surely bless thee: or, sure enough he will bless thee. On this sense of אִם-לֹא, see Gen. iv. 7; xviii. 21; xxiv. 8, &c.: Nold. p. 71.

Ib. על־פְּנֵי, Before, or in, thy presence. Comp. Gen. xxiii. 19; Josh. xviii. 14, &c.; Nold. p. 571, &c. The LXX. seems to have given this sense. If we read εἰ μὴ (for εἰ μὴν, one of its readings), εἰς πρόσσωπόν σε ἐδλογήσασιν, the Greek will agree with the Hebrew, and all will be obvious and clear. It is remarkable, in ch. ii. 5, we have this very various reading! The mighty difficulty hitherto found in this place is, I trust, now removed.

14. על־יְדֵיהֶם. Near them, lit. At their hand; or, as we say, at hand. Syr. ܥܠܝܗܘܢ — παρὰ τὴν ἰδίαν . Matt. xiii. 14. Nold. Concord. p. 567, &c. &c. Ib. הַבָּקָר הָיָה הַרְשֹׁתָּה—The oxen were ploughing. The disagreement in both gender and number in the language here is remarkable, and ought not to be passed over in silence. First, הַבָּקָר ought to be considered as a nominative absolute (Gram. Art. 216, 10, &c.), having no real grammatical connexion with the following terms, equivalent to as to, with respect to, the oxen. Secondly, הָיָה, they were, is vaguely expressed, as to gender, but agreeing in number with the plurality implied in the generic term הַבָּקָר, ox, which includes the whole species generally; but here only Job's oxen engaged in ploughing his land. In the next place, as things unintellectual in themselves are often expressed in the feminine gender, we have הַרְשֹׁתָּה here in the feminine, apparently on that account (Gram. Art. 216, 7); and hence these apparent discrepancies: which will suffice to shew, how very different the notions and practices of the Oriental grammarians are, from those which we have obtained from the Greeks and Latins.

15. וַתִּפֹּל שָׂבָא. And the people of Sheba fell, &c. Supp. על־יהֶם, on them. The verb is here feminine, because nations, tribes, &c., are taken as mothers, or containers. Gram. Art. 215, 5, note. On שָׂבָא see the Introduction, § iii. “Nec prædones Σαβαῖοι, apud Strabonem, alii sunt quam incolæ Saba: urbis memoratæ.” Spanheim's Hist. Job., p. 100. Diodorus Siculus, lib. ii. § xlviii. Τὰ μὲν οὖν πρὸς τὴν ἕω μέγιστη κατοικοῦσιν Ἀραβίαις, οὓς ὀνομάζουσιν Ναβαταίους, νεμόμενοι χώραν τὴν μὲν ἔρημον . . . ἔχουσιν ὡς βίον ληστεικόν, καὶ πολλὴν τῆς ἡμέρου χώρας κατατρέχοντες ληστεύουσιν, ὅσους ὀσπμαχοὶ κατὰ τοὺς πολέμους. “Ad ortum solis Arabes, qui Nabataei vocantur, regionem partim desertam . . . incolunt. Vita igitur his prædatoria est, et accolæ longè lutéque incursantes, latrociniiis vexant, nec bello facile domantur.” Ib. וְאֶמְצָא, And I am only, i. e. hardly, escaped. On the use of the paragogic ה here, see Gram. Art. 234, 2.

16. וְזֶה וְזֶה. This, and this. Not unlike the Latin usage of hic et ille. Ib. אֵשׁ אֱלֹהִים, The fire of God. So called, perhaps, in allusion to Gen. xix. 24; where we are told that Jehovah rained down fire out of heaven. We shall, as we proceed, meet with other allusions to this catastrophe.

17. שָׁמֵי שְׁלֹשָׁה רְאִשִׁים. Appointed three captains, or heads. Exod. i. 11; v. 14, &c. So, in the Arabic, رَأْسٌ and رَيْسٌ, a head, or chieftain. The use of the verb שָׁמַע may be seen in this sense, Deut. xvii. 15; Josh. viii. 13; Hos. ii. 2, &c. On שָׁמַע see Introduction, p. 30, &c. “Nomades indè, infestatoresque Chaldæorum, Scenitæ (ut diximus) claudunt.” Plin. Hist. Nat. lib. vi. 32.

19. מִצְדָּר הַמִּדְבָּר. From the passage of the wilderness. Storms generally came on from the south (ch. xxxvii. 9) in these parts: whence I am induced to believe, that by עָבַר here is meant some tract of land, over which travellers passed towards the south; i. e. according to Cellarius, from Uz towards שָׁבָא, or Sabe, in a direction towards Arabia Felix: the same, perhaps, with the אֶרְחוֹת הַמִּצָּד, and הַלִּיכוֹת הַשָּׁבָא, of ch. vi. 19. Ib. וַיִּגַע בְּאַרְבַּע, And it touched (lit.), came in contact with, the four corners, &c. From this description, the great wind here mentioned must have been a tornado, or whirlwind: otherwise it could scarcely have attacked the house in all its four corners at once. Such whirlwinds are common in these countries, and they come (ch. xxxvii. 9, termed כּוֹפֵדָה), as we are told, from the south. Comp. Isa. xxi. 1.

20. וַיִּגַד אֶת־רֹאשׁוֹ. And shaved his head. This could not have taken place under the law of Moses; it being specifically forbidden, Lev. xxi. 5; Deut. xiv. 1. Job could not, therefore, have been a Jew; nor could this book have been recommended to the Jews under the law, on the supposition that he was a Jew. To tear the garments, however, was allowed; and was continued probably from the patriarchal times. Gen. xxxvii. 29, 34; Josh. vii. 6, &c. So also among the heathen. Liv. lib. i. 13; Sueton. in Jul. Cæs. 33, &c., as cited by Rosenmüller and others, ad loc. Plin. lib. vi. 32: “Arabes mitrati degunt, aut intonso crine!” this was on occasion of distress. Ib. וַיִּשְׁתַּחֲוֶהוּ, And he worshipped: apocopated form of וַיִּשְׁתַּחֲוֶה; hence, the accent being drawn back, וַיִּשְׁתַּחֲוֶהוּ, and, by Gram. Art. 87, 2, וַיִּשְׁתַּחֲוֶהוּ. These forms are used either to express an imperative sense, or to mark the consequent members of sentences. Gram. Art. 233, 3. The latter is the case here.

21. אֲשׁוּבָה שָׁמָּה, I shall return thither. The antecedent to שָׁמָּה, cannot, either in nature or by any Scriptural, or Oriental usage, possibly be אֲמִי preceding. The allusion manifestly is to Gen. iii. 19, which seems to have been so well known, as not to have stood in need of being cited at length: a thing by no means rare with the sacred writers. Rosenmüller thinks that the earth is taken metaphorically here, as is usual with the poets, for a common mother. But, if the earth is referred to at all, the passage just cited must have been alluded to; and, in that case, metaphor is worse than unnecessary. The passages, too, pointed out by him, viz. Ps. cxxxix. 15; Job, xvii. 14; Eccles. v. 14; will not apply here, even in the sense for which he cites them. The latter is, in all probability, copied by Solomon from this place in Job. Is it not to be regretted that so much trouble is taken, to make the sacred writers talk like heathen poets?

22. וְלֹא נָהַן הַתְּפִלָּה, And ascribed not wrong to God. On the force of נָהַן here, see Gram. Art. 154, 8, note. The next word, הַתְּפִלָּה, is made by Hottinger, and after him by Schultens and the German critics, synonymous with the Arabic تَنْفَل, and to signify cibum insipidum, salivationem, and thence futilitatem, &c. After all, however, I must confess I can see no propriety in the application of this to our context. I am, therefore, disposed to take another verb, viz. تَنَقَّل, as the real Arabic synonyme here, which is thus spoken of in the Soorah after Janhari, ويقال تركت بني فلان متناقلين, اي ياكلون الثفل اي الحب وذلك اشد حال البدوي اذا لم يكن لهم لبن ويتعشون بالحب. جعل ثفال بالفتح شتر كراة. —i. e. And it is said, I left the sons of such an one متناقلين, i. e. eating THUFL, i. e. seeds; which is the hardest case of the Badaweens: when they have no milk, they endeavour to live on SEEDS. A heavy-going camel is termed thaful: thifal, hard fare: also the lower stone of a hand-mill. As a verb, the word also signifies, sinking as sediment, &c. The prevailing idea, therefore, seems to be, heavy, hard, oppressive, or the like. In this place, therefore, severcity, hard or injurious treatment, seems to be intimated; and this I intend by “wrong” in the Translation. We shall recur again to this word when we come to ch. vi. 6. Comp. ch. xxiv. 12; Jer. xxiii. 13; Lam. ii. 14.

CHAPTER II.

3. לְבַלְעוֹ. To destroy him, lit. to swallow him. Ib. בְּחִזְקוֹ בְּהַפְעוּלוֹ, lit. making (himself) strong in his perfectness, i. e. his faith. See ch. i. 1.

4. עוֹר בְּעוֹר וְגו'. A skin for a skin, &c. This passage has usually been taken as signifying that a man, as commanded under the law, will redeem one thing by giving another in lieu of it; as, Exod. xxi. 23, נָפֶשׁ תְּהָרֵת נָפֶשׁ, &c.: and then, lastly, will redeem his own life by all his substance. I greatly doubt the accuracy of this comment; because I cannot see how it applies. For if, on this principle, Job would render like for like, as the law of retaliation required, it must be implied that some injury had been inflicted on some person or thing, before any redeeming price could be asked for: but no such injury is even hinted at here. Again, supposing Job to be willing to render all he had for his life, How, I ask, in this case is the accusation of Satan to be understood? Does he intend to accuse the patriarch of grievously sinning, because he was willing to preserve his life by giving up all he had? I must confess I can see no sin in this. The life is certainly of more value than meat, and the body than raiment. Nor can I further see, how such an act as this could necessarily lead to the impiety here predicted, unless we suppose that, with other things, the patriarch's faith in God was also to be given up.

The truth is, this is only a repetition, so far, of Satan's former accusation. He had already said (Ch. i. 9, &c.) that Job had not served God for naught; intimating, that as he had been made rich, his services had been amply paid for; and that, if his wealth were only removed, it would presently appear of what sort Job's faith really was. His wealth, however, had now been removed: it was, therefore, necessary to carry the accusation farther; and it is accordingly made to apply to his person, which hitherto had remained hale and healthy. The first suggestion, therefore, having failed, we now have, "touch his bone and his flesh." And it is then added, "all that a man hath will he give for his life:" insinuating, perhaps, that to give up all freely in such a case, is so far from being the mark of a truly religious man, that every one, religious or irreligious, will readily do it. By "skin for skin," therefore, seems to be meant nothing more than what we intend when we say, "Give every man a Rowland for his Oliver ; or, as the Hindustanees have it (ROEBUCK'S Oriental Proverbs, Part II. § 11.) :—

بات کي بات حرافات کي حرافات

A word for a word, and a joke for a joke.

And again : بهلي کا بهلا

Good for good.

And again : چام کي دام

The price of the skin.

Said of any thing that may be bought cheap.

And again : چمزي جاي دمتري نجاي

The skin may go, but not the pice (money).

English—“ You can get nothing of a miser but his skin,” which seems to me very nearly to suit our context. Job, it is urged, will, like other men, give up a worse thing for a better : but only touch his person ; put that in jeopardy by inflicting something like an incurable disease—and such Job's disease was—and then the true character of your religious man will appear ; his services then will cease. Ib. כִּי-לֹא-יִשְׁאַף, as before, Ch. i. 11.

6. בְּשִׁשִּׁי יִשְׁבֵּר. Preserve his person, or life ; i.e. afflict him to any extent, only let his life be spared. God will not give his faithful servant over to death, Ps. cxviii. 18 : an allusion probably to this place.

7- בְּשִׁשִּׁי יִשְׁבֵּר קָע. Lit. With malignant inflammation. Arabic, سَخَنَ, سَخِنَ, caluit, incaluit, aqua, &c. calore correptus fuit : and, as cited from Lebīd by Jauhari, implying disease such as to attenuate the person :

حَتَّى إِذَا اسْخَنَتْ وَخَفَّ عِظَامُهَا

So that its (or her) bones became hot and attenuated.

Implying, perhaps, that like Job, xxxiii. 21, from the loss of flesh, they appeared sharp and prominent,—“ ad ossa carnes apprimente” (Pliny). According to Michaelis, Isagog. in Vet. Test. § x. p. 56, &c. the disease inflicted on Job was “ the elephantiasis,” which was considered by the ancients as incurable ; it is described as having symptoms not unlike those described by Job, and is accompanied with tumours,—ὅσσοι ἐπανιστάμενοι, ἄλλοι παρ' ἄλλους, some rising near others, as Aretæus of Cappadocia, on the causes of acute and chronic pains, lib. ii. p. 70, edit. Boërhaave, tells us. Rosen. The leprosy has also been described as having these tumours, comp. Deut. xxviii. 27 with Job, vii. 7; also Exod. ix. 9, 11; Lev. xiii. 18-20, &c.; and Plin. Hist. Nat. lib. xxvi. § 5.

9. בָּרַךְ אֱלֹהִים. Bless the gods. See Ch. i. 5. Ib. בְּחִנּוּק וְגו'. See vr. 3, and Ch. i. 1.

10. הַמְקַלְלוֹת. The corrupt women. This word, like its equivalent among ourselves, is used to express both moral and physical corruptness: here, in the first of these acceptations, so Ps. xiv. 1; i. 3, &c.

11. הַטִּיב and הַרַע, must necessarily signify here, temporal good and evil, or prosperity and adversity, respectively; for, in this sense only, can they have any good application to the context. So Amos, iii. 6, &c.

13. שִׁבְעַת יָמִים וְגו'. Seven days, &c. That is, they sat with him a considerable length of time before they opened the question discussed in this book; not that they sat precisely seven days and seven nights, and said not so much as one word to him. See Introduction, p. 18; and Ezek. iii. 15.

Nothing was more common among heathens and Jews than to sit on the ground, and to sprinkle dust on the head when in distress, Heliod. Hist. Æthiop. lib. i. τῆς κερφαλῆς κόνιν καταχράμενον. Ib. lib. iv. κόνιν τοῦ τε προσώπου καὶ τῆς κερφαλῆς καταχράμενος. So likewise Seneca, Troad. l. 84, &c.

Solvite crinem, per colla fluent Mæsta capilli tepido Trojæ.
Pulvere turpes—

See too, 2 Sam. xiii. 19; Est. iv. 1; here, Ch. xlii. 6; Jer. vi. 26; Matt. xi. 21, &c.

CHAPTER III.

1. וְנִקְלַל וְגו'. And reviled, &c.: usually, “and cursed,” &c., which appears to me to be too strong, and what is never really intended by the word here used. Cursing is an imprecation made by a direct appeal to God for vengeance; which cannot be said to be done here. אֶת־יָמִינוּ. His day: i. e. his natal day.

2. וַיַּעַן. Usually, “And he answered:” Auth. Ver. “spake.” In the former sense there would seem to be a pleonasm here, which has been considered as a sort of archaism, marking the simplicity of these ancient times. I think there is another, and perhaps a better, reason for it. The primitive and precise meaning of the root נָדַד , Arab. عَنَى , appears to be, producing, bringing forth, as the earth does its herbs, &c.; and this, when applied to speech, will signify, to give out, i. e. to explain, as in the very common Arabic يُعَنِي , he, or it, means, and مَعْنَى , meaning, signification, &c. In the place in question, So Job explained and said; which, if any thing on the subject has been said before, might very well be translated by, So he answered, &c. The precise force here would perhaps be, So Job gave his mind, and said; or the like. I have adhered to the Auth. Vers., which is, perhaps much nearer to the original than the translators were aware.

3. אָמַר בּוֹ . In which I was born. אָמַר . Lit. He said; i. e. some one said, impersonally: equivalent to the passive with us, it was said.

4. יְהִי הַשָּׁד . Lit. Let it be darkness, &c. which appears to shew the full extent to which Job's reviling was to extend: not that it should be a day of war, pestilence, or famine; but merely one of which no happy account should be taken, and, in this sense (יָאָבַד), perish, is used Prov. xxxi. 6, &c.

5. בְּמַהֲרֵי יוֹם . The blackest things of day. The great difference of opinion which has existed on this word and its application, may be seen in Schultens, Rosenmüller, and Poole. It will be enough for me to give it the best interpretation I can. Now, as the preceding nouns, viz. הַשָּׁד , בְּלִמְנוּחַ , and קֶבֶר , signify things inanimate; to preserve unity in the context, בְּמַהֲרֵי יוֹם ought to signify something inanimate likewise. It would be incongruous, I think, to speak of darkness, the shadow of death, and a cloud, in the former part of the verse or parallelism, and, in the latter, to speak of persons. For this reason, I dismiss every idea of this word's signifying persons. In the next place, as it is customary in the Arabic to form a sort of superlatives in words signifying colour, deformity, and the like, by reduplicating the last radical letter, and occasionally introducing ס , נ , or י ; and, as the root of this word, viz. כָּחַר , contains the notion of blackness, I conclude that בְּמַהֲרֵי יוֹם is some such superlative. Again, as it is usual, in the languages of this family, to intimate prosperity by using the terms light, the sun, white, &c., and adversity by those of a contrary character; and, as the former part of this verse is manifestly of this description, I have no doubt the same is the case in its latter part, and that our word has been introduced here in this sense. Syr. ܫܚܝܘܢܐ , tristatus, contristatus: ܫܚܝܘܢܐ , atratus, &c. Hebrew, Gen.

xlili. 30; 1 Kings, iii. 26; Hos. xi. 8; Lam. v. 10; Examples of the forms mentioned are, חֲקֵלְלִי, Gen. xlix. 12; כִּפְרִיר, Prov. xxvii. 15; שְׁפָרִיר, Jer. xliii. 10. See, also, Gram. Art. 169, 7. The (-) occurring here instead of (.), is of no consequence; no reliance can be placed on niceties of this sort, especially as (-) and (.) often take place one of another. By יוֹם יוֹם הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה, therefore, I understand, Let the darkest, blackest, circumstances, events, &c. of day, or attending the transactions of a day, make it frightful, terrific, or the like.

The Dies atrati, or nefasti, of the heathen were seasons of sorrow, and in which no joyous sound was allowed to enter. Plut. de Is. et Os. 'Ο δὲ ξενοκρατίας και τῶν ἡμέρων τὰς ἀποφράδας, και τῶν ἐσπῶν ὄσαι πληγὰς τινὰς ἢ κοπιετοῦς, ἢ νηστείας, ἢ οὐσφημίας, ἢ αἰσχρολογίαν ἔχουσιν, οὕτε θεῶν τιμαῖς οὕτε δαιμόνων αἰεταί προσήκειν χροησῶν, κ. τ. λ. “Xenocrates etiam nefastus dies, et ferius in quibus verbera, plunctus, jejunia, mali omnis voces aut obscena dicta usurpantur, neq; deorum convenire venerationi,” &c. See Seneca in Agamem. l. 661, &c. Rosenm.

6. אֶל־יִחַד. Let it not rejoice, according to the vowel-points; i.e. the apocopated present יִחַד of the root יָחַד: but the context is sufficient to shew that this is a false punctuation. יָחַד, cogn. אָחַד, Arab. وَحَدٌ, unicus fuit: and here to be read יִחַד for יִיחַד, unite, be one with, &c. is most likely the true reading, and so the LXX., the Vulgate, the Syriac, and Chaldee Targumist, have taken it.

7. יָהִי בְלִבּוֹר. Lit. Let it be sterile: Arab. جَلْمُودٌ, any thing hard and ungiving. The word here, however, is opposed to רִנְנָה, song; and must, therefore, mean sterile, or un-giving, in this sense: which I have rendered joyless. Comp. Ch. xv. 34; Isa. xlix. 21; and note on Ch. ix. 4.

8. יִקְבְּרוּ. Let them stigmatise it. r. קָבַר; Arab. نَقَبَ, perforavit; نَقَبٌ, rubigo, quod perforat et exedit. Gol. See Lev. xxiv. 16, &c. Ib. אֲרֵרֵי יוֹם. Lit. Cursers of day. Comp. Jer. xx. 14, whence it appears that it was not unusual for those who felt themselves to be in great distress to curse, i.e. proscribe, the day of their birth. Ib. הַעֲתִידִים עֲרַר לְיָהוֹן, Who are about, or are ready, to excite, stir up, a Leviathan. This word appears to be compounded of לָוִי, twisting, &c. and רָגַן, monster, out of which, as a plural of excellency, we have תִּפְגִּין, and תִּפְגִּים, Ch. vii. 12; Ezek. xxix. 3, &c; and, therefore, is synonymous with בְּרִישׁ קָרִיחַ, and בְּרִישׁ בְּרִישׁ, with which it is joined, either together, or in the parallel in Isa. xxvii. 1. The meaning here in Job obviously is, that, as this creature is so dreadfully fierce, none but the most desperate and hopeless would attempt to stir him up. Comp. Ch. xli. 2: whence the expression appears to be proverbial. And so Saadi, in the first tale of the Gulistān:

وقت ضرورت چو نماند گریز دست بکپرد سر شمشیر تیز

In the time of necessity, when no means of flight remains, the hand takes hold of the point of the sharp scymiter.

And again:

إِذَا يَأْسَ الْإِنْسَانُ طَالَ لِسَانُهُ كَسْتَوْرِ مَغْلُوبٍ يَصُورُ عَلَيَّ الْكَلْبُ

When the man becomes hopeless, his tongue grows long, just as the conquered cat rushes upon the dog.

The natural animal meant is, I believe, the whale, or some such monster. See the notes on Ch. xli. But, as all spiritual things were necessarily named at first from natural objects; so, either the serpent on land, (for other specific reasons likewise), and this animal in the great deep, were taken to represent man's great and subtle spiritual enemy: which the passage just pointed out in Isaiah is sufficient to shew.

Satan's residence with his hosts in hell, and occasionally visiting this world,—so admirably versified by Milton,—contains any thing but the Scriptural account of his person, agents, and actions; which tells us, that he is the prince of the power of the air, who worketh in the children of disobedience; that he goes about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour (see Ch. i. 7, above, &c.); that he resides in dry places, and in the great deep, out of which he occasionally ascends (Rev. ix.): and this notion seems not yet to be forgotten in the East. See my Translation of the Travels of Ibn Batuta, p. 180. In Isa. xxvii. 1, the destruction of this Leviathan, or tortuous and fugitive serpent, is clearly foretold as a consequence of the coming of Christ. See, also, Job, xl. 25; xli. 2, 26, with the notes. The Neptune of the heathen—for heathenism was, at first, a mere system of dissent from revealed religion—would answer to the description here, should the context have applied to them. And, it is remarkable enough, we find this very infernal deity stirred up, in Virgil, by the prayers of Æneas for the safety of his fleet. Æneid, lib. i. 131:

“*Disjectam Æneæ toto videt æquore classem; Fluctibus oppressos Troas cœlique ruina.
Nec latere doli fratrem Junonis et iræ.*”

Juno, it may be remarked, had had recourse to a similar deity, Æolus, in order to get relieved from the uneasiness which she felt at the success of Æneas.

10. פָּלַחְתִּי בִּטְנִי. Lit. The doors of my belly; i.e. of that which bore me, my mother's. To close, or open, the womb, is usual Scripture phraseology. See Gen. xvi. 2; xx. 18; Isa. lxi. 9, &c. וַיִּסְתֵּר. Lit. And it conceal; i.e. this circumstance, conceal trouble from mine eyes.

11. לָמָּה לֹא אָמַרְתִּי. Why die I not. A very good instance to shew that this form of the verb cannot in itself imply futurity. Here, too, we have no conversionum—the Leviathan of the modern Jews, and of their admirers; so that we have here no way of explaining the passage, except by supposing—what, indeed, is the fact—that this really is a present tense, used like the Greek and Latin, and even English, historic tenses. See my Heb. Gram. Art. 231, 10. The verbs, אָמַרְתִּי, אָמַרְתָּ, אָמַרְתֶּם, and אָמַרְתִּים, following, are similarly situated. To the classic and Arabic illustrations of this passage given by Rosenmüller, &c. may be added the following from Sharishi's Commentary on the 29th Makamat of Hariri:

فيا لبت أمي لم تلدني ولبتني
رجعت الي الامر الذي قال لي عمر
ويا لبتني ارعي الخاض بقفرة
وكنت اسيراً في ربيعة او مضر
ويا لبت لي بالشام ادني معبشة اجالس قوي ذاهب السمع والبصر

O, would my mother had not borne me!

That I had returned to the state which Omar named.

O that I could but feed young camels in a desert;

Or were a prisoner with (the tribe) Rabia or Moddar!

Or, O that I had in Syria the poorest subsistence,

Accompanying my people, deprived (even) of hearing and sight!

And a little earlier:

تحن مع الدهر في اعاجيب
فمنسأل الله صبر أيوب
افقرت الارض من محاسنها
فابك عليها بكاء يعقوب

*We are among the wonders of the age!
So we ask of God the patience of Job.
The earth has become poor, as to its virtues.
I weep, therefore, for it the weeping of Jacob (i. e.*

when he had lost his son Joseph).

14. הַבְּנִיִּים הַקְּרוּבוֹת. Who build up, i. e. at that time desolations; i. e. things, or places, which have since become desolate. This abrupt mixing up, or confusion, of the several periods of the narrator, and matter of narration, is by no means unfrequent in the nervous style of the Hebrews. See Ch. xxii. 6, &c.

15. זָהָב לָבֵי. Lit. Gold to them; i. e. had gold, as in Latin. Strabo, Diodorus Siculus, Pliny, and Scripture itself, tell us that the finest gold is found in Arabia, as cited in the Introduction, p. 55, &c.

16. פְּנַפֵּל. Lit. As a falling. So the Arabic ^عسقط, abortus, abortivus, &c. Comp. Eccl. vi. 3.

17. הִדְלִי רָגְוֹ. They have ceased troubling. These abstract verbal nouns are very nearly allied to our infinitives, and often take לְ, our to, as a prefix, as in לְיִשְׁוֹת, &c. Gram. Art. 222, &c. This perturbed and unquiet character of the wicked is powerfully described in Isa. lvii. 20. יְבִי צַחַת יְבִי צַחַת. Lit. The wearied of might; i. e. persons remarkable for their strength, and perseverance in human labours and achievements. Here, says the mourner, their prodigious efforts end.

18. נִשְׁפָּנְנִי. They take refreshing, or sweet, rest. Syr. ^פפ, placavit. Samar. נִשְׁפָּן, depressus. The augmentation taking place in the latter part of the word, as in certain nouns, seems to have the effect of giving a superlative sense to it. נִשְׁפָּנְנִי is, perhaps, a further augmentation; being probably a compound of שָׁלַח and נִשְׁפָּן, or נִשְׁפָּנְנִי. See Ch. xxi. 23. Ib. נִגְשָׁ, exactor, i. e. of a debt, task, &c.; a slave-driver, Exod. iii. 7; v. 6, &c. Arab. نَكَّشَ, agitavit, compulit dispersos camelos. Cogn. سَكَّطَ, scrutator, inquisitor. Æth. Ἰῆϩ, regnavit: Ἰῆϩ, rex, tyrannus.

19. עֲבָד. Slave. This word must, from the context here, signify slave, not “servant.” So also, the עֲבָדִים following must signify lord not “master,” in the feudal sense.

In M. de Sacy's edition of the Makamāt of Hariri, we have the following, p. oqq—

وَالْمَنْزِلِ الْقَعْرِ الْخَلْيِ	أَهَا لَهْ بَيْتِ الْبَلْيِ
وَاللَّاحِقِ الْمَتْبَعِ	وَمَوْرِدِ السَّعْرِ الْأَدْيِ
قَدْ ضَمَهُ وَاسْتَوْدَعَهُ	بَيْتَ بَيْرِي مَنْ أُوْدِعَهُ
قَبْدٌ ثَلَثَ أُذْرِعِ	بَعْدَ الْغَضَاءِ وَالسَّعَةِ
دَاهِيَةٌ أَوْ أَبْلَةٌ	لَا فَرْقَ أَنْ يَحْلَهُ
مَلِكٌ كَمَلِكِ تَبَعِ	أَوْ مَعْسِرٍ أَوْ مَنْ لَهْ

“Alas! his is the house of corruption, and the empty inn of his desert-journey: the alighting place of him who journeys first, and the remaining one with him who follows. A house,—whoever is seen consigned thereto,—which shall safely keep him; and, after his wealth and plenty, the restraint of three ells-space. It differs not whether the experienced wise, or the very fool, descend into it; whether the miserably poor, or he who has the wealth of one of the Tobba (i. e. of ancient kings of Arabia Felix).”

Shakespeare’s 3d Part of Henry VI. Act V. Scene II. has a similar passage, spoken by Warwick when dying—

“My parks, my walks, my manors, that I had,
Even now forsake me; and of all my lands
Is nothing left me but my body’s length!
Why, what is pomp, rule, reign, but earth and dust?
And, live we how we can, yet die we must.”

And again, in Prince Henry’s speech on the death of Hotspur—

“When that this body did contain a spirit,
A kingdom for it was too small a bound;
But now, two paces of the vilest earth
Is room enough.”

20. יָתֵן. Does he, some one; impers. give, &c. This impersonal usage of the verb may be construed generally by our passive, as, is it given, &c. Ib. לְמַרְי נֶפֶשׁ. To the bitter of soul. See Ch. xxi. 25; Prov. xxxi. 6. Persons in grievous circumstances.

21. הַיְחַדְּסִים. Lit. The expectants. Generally participial nouns, as ver. 14 above, with the definite article, are equivalent to the verb with אֲשַׁר. Ib. וְאֵינֶנּוּ. Lit. And it is not. For the force of the epenthetic ך here, see Gram. Art. 235, 3. Ib. מִמְּבֹרָיִם. Than hidden things or treasures. From the great instability of all eastern governments, treasures were, no doubt, often hid and found; and hence this became proverbial, Prov. ii. 4. The Orientals have still also an adage, as given by Saadi, كُنْجٌ بِي مَارِ تَبَاشِد, There is no treasure without a snake; intimating the difficulty and danger attendant on getting wealth.

22. בְּלִי-גִיל. To exultation. Arab. جَالٍ (r. جول), obivit, circumcivit: whence جَائِلٌ, gyrus; جَيْلٌ, generatio,—i. e. the period of time so termed. Cogn. בְּלִל, volvit. Arab. جَلَّ, annosus exasit, &c. The notion seems to have originated in the custom of dancing in circles, as now practised by the eastern dervishes. Isa. xlix. 13; Hos. ix. 1, &c.

23. לְדָבָר. To the man. The construction is here taken up from ver. 20, vv. 21, 22 being parenthetical. So Rom. xi. 23–26, part of ver. 23, vv. 24, 25 being all parenthetical, and the beginning of ver. 26 concluding the proposition,—a passage which, from this circumstance, has been universally, I believe, misunderstood. Ib. דָּרְבּוֹ נִסְתָּרָה. His way covered; i. e. as we say, “under a cloud.” So the Persian poet, as cited by Sir Wm. Jones, Persian Grammar, ed. 9, p. 98:

آيِ دَرِيغًا وَآيِ دَرِيغًا وَآيِ دَرِيغًا كَانُجْمَانِ مَاهِي نِهَانِ شُد زِيرِ مِينِغِ

Alas! alas! alas! that such a moon should be hidden under a cloud. Comp. Isa. xl. 27.

Ib. וְנִקְדָּה. And hath fenced. Here fenced in as it were with thorns, in order to restrain or imprison. Comp. Lam. iii. 7, 9; Hos. ii. 8; Ch. xii. 14; xix. 8.

24. לֶחֶמִי. Lit. My bread. Bread is usually put for food, and occasionally for a feast. Here, more early and more constantly than food, are the visitations of sorrow to which Job is exposed, repeated. Ib. וַיִּתְכּוּ. And they poured; r. נָתַךְ. Arab. تَكَدَّ, traxit vi, prehensamque fregit rem.

25. בִּי פָחַד רַבּוֹ. For I greatly, or continually, feared; that is, as the subsequent context shews, my watchfulness, my fear of God—of offending—was in no case neglected: to which יִגְדַּרְתִּי may be considered as in apposition, and synonymous. Notwithstanding all this, affliction came upon me. So also,—

26. לֹא שָׁלַחְתִּי. I sluckened, or relaxed not, in any of these respects; neither took I repose, or became confident, וְלֹא

וְיָבֹא רָעוֹ; still vexation came on, or in. See the LXX. and Syriac. If I rightly apprehend the drift of the context here, Job means to have it understood, that he is conscious of no instance in which he has relaxed from his religious obligations; of no season in which his fear and love of God have waxed weak: and, on this account, it was the more perplexing that such a complication of miseries had befallen him. The best answer to all which is, the matter found in the two preceding chapters.

CHAPTER IV.

I. אֱלִיפָז הַתֵּמַנִּי. Eliphaz the Temanite. See the Introduction, § III. Job having stated his views and feelings so far, it was natural that his friends should offer their opinions both on his reasoning, and his case; and, if we can suppose them to have been men acquainted with true religion, we shall see how they would be interested as to the views and reasonings now had recourse to. Their friend they saw exercised with the heaviest afflictions: God, they almost necessarily thought, must have inflicted them: and this, they also thought, considering His goodness and wisdom, could hardly have taken place had not grievous sin, on the part of Job, called for it. On this ground their reasonings seem to have been conducted; and, as the question thus viewed, led to the doctrine as to how a man could be just with God,—and embraced in its range all that the disputants knew of former revelations, events, experience, and the like,—the discussion yielded matter of the greatest value and interest. The doctrines delivered are, all of them, of inspired authority, as their occurrence elsewhere in the Holy Scriptures is sufficient to shew: all that is objected to them, at the close of the book, is not directed against them as truths, but only to their application by Job's friends.

2. הֲנִסָּה דָבָר. Lit. Whether a taken up word, &c. I take נָסָה here, as written for נָשָׂא, third per. pret. mase. Niphthal r. נָשָׂא, which is often construed with בִּישָׁל, proverb, much in the sense of דָּבָר here. Ib. אֶלֶיךָ for אֶלַיךָ. Respecting, about, or against, thee. Ib. הֲתִלָּסָה. Wilt thou be weary, or offended? r. לָסָה, Gen. xix. 11, &c. Arab. لَسِيَ, coarctatus fuit, lentus fuit, &c. Syr. لَب, laboravit, &c. Arab. cogn. لَوَاءٌ, difficultas, angustia, &c. لَوِيَ, flexit, contorsit membrum. If the verb נָסָה be taken here in its own proper sense, the meaning will then be, Wilt thou take a word attempted against thee hardly or offensively? i.e. consider as hard and tiresome: which is, perhaps, as good as the former rendering. Ib. וְדַעְתָּ בְּמַלְיָי. I take the precise sense of מַלְיָי to be decisive, arguments, or the like, from the root מַלַל, cogn. with נָמַל, to cut, crop, &c. as shewn Ch. xxiv. 24. This difficulty felt by Eliphaz was also felt by Elihu, Ch. xxxii. 2, 3, &c., and occasionally by David and the prophets, when moved by the Holy Spirit to make the will of God known to men. See notes on Ch. xxxii. 18, 19, 20.

3. יִפְרֶתָּהּ. Thou hast corrected. Very nearly synonymous with the English, signifying to set right, punish, &c. Ib. יִתְחַזַּק. Lit. Strengthenest. I remark: We have no conversivum here; the present seems to associate itself with the past of the context without this necessary—as some will have it—converting particle.

4. בּוֹטֵל. Stumbling person. Arab. كَسِيئٌ, iners, piger. Syr. حَمْلٌ, offendiculum. יִקְיִיבוּ. Lit. They raise, here have raised, i.e. from a state of falling. מַלְיָי I take to signify, thy decisions, the judgments awarded by thee when in power. בִּפְרֵעוֹת, bowing, bending. Arab. كَرَعَ, gracilis fuit tibia, &c. Syr. כּוּסָא, crus, tibia. וְצַדִּיקִים pres. is in the same situation with the preceding present tenses just noticed.

5. תִּבּוֹא, It cometh, i.e. רָגַז, vr. 26, above: trouble, vexation. וְתִלָּא, apoc. for תִּלָּאָה. The apocopation here implies a consequence, Gram. Art. 233, 3. And accordingly thou art offended, or becomest weary. I have followed the Auth. Vers., which seems to give the true sense of the passage. Ib. וְתִבְהַל. And thou art perplexed, confounded, at the circumstance. In this last member, as mere narrative was all that was intended—at least as the punctuists seem to have thought—we have no apocopation marked in the vowels and accent of the word.—So the Moallakat poem of Hareth, ed. Vullers. ver. 15:

وَأَتَانَا مِنْ الْحَوَادِثِ وَالْأَنْبَاءِ خَطْبٌ نَعْتِي بِهِ وَنَسَاءُ

So there has come to us a report of events and rumours, by which we are pained and afflicted.

We have, however, Ch. iii. 25, the verb נִסְרַתָּהּ used precisely as the Arabic نَسِيَ is here; with which נָס is also used in the parallel member.

6. יִרְאַת יְהוָה. equivalent, perhaps, to יְהוָה יִרְאַתָּה. The fear of Jehovah; i.e. thy religious feeling; יְהוָה יִרְאַתָּה, Ch. ii. 9, thy religious integrity; בְּבִטְחוֹתָי, thy confidence. See Ch. xxxi. 24; Ps. xlix. 14, &c. To this הֵם דְּרָכָיִךָ, the perfectness of thy ways; i.e. of thy religious faith, corresponds in the parallelism: which seems to determine that this must be the sense of the verse. Eliphaz seems to upbraid Job with a want of that, for which he was most remarkable, an active faith, now that he stood most in need of it; and, accordingly, he calls him to the consideration following: viz.—

7. זָכַרְתָּאָּנֹכִי. Remember now, &c. Who (was) he (viz.) an innocent man (and), hath perished. This is, according to my notions, the strictly literal force of the passage. Ib. נִכְתְּרוּ. Lit. Have become hidden, wanting; have failed. Cogn. כָּחַשׁ. Arab. كَاخَتَّ, partem illi de opibus concessit; partem hausit de aliqua re. Cogn. كَاخَطَ defecit, &c. Of this sort are verbs signifying lying; i.e. holding back, not telling the whole truth. So, apparently, St. Paul's lie to God's glory; i.e. his inadequate expression of it. Of the same sort are many other negative modes of expression, as a person's not finishing; i.e. his being unable to effect any thing: a place's knowing a man no more: Paul's knowing Christ no more after the flesh; i.e. having no more personal intercourse on earth with him, &c. &c. Eliphaz intends to say, In no case, as far as memory and history go, have the good failed. Comp. Ps. xxxvii. 25. The result proved this sentiment to be true.

8. בְּאֵינֶנִּי. Lit. According to that which I have seen; i.e. as far as my experience goes. Ib. יִקְצְרוּהִי. Lit. They crop, or reap it; and, pręgnanti sensu, gather it in, i.e. iniquity, for their experience.

9. מִנְּשֵׁמַת וָגֵר. By the breath, &c. Auth. Ver. “blast.” I know of no instance, however, in which the word will bear this sense. It rather means a slight or gentle breathing. See Gen. ii. 7, &c. And so in the Arabic, نَسَمَ, leniter et grato modo spiravit ventus, etiam odor: and hence so frequently, among the Arabian and Persian poets, the phrase, نَسِيمٌ صَبَا, the western gale, or zephyr; or rather, the equivalent to this among us: for, in fact, it is an eastern gale. The sentiment seems to be: They perish from the gentlest breathing of the Almighty: what is pleasant, and indeed profitable to others, never fails to be fatal to them. It is added, וּמִרוּחַ אֲפָי, and from the blast of his nostril, or wrath, they come to an end. From the construction here, blast or storm is probably meant.

See Ps. xi. 6; Hos. xiii. 15, &c; and, if so, we shall have a sort of climax here.

10. שִׁשְׁבַּת רֹאֵה. The roaring, &c. Arab. رَوَّجَ, rocijeratum fuit pecus; balurit ovis. Cogn. سَأَجَّ, mærorem illi res attulit. By lions, great and warlike men are often meant in Holy Writ, as is also the case among the Arabs. Of the latter sort is the expression أَسَدُ اللَّهِ الْغَالِبُ, the lion of God, the conqueror, as applied to Ali, on account of his warlike exploits. Of the former, “My soul is among lions,” Ps. lvii. 5; comp. 2 Sam. i. 23, &c. Ib. נִהַבְתִּי, i. q. נִהַבְתִּי, the נ being changed in the Chaldaic, from נ in the Hebrew. They become struck out, broken down, &c. The verb here applies most properly to the last nominative שִׁנָּי teeth; but, by the figure zeugma, applies to them all. Gram. Art. 215, 7, 12. On the names of the lions here given, see Bochart’s Hierozoicon, pt. I. lib. iii. cap. i. If men are to be taken here, and not beasts—which, I think, cannot be doubted—then the sense is, taking the preceding verse with this: The weakest things of God, when put into requisition by him, are more than sufficient to reduce to silence the most potent and courageous of men. This appears to be the sum of the experience of Eliphaz. The next verse is to the same effect, and needs no comment.

12. דָּבָר. A word, or, by a meton., any thing conveyed by word, as a precept, edict, revelation. It was not unusual in patriarchal times to receive instruction, promises, threats, and the like, in visions of the night. Such was Jacob’s vision at Bethel (Gen. xxviii. 12); such that of Laban when he pursued Jacob (ib. xxxi. 24); such that afforded to Abimelech (ib. xx. 6) respecting Abraham; such when God covenanted with this latter patriarch, that his seed should be a blessing (ib. xv. 17); and such that mentioned in the first chapter of Job. Ib. נִבְּבָה. Came, was brought, by stealth, as in Jacob’s removing from Laban by stealth, Gen. xxxi. 20; i. e. unexpectedly, unlooked for. So Lucian, as cited by Schultens here: ἀλεπτομένῃ λαλοῖα καὶ ἀδοκίμοις. Ib. פָּצְצָה. Arab. سَمَّصَ, propulit. So דָּבָר, דָּבַר, coegit, conj. vii. prope locutus est. שִׁמְצָה, celeriter loqui. תִּשְׁמָצָה, contractio; a hint, perhaps, or short admonition—as the apparition passed by—my ear received of, or from, it. מְצָה for מְצָה, an Aramaic form. Comp. Ch. xxvi. 14, where we have מְצָה, and דָּבָר, in apposition. מְצָה שִׁמְצָה. What a hint, how small the information, the word heard therein: that is, how small in comparison to what the whole really is.

13. בְּשִׁעָפִים. In branchings, perplexities. Arab. شَعَفَ, dementavit, con. germinavit viride in re arida. Cog. شَعَبَ, propagavit, divisit ab invicem. سَعَبَ, fluxit. سَعَفَ, promorit. Hence קַעְפָּה, ramus, &c. מִהַזְיוֹנוֹת, of, or from, visions. The preposition may be here taken as equivalent to the genitive case. תַּרְדֵּמָה, Not “deep sleep,” but that stupor or suspension which usually took place when visions were afforded, termed by us a trance; in the Hellenistic Greek, ἕστασις, Acts, x. 10; Gen. ii. 21; xv. 12; Prov. xix. 15. See, too, Hammond’s note on Rom. xi. 8.

Something of this sort happened to Mohammed, according to Abulfeda (Annales Muslem. tom. i. p. 82), when, after praying for success at his first battle of Bedr, a palpitation of the heart took him (خفت رسول الله خفقاً); and then he was enabled to pronounce on the certainty of victory. We have a similar instance of ecstasy in Virgil’s Sibyl, Æn. vi. l. 100, &c.

14. הִקְרַסְנִי. Lit. Met me; i. e. befel me. וְרַב, usually, “the multitude,” or “all.” The first of these expressions is any thing but proper. Few persons would, perhaps, be disposed to term the human frame a multitude of bones; and, as to the latter expression, it is a mere abuse of the former. If, however, we take this word adverbially, greatly, the whole becomes clear, and forcible. See, too, Gram. Art. 222; and my Third Letter on Dissent to Dr. Pye Smith, p. 115, &c. &c.

15. וְרוּחַ. And a spirit. Rosenmüller thinks that a wind—sometimes said to precede visions—is here meant; and directs us for illustration to 1 Kings, xix. 11; Acts, ii. 2, &c. But, in that case, how are we to understand the following, וַיַּעֲמֵד, he, or it, stood still? and, I knew not מִפְּרִשְׁתֶּיהָ, its, or his, appearance? This seems to be spoken of some person;—Could it be said of the wind? or, of a vision? “Non dicit quid,” adds he, “quia mox dicit . . . visio, nescio quæ.” All that can be said here seems to be, Rosenmüller thought that no such spirit could have appeared in these early days; he, therefore, determined that the text should not mention one! and then, as something must be proposed to fill up the gap, any thing was better than letting the text speak for itself. We have such a thing as a spirit, however, in 1 Kings, xxii. 21: and in Eccl. xii. 7, the spirit of a man is spoken of as disembodied. So, also, Matt. xiv. 26. And, from the circumstance that spiritual agency is spoken of in the earliest books of the Bible, that angels are mentioned—who must have been considered as spirits—there is not the least probability that the doctrine, inculcating the existence of spirits, was unknown in the times of Job. In like manner it has been determined, à priori, that the resurrection of the dead could not have been known in these days; and hence the greatest possible pains have been taken to make the text talk of any thing else. The same may be said of many other important doctrines, clearly and obviously taught in this book. The term רִיחַ, therefore, in this place, can be taken of nothing but of a spirit, as this term is now taken among ourselves; and to this, as an antecedent, the verb נִצְבֵד and בְּרָאָהוּ, just noticed, must be referred. Ib. הַבְּצִיר. Arab. سَمَرٌ, clavis conflavit, rem corroboravit; grew hard, rigid, as a nail. "Erectus horret crinis." Senee. in Hercule Œtæo. Rosenm.

16. נִצְבֵד. It, or he, stood fast, still. הַבְּצִיר, an image.

Heb. בִּין, sort, species. Syr. حَمَلٌ, stirps, familia; i. e. a particular sort or clan of people. It. حُجٌّ, cur? quid? what way, manner, or sort? הַבְּצִיר would, therefore, seem to signify a sort, or species, of thing: something peculiar, either in form or appearance: and hence, perhaps, used to signify an image.

17. בְּאֵלֹהֵי. With God: not than God, although the combination might give this sense. It can hardly be expected that any such thought as this could ever have entered Job's mind, or that Eliphaz should accuse him of it. The particle also signifies with, coram, or the like. See Numb. xxxii. 22; Jer. li. 5, &c. Ib. נָבֵר is opposed to אֲנֹשׁ, and ought, therefore, to be marked in the translation more strongly, perhaps, than the Auth. Ver. has done.

18. בְּעֲבָדָיו. In his servants, more properly, perhaps, his own servants, or angels, as we have it in the parallelism. The Hebrew language has no term equivalent to our own: the context, therefore, alone can supply it. הַבְּהִלָּה, folly. Arab. تَهَلُّ, and بَطَلٌ, e. g. بَطَلٌ, rain, foolish.

19. מְאֵד מְאֵד. Much more, &c: for מְאֵד, as some think. I doubt whether the particle כִּי is at all necessary to give this sense; and whether it contributes to give it where it does occur. מְאֵד is evidently a derivative from אָבַד, circumcivit; and hence seems to involve the idea of repetition, like our more, nay more, moreover, &c. The ellipsis should be thus supplied, מְאֵד מְאֵד מְאֵד מְאֵד, nay more, much more, does he not confide in the inhabitants of houses, &c. Some suppose the more remote (vr. 17) context to be referred to; but this would be incongruous, for there men are also spoken of, who are as much inhabitants of houses of clay as these are; and, therefore, the comparison here made would be lost. But, if the comparison is made with vr. 18, it has force, and the particle הַס is in place. It is remarkable enough that Rosenmüller and others should not have seen this. Ib. יִדְבְּאוּם . Lit. They beat them small, contund them; i. e. some people, any people, &c. impersonally. If the comparison, as just mentioned, is made with the angels, the houses of clay, &c. refers, of necessity, to the habitations of men, in contradistinction to those of the angels. And, as שֶׁבַע־יָמִים , in the preceding member, is the leading subject, or nominative absolute there, the pronoun (הֵם) in יִדְבְּאוּם must refer to the persons designated by it. The same is the case with בְּסִימָתָם , their foundation; for, although the foundations of houses may truly be said to be in the dust, yet these may, with equal propriety, be said to be their foundations,—i. e. of the persons building them: not because they themselves were formed out of the dust—this would be to refine—but because they laid these foundations, and because they may hence be said to belong to them. Ib. לְפָנֵי עֵשׂ . Lit. Before the moth; i. e. before its face: i. e. the moth has, in the hands of the Almighty, power sufficient to beat them to pieces. See ver. 9, above. In unison with this is the oriental tradition, that Nimrod was destroyed by a mere fly; and the adage, پشه چو پر شد بزند, پیدلرا, “An army of gnats will harass an elephant.” (ROEBUCK’S Oriental Proverbs, Part I. § II. n. 528). The tradition, just alluded to, will be found in Mirkhond’s History of Persia, entitled “The Rauzat Ussafā,” vol. i. in the History of Abraham; where we are told, that Nimrod’s forces were, in the first place, put to flight by such an army of the weakest of created beings (بضعیقتربین مخلوقات); and, secondly, that one of them was sent to prey upon his brain, till he died.¹ Whatever may be said of the tradition—for in this I place no faith—certain it is, that God’s avenging his own case by beings of this sort was the popular belief: it is no less true, that in those countries the bite of gnats, and other flies, is any thing but desirable. See the Hierozoïcon, Pars II. lib. iv. cap. xxv. The Scripture, too, is not without instances in which God has employed such apparently insignificant creatures to execute his vengeance. See Exod. viii. 21, 31 (17, 27); Ps. lxxviii. 46; cv. 31; Isa. vii. 18; Hieroz. Pars II. lib. iv. cap. xv; Exod. xxiii. 28; Deut. vii. 20, &c.; and Hieroz. Pars II. lib. iv. cap. xxiii. and cap. ix. See, too, Ps. xxxix. 12; Isa. l. 9; Hos. v. 11; in which last two places these flies are spoken of as destructive to men.

¹ See, also, M. de Sacy’s Edition, &c. of the “Conseils d’Attar,” p. ۳, lines 5, 6, and Notes, pp. 5, 6; where other accounts of this tradition will be found.

20. מִבֶּקֶר וְגו'. From the dawn, &c. seems to suggest, that however small the stroke inflicted may appear, still, as it is constantly applied, their fall is certain. Ib. מִבְּלֵי מַשִּׁים, supp. לֵב לֵב, i. e. Without any one laying (it) to heart. Ib. לֵב לֵב, entirely. Auth. Vers. for ever; but, as overcoming, having the pre-eminence, &c. are inherent in the root, I am inclined to think that, as an adverb, entirely, wholly, &c. will more precisely represent its force here.

21. יְהִרְבּוּ. Their abundance, excess, whether of wealth or tyranny. Reference is evidently had here to the wealthy wicked, those who had become powerful (יָבִיחַ, ver. 17), who had founded houses (ver. 19), but became subject to the judgments of God. Ib. לֹא יָדָעוּ מִחֵכְלָם, not in wisdom; i. e. in complete ignorance of the cause of their fall, and of the vanity in which their lives had been spent. That this is the sense to be ascribed to יְהִרְבּוּ here, a reference to Ch. xxviii. 12-28 will be sufficient to shew. Comp. Prov. viii. 1, &c.

CHAPTER V.

1. הֲיֵשׁ עֹנֶה. Lit. Is there one answering thee? The epenthetic ו, marked by the dagesh in ה, implies consequence perhaps, as, Is there, therefore, any who will answer thee? Gram. Art. 235. Ib. מִי מַתְּוֵשִׁים, which, or whom of the saints? Most likely the angels. See Deut. xxxiii. 3; Zecl. xiv. 5; Ps. lxxxix. 6, 8, &c. The worship of angels, or of virtuous persons deified by popular ignorance after death, formed one of the first deflections from true religion. See Diod. Sic. lib. i; Prep. Evang. Euseb. lib. ii. To turn to any of these in prayer, amounted to a rejection of God at all times. See Hos. iii. 1. The drift of Eliphaz's remarks is therefore this: If thy fear and faith in God is not thy confidence on this trying occasion: men being manifestly frail and unable to save; To which of the angels, or spirits of light, wouldest thou turn, and so give up thy God? For, revelation and impatience which may prompt thee to this, will only have its usual effect of destroying thee, as it has every fool who has given in to its suggestions.

2. פִּי לֵאמֹנִיל. For the foolish; opposed to חֲזָק, firm, wise,—religiously so. Arab. حَكَمَ, firmiter solideque fecit aliquid. So אָרֶה, אָרֶה, אָרֶה, soliditas, justitia. So אָרֶה, אָרֶה, contr. אָרֶה, extenuata fuit, &c. Cogn. אָרֶה, declinavit, recessit, defecit, &c. Ib. אָרֶה, And the silly. Syr. אָרֶה, luxavit. Arab. אָרֶה, juvenili etate fuit. Cogn. אָרֶה, defessus fuit. And, generally, while firmness, weight, completeness, strength, are the leading ideas in terms marking the virtues; instability, lightness, defect, weakness, are found to form the roots of those, which are used to express the vices: as if firmness in adhering to known truth was supposed to be the basis of all goodness; its opposite, that of every evil: which will apply well here.

3. אָרֶה. As for me: nom. absolute, Gram. Art. 216, 10. Ib. אָרֶה. The foolish taking root; i.e. establishing himself in earthly prosperity. Comp. Ps. xxxvii. 35-37, which will afford an excellent comment on this place. Ib. אָרֶה. So I stigmatise, declare to be hollow; r. אָרֶה, perforate, bore through, &c.: not “I cursed,” by calling upon God to destroy him; but only pronounced all this to be as unstable and weak as its possessor, and such as the appointments of Providence could not but destroy. אָרֶה. Immediately, without hesitation: not “suddenly.” This is an instance of want of precision in the choice of words in our Auth. Vers. אָרֶה. His habitation, with the additional notion of quiet, tranquil; which is not without force here. Cognate, perhaps, with the Greek αἶθρῶς, αἶθρῶς, αἶθρῶς, αἶθρῶς, &c. as Gesenius well suggests.

4. אָרֶה. They are far away; i.e. now and always: and, prophetically, shall be so. אָרֶה. From safety, plenty, or the like. אָרֶה, for אָרֶה, lithp. Gram. Art. 83, 1, 2. They are, or shall be, beaten small, or down, i.e. violently made light of, in the gate, אָרֶה, or court of justice.

5. אָרֶה. The famishing; i.e. generically, persons so circumstanced. אָרֶה, seems to be elliptical; for, אָרֶה. And he, i.e. each one, shall enter the thorns, or fence, and take it from thence. אָרֶה, Prov. xxii. 5. See 2 Chron. xi. 12; Amos, iv. 2. Arab. أَصَوَانٌ, custodia. Eth. አደጋ, protexit, velut munitionibus. Cogn. أَصَوَانٌ, fiscella plicatilis. أَصَوَانٌ, strenuus, fortis. أَصَوَانٌ, duplicato opere pleavit, &c. Hedges of thorns are found in Hindustan among the most effectual bars to an attacking army: and Abulfeda tells us (Annales Muslem. p. 44), that a woman received the name of wood-carrier, حمالة الحطب, because she took thorns and placed them in the way of the prophet : لانها كانت تحمل الشوك فتضعه في طريق رسول الله. See Mic. vii. 4; 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11; Prov. xv. 19; xxii. 5; Hos. ii. 6 (8). Ib. צָמִים. Starving. Some prefer thirsting, as if derived from the root צָמַם; others, hard, cruel, robbers, as if from the Arab. صَمَّ, obturavit, percussit, &c., or, ضَمَّ, contraxit in se, &c. I think it not improbable, supposing we may reject the points here, that a derivative of צָמַם, cognate with צָוַם, fasting—if, indeed, צָמִים, persons fasting, i. e. part. of צָוַם itself, be not the word,—will supply a sufficiently good sense in this place; especially as רָעַב, is in the corresponding place in the parallelism.

6. אִשָּׁה, Iniquity, &c. are not the natural produce of the earth; i. e. they do not exist without some cause not inherent in the appointments of God.

7. לְיָלֵד יוֹלֵד. Is born to, or for, sin. It could hardly be expected from Eliphaz, that man was necessarily born to sorrow; for this would be at once to ascribe to the Almighty a most unmerciful appointment,—a sentiment which Eliphaz carefully avoids, nay condemns. Besides, as יוֹלֵד, and אִשָּׁה, occurring here, and indeed elsewhere, cannot always be taken to signify the misery attendant upon sin, but rather sin itself; I see no good reason for adopting the rendering of the Auth. Vers. Comp. Numb. xxiii. 21; Isa. x. 1; Job, xv. 35; Isa. xiv. 1; lix. 4; Ps. x. 7, &c. Ib. וּבְנֵי רֶשֶׁף, lit. sons of רֶשֶׁף, whatever that is. From the various places in which it occurs, something connected with fire seems to be meant; as רֶשֶׁף אֵשׁ, rishpe of fire, Cant. viii. 6; with הַקִּנְיָה, jealousy. Comp. Ps. lxxviii. 48 with Exod. ix. 23. Again, Ps. lxxvi. 4, we have רֶשֶׁף הַקֶּשֶׁת, rishpe of the bow. From this place it is clear, that some warlike apparatus is meant; and from the circumstance that the cogn. Arab. رَسَفَ, in conj. viii. signifies sublatus fuit in altum. رَصَفَ, jecit telum, ussit, &c. رَشْمٌ, radios vibrans fulmen: arrows, perhaps, ignited, as was long the practice in the East, seem to be intended; and, as a feather was generally applied to each side of these, in order to make their flight the more steady, they might well be termed winged. So in the old song of Chevy Chase:

“The gray goose wing that was thereon,
With his heart’s blood was wet,”

when speaking of the arrow that pierced Earl Douglas.

And so the passage cited by Rosenmüller, &c. from the Shah Nāmāh :

عقاب دلاور بر انکيختم
چو آتش بر او تپر مپر بختم

*The eagle (feathered arrow) of the brave I roused,
I poured the arrow upon him like fire.*

If this, then, be the true sense of the passage, the application will be obvious and easy ; for, as man is not naturally formed for sin, but has been made so by some accidental means, so the arrow is not naturally capable of flight, or calculated to spread devastation and ruin. It is made so in either case. We have accordingly here, וַיַּבְיֵהוּ, they make, or cause to mount up ; i. e. impersonally, which may be rendered in the passive. עָרַף. Flying, or in flight. The phrase בְּנֵי רֵשָׁף, sons, children, of flight, perhaps, as made or intended for it : which agrees well with the Hiphhil use of the verb here. So the rishpe of fire, of the bow, &c., will signify, arrows or missiles, of this sort, calculated to wound either physically or morally. I have taken as general a term as I could find suitable to this passage, viz. winged, an epithet of the arrow, rather than the arrow itself ; which will apply to the lightning, as well as any other thing had in view, in the passages cited. “As the sparks fly upwards.” But sparks do not fly upwards naturally, any more than they do downwards. The sentiment here given, therefore, is not true in itself ; and it is as little applicable to the text.

8. אֲדַלֵּם. But, otherwise ; i. e. I will now change my theme, and discuss the question with reference to the attributes of God : things constant, and upon which, therefore, reliance may be placed. אֶדְרֹשׁ. Inquire, discuss, &c. אֶל. About, concerning. 1 Kings, xiv. 5. So πρὸς, Luke, xviii. 1 ; xx. 19, &c. אֲשִׁים וּבְרָרִי. I will lay down, put, my question, matter, plea. Eccl. iii. 18 ; viii. 2, &c.

9. עֲשָׂה. One making, fabricating, creating, &c. Speaking of God, perhaps, as the Creator, rather than as the doer, or performer ; but, as “doeth” of the Auth. Ver. might mean either, and applies well moreover to the following context, I have retained it. וְעַד־אֵין וְגוֹ. Eo usque ut numerari nequeant : beyond number, or enumeration, &c.

11. וַתִּקְדָּרִים. And the gloomy, calamitous. שִׁנְבֹּנִי. Are raised, exalted. לְיָשֵׁעַ. In safety, salvation. Arab. وَسِعَ, dilatatio, amplitudo, opposed to צָר, angustiae. Used here adverbially.

12. מִפָּר, part.-Hiph. פָּר, cogn. פָּרַר, and פָּרַפַּר, Arab. فَرَّيَ, secuit, fudit : applied here, as in the breaking of a covenant. Ib. הַדְּבָרָה. Wealth, &c. Much has been said on this word, and, to my conception, to very little purpose. From the places in which it occurs either wealth, strength, or some such sense, it manifestly requires; and, from its form, some such root as דָּבַר. We have in the Arabic وَشَى, its equivalent: and this seems to afford the sense required; as, Progenie multiplicati, as in the passage from Jauhari, مَا وَشَتْ هَذِهِ الْمَأْشِئَةَ عِنْدِي بِشَيْءٍ — Haud quicquam ficturam protulit hoc pœcus apud me. Castell. sub voce. Ib. Sensim elicitur aliquid: opere conficit rem: abundavit opibus: cepit pecunia partem; coloravit orationem mendaciis; conspicua in eo fuit canities, &c.: ornatus fuit auro: expendit orationem, aut carmen ad elicendam sententiam: to which may be referred the لَا أَشَّ شَيْئَةً of the Kamoos; which Giggæus has perfectly misunderstood, and Castell has left untouched. The Kamoos thus explains it, لَا أَشْهُرُهُ لِلْفِكْرِ وَتَدْبِيرِ مَا أُرِيدُ — i. e. I watch him not as to thought or rule: I have no wish to counsel, or govern, him. He adds: the form and conjugation of أَشَّ is unknown; which Giggæus supposed belonged to the interpretation of the word. The meaning seems to be, that, as to extract the meaning of a sentence of a verse, gold from the mine, &c. is inherent in this word; so is the attending to any thing, watching its tendencies, and thence advising how it ought to be dealt with. Now, our הַדְּבָרָה (the ^{تَوْشِيَّةً} of Jauhari, and which he gives as a masdar, or infinitive form, from this root) occurs Job, vi. 13, in the parallelism with ^{עֲזָרָה}, help: in Prov. ii. 7, with ^{מָגֵן}, a shield: Job, xi. 6, with ^{חָכְמָה}, wisdom: ib. xii. 16, with ^{עֹז}, strength: Prov. iii. 21, with ^{מְצֻדָה}; ib. viii. 14, with ^{עֲזָרָה}, and ^{פִּזְרָה}: Isa. xxviii. 29, with ^{עֲזָרָה}: it. Job, xxvi. 3. In Job, xxx. 22, Mic. vi. 9, entirely, or the like, seems to suit the context. Prov. xviii. 1, will perhaps best be explained by the sense, coloravit orationem mendaciis. See Castell, sub voce ^{גִּלְגֵּל}. And generally excess, or abundance, taken either in a good or bad sense,—and varied by certain other considerations,—seems to prevail in every case in which this word is used; to which ^{وَسَّى}, largitus est, &c.; ^{وَصَّى}, conjunxit, &c.; ^{وَصَّى}, contigua germinatio, &c.; Heb. ^{נִשְׂ}, is, exists, ^{נִשְׂ}, grandævus, &c.; are all cognates. Gesenius has taken the cognate ^{וַסִּי} only; which is not very felicitous.

13. נִפְתָּלִים. The tortuous, circumventing, who are ever busy, and on the endeavour to gain some advantage. נִמְהָרָה. Lit. Becomes hurried, i. e. here, confused. Comp. דְּהִישָׁה, בָּהֵל, and Isa. xxviii. 16, with Rom. ix. 33. See too I Cor. iii. 19; Prov. xix. 2; and Isa. xxxii. 4, &c. This construction, in which a succession of participles takes the lead, is also found ch. ix. 5-10; and is imitated in the early part of Pss. ciii. civ.

14. חֹשֶׁךְ. Lit. Darkness; but taken adverbially, darkly, as in darkness. Ib. בַּצָּהָר. At or in noon-day. If the dual form has really any force here,—as I suppose the terms to intimate the period intervening between the two evenings, בֵּין הָעֶרְבַיִם, Exod. xvi. 12, &c. (see my Sermon on the Sabbath),—the form is taken, either to connect it with this idea, or to signify, superlatively, the lightest and brightest part of the day. Arab. ظَهَرَ, conspicua fuit res, &c. Certainly in the Arabic the usage is different: for, here, بَيْنَ يَوْمَيْنِ, or الظَّهْرَيْنِ, will signify, on two, or more, days, as Jauhari informs us.

15. מִחֶרֶב מִפִּיהֶם. Lit. From the sword, from their mouth: but, as פִּי, mouth, is also put for the point or edge of the sword, I take the latter term here as added to explain the former, by way of epanorthosis. Gram. Art. 216, 2-4.

16. וְהָיָה. So, accordingly, there is hope, &c. Gram. Art. 233, 3. That is, because God has so blinded the wise, and weakened their hands, the poor have good hope. וְעִלְתָּה. And so iniquity, &c. The ה, with which this word terminates, usually named paragogic, is the Arabic 3 of unity, as in عَلَّامَةٌ, a singularly, or rarely, learned man. So Eccl. i. 1. הַיְחָלָה, The singular, or extraordinary, Preacher; and יְשׁוּעָה, singular, great, salvation: and here great, prevailing, powerful, injurious, iniquity, הִשְׁכַּחַה, hath closed her mouth: is unable to slander, to bite, or otherwise to wound. Arab. قَتَصَ, constrictum, prehendit, &c. This passage is cited in Ps. cvii. 42.

17. הִנֵּה. Behold, observe another view of this question: אֲשֶׁרֵי יְבוֹנֵשׁ, Lit. Blessings of the man. The plural used here, apparently to raise the sense, is termed the plural of excellence. Gram. Art. 223, 3. The Arab. equivalent, viz. طُوبَى لِلرَّجُلِ, is certainly a superlative: طُوبَى being the fem. superl. of طوب, good, &c. See ch. xxiii. 11. יוֹכִיחֶנּוּ, He — God — argueth, convinceth; and, by a meton., punisheth. Comp. Heb. xii. 5; James, i. 12; Prov. iii. 11, 12: which last is evidently copied from Job. בּוֹכֵר. The correction, castigation, &c. : i. e. Because the man is happy who is thus dealt with, therefore, &c., despise not His correction. Then follow the reasons.

18. בִּי הוּא וְגוֹ. For He afflicteth, or, When He afflicteth, He bindeth up. Ib. וְצִלָּהּ. He dasheth to pieces, or grievously bruiseeth, and His hands heal, or make whole.

19. בְּשֵׁשׁ. In six : a definite, for an indefinite, number : in many troubles, or necessities. וְשִׁלָּהּ, with the epenthetic ו in ך. He will surely defend thee. Gram. Art. 235.

21. בְּשׂוֹט לְשׁוֹן. In the scourging to and fro of the tongue. I know of no instance in Oriental Literature, in which the tongue is represented as a lash or scourge ; it is, however, in the Hebrew Bible, as walking about and afflicting the object of its vengeance. See Ps. xxxi. 21 ; l. 19 ; lxxiii. 9, &c. I have, therefore, given the verb the same sense that it has in ch. i. 7 ; ii. 2. תִּהְיֶה כְּבֵרָא. Thou shalt be hidden, i. e. put out of the way, when such a calamity is abroad : which can have no point if understood of the lash, or contemptuous treatment, of the tongue, a thing usually had recourse to in secret. Ib. מִיָּשׁוּד. From violence. This seems to take it for granted, that something like an invading violent enemy is meant ; and not such an one as a secret defamer.

22. תִּשְׂחֶק. Thou shalt smile ; i. e. as being in safety. “ Laugh ” is an ill-chosen word here.

23. אֲבִנֵי הַשָּׂדֶה. The stones of the plain. Eliphaz seems to say, From the fierce beasts of the plain thou needest not entertain any fear, for thy covenant is with the stones, or rock, whereon it has been raised, and from which the sustenance of these animals must necessarily come. By this term he probably means God, who is termed, Gen. xlix. 24, אֲבֵן יִשְׂרָאֵל, The (foundation) stone of Israel, and because the introduction of the term בְּרִית, covenant, here, with the consequence mentioned, seems strongly to suggest that no other Being can be meant. הָיְתָה לְמַחְמָה לָּךְ. Is delivered, or given up to thee. Arab. أُسْلِمَ, traditus fuit, act.

אֲסַלְמָ, tradidit. So הָיְתָה לָּם, Jos. xi. 19, &c. The beasts were, when man was at peace with his Maker, given into his hands, Gen. i. 28. In some instances, when men have been rebellious, the beasts of the field have greatly harassed them, as in 2 Kings, xvii. 25. It is also threatened, that the teeth of beasts shall be sent on the rebellious Jews, Deut. xxxii. 24. If we further suppose that violent wicked men are meant, which is not unlikely, the passage then informs us,—what Solomon also does,—that when a man's ways please the Lord, he makes his enemies to be at peace with him; gives them into his hands, אֶת־יָדָיו וְשָׁלַם אֹתָם, Prov. xvi. 7: which is probably an imitation of this place in Job. So the Targumist here, and the Syr. and Arab. on the passage in question.

24. וְיָדַעְתָּ. So thou shalt know, be assured, i. e. seeing God's power so put forth, that nothing can injure thee, and that no disposition is any where evinced to do so, thou shalt have the assurance that thy tent shall be safe and secure. וְיָדַעְתָּ. And thou shalt put in order, manage, &c. thy house, and shalt not err, or sin. Not only shall thy person and property be preserved, but thy mind also guarded from error.

25. רַב. Many,—not great,—as the parallelism requires.

26. בְּקָלוֹז. In honour, wealth, power, &c: see ch. xxx. 2.

Ib. בְּעֵלוֹת זָרִישׁ. Like the taking up of a heap. Syr. ^٠عُجْرًا. Acerrus tritici, vel aliarum frugum.—Castell. That is, just as a heap or mow of ripe corn is lifted up, and placed on the cart in order to its being carried and deposited in the barn, so shalt thou, old and full of days,—as it was the case with Abraham,—be placed honourably on thy bier, and deposited in thy place of rest.

27. בְּחַרְבָּנוּתָהּ. We have searched it out: i. e. it is the result of facts which have been brought to our own knowledge, either by experience, or a Divine Revelation, or both. From the matter detailed, however, it is evident that a Divine Revelation must have supplied much of it: e. g. ch. iv. from vr. 15 to the end; and here, vr. 7, 8, 9, &c. שִׁמְעוּ. Hear it, therefore; Gram. Art. 235, on the epenthetic nun: attend to it. Words signifying hear, in such cases as this, necessarily imply attending to, obeying, &c. the thing heard. Ib. יָדַעְתָּ לְפָנֶיךָ. Know for thyself: i. e. recognise as thy own, and as intended for thy good.

And, upon the whole, there is nothing in all this savouring of any asperity, as far as I can see, beyond the anxieties of true friendship. The sentiments delivered from vr. 17 to the end of the 4th chapter, are not only most excellent in themselves, but perfectly applicable to Job's case; and were, in the event, made good in every respect. It is true, we have not much sympathy expressed for Job's bereavements and afflictions. And, in this respect, Eliphaz was, no doubt, to blame.

CHAPTER VI.

2. לֹא שָׁקוּל רָבוֹ. Were thoroughly weighed, &c. לֹא. This particle, as with the Arabs, is at once negative, conditional, and requires its context to be taken in a past tense, either positively or relatively: so the author of the Kāmoos— لَوْ حَرَفٌ بِقَدْحِي فِي الْمَاضِي امْتِنَاعٌ مَا بَلِيهِ وَاسْتِلْزَامُهُ لِتَالِيهِ . .

 وَتَرَدُّ عَلَيَّ خَمْسَةَ أَوْجُهٍ أَحَدُهَا الْمُسْتَعْمَلَةُ فِي نَحْوِ لَوْ جَاءَنِي الْرَمْتَهُ وَتُعْبَدُ ثَلَاثَةَ أُمُورٍ أَحَدُهَا الشَّرْطِيَّةُ الثَّانِي تَعْيِيدُ الشَّرْطِيَّةِ بِالرَّمَى
 .—*The particle لَوْ requires, in a past tense, the negation of what follows it, and its necessary connexion with it. . . It has five cases of application, one of which is, as in لَوْ جَاءَنِي الْرَمْتَهُ—Had he come to me, I had honoured him. It has its use in three things. One is, CONDITIONALITY; the second, THE RESTRICTING of the condition to the past time; the third, NEGATION. It is important to have clear notions on this subject, as the Orientals of this family have neither conditional nor optative mood. Mr. de Sacy, indeed, has attempted to give such moods to the Arabic: but every one who has either knowledge or courage enough to look into this question for himself, will immediately be convinced that the attempt is a vain one. It is remarkable enough, too, that although the Greeks have both conditional and optative moods to their verbs, yet in many instances, and particularly in the Hellenistic dialect, the indicative often takes their place.—See Hooegeveen's Doctrina particularum Ling. Græc., Glasg. 1813, p. 30, &c.; i. e. on the particles ἄν, κί, κίεν: which have precisely the same use as our particle لَوْ, although perhaps not so strictly confined to the past time. We may now illustrate this by examining Rom. ix. 3, a passage about which much has been written, without—as it seems to me—making all quite clear. Ἐδύλομαι, says the apostle, γὰρ αὐτῶς ἐγὼ ἀνάθεμα εἶναι ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, κ. τ. λ.. It is self-evident, I think, here, that the particle ἄν has been omitted by the ellipsis. Hooegeveen's rule is (ib. p. 35), in such cases as this: “Cum ipso verbo βούλομαι, ἐθέλω, aut alio ejusdem significationis constructa hæc particula generalem suam genuinamque facultatem exercet nam illis ipsis verbis voluntatem notantibus summ tollit actum,” &c. Now our لَوْ, or لَوْ, Arab. لَوْ, is clearly a negative, very nearly allied to لَوْ or لَوْ. And the Greek ἄν has, very probably, a similar relation to the privative α or αν, prefixed to nouns. An example given by Hooegeveen is, Βούλομαι ἄν . . μὴ . . γένηται. I would . . it came not to pass. So the apostle, Ἐδύλομαι (ἄν) ἀνάθεμα εἶναι. I could pray to be an anathema: meaning that no such thing has been done; but saying, I could almost* wish, I could almost pray it were so. Comp. ch. x. i, where the subject is resumed; and will therefore give us the best explanation, as to what the apostle meant: which was only a strong expression of the wish, that the Jews might be saved. See also Budæus on the use of this particle: and, on the use of the Hebrew לָהּ, לָהּ, Deut. xxxii. 29; Jud. xiii. 23; Ezek. xiv. 15; Job, xvi. 4, &c.; and Noldius. כָּעֵשִׂי. My irritation, vexation, i. q. כַּעַס. וְהִרְרִי, kerī, והורר, Arab. هَوِيَ, decidit, delapsus fuit: and hence, הוּהָ or הוּיָה, to fall, happen, be, or become. Here, injuries, losses: i. e. things that have befallen me. Ib. יִשָּׂאוּ. They take up, or would take up: i. e. some people, &c., impers.

3. יִכְבֹּד. Would it be heary: i. e. the corresponding conditional member, or ἀσύνουσις, to the לָהּ שָׁקוּל, &c. preceding. Ib. לָעַי. They (my words) have been excessive, vehement, rash: it was because of these afflictions that I reviled my day, wished I had not been born, &c. Arab. لَوَعَ (r. لوع), accendit, afflixit morbo, &c. لَابَعَ, impatiens. Cogn. لَبَعَ (r. لبع), tadio, molestiâ animi affectus fuit. لَبَاعَ, vehemens ventus. لَعَلَعَ, motitavit II. contorsit se commotusque fuit præ fame aut siti. لَعَلَعَهُ, molestia angorve ex fame aut alia re. It. لَعَوَهُ (r. لعى), reherentia famis. لَعَا, locutus fuit temere. It. لَعَفَى, multus fuit in re, multum potavit. لَعَابَةٌ, dictum temerarium, vanum, obscenum. Here, I think, both context and etymology agree well; and, what is of more importance, Job appears sensible that his sufferings had betrayed him to say rash things. Symmachus has, οἱ λόγοι μου κατὰ πικρῶσι: my words are very bitter. He seems to have read לַעֲבֹה, wormwood. Dathe, paullo sunt fervidiora.

4. בְּיַחֲזִיק בְּחִתֵּי רִגְלִי. For the arrows, &c. בְּיַחֲזִיק בְּחִתֵּי רִגְלִי. For thy arrows have descended upon me. Ps. xxxviii. 3, is manifestly an imitation of this passage; as, perhaps, the whole psalm is. By God's arrows is sometimes meant the lightning, or what we call the thunder-bolt. See Ps. lxxvii. 18. In Ps. lxxviii. 48, this seems to be meant by the term יַחֲזִיק, compared with Exod. ix. 23, 24. See ch. v. 7, above; 2 Sam. xxii. 15, &c. But here the sense is more general, and implies any plague sent from God: so Ps. xlv. 6, where the judgments sent by Christ upon both Jew and Gentile, at the time of the erection of His church, are clearly foretold. Hence, perhaps, the ἐκατηχέλις ἀναχῆς, viz. Apollo of Homer,

II. i. 74, &c. Ib. שָׁתוּם וְגו'. Their poison drinketh up, &c. Which, according to Rosenmüller, is ambiguous; because רִיחֵי may be taken either as the subjective, or objective, case. But Rosenmüller is wrong. For it is evident enough, that הַחַיִּי, in the preceding member, is the nominative, or leading word. To this, שָׁתוּם is a subordinate nominative (Gram. Art. 216, 13), and with this, הַחַיִּי is in apposition. This word, therefore, is the nominative to שָׁתוּם; and, consequently, רִיחֵי must be the accusative, or objective case here. And, if so, we have no ambiguity to contend with.

הַחַיִּי (r. חֵמִי, Arab., calidus fuit, iratus fuit; whence حَمَّةٌ, venenum, aculeus vespæ. Cogn. حَم, حوم, حمم), heat, poison. Ib. שָׁתוּם, for שָׁתוּם. Gram. Art. 73. Drinks, exhausts, my spirit. Ib. יַעֲרֹכֵנִי. They are set in array against me: confront me in a hostile manner. From the introduction of warlike terms here, the poisoned arrows, which appear to have been used in battle by warlike tribes, are probably had in view by our author. Æneid. ix. 773; x. 140. So also Ovid, lib. i.; De Ponto, eleg. ii. de Seythis; Schulten. Rosenm., &c. On the latter word, see Jud. xx. 20, 22; 1 Sam. xvii. 2; Jer. xlvi. 3.

5. הַיִּנְיָהָהּ פָּרָא. Doth the wild ass bray? &c. That is, when there is no real cause of complaint, even the wild beasts abstain from complaining: it is natural to do so. Why, then, is it supposed that my complaint is causeless? In Amos, iii. 4, 5, it is asked, Does the lion roar in the forest when he has no prey? &c. The case is quite different. The graminivorous beasts roar when in want of any thing; the carnivorous, as lions, tigers, cats, &c., when they have food. The passage in Amos is, in other respects, very like this in Job; and ver. 7, perhaps, alludes to it. Ib. בְּלֵילוֹ. his fodder. Arab. بَلْدٌ, convivium epulum. بَلِيدٌ humidus ac madidus. بَلَّةٌ, pl. بَلَالٌ, recens humiditas planta, &c. Hence בְּלֵילוֹ would seem to signify grass recently cut, but not made into hay. Comp. ch. xxiv. 6.

6. הַיִּצְחָקֵךְ הַבֶּל, &c. On the etymology of the last of these two words, see note on ch. i. 22; where it appears that something heavy, as sediment falling to the bottom of any liquid, or the like, is the prevailing idea. See also the Lexicons of Golius, Castell, or Freytag. הַבֶּל signifies, therefore, something deciduous, sinking down, &c.; and, if we are to qualify this by the context following, it should seem to mean, the curd of cheese, of sour milk, buttermilk, or the like. That something of this sort is a beverage in the East is evident from the following lines of Sadi, Gulistan, book i. tale 32: غریبی گرت ماست پیش آورد دو پیمانہ آبست و یک چمچہ دوغ—If a stranger bring m^{ast} before you, two measures (of it) will be water, and one spoonful sour milk. That is, a stranger is not to be trusted, should he offer such beverage for sale. Sour buttermilk is a great favourite, too, among the ancient inhabitants of this island; viz. the Welsh.

Nearly in the same sense is the adage, أَبْدِي الصَّرِيحُ عَنِ الرَّغْوَةِ—prodiit lac purum citra spumam, and which is used on similar occasions. See Meidani's Proverbia Arabica, by H. A. Schultens, p. 24. ib. بِجَلِّي قَلْح. Without salt. The curd of cheese is a very insipid thing, and, like our summer-cream-cheese, cannot well be eaten unless salted: nor is the sour and curdled buttermilk of the Welsh eaten without salt; but is, with salt and potatoes, considered a very great luxury. Such, too, according to Mr. Rich, is the “yoghourt” of Koordistan.—Residence in Koordistan, vol. i. pp. 117, 235. “Airan,” buttermilk, ib. 238: and, vol. ii. p. 270, eaten with fresh cheese.

ib. בְּרִיר הַלְמוֹת. In the saliva, or whey, of cheese. On the first of these words, see I Sam. xxi. 14; and comp. the Arab. رَبِير. The second word is, perhaps, the same with the Arabic حَالُومٌ, “species quædam lactis coagulati caseo novo similis, vel lactis acidi; similis ei, quæ اَقَطٌ dicitur. A Syriæ incolis præparatur.”—Freytag. See ib. under اَقَطٌ, where we are told, that اَقَطٌ is “gravis et noxius cibus” (root حلم for حلب, م and ب being mutable letters). If this may be depended on, and any reliance can be placed on the doctrine of parallelism, this הַלְמוֹת, and תָּבֵל, must be either the same, or very nearly the same, thing; and the רִיר, here mentioned, the whey of such curd, or coagulated milk. That the whey of cheese is flavourless, it is too well known to need remark. טַעַם can hardly signify taste here: for, it is very difficult to say what is entirely tasteless; perhaps nothing with which we are acquainted. Words of sense are, moreover, in the Hebrew, very often used for one another: טַעַם, therefore, may well be taken to mean flavour, relish, or the like here, as the context seems to require. The whole verse is plainly proverbial, and intended to mark as insipid the preceding reasoning of Eliphaz. The “sales” and “insulsa” of the Latins, and مِلَّاحٌ and أَمْلَاحٌ, sales, salsa, pulchræ, &c. of the Arabs, are applied much in the same way.

7. מִצְאָה לִקְבוֹץ. Hath refused to touch, &c. Job, having alluded to the practice of cattle here generally, who make no complaint over their fodder, but proceed at once to devour it, says of himself, as just remarked, Did I complain without cause, I should be less reasonable than the beasts; and now, I not only complain, but no food will my affliction allow me to touch,—which, in beasts of this sort, is considered proof sufficient of ill-health. To me, however, it appears nauseous and abominable. הֵזְיָה. They, here, refers therefore to the food or victuals implied in the preceding context, ver. 5. פָּרוֹי לְחֵמִי. As, or like, pollutions of my bread: but, as bread is often put for every sort of food; and, as this state of construction is often had recourse to, to imply that the latter of two such terms partakes of the property of the former, I have taken this passage to signify polluted food generally: i. e. such as a man could not touch. There is a manifest affinity between the words דוּחַ, דֹּאֵב, and זֶבֶב. Hence, the notion of weakness, disease, &c., prevailing in דוּחַ, seems to have originated from another, implying wasting, melting, dropping, or the like. Hence, too, places or persons touched by a diseased or any dead body, were supposed to be unclean. According to the Soorah, the Arabic دواء is a medicine superinducing slenderness of body generally: it is a sort of milk given to a horse, which he drinks, and becomes thin, not lean—وان شير است که ميدهند اسپ را که ميخورد. وباريك بشود نه لاغر. The author of the Kamoos makes a derivative, viz. دَوَايَة, to signify, the skin of milk, buttermilk, or pottage, when agitated by the wind (Soorah, جغرات). ما بعلو الهريسة واللبن ونحوه اذا ضربتها الريح: if so, דוּי would here perhaps be used in the sense of scum, and, as such, polluting. On the whole, then, the patriarch seems to say: Your speeches are insipid, like the curd without salt; or, like the whey of cheese, unsavoury. But my disease is such that I cannot even eat, and cannot but complain. If I should act otherwise, it would be as monstrous as it would to hear the wild ass braying over his grass, or the ox lowing over his fodder. In this view—which appears to me natural, easy, and suitable to the context—there is no necessity for supposing, with Rosenmüller and others, that פָּרוֹי ought to be read פָּרוֹי; the received reading admitting of an easy interpretation.

8. מִי־יִתֵּן. Who grants, or will grant? A sort of exclamation, to which אֱלֹהִים, God, is added as a nominative in the next member. תָּבוֹא. Not generally come, but come in; as in Ps. cxix. 170, תָּבוֹא תְהַקְרֵנִי לְפָנֶיךָ, let my supplication come in to thy presence, and hence be heard. Comp. Ps. xviii. 7; lxxix. 11; lxxxviii. 3, &c. The wish of Job is, therefore, that his request may come before God, and that He may grant the fulfilment of it. וְתִקְרָנִי. And my expectation, or wish (r. קָרָה).

9. וַיָּאֵל. This root (אֵל) is apparently cognate with the Arab. وَاَل, اول, and وُلِي, all signifying, to betake one's self to, to return, will, or the like (see the Lexicons); and its use not unlike that of שׁוּב, קָוֶה, &c., in the following passages: שׁוּבָה... תְּקַלְכֶּה נַפְשִׁי, Ps. vi. 5; שׁוּבֵי שָׂבְרוּ, return, buy, Gen. xliii. 2; ib. 13, קָוֶה וְקָוֶה שׁוּבֵי, take and arise, return, &c. In all which cases, the verb, or verbs, occurring first in the context, may be considered as auxiliary only, and intended to give emphasis to the passage. See Heb. Gram. art. 222, par. 4. This idiom, therefore, is not unlike our own, Take and do it, Up and do it.

Ib. וַתֵּר יָדוֹ. Put forth. The precise sense of this verb seems to be preserved in the Ethiopic ተገደ: tetendit, extendit, expandit, &c. See Castell, sub וָתֵר, and Ludolf, Lex. col. 426. The Arab. وَاَتَر, too, has, in certain forms, the sense of following in succession, repetition; and, in others, it means tracts of land, &c., expanse, extension, or the like: which seems to comprehend the precise and primitive force of this word. It is, therefore, well applied to express the liberating of prisoners, dispersing of armies, nations, &c.; as we find in Ps. cxlvi. 7; Isa. lviii. 6; Hab. iii. 6, &c. In this view it will be opposed to צָר, just as יִשַׁע is. Ib. וַיִּבְצֹעַנִי. And cut me off, i. e. bit by bit; parallel with וַיִּבְצֹעַנִי, i. e. beat me down, or in pieces. Comp. Isa. xxxviii. 12, where it is applied to a weaver cutting away thread after thread from his loom, until the whole is cut away and liberated. So in the Arabic, سَيْفٌ بَاصِيعٌ, a cutting sword, i. e. a sword which never fails, full where it will, to carry a piece away with it. شَمَشِيرٌ كَهْ بَرِ هِرْجَهْ بَرِ آيِدْ بَارَةٌ اَزْ وَي بَرْد. the Soorah.

10. וְהִתְקַיְוָה. As the verb קָוָה properly signifies existing; so, be, remain, or become, will equally well suit it, as the context shall require. Hence it is, perhaps, that εἶμι will signify either be, or remain, &c., in the New Testament. See Schleusner sub voce, and my exposition of the Book of Revelations, chap. xvii. 8. The apocopated form used here, shews that this belongs to the preceding context. See Heb. Gram. art. 233, 3, i. e. Notwithstanding my being cut off, still shall my consolation continue. My hope extends beyond this life; therefore, נִאֲסַף־לִּי, let me grow hard, &c. On the use of the final ה, see Heb. Gram. art. 234, 1, 2. Gesenius make this root to signify salūt, exsiliūt: and this place, “et exsulto in dolore,” &c., which he grounds on the Arab. صلد . . . exsiliūt equus, &c. The Arabic Dictionaries, however, give no such sense; and I more than doubt whether any Arabian author does. It is true this verb signifies, in one form, to make a noise in striking fire; and, in another, to have a steel, or ignitabulum: and hence, probably, Gesenius has extracted, “exsiliūt equus—ut lapides scintillas ederent.” The Soorah speaks thus of it: حَجَرٌ صَلْدٌ وَارِضٌ صَلْدٌ وَجَبِينٌ صَلْدٌ . . . صَلْدٌ أَي صَلْبٌ أَمْلَسُ . . . وَأَصْلُ الرَّجُلِ أَي صَلْدٌ زَنْدٌ . . . and صلد الرجل, i. e. a hard stone, hard earth, a hard forehead, i. e. hard (and) smooth: and اصلد الرجل, a man's (ignitabulum) is hard; i. e. emits no fire. An adage, signifying that a man is unfortunate. When this verb is used of a horse, as in صلدت الدابة, or تصلد, the meaning is, that the animal strikes the earth with its fore-feet: or, as we say in English, beats it hard. But not a word about springing up, or out, so that the stones strike fire. This has all been manufactured; and the sense given by Castell is the only one authorised by the Arabic. The sense is then: Because there still is or remains consolation, I will grow hard, or harden myself; i. e. I will not give way, whatever may be laid upon me: or even though He cut me entirely off. Which, to my mind, is the recognition of a future life, expressed in words as plain and obvious as possible. Ib. לֹא, sup. קָה—אֲשֶׁר. In which, &c. Ib. בִּי־לֹא, &c.: because I have not withholden, or kept back, &c. This verb, viz. כָּהַר, like כָּהַנֵּן, signifies rather to withhold, keep back, &c., than positively to misrepresent, or lie. The same seems to be the case with כֹּזֵב: see Isa. lviii. 11. The meaning is, Inasmuch as I have retained and fully expressed my belief in God's goodness, nothing, however difficult, not even death itself, shall ever rob me of my consolations.

11. קָה־כֹּהֵי. What is my strength? &c., i. e. Neither my strength at best, nor the extent of my life at most, is such as to induce me to give up my hope; but I look forward to a better and more enduring state: hence come my consolations; and this grows not out of a defective view of God's mercies, but of a lively faith in all His promises. Ib. בְּנַפְשִׁי. My self, my soul, and by a metonymy, its affections and desires.

Comp. Ps. xlii. 3; lxiii. 2. Hence, my desire. Comp. Eecl. vi. 7, 8. Ib. קָנַצְי, for קָנַצְי. Chald. form. See ch. xviii. 2. Root קָנַצְה, and cogn. קָנַצְה, cutting off, determining, deciding, limiting, &c. Hence, my limit, boundary, &c.

13. עֲזָרָתִי בִי. My help within me. Am I not supported in my hopes, &c. by the Almighty? Are not his encouraging words within me? Comp. ch. iv. 6. Ib. וְהִרְשִׁיעָה, may be rendered, Although (earthly) substance, or wealth, is driven away from me. I prefer, however, supplying the ellipsis, הָיָה אֵינִי, from the former member, and continuing the interrogation. See note on vr. 12, ch. v.

14, &c. לְפָס. To the wasted or miserable. In the Arabic, مَسٌّ and مَسْسٌ seem to be cognate. The latter as a noun, مَسٌّ, signifies, according to the Arabian lexicographers, One possessed by a devil: مَسُّ الْحَيِّ, the heat, &c. of a fever. مَسَّةٌ, i. q. حاجة مهمة, a grievous necessity. פָּס here, therefore, should signify one in necessity, misery, want, or the like. Job seems to say: Whatever I may be, were I even an apostate, the laws of hospitality and friendship require that I should find favour, at least, from you as friends: but, as I am no such character, so much the more are you bound to be kind. In the verses following, he charges them more directly of their unfaithfulness.

15. אֶחָיו. My brethren, intimate friends, generally; but here Job's relatives. See the Introduction, § iii. Ib. כְּבוֹד־נְחָל. Like (the) torrent, i. e. which is full and strong immediately after the rains or snows, but which disappears when drought comes on, as mentioned in the last member. Not inapplicable to this generally is the following passage from Ibn Doreid, Haitsma, p. 219:

إِنِّي حَلَبْتُ الدَّهْرَ شَطْرِيهِ فَقَدَّ أَمْرِي حَبْنًا وَأَحْيَانًا حَلَا.

I have, indeed, milked both the dugs of Fortune:
Which at one time were sweet, at another bitter.

And again, ib. p. 99:

كَأَنَّهَا اللَّجْوُ اسْتَحَالَ طَبْعُهُ قَصَارَ مَاءٍ كُلَّهُ ثُمَّ أَنَّهُوِي.

As if the desert, whose nature had changed, the whole of which had become water: it then sank down (to drought and hardness).

In Freytag's Hamāsa, too, p. 118, we have the following:
أَنْتَسِي دِفَاعِي عَنَّا إِذْ أَنْتَ مُسْلِمٌ وَقَدْ سَالَ مِنْ دُلِّ عَلَيْكَ فُرَاتُرٌ

Dost thou forget my contention for thee, when thou wast given up, and when the valley (נחל) was full-streamed with contempt against thee? By קָנְדָהּ כְּנַיִר נַחַל may therefore mean, perfidiously overwhelmed me like the full torrent, which gives no notice of its approach; being almost momentarily supplied by heavy rains on the mountains: and to this the remainder of the verse gives considerable countenance. And again, Amrulkeis, ed. Vullers, p. 4 —

إِنَّ إِخْوَانَنَا الْأَرَامَ يَعْلُونَ عَلَيْنَا فِي قِبَلِهِمْ إِخْفَاءً

“Scilicet fratres nostri à familia Arakem injuste in nos inreliantur, dictis eorum inest importunitas.” According to Tarafa, too (Moallakat, ed. Reiske, p. 31), faithlessness in relatives is the most poignant to the generous mind. His words are:

وظلم ذوي القربى أشد مضاضة علي الحر من وقع الحسام المهند.
 “Affinium autem iniquitas generosum pectus magis urit, quam morsus Indici acinacis.”

16. הַקְּרִיִּים, &c. This passage is obscure; and it has hitherto proved exceedingly perplexing. From its apparent want of connexion with the context, many have supposed it to be proverbial: and in this, I think, they were right. Our only question will be, How does it apply? Darkness, blackness, and the like, are often used in Scripture and elsewhere to denote calamity, distress, &c. By the הַקְּרִיִּים here, therefore, persons so circumstanced are probably meant: and of these Job was one. Comp. Mich. iii. 6; Jer. viii. 21; xiv. 2; Job, xxx. 28, &c. In the next place, as light is opposed to darkness, so is white to blackness; and we, accordingly, find that light is frequently put in the Scriptures to denote prosperity. Our only business now will be to inquire, Whether whiteness is generally used in the East in this sense; and whether snow is, in particular. Now in the Arabic, أَبْيَضٌ, the general term for white, is not only opposed to أَسْوَدٌ, black, but in certain forms to cold; as in سَخَتْ شَدْرِي كَرْمًا, which the Soorah gives as signifying, to become violently hot. Castell, under the verb, gives “intensus fuit, ferbuitque calor:” and بَيْضٌ, fevor caloris. And, what is more extraordinary, the Soorah gives for اِبْتِيَاضٌ — خود پوشيدن, to cover or clothe one's self. Let us now see how the word تَلَجَّجٌ, i. q. Heb. נִלְגַג, is used. The Soorah gives, after Jaulhari, تَلَجَّجْتُ نَفْسِي أَيِ اطْمَأْنَنْتُ, My person is snowed, i. e. it is in safety (and comfort). تَلَجَّجٌ is rendered by, خنگ شدن دل و آرامیدن از کسی, the heart's being happy, and at rest from any (every) one. The author of the Kāmoos makes the verb in the forms تَلَجَّ, and أَتَلَجَّ, to signify respectively, he was happy, or, he made another so. This word in particular, therefore, is commonly used to signify, to give comfort; while the other, viz. أَبْتَيَّضَ, has the significations of heat and of clothing self, &c. I am disposed to think, therefore, that the passage in question should be translated as given in the text;¹ and its meaning to be, Will those, who are blackening under the chilling frosts, not perceive the descent of the snow upon them? i. e. Who are suffering adversity, not feel, and acknowledge, the genial hand that affords them comfort? Does the wild ass bray, or the ox low, when provided with food? Or, circumstanced as I am, Could I be insensible of your friendship, were it like the protecting and refreshing snows, and unlike the temporary torrents? Certainly not: but, alas! you afford me no such comfort as this proverbially assigned to the snows. The comparison is vivid from another con-

¹ I may here mention a passage in the Psalms (Ps. lxxviii. 15): In the Almighty's dispersing kings, כָּה הִפְּזָה בְּיַמֵּינֶיךָ, in it was snow given in Salmon; i. e. in the circumstance, viz. of God's dispersing the enemies of Israel, was comfort, or refreshment, afforded in Salmon. The opposition here, is in the troubles which had been previously undergone. Comp. vv. 7, 14. Schurrer and Kimchi have come very near this. Schurrer too has noticed the Arabic usage. By כָּה is meant, as I have rendered it. See Isa. xxxviii. 16, כָּה, in these, i. e. matters, &c. See also Job, xxii. 21; xxx. 24. כָּה הִפְּזָה will, then, be exactly equivalent to the Arab. بِهَا تُتَلَجَّ, in it givest thou comfort: or, as the author of the Soorah would word it, بدان دل خنگ شد و از کسی آرامید. Something not unlike this is to be found in the Moallakah poem of Antara, v. 16:

جَادَتْ عَلَيْهِ كُلُّ بَكْرٍ حُرَّةٍ قَدَّرَكِنَّ كُلَّ قَرَارَةٍ كَالدِّرْهِمِ

Which is thus translated by its editor, Menil. Lugdun. Batav. 1816: "Huic praeo quaeque nubes affluens pluvia, at frigoris expers ac venti, ita se praebet benignam, ut foveas omnes candore atque ambitu nuanis argenteis relinquat similes." See also the Scholia, at p. 88, and the very excellent note at pp.

146-7. And, in Hañiri, البَيْضَاءُ مِنْ أَسْمَاءِ الشَّمْسِ, THE WHITE is one of the names of the Sun. De Sacy's edit. p. 302. We have a note to the same effect in Freytag's Hamasa, p. 138 يقال قد ابْيَضَّ وجه فلان وقد بَيَّضَ وجهه اذا وقد فعل فلان فحمد عليه وقد اسود وجهه اذا فعل فلان فبذم عليه, i. v. It is said, that such an one has whitened the face, when he has done something for which he is praised; and has blackened his own face, when he has done something for which he is blamed.

sideration, viz. As the snow will appear most plainly from a ground that is black, so will the kindness be most readily and deeply felt and expressed, which is conferred on the acutest of human sufferings. The expression may have originated from the well-known fact, that a descent of snow will often protect the springing corn, and other tender herbage, from the violence of the frost.

17. בָּעֵת. In a time, at a season, at some time, &c., there being no definite article prefixed here. Ib. יִזְרְבוּ נִצְמְרוּ; they shall be bowed, compressed, injured, oppressed; they become silent. The verb זָרַב in the Syriac, Chaldaic, and Arabic, has the signification of confining, binding, or the like; and, like צָר, is used to denote distress, anxiety, or wretchedness. נִצְמְרוּ, they become silent, in confusion, or in death; and in this latter sense this verb is often used. Ib. בַּחֲמוּ, in his, impers. any one's, heat; or, in his heating, or becoming hot, i. e. in anger.—The verbal noun, or infinitive, of חָמַם. See Ps. xxxix. 4. Ib. כִּדְעֵכֶם מִמְקוֹמָם. Lit. They are extinguished (as a light) from their place, or station: i. e. Their candle (prosperity) is put out, and—taking the preceding verb prægnanti sensu—they are driven out from their habitation and country, as the following context goes on to say.

18-20. יִלְפָּרוּ. They are turned about, &c., i. e. by a superior Power. The usage of this word is peculiar in the Arabic, as cited from the Hadith by Jauhari, and after him by the author of the Soorah, sub voce. اِنَّ مِنْ اَقْرَاءِ النَّاسِ لِلْقُرْآنِ مَنَافِعًا لَا يَدْعُ مِنْهُ وَاوًّا وَلَا الْعَا اِلَّا يَلْفِتُهُ بِلِسَانِهِ كَمَا يَلْفِتُ الْبَقْرَةَ الْخَلِيَّ بِلِسَانِهَا. There are of those who read the the Koran hypocritically; some who leave not a w or an a, but turn it about with their tongue, just as an ox turns over the grass with his tongue. He goes on to say, that it signifies, to turn the face from any one, or to turn or change any one's opinion: وروي كروانيدن از کسی واز رای بر کردانیدن. کسی را. By being turned about, &c. therefore, is probably meant, that, under the wrath of oppressors, and by the permission of Almighty God, they are turned from project to project till they finally perish. In vr. 19 is recounted their having at one time a view to the paths of Tema, at another to those of Sheba; and, in the 20th, the consequence of their vain confidence is stated; viz. when they even come to this point, i. e. thus far, or hitherto, עָדְיָהּ, they perish. See the note on Ps. lxxviii. 15, at vr. 16 above. All this has been usually applied to the torrents mentioned in vr. 15; when it is obvious, that these were introduced there merely for the sake of illustration. The words used are, כָּמוֹן נְחֹל; where the particle כ is prefixed to the latter member. One would hardly suppose, therefore, that these similes would be taken up, as the subject-matter of the following verses. Besides, the terms נִדְעָכִי, נִבְּמָרְתִּי with מִמְּקוֹמָם, בָּשָׂה, קוּי לָמוֹ, הַבֵּיטָה, נִעְלִי, יִלְכָּתוּ, בָּשָׂה, בָּבָא with בָּבָא, and אֶשְׂרָר with יִתְפָּרֵר, would be extremely unsuitable to torrents: for, how these can be put out (as lights) from their place or station, be put to silence, ASCEND into the desert, look to, expect, have confidence, and at last be ashamed, i. e. destroyed, it is extremely difficult to say; but, if said of unfortunate and ruined men, would be most appropriate. See ch. xii. 24, 25. I cannot help thinking, therefore, that this was Job's intention. See also the Septuagint in this place. Job seems to say, therefore, that, as kindness could not but be felt by the distressed, were it offered; so, when they experience only fierceness and rebuke, they are very easily driven to ruin. That such expeditions as those alluded to above were undertaken by the Arab tribes in ancient times, seems to be intimated in a verse of the Hamāsa, edit. Freytag. p. 447, وَأَثَقْتُ بِنَا كُلِّ فَجٍّ مِنْ خُرَّاسَانَ أَعْمَرًا, i. e. They (the Koreish) trusted that every way from Khorāsān would to us become obliterated; where the scholiast observes, that the tribes used to travel to Khorasan, &c. كَانُوا يُوْجِهُونَ إِلَى خُرَّاسَانَ وَغَيْرِهَا.

21. קָיִימָה לֵא. I take לֵא here, as in ch. iv. 2, to be a defective word derived from the root לָוָה, used in the sense of לָוָה, with which it is cognate, and signifying either weariness or weary. It will then be cognate with the Arab.

لَبِأُ, or لَبِأُ, whence اللَوْدَةُ, i. q. السَّوْدَةُ, malum, and اَلْبَيَّاتُ, i. q. الناقَة ابطأت, Camela tardigrada, and the Syr. لَبِأُ, indecens, inconueniens. See Castell. Hence, perhaps, the signification of the particle לָו. See note on ver. 2: Ye have become fatigued, weary, unforbearing.

22-24. This context fully justifies what has just now been said on the word לֵא. It seems to say, Have I given you any real cause for weariness? Have I asked you for your wealth, your influence, or your power? Shew me, if I have done so, and I am silent; for then you will be justified.

25. מִהַבְּמָרְתִּי. Gesenius thinks this verb must mean validus fuit, &c., and the passage, "quam valida sunt verba justa." I must confess, the context seems to me to say any thing else. Job appears to complain, that, however just his words might have been, they were allowed to have no force. If he had meant the contrary, then was he to blame, and not his friends: for, had he spoken what was true, and this had proved overpowering, surely they must have attended to his expostulations. Nor does any other passage, in which this word occurs, require any such interpretation as Dr. Gesenius gives. See I Kings, ii. 8; Mich. ii. 10; Job, xvi. 3. According to the Soorah, this word (امرئض) is, in the Arabic, occasionally applied to one whose opinion is not far from the truth, as in امرئض الرجل بصواب نزدك. شدن در رای; which is thus worded in the Kāmoos: وامرضه جعله مريضاً وقارب الاصابة في رايه; i. e. He sickened him, or made him sick: and, he approached the truth in his opinion. By which he seems to say, He was judicially rendered infirm: he was not able to get quite to the truth. Which suits the passage here extremely well, if we compare vr. 18, where this also appears to be intimated in the verb לקפרה. See the note. We need not, therefore, and I think we ought not to, have recourse to a change of one of the radical letters here, viz. ש for כ; as Dr. Gesenius has done. Ib. הוֹכֵחַ מִכֶּם, is best interpreted by what follows. For, if these friends totally disregarded all that Job had urged, it could not have been any argument used by them that he here meant: it must have been his own argument directed against them. מִכֶּם here, therefore, cannot be equal to the Latin à vobis; but has the force of with you, or the impleading of you. See Hcb. Gram., Art. 224, 10, and 146, 8, note.

26. The ל in הִלְהוֹכַח, and לְרִיבָה, has necessarily the force of a dative case, for, &c. Ib. תַּחֲשַׁבּוּ, Ye count for, consider as, &c. מְלִים, assertions, opinions made up.

27. תִּפְּלוּ. We have manifestly an ellipsis of the word גִּזְרָה here. Comp. I Sam. xiv. 42; Ps. xxii. 19; Prov. i. 14, &c. Gram. Art. 230, 4. Ib. וְהִכְרִיחַ, I supply the word רִצָּח, cril, which the context seems to require. See Prov. xvi. 27.

28. הוֹאִילָהּ כֵּן. See note on vr. 9. Ib. to עֲלֵפְנֵיכֶם, I supply יֵרָאֵה, it will appear. See Isa. lx. 2; Zech. ix. 14. אֵל, however, is the preposition mostly used in such cases.

29. עֲוֹלָה. Iniquity, unrighteousness; i. e. an indisposition truly to judge on this matter. Ib. בָּהּ, in it; i. e. in this question. See עֲדִיָּה above, ver. 20, and note at ver. 16.

30. הִצִּי. Lit. My palate, but put here for sense generally. Ib. הַיִּזְרָה. Falls, injuries. The root, cognate with this word, in the Arabic, has a variety of significations, but is mostly used in a bad sense: as, to lust, fall into a chasm, be deprived of understanding by Satan; and supplies a name for hell in هَاوِيَّةَ هَوَاهِي, according to the Soorah, is سخن باطل و لغو, a foolish and erroneous word; and, according to Firozabādi, هَوَاهَاةٌ is, i. q. احمق, a fool. By this word therefore, Job means things that are foolish and sinful; and hence leading to injury and ruin. See Prov. x. 3; Ps. lvii. 2, &c.

CHAPTER VII.

1. הֲלֹא-יָבֹנֵן וְיָבֹנֵן, i. e. הֲלֹא-יָבֹנֵן. Is there not the warring of a warfare, &c. See Numb. iv. 23; viii. 24. So, Στρατεία τις ἐστὶν ὁ βίος ἐκάστου.—Arrian. in Epictet. 3, 24. Στρατηγὸν μὲν τὸν Θεόν, στρατιὸν δὲ τὴν Ζωήν.—Maxim. Tyr. Serm. III. Ὁ δὲ βίος πόλεμος καὶ ζῆνός ἀποδημία.—Marc. Antonin. de Vita. Rosenm. in loc. Ib. וּבְיָמַי שְׂכִיר, and, as the days of an hireling, &c. Alluding to the mercenary soldiers of the East, who, like our native army, as it is called, in Hindustan, might be engaged to fight for foreigners. Such too were the μισθοφόροι of the Greeks.

2. בְּעֶבֶד, &c. As a slave pants, gasps, for the shade, or shadow: i. e. either the shade to screen him from the rays of the sun, or the shadow of the evening to refresh him. The latter most likely, as the parallel member has respect to the reward, which must come after the work has been completed. Ib. בְּעֵלוֹ. Lit. His work: meton. the reward of his work.

3. בְּן הַנְּחִלָּתַי לִי. So, thus, just in this manner, have I been induced, stimulated, to hope for some remission of my sufferings, but, in the end, to become possessed of—as mine (לִי)—months of vanity: which, as such, prove to be of no value. Ib. לִי מִנֵּי לִי. They have numbered out to me; impersonally, as in the French on dit; Germ. man sagen, &c.

4. אִם-שָׁכַבְתִּי. If I have lain down: putting the case that I have done so, but finding no repose, וְאִמְרָתִי, then I have said, &c. Ib. וּבְמִדְרָעָרֵב, &c. For the evening, &c. I take מִדְרָע here as a noun of time, form מִדְרָעָר, Gram. Art. 157, 17, 161, 1, 2, and derived from the root נָדַד: the נ being dropped, ib. Art. 76; and therefore signifying, a time of wandering, metaph. agitation, distraction, &c. See the use of נָדַד, as applied to visions of the night, infra, ch. xx. 8. In this sense is the verb used in the Arabic, as in the Soorah: أَبْهَمَ سَتُورَ بَرَاكِنْدَه نَدَدَ رَفْتَنِ سَتُورِ پَرَاگَنْدَه, A beast's going in a distracted manner. It is added, وَنَدَادُ وَنَدُودٌ كَذَلِكَ; in like manner is נָדָד and נָדָד used: id. Kāmoos. Ib. נִשְׁבַּחְתִּי, may I am filled, &c. This, I think, is added by way of climax, as if to say, Not only is the season of darkness one of restlessness to me, but I am filled with distracted thoughts, &c. even to the returning day. נָדָד here, as in the Arab. نُذود, presents the form (נָדָד) of a concrete noun. Hence, this verb can signify flight in no case; but may mean, put to the rout, &c., because distraction, or the like, must necessarily be implied. Not unlike this is the description which Amruka is the poet gives of his own state, vv. 42-40, Hengstenberg's ed. Bonn. 1823:

وَلَيْدٍ كَمَوْجِ الْبَحْرِ أَرْخِي سُدُوهُ عَلَيَّ بِأَنْوَاعِ الْيَوْمِ لِيَبْتَلِي
فَعَلَّتْ لَهُ لَمَّا تَمَطَّى بِصُلْبِهِ وَأَرْدَفَ أَعْجَازًا وَنَاءَ بِكَلْكَلِي
أَلَّا أَيُّهَا اللَّيْلُ الطَّوِيلُ أَلَّا أَنْجَلِي بِصُبْحٍ وَمَا الْأَصْبَاحُ فِيكَ بِأَمْتِد
فَبَا لَكَ مِنْ لَيْلٍ كَأَنَّ نُجُومَهُ بِأَمْرَاسٍ كَثَانٍ إِلَيَّ صَمَّ جَمْدَلٍ

Thus translated by its editor:

“Sape jam nox, fluctibus maris similis, super me demisit velamenta sua, cum variis curarum generibus, ut me tentaret.

Dixique ei cum protenderet lumbum suum et sequi faceret partem posticam, et pectus averteret:

*Nonne tu, o Nox longa, nonne discutieris per Auroram?
At vero Aurora te non est melior.*

O noctem mirabilem, cujus stellæ videntur alligatæ funibus lini duros ad lapides!” (mel. duros ad petras.)

The scholiast tells us here, that by the darkness of the night is meant the adversity, &c. of the writer. To this the light of the morning is opposed. The stars of the night being said to be tied to a rock, will perhaps serve to illustrate the passage in ch. iii. 7, נָדָד נִשְׁבַּחְתִּי, let it be hard; i.e. as a rock. The scholiast adds on this: ويقول ابن نَجُومَهُ لا من اماكنها ولا تغرب فكانها تبحر: this he says, because مشدودة بحبال الي صخور صلبة its stars do not shine from their places, nor do they set, as if they had been bound by ropes to hard rocks, &c. See also the notes, ib. p. 51, &c.

5. In this, and the following context to vr. 11, Job appears to be reciting the thoughts that occurred to him during these seasons of restlessness; and, from some expressions here, it is evident enough that he considered his death as probable. It is quite as unnecessary, therefore, as it is unnatural to suppose, with Michaelis and his followers, that the worms, &c. spoken of here, refer to the real nature of Job's disease. לְבָשׁ בְּשָׂרִי. My flesh shall put on as a garment; or, surely shall, &c., prophetically, Gram. Art. 236. So also, עוֹרִי רָנַע, my skin shall hasten, return, &c. I prefer taking the sense of רָנַע, a moment, here; and then this verb, in conjunction with the following one, will intimate hurry, &c. Gram. Art. 222, 4.

6. גָּזְזִי קְלַי. My days are swifter than the web, lit. i. e. receive their completion more quickly. See the note on ch. vi. 9, where Job's cutting off is said to be like the cutting away of a web from the loom, thread by thread (comp. the passage there cited). So here the filling up of the number of his days, is said to occupy less time than that in which the web is completed by the operation of the weaver. Ib. גִּיבְלִי. And finish, lit. in the absence, or lack, of hope: i. e. without satisfying the hopes spoken of above, vv. 1, 2.

7. לֹא תִשְׁבְּרֵנִי לְרָאוֹת טוֹב. These two verbs require to be construed together, Gram. Art. 222, 4. Ib. טוֹב, good; i. e. prosperity.

8. עֵין רֹאִי. Eye of one seeing; i. e. רֹאִי for רָאָה; and the rad. י restored, רֹאִי for רָאִי, Gram. Art. 86, 4. Ib. עֵינַיִךָ בִּי, thine eyes (are) on me; i. e. in the sense of looking on, as in the preceding verb. Ib. וְאִיִּנִּי. The epenthetic נ seems here to have an illative force, as in verbs, therefore, &c. See Gram. Art. 235.

9. פָּלְהָ עָנָן. Lit. The cloud hath finished, come to an end; i. e. wasted away; and גָּלָה, passed away, disappeared. This is put as a case of common occurrence. Then follows the comparison, or thing compared with it, בֶּן יִרְדָּד, so, thus, the descendant, &c.

10. וְלֹא יִפְרַנֵּנִי. Nor does it recognise him; i. e. inferentially, or on account of such return to his house. See Gram. Art. 235.

11. גַּם־אֲנִי. Even, moreover, likewise, &c. as to myself. The construction is that of a nominative absolute, Gram. Art. 216, 10, 11, and Art. 212, 3, note. By this the discourse is brought back to Job's case specifically. Ib. אֲפָרְדֵּה, in an optative or precativ sense, Gram. Art. 234.

12. תְּהִי, &c. Job here seems to allude at once to the terrific character of the sea when agitated, and of the monsters that inhabit it; both of which have been limited by the boundary assigned to the first. See Gen. i. 9; Job, xxxviii. 11; inferring that no such restraint need be placed on him.

13. כִּי־אָמַרְתִּי. When I have said, &c. Here Job assigns his reasons for the assertions just made, and continues his complaint. Ib. וְשֵׁשׁ בְּשִׁחָה. The particle ב is not usually found with this verb in the sense here required. Very little reliance, however, can be placed on this circumstance; as the particles are often added, or not, very much at the caprice of the writer. See Gram. Art. 229, 9, note. In the equivalent phrase in Syriac, the 𐤌 is found; viz. in ܣܘܕ ܣܘܕܐ. This is perhaps a Syriasm therefore.

14. ַחֲבַתְּנִי. Thou hast urged, driven, broken, confounded, &c. The leading idea seems to be that of exciting, inciting, stimulating, as found in the Arabic حَثَّ (see the Lexicons); and hence the formula, مَا اِكْتَلَّتْ حَثًّا, which is said to be equivalent to مَا نِمْتُ, I have not slept; but seems to signify, I have not anointed (my eyes with stibium) through excitement: i.e. I have been too much excited to be able to close my eyes. Hence the verb is applied to discomfiture in battle, as in the phrase حَثِيًّا وَلِيَّ حَثِيًّا, i.q. مُسْرِعًا; i.e. hastily, anxiously, turned about or run away. It is also applied to the lightning; as in حَثَّحَتْ, which Firozabādi makes, i.q. الْبَرْقُ اِضْطَرَبَ فِي السَّحَابِ, the lightning played in the cloud. The parallel member is nearly to the same effect.

15. ַחֲבַתְּנִי. This verse has given endless trouble to the commentators and translators, not one of whom has hitherto satisfactorily made it out. I take ַחֲבַתְּנִי, then, to signify try, examine, prove, &c.; which is, probably, a secondary signification. The primary one is, perhaps, still found in the Arabic ַحַר, in the sense of splitting, bursting, cutting open, &c. See the dictionaries. And if this sense lies within the root, the trying, here had in view, will be that of a painful nature. Comp. Isa. xlviii. 10; Job, xxxiv. 4; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 6: and hence, in the Arabic, it will occasionally signify wasting away, consumption, &c. Ib. ַחֲבַתְּנִי, strangling, suffocation, &c. In Arabic, ַخَاتِف is, according to Castell after Avicenna, the night-mare; a kindred notion, if not the same, with that sort of suffocation in sleep, which is had in view here. I take this word, then, to be the nominative to ַחֲבַתְּנִי; i.e. suffocation, or strangling, distressingly tries my soul: and, supplying this verb, and ַחֲבַתְּנִי, by the common rule for supplying ellipses (Gram. Art. 230, 9, 10) in the next member, I have, death painfully trieth my soul from, or out of, my bones: thus in Heb. ַחֲבַתְּנִי מִצְּעָמֹתַי. It is well known, that in violent bilious attacks, in which the digestive organs are much deranged, intense pains are felt in the bones. This, therefore, with the dreadful suffocating sensations which Job declares he felt, might justly be expected in such a complaint. Not unlike this is a passage in the 50th Makamat of Hariri :

فَالْمَوْتُ لِلْمُجْرِمِينَ خَيْرٌ مِنَ الْمَسَاعِيِ الَّتِي سَعَيْتُ
يَا رَبِّ عَفْوًا فَانْتَ أَهْلٌ لِلْعَفْوِ عَنِّي فَإِنَّ عَصَيْتُ

“For death is better to the sinful, than to make the endeavours which I make. O Lord, forgive; for, thou art able to do this, even though I have sinned.”

16. מִצִּטִּי. This verb is manifestly used here in its Chaldaic, rather than its Hebrew, sense (see vr. 5 above); which is melting, wasting away, &c.; i. q. cogn. מִצָּס. In the Arabic it partakes of both senses, as it also does in this Book of Job. See Castell, Golius, Freytag, &c. under مَأْس. Ib. הִבֵּל יָמַי. My days are vain; i. e. are passed in nothing that is profitable. This seems to have been adopted by Solomon almost as the theme of his Ecclesiastes; in ch. vi. of which, particularly, this chapter of the Book of Job seems to have been had in view. Comp. vr. 12 there with vv. 1, 2, &c.

17. מָה הָאָדָם. What is man? The use of מָה here is precisely that of the Arabic مَا, in its interrogative (اِسْتِفْهَامِيَّة) character, and is equivalent to أَيُّ شَيْءٍ, what thing? as in مَا هِيَ, what is it? مَا لَوْنُهَا, what is its colour? i. e. of what sort is it? To this, the مَا هَذَا of the people of Hijaz, &c. is nearly allied, see the Kāmoos, p. ١٩٧٣ —The مَا of admiration differs from these in no respect, except that it is always used with a verb; as مَا أَحْسَنَ, how handsome! &c. Ib. מָה הָאָדָם. Mortal man. See the dictionaries. Ib. הִבֵּל יָמַי, with the epenthetic or corroborative ו. See Gram. Art. 235. Here the context implies perseverance or continuity of action, as the words, לִבְרָרִים, and לִרְצִים, clearly shew.

This passage is manifestly imitated in Psalm viii. 5; and is thence cited by the Apostle in his Epistle to the Hebrews, ch. ii. 6-9, and applied to Christ. The application consists, perhaps, in this: that, as the “Seed of the woman” (Gen. iii. 15) had been foretold as a great conqueror, this was considered as greatly magnifying man, and a mark of God’s affection for him. Besides, as the coming of Christ is certainly alluded to in other places of this book—as we shall see hereafter—I do not see why Job may not here contrast the weakness and worthlessness of man, with a consummation so astonishingly great and condescending as this.

19. בַּיָּדָה. Ut quid? lit. according to what? and may thence refer to extent, time, quantity, or number. See the passages cited by Noldius, Concord. p. 338-9. How long? would, perhaps, suit this context best; as, How long lookest thou not from me? i. e. art intent upon me. Ib. תַּרְבֵּנִי, lit. relax me, relent with me, is probably put elliptically for תַּרְבָּה עִמָּדִי, Heb. Gram. Art. 206. Ib. עַד-בְּלֵעִי קָטִי. Until my swallowing my spittle; i. e. a very little while. Comp. לְהִקְטִי in vr. 18. So the Arabic, as cited by Schultens on this place امهلني مقدار ما اباعد, concede mihi tantum moræ ac spatii, quo eam glutire possim. And again, ابلعني ريتي وقد اتعبني طريتي, deglutire sinas me... salivam meam; nam sane confecit me iter meum.

20. אֲחַטְאֵהוּ. I have sinned; i. e. putting the case, that this is the fact—what then can I do for thee? i. e. by way of compensation or atonement. Our idiom requires this first word to be put interrogatively, in order to elicit the force of the following context. Ib. זָכָר. Observer, watcher, keeper, &c. Ib. לְמַצָּע. The verb צָעַע is generally used to signify meeting in a hostile sense. See Judg. viii. 21; xv. 12, &c. מַצָּע will, therefore, be a noun of place, or of instrument, subject to such sense; i. e. stumbling-block, or offence. It occurs only in this place. Ib. אֶשְׂבֶּה. And I become, or so that I become, a burden, or a tale, upon, or against, myself. That שָׂבַע has both these acceptations, will be obvious to every one who will consult the dictionaries and concordance. I am inclined to prefer the latter sense, i. e. a burden, in the sense of a tale. See ch. xxx. 9, where we are told, that he had become their song and bye-word.

21. And why, &c.; i. e. forgivest Thou not my sin, since Thy character is that of mercy, and since I have nothing to offer by which I can insure Thy pardon. Ib. For then, &c.; i. e. I should pass into my state of rest; to which, in any case, I must soon come; then should I no more be found here, as a stumbling-block either to Thee, or to these my friends. שָׁחַרְחָרְתִּי, is a verb manifestly formed from the noun שָׁחַר, the dawn. Heb. Gram. Art. 230, note; and reference is made to what has been said in vr. 18.

CHAPTER VIII.

1. Bildad. See the Introduction, p. 30.

2. תַּמְּלִל. Wilt thou affirm: a Chaldaic word. רַחַם כְּפַיִר, a mighty wind; i.e. like a mighty wind, are very violent: the particle of similitude כ being frequently omitted. So in the New Test. "This is my body—my blood:" for as or like; i.e. represents my body, &c. See Proleg. to Bagster's Polyg. Bib. Prol. iii. § iv. note.

3. יַעֲבֹת. Makes crooked, turns from the straight and direct path. Men have recourse to various stratagems; God to none. The following member is to the same effect. Job, however, had made no such charge directly; and it was any thing but right to infer any such intention from his complaints.

4. אִם־בְּגִיף; i.e. putting the cases, that they have done so. וַיִּשְׁלַחֵם, that He sendeth, or dismisseth them; i.e. on that account and occasion, Gen. xxxii. 27; Exod. viii. 27. בְּיַד, by the hand of; i.e. by means of, on account of, &c. Comp. Isa. lxiv. 6; Prov. xxvi. 6, &c.

5. אִם־צִמְחָה תִּשְׁחַר. Putting the case, that thou seek to God early and daily. Comp. note on vr. 21 of the last chapter.

6. כִּי־עַתָּה. Then would he now, &c. In this, and some similar passages, כִּי is found to commence the subsequent member of an hypothetical sentence. Comp. ch. vi. 2; xxxvii. 20; Exod. xxii. 22; Isa. vii. 9, &c. The best account that I have seen of the origin and use of this particle, is given in the Soorah after Jauhari; it is this:

وكواه بعينه اي احد النظر اليه : كَيّ داغ كردن; i.e. he sharpened his sight at him. The original force, therefore, seems to be, marking, closely observing, &c. It is then said of the particle كَيّ, معناه تا وهو للتعليل والعاقبة. كَيّ, to set a mark on;

كلام وهو جواب قولك لم فعلت كذا فتقول كي يكون كذا, &c. Its meaning is that, in order that, &c.; and it is used in rendering a reason, and for a consequence (in hypothetical sentences), as ل is, and for giving an answer: as when you ask, Why have you acted thus? you may say, كَيّ in order that it might be thus; and it places the vowel a (Heb. ה) on a verb in the future tense. See Gram. Art. 234, 2. It is, therefore, one of those particles which serve to mark the consequent members of hypothetical sentences; and may be understood to signify, seeing that, marking, or the like. It is probably an imperative form, as we are told كَيْتَ وَكَيْتَ, signifying چڻين وچڻين, thus and thus, is; which occasionally takes the form كَيْهَ or كَيْهَ; or, as Jauhari has it, كَيْهَ وَكَيْهَ, id. Ib. يَعِيرُ. He shall stir up, excite, some person, power, or thing; probably Himself here. يَعْلِيهِ. For thee. The complement to this verb is in Ezra, i. 1. רוּחַ. Spirit, Isa. xli. 2. יְדָרָה. Righteousness, meton. for righteous one, in Dan. xi. 25. זָרוּ וְלִבָּבוּ. His power and his heart, in Isa. l. 4. אָזְנוֹ. The ear; any one of which may be supplied here, and the sense will, in the main, remain the same. Ib. וְיִשְׁלַח. And would restore. Comp. Prov. xi. 31; xiii. 13. Job's complaint seems to be, that he had, without apparent cause, been thus reduced. We have here, therefore, the ἀποδοσις answering to the several παραδοσις preceding. Ib. יָרָה יְדָרָה. The first of these words is of various application, and therefore difficult to define with precision. The root appears under both יָרָה and יָרָה; in other words, these cognate roots are so used, the one for the other, that it is difficult to say, to which the preference should be given. The same is the case in the Arabic, in which we have both نَوَى and نَآى; and the consequence is, the lexicographers have been equally perplexed in both languages. From a careful examination of the whole case, I think the primitive and prevailing notion inherent in these cognate roots is, will, intention, desire, and the like; the secondary one, delight, pleasure, quietness, peaceful, &c. In the next place, as home, rich pastures, fat and well-conditioned animals, are delightful to their possessors; this word, in one form or other, is found applied to them. The root בָּוָה, in Arab. بَوَّأ, is of the same description; as is also בָּוָה, or أَوَى: and hence بَوَى, بَوَى, مَآوَاةٌ, and مَبَاةٌ, all signify an habitation, home, inn, or the like. And in the Koran (ch. x. 93), we have the passage, وَأَعَدَّ بَوَّأَنَا بَنِي إِسْرَائِيلَ مَبَوَّأَ صِدْقٍ وَرَزَقْنَاهُمْ مِّنَ الطَّيِّبَاتِ, and we have brought the children of Israel in to an HABITATION, PLACE, OR STATE, OF RIGHTEOUSNESS, and have provided food for them of the good things, &c. The words مَبَوَّأَ صِدْقٍ—which Beidawi makes to signify منزلًا صالحًا مرضيًا وهو الشام ومصر, a good and delightful habitation; i.e. Syria and Egypt—seem to me to be perfectly equivalent to the יָרָה יְדָרָה just mentioned, and to mean, a place, or state, suitable to the character of righteousness, or religious faithfulness, and truth; which is here said to be given to the Israelites after their troubles, and for their truth's sake, just as it is proposed to Job by Bildad.

7. רֵאשִׁיתֶךָ. Thy beginning, or commencing, state, or circumstances; i. e. thy whole property being now taken away. Ib. יִשְׁגָּה. It would increase, or be increased. It is of little importance whether certain verbs are translated in the active or passive voice, as the general exegetical sense will remain the same in either case. See Gram. p. 353, note. This is a Chaldaic word.

8. פִּי נִשְׁאֵל. Mark, behold, &c. ask now. On this particle, see vr. 6. Ib. פּוֹנֵן. Prepare: supp. לְפִיךָ, thy heart. Comp. 2 Sam. vii. 13; 2 Chron. xxx. 19; Ps. lxxviii. 8; ciii. 19; Ib. לְחַקֵּר. As to, or for, the investigation, or investigating of, &c.

9. כִּי הַיּוֹם. For of yesterday, &c. i. e. of but short time past; of late growth. So Freytag's Hamāsa, p. 119. The scholiast says on the terms לוֹמָחָד, or to-morrow, اشارهً الى تقرب الوقت كما يقال في الماضي كأن بالامس بفعل كذا i. e. designating the nearness of time, as when it is said of the past, It was yesterday he did so or so. Ib. כִּי יֵלֵךְ, for a shadow (are) we, &c.; i. e. like a shadow we pass away with the light of day, which produces such shadows: i. e. we are transient and short-lived. See note on vr. 2. So Saadi, the celebrated Persian poet and moralist:

إِنَّمَا الدُّنْيَا كَطَلٍّ زَائِلٍ أَوْ كَصَيْفٍ بَاتٍ لَيْلًا فَارْتَحَلَ
أَوْ كَحُلْمٍ قَدْ رَأَاهَا نَائِمٌ فَأَمَّا مَا ذَهَبَ اللَّيْلُ بَطَلَ

Surely the world is like a fading shadow, or like a guest who remains a night, and then departs; or, like a dream which a sleeping man has seen, which, when the night is gone, has vanished. Comp. Ps. lxxiii. 20; cii. 12; Job, xiv. 2; xvii. 7; Eccl. vi. 12; viii. 13; particularly 1 Chron. xxix. 15.

11–13. As the matter contained here seems to be proverbial, and to contain matter extracted, perhaps, from a former revelation, it ought to be prefaced in a translation by saying: a term very frequently omitted by the ellipsis. See Gram. Art. 230, 10.

11. הֲיִשְׁתַּבַּח וְיִשְׁתַּבַּח. Does it rise, exult, triumph, flourish, &c. Not unlike our word “gay,” or the Persic جاه, state, rank. יִשְׁתַּבַּח is, apparently, the paper-reed of the Nile, from which the papyrus was made; and which, from the great quantity of water required to sustain it, was named by the Latins bibula; i. e. bibber. So Lucan's Pharsalia, lib. iv. 136, "Conseritur bibulu memphitis cymba papyro." Comp. Plin. vi. § 22; vii. § 57; xiii. § 21-26; Cassiodorus, lib. xi. ep. 38; and the Hierobotanicon of Celsius, pars ii. p. 137, &c.

Strabo tells us, in the xvth book of his Geography, that earth is usually carried into the lakes in these parts to promote the growth of vines, which seem to be indigenous to these lakes. His words are: πρόκειται ὅς παύτης τῆ μὲν ἡ ἔξημος τῶν Ἀράβων, τῆ δὲ τὰ ἔλη τὰ κατὰ Χαλδαίους, ἃ ποιεῖ παρεκχέμενος ὁ Ἐυφράτης, τῆ δὲ ἡ κατὰ Περσὰς Ἰάλλυατα . . . καλίκαρος δὲ ἐστὶν ἄμωξ· ἡ δ' ἄμπλος ἐν ἔλεσι φύεται, καλαμίναις ῥίψιν ἐπιβαλλομένης γῆς ὅση δὲξαιτ' ἀν τὸ φύτον ὡς τε φορητὴν γίνεσθαι πολλάκις· εἴτα κοιτοῖς ἀπὸ δειδάσαι πάλιν εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν ἔδραν. "Ante haec jucent partim Arabum deserta, partim Chaldaeorum paludes: quarum has Euphrates effusus facit, illas Persicum mare . . . fructus tamen optimos producit. Vitis in paludibus nascitur, terra in arundineis cratibus imposita, quantum stirps recipiat: ut saepe etiam ab aqua deferatur, et rursus in pristinam sedem contis propellatur." Ib. ירֵבֶּטֶת. The marsh-weed. Jerome tells us, in his Commentary on Isa. ch. xix. 7, that having inquired of the learned, as to what this word signified, he was told that it meant "omne quod in palude circus nascitur." See Cels. Hierobot. pars i. p. 340, &c.

12. יֵרֵבֶּטֶת, &c. During its being thus without water, Is it not cut off in its greenness? i. e. before grown to maturity. The context here manifestly requires the interrogative form, יֵרֵבֶּטֶת, And before, i. e. in point of time, earlier, more quickly, &c. See Noldius, Concord. Partic. sub voce. Ib. יֵרֵבֶּטֶת, every or any grass, i. e. sort of grass. The point of the sentiment seems to consist in this, that, as both the papyrus and the marsh-weed fade and fall when deprived of the mud and water much more quickly than the common grass will, without its ordinary nourishment; so, when the arts of evil men fail, they fall much more rapidly, and much lower, than do other men under similar trials. This sentiment often occurs in the Psalms.

14. יֵרֵבֶּטֶת. Who; here, whose: no pronoun can be attached to this word; it accompanies the following noun, therefore. Ib. יֵרֵבֶּטֶת בְּכֹחוֹ. His confidence is in a state to be cut off. יֵרֵבֶּטֶתוֹ. And the place, or means, of his trust is, or is like, the house, or web, of the spider. Then follow the proofs, drawn from fact: viz. He may, or shall, recline, or lean, on his house, but it shall not stand, i. e. firmly: he may, or shall, take fast hold of it, but it cannot, or shall not, endure. So this verb in Job, xv. 29; 1 Sam. xiii. 14.

Not unlike this is the sentiment contained in a couplet cited from some Persian poet by Sir Wm. Jones, in his Persian Grammar, p. 106, edit. 6.

پرده داری میبندد در قصر قیصر عنکبوت
بوی نوبت میزند بر گنبد افراسیاب

*The spider holds the veil in the palace of Cæsar ;
The owl stands sentinel on the dome of Afrasiab.*

16. וְעַל, &c. And over his garden, or inclosure . . . doth his sucker, or branch, go forth: i. e. he is so fresh and fruitful, that his shoots outrun their boundaries. So Gen. xlix. 22, where we have וְעַל-יִשָּׂרָה, over the wall. Comp. Ps. lxxx. 12; and Isa. xvi. 8; Ezek. xvii. 6; xxxvi. 8. Not unlike this is the passage, تُمَدَّ مِثْلَ عَسِيبِ النَّخْلِ, it is extended like the branch of the palm, in the poem of Caab Ibn Zohair, vr. 24: a mode of speaking much in use to represent a prosperous person. Comp. Ps. i. 3.

17. עַל-גַּל. It has been usual to take the latter of these words as signifying a heap; and, from what follows, to suppose that a heap of stones must be meant. I must confess, I cannot see how this can apply to the context here. From the preceding words, however, as well as from the passages just cited, one would suppose this word גַּל, would rather mean water, stream of water, or the like. That it signifies waves is obvious from Ps. xlii. 8; lxxxix. 10, &c., as if derived from גָּלַל, rolling on, or along. And, in Cant. iv. 12, we have גַּל נְעִיל מְעִין חָרוֹם, a גַּל possessed, a fountain sealed. In this place, the translators have made the word to signify a well: but why, it may be hard to say. But a stream, from its rolling on, may as well be termed גַּל, from גָּלַל, as may a wave. So, in Ps. xlii. 8, מִשְׁפְּרֵיהָ וְגִלְיָהּ, cannot be better translated than by, Thy breaking and rolling billows, or, thy breakers and rollers. And, in every case, the notion of a current is well preserved. I think, therefore, that גַּל here ought to be translated stream; and, that the same thing is meant with the פְּלִגֵּי-מַיִם mentioned in the first Psalm. So the Moallakat poem of Amrulkais, vr. 30:

عَدَاهَا نَمِيرُ الْمَاءِ عَيْرٌ مُحَلَّلٌ

Its nutriment is the healthful water, not free of access (to all). On which, the Scholiast says: لَمْ يَكُنْ حُلُولُ النَّاسِ عَلَيْهَا فَيَكْدِرُهُ. Its nutriment, sweet water, to which the descent of men is not frequent, so that it may be polluted. Comp. I Kings, xviii. 31; Prov. v. 15; ix. 17; and the remainder of this scholium; and the notes, pp. 43, 44, Freytag's ed. This passage is very nearly parallel with that just cited from Cant. iv. 12.

Ib. בית אֶבְנִים. Among, &c. This is rather the Syriac or Chaldaic, than the pure Hebrew, usage of this word. See Noldius, sub voce. Stones seem to be put here to imply strength, firmness, or the like. Comp. ch. v. 23; vi. 12. הִחִיזָה. He sees, i. e. one sees: which may be rendered passively, are seen: the exegetic sense remaining the same. If however, הִחִיזָה is in any way cognate with אָחַז, takes hold, or the like, will be the sense. See ch. xxiii. 9.

18. אִשֵּׁי יִבְלַעְנֵנִי. Surely he, some one, i. e. God, shall destroy him. From the context, as well as from the form of this passage, futurity of action with strong asseveration seems to be implied. See Gram. Art. 235, 2. I prefer taking the verb in the passive, as before. The sense of the last member is obvious; it involves a personification, and seems to be a favourite mode of expression among the sacred writers.

19. אֶסָר, I take to be generic, like אָדָם man, signifying the whole class of such; here many (as Gen. xiii. 16, &c.), who may be said to spring up like mushrooms, and as quickly to disappear. מִן־עָפָר. Out of the dust. This word is often used in this book for אָרָץ, or אֶרֶץ. Ib. מִן־אֶרֶץ, in the plural, which confirms the remark on אֶרֶץ. Comp. Ps. xlix. 11-14.

20. תָּם. See note on ch. i. 1. Ib. וַיִּחַזְקֵנִי. Take hold on, or of, so as to assist, strengthen, &c.

21. עַד-יִמְלָה. We have יִמְלָה for יִמְלֵא, by a slight variation of the orthography; a circumstance by no means uncommon, particularly when the pronunciation of the word is not thereby much altered: as it is the case here. See Gram. Art. 202, 4, &c. Ib. עַד, I take here to mean, while, as in Gen. xxxviii. 11; Hos. x. 12, &c.: and a clause to commence here of which עַד, &c. begins the $\pi\epsilon\acute{\rho}\acute{o}\sigma\sigma\iota\varsigma$, and שִׂנְאִיתָ, &c. in the following verse the $\acute{\alpha}\pi\acute{o}\sigma\sigma\iota\varsigma$. Ib. שִׂחֹק, laughing, smiling, may here be considered as a specifying noun, see Gram. Art. 219, and 219, 4, notes, and equivalent to בְּשִׂחֹק, with laughing. The same is the construction of תְּרִיעָה following.

22. יִלְבַּשׁ-בִּשְׂתָּה. They put on shame, as a garment: a natural and frequent mode of expression in the Holy Scriptures. So in the Arabic, يَلْبَسُ حِينًا كِبْرَ الْكِبْرَاءِ, at one time he puts on the greatness of the great. Concessus of Hariri, i. p. 21, ed. De Sacy. See also pp. 28-29, with the Scholia.

Of the reply of Bildad it may generally be affirmed, that it abounds with most valuable remarks, is less heated than that of Eliphaz, but equally ill-applies to the case of Job.

CHAPTER IX.

2. אֶמְצֵא. Truly, &c. : i. e. I accede to all these general and valuable truths; and, making this profession, how could I maintain that mortal man, אֲנוֹשׁ, was just with God; or, as it respects God, πρὸς τὸν Θεόν? Rom. iv. 2. Comp. ch. iv. 17. Job then proceeds to give his reasons.

3. אִם־יִחַדְפֵּל. If, or putting the case that, he were desirous, willing, &c. "If he will contend," falls short of the mark. Ib. לֹא יִעֲנֵנִי, he should by no means, &c. See Gram. Art. 235, 2. Ib. אֲחַת, i. e. דְּבָרָה, matter, thing. Ch. v. 8.

The construction may be that of specification, תְּמַיֵּיץ, equivalent in sense to the addition of בְּ, as בְּאֲחַת. Gram. Art. 219, note, and 219, 4, note: or, it may be an accusative.

4. הֲקָבָם, &c. I take to refer to man: the construction being that of a nominative absolute. Gram. Art. 216, 10. It could hardly be necessary here to say this of God, as the same thing virtually had been said again and again by each party, and is said again in the following context. But, when referred to man, has a peculiar force and point; as it affords Job an opportunity of saying, that even such—mortal men—cannot but fail when opposed to God. Ib. מִי־הִקְשָׁה. We have an ellipsis here, which may easily be supplied from the preceding member, thus, הִקְשָׁה לְקָבוֹ, Hath hardened his heart. Comp. Exod. vii. 3; Deut. ii. 30; Ps. xcv. 8; Prov. xxviii. 14.

5. הַמַּצְעֵתִיק הָרִים. By mountains is here probably meant, nations, powers, great men, or the like, taken metaphorically; and hence it is said in the next member, as of intelligent agents, וְלֹא יָדְעוּ, and they knew, or acknowledged not, &c. The following, בְּאַפּוֹ, In his anger, can hardly be understood of natural mountains; particularly as יָדְעוּ precedes. The following verse, too, seems to enounce a kindred sentiment. Comp. Deut. xxxii. 22; Jer. li. 25; Hab. iii. 6; Zech. iv. 7; Ps. xlv. 4; Rev. viii. 8; xvii. 9. Ib. אֲשַׁר הִקְבָּם, i. e. Quod is subreterit ipsos, &c. Comp. Eccl. viii. 12; Esth. iii. 4; Ezek. xx. 26, &c.; and Noldius, Concord. Part. p. 106, sig. 15, with the note.

6. הַפְּרָגִיזוּ, &c. Who shaketh, troubleth, &c. This verb seems universally to carry with it the notion of anger. See Prov. xxix. 9; Isa. xxviii. 21; xxxvii. 28, and particularly xiii. 13; where we have a fuller construction than in this place of Job, but where much the same thing seems to be meant. If so, this verse is a continuation of the sentiment enounced in the last. Ib. אֶרֶץ, a land, not "the earth"

as in the Auth. Ver. Ib. מִמְּקוֹמָהּ. From its place, metaphorically, station, condition, power, &c. Not, locally, from its place, which would be absurd. So the author of the Soorah, after Jauhari, قوام الامر بالكسر نظامه وعماده يقال قوام فلان قوام اهله وقوامهم وهو الذي يقبم شانهم ومنه قوله تعالى... اموالكم التي جعل الله لكم قياما. قوام الامر i. e. (with the vowel Kesra), the constitution and support of any thing: as, such an one is said to be the (قوام) support of his family, and their (قيام) prop: for he is the person who supports their dignity. So in the Koran: “Your wealth which God has made to be your support.” Ib. וַעֲמִידָהּ. Its pillars, or, as we say, piers. The form of עמיד, is that which implies habit, and marks the names of professions. See Gram. Art. 154, 12, with the note. This will easily identify itself therefore, in sense at least, with the نِظَامُهُ وَعِمَادُهُ, its constitution and support, as mentioned above by the Arabian lexicographer. Ib. יִהְיֶינָהּ לְפָנֶיךָ, they become horribly afraid, or the like; with the paragogic ה, implying a consequence with corroboration. Gram. Art. 235, 3. I must confess, I can see no reason whatever here for recurring, with Rosenmüller, to the passage in Seneca (Nat. quæst. vi. 20); in which we are told, that the earth is perhaps sustained by something like pillars, which giving way, the superincumbent weight brings on an earthquake: because all this is exceedingly puerile, and utterly unworthy of our author.

8. הַאֲמִיר לְהַרְסֵם. Lit. Who speaks to the sun, &c.: but, for a superior to speak, is the same thing as to command. And hence perhaps, in the Arabic, this verb has been confined to this sense. So أَمِيرٌ, Emir, signifies a Commander. In imitation of this, the Persians apply the verb, قَرَمَوْدَنَ, to command, when a superior speaks, but مَعْرُوضٌ دَاسْتَنَنَ, to petition, &c. when an inferior does. Ib. וְלֹא יִרָא. And it rises not, i. e. it appears not to rise. The Scriptures speak of things as they appear naturally; not as they are philosophically, which would be unsufferable: so, the sun rises, sets, &c. Ib. וּבְיַד, &c. And about, &c. This preposition often accompanies verbs signifying closing up, fencing, securing, &c. See Nold. Concord. sub voce, sig. 2. Here יָהַרְסָם, he sets a seal, i. e. closes up, as in the fourth and fifth conj. of the Arabic حَتَمَ, obscuravit, texit. See Castell.

8. נָצַף, &c. Bowing, or boweth, &c. This verb is often taken to signify spreading out, as our Translators have taken it in this place. It is nevertheless extremely doubtful with me, whether it ever fairly has that meaning. And it is curious enough to remark, that, when applied to the heavens, as it is here, Gesenius, the very last lexicographer, makes it to signify stretching out, in Isa. xl. 22 : but, in Ps. xviii. 10, gives inclinavit as its translation : yet, in both places, the context is of the very same character. Comp. Isa. xlv. 24. Ib. וַיִּרְדָּהּ, &c., and treadeth, or maketh his way; i. e. having descended, as in Ps. xviii. 10, He takes his station on the heads of the waves ;—or, as Shakespeare, speaking of the winds, says, “Who take the ruffian billows by the top, curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them with deafening clamour in the slippery clouds:”—and there directs the storm, of which Ps. xviii. contains a full and most sublime description. If this be the case, the preceding verse should probably be taken in connexion, as intimating the blackness and darkness which usually precede a storm. Berg, as noticed by Rosenmüller, seems to be the first who saw this. Comp. Deut. xxxii. 13 ; Isa. lviii. 15 ; Ps. xxix. 10. So we find our Lord (Matt. xiv. 25), during a storm, “περιπατῶν ἐπὶ τῆς θαλάσσης.” That Deut. xxxii. generally, and Ps. xviii., particularly the latter part of it, must refer to his times, I think there can be little doubt.

9. עָשָׂה, &c. Maketh, or, Maker of Arcturus, &c. The definite article ה is omitted here, as in the preceding verse, to avoid, perhaps, what might otherwise seem an unnecessary repetition ; or, it may be, to give energy to the context. The words following, viz. עָשָׂה, בְּסֵלִל, and בְּיָמָהּ, have given great trouble to the commentators, and still stand in need of elucidation. Schultens is of opinion, that heathen fable ought not to be had recourse to, for the purpose of explaining the sacred writers generally. This is, perhaps, saying too much, as heathen practices certainly are occasionally mentioned by name : nevertheless, I cannot help holding with him to a certain extent. I mean, We must not make heathen principles, nor yet heathen practices, the criteria by which we measure either the sentiments or the expressions of holy men. But I think we may—when we find that certain customs, or modes of expression, have a common origin—adduce the one in illustration of the other ; but not to direct and overrule it. In the present case, our patriarch lived in a country bordering on Chaldea : a place in which astrology was certainly cultivated in very ancient times. It would be necessary in Job’s country,—and actually was the practice, in travelling over the deserts,—to observe certain fixed stars.¹ Now, supposing astronomy to have been highly cultivated in Chaldea, and the constellations to have received certain names there; What impropriety could there be in Job's using those names? or, indeed, in our using, perhaps, the same names, at this very day? I can see none; and, I think, it is very likely that Job could see none. After all, however, it is of very little importance to the exegetical interpretation of this passage, whether we are perfectly right or not in our explanation of these terms; while it certainly is our duty, to make the nearest approximations we can to the truth in these respects also.

نَعَشٌ, then, I suppose, is the same word with the Arabic نَعَشٌ, a Bier, or sort of Litter, like that in which they usually carried a sick king, in the East. So says the author of the Kāmoos: نَعَشٌ.. وَشِبَهُ مِصْحَةٍ كَانَ يُحْمَلُ عَلَيْهَا الْمَلِكُ إِذَا مَرِضَ. He then tells us, that the general constellation named نَعَشٌ الْكَبِيرِ, consists of seven stars, four of which form the constellation termed نَعَشٌ (our نَعَشٌ, probably by an apharesis of the ن), and the remaining three constitute the نَبَاتٌ (Heb. בְּנוֹת, daughters). And in the same manner, he adds, is the smaller constellation so named, also formed. These two are, beyond all doubt, the constellations named the great, and little Bear, with us, respectively: the former of which is sometimes termed the Wain, and by the Greeks ἀμᾶζα; and each, by the Arabs, الدَّبُّ الْاَكْبَرُ, and الدَّبُّ الْاَصْغَرُ, i. e. the greater, and lesser Bear. In Job, xxxviii. 32, this name occurs again, in a form a little different: for here we have نَعَشٌ, in the passage نَعَشٌ لِيَا نَعَشٌ: i. e. Wilt thou console Aīsh for her sons? Some have thought this to be the diminutive form of the preceding, as عَبِيدٌ is of عَبَدٌ: but there seems to be no good reason for this. It is, I think, more probable that we have in نَعَشٌ, a contraction of نَعَشٌ, by Gram. Art. 75, and 170, 8. In the passage above cited from the Kāmoos, we have mention of the daughters of Nahsh, our نَعَشٌ, perhaps. But Janhari tells us in the Sihāh, that in poetry we have نَبُو نَعَشٍ, i. e. the sons of Nahsh.

His words are: وَقَدْ جَاءَ فِي الشَّعْرِ بَنُو نَعَشٍ. He adds: وَأَبُو عَبِيدَةٍ تَمَرَّتْهَا وَالِدَيْكَ بِدَعْوِ صَبَاحِهِ إِذَا مَا بَنُو النَّعَشِ دَنَوْا.

¹ See a very admirable note on this subject by Pococke, in his Specimen Hist. Arab. White's edit. p. 168, &c.

&c.; i. e. Abu Obaida has recited: I tasted it (the wine, perhaps) while the cock was calling up his morning (season, and), when the sons of Nahsh were setting, &c. The older expression was, therefore, even among the Arabs, The sons of Arcturus, just as it is in the latter place of Job; which makes it extremely probable, that the same thing is meant in both.

נִמְרוֹד, according to Prov. xxviii. 6; xiv. 16; xix. 1; compared with ib. xv. 20; xxi. 20; must signify a confident, self-sufficient, insolent, rich man, or something very nearly allied to this. Such in all probability was Nimrod; who, as many of the ancients have thought, was deified after his death, and placed among the stars under the name of Orion (i. e. resplendent, from the Heb. or Chald. אֲרִיִּס, perhaps, and so called on account of his wealth and splendour). In the Hebrew Scriptures, Nimrod is spoken of as a fierce and warlike king (Gen. x. 8-10), so much so that his character is there proverbial. Much the same is said of Orion by heathen authors. In Homer (Il. xviii. 488) the Bear is said to observe Orion, as if pursued by him. “Βλέπει,” says Eustathius on the passage, “γὰρ ἡ μεγάλην Ἀρκτος πρὸς τὸ τοῦ Ὀρίωνος ἄστρον,” i. e. The great Bear looks towards the star of Orion. And again: “Καὶ ἐπιτηρεῖ τὸν Ὀρίωνα, νεύουσα εἰς αὐτὸν ὡς κυνηγέτην,” i. e. Observes Orion, looking towards him as a hunter. And in Athenæus (lib. xi. c. 12, p. 490), we have, “Μυθεύονται γὰρ καὶ αὐταὶ (i. e. αἱ πλειάδες) τὸν Ὀρίωνα φεύγειν, διωκομένης τῆς μητρὸς αὐτῶν Πληϊόνης ὑπὸ τοῦ Ὀρίωνος, i. e. Even they (the Pleiades) are fabled as fleeing from Orion; their mother Pleione being pursued by him. And again, p. 491: “Συνεγγυς γὰρ ἔστιν ὁ Ὀρίων τῇ ἀστροθεσίᾳ τῶν Πλειάδων ὅδὲ καὶ ὁ περὶ ταύτας μῦθος, ὅτι φεύγουσι μετὰ τῆς Πληϊόνης τὸν Ὀρίωνα,” i. e. For Orion is near to the constellation of the Pleiades hence the fable concerning them, that they flee with their mother Pleione from Orion; i. e. to avoid being violated by him. See Eustath. in loc. Some of the poets too give him a sword, as Ovid, Metam. lib. xiii. 291; Fast., lib. iv. 388; Art., ii. 56, &c.; Eurip. Ion., 1153, &c.; Call., 3, 264, with corresponding epithets; all pointing out the fierce character of the person so exalted: in one author, it being intimated that he pursues the Bear; in another, the Pleiades, or the Mother of the Pleiades. His character is not unsuitable, therefore, to that of Nimrod. The Chronicon Paschale, too, as cited by Michaelis, tells us that he was deified; and, being elevated to the stars, was named Orion by the Persians . . . “ὃν (i. e. Νεβρωδῶ, γίγαντα) λέγουσιν αἱ Πέρσαι ἀποθεωθέντα, καὶ γενόμενον ἐν ταῖς ἀστραῖς τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, ὃν τινα καλοῦσιν Ὀρίωνα.” The occurrence of the term “giant” (γίγαντα) here, makes it worth while to cite a passage from Artapanus, preserved by Eusebius, Prep. Evang. lib. ix. c. xviii: "Ἐν δὲ ἀσέπτοις, εὐρῶμεν τὸν Ἀβζάαμ ἀναξίζοντα εἰς τοῦς Γίγαντας, τοῦτους δὲ οἰκοῦντας ἐν τῇ βαβυλωνίᾳ, οὐδὰ τὴν ἀσίθειαν ὑπὸ τῶν θεῶν ἀναίρειθῆναι, ὧν ἓνα Βῆλῶν ἐκφύζοντα τὸν θάνατον, ἐν βαβυλῶνι κατοικῆσαι, Πύργον τε κατασκευάσαντα," &c. If any reliance may be placed on this tradition, the fabulous war of the Giants against the Gods must have originated in the apostasy at Shinar, in which Nimrod seems to have sustained a very important part: and hence, perhaps, the title given him (Gen. ix. 8, 9) of גִּבּוֹר, which is perfectly equivalent to the Greek γίγας, and Arabic جبّار, and is properly enough used for hero. See also Abydenus, Polyhistor, and others, as cited ib. cap. xiv.–xvii., all to the same effect. This constellation is occasionally termed الجوزا by the Arabs; who, like Homer, give him a dog for a companion: which seems to identify him with the great hunter of Scripture. قهبي (بعني الشعري) تكون في طلوعها تلو الجوزا وبسمونها كلب الجبّار والجبّار اسم للجوزا

 جعلوا الشعري ككلب لها يتبع صاحبه: i. e. And it (i. e. Sirius) is in its rising opposite to الجوزا; and they call it the dog of the Giant: the Giant is also a name of الجوزا: they represent Sirius, as a dog to it, following his master. See also Hyde's Notes to his edition of Ulug Beigh, pp. 44, &c.; Castell, and also Michaelis, supplement to the Heb. Lexicon, sub voce כסיל. Homer speaks of his dog, Il. xxii. 29, 30. See Eustathius on the place; Job, xxxviii. 31; Isa. xiv. 12, &c.

Ib. רִבְיָהָ. And (the) Pleiades. This word occurs again in Job, xxxviii. 31, and Amos, v. 8. In the first of these we have, הַתְּקַיֵּיִר מִיַּדְּנֹת בְּיָמָה. Canst thou bind to thee the sweet influences of Pleiades? &c. The passage in Amos is, apparently, a citation from this in Job. The same word is found both in the Syriac and Chaldee, and has been taken to signify the same constellation, viz. the Pleiades. The etymology of the word receives some light from the Arabic كَوْم, whence كَوْمَةٌ, a heap, accumulation, &c.: so called, perhaps, from the cluster of stars which the constellation exhibits. The following are among the etymologies offered in Eustathius, on the place above cited from Homer: viz. 'Αἱ δὲ πλειάδες ἤτοι ἀπὸ τῆς μητρὸς αὐτῶν Πλειόνης ἢ ὅτι πλείους ἕρῃσιν κατὰ μίαν συναγωγῆν εἰσι (βούτων γὰρ αὐτὰς λέγουσιν), &c.: i. e. The Pleiades are so called, either from their mother Pleione, or, because they are many (πλείους) together in one collection (for they call them THE CLUSTER), &c. This last term is curious, because it seems to be, not merely a conjectural etymology, but actually one of the names by which this constellation was called. Pliny, too, terms it Caterva, lib. xviii. 67. His words, are, “Jam Vergilius in celo notabiles caterva fecerat,” &c. So Hafiz in his Lyrics, عَدَدٌ ثَرَيَا, the knot of the Pleiades. See the last couplet of his second Ode. And, as it is said to announce by its rising the season of sowing, of the production of fruits, of the harvest, and ingathering of these, it was fabled by the poets as employed in carrying ambrosia to Jupiter. Hence, perhaps, “the sweet influences” ascribed to them, as above cited. “Πελειάδας δὲ ὁ ποιητῆς καλεῖ τῶν τὰς Πελειάδας, πρὸς ἅς σπόρος τε, καὶ ἀμυγδῆς, καὶ τῶν καρπῶν ἀρχὴ γενέσεως καὶ συναίρεσις . . . οἰκεῖον γὰρ τὰς προσημαινούσας τῷ τῶν ἀνθρώπων γένει τὰς ὥρας, ταύτας καὶ τῷ Διὶ φέρεσθαι τὴν ἀμβροσίαν.” See Athenæus, lib. xi. c. xii. p. 490, ed. Bipont. The Arabs too, speaking of rain, say, of any low land, according to Jauhari, لَوْهَدٌ جَادَةٌ طَعَلُ الثَّرَيَا, The dropping of the Pleiades has dealt liberally with it. Sub. v. طفل. This constellation was certainly known to the Arabs before the times of Mohammed. Amrulkeis, one of their most celebrated ancient poets, mentions it thus (ed. Hengstenberg, 1823):

إِذَا مَا الثَّرَيَا فِي السَّمَاءِ تَعَرَّضَ تَعَرَّضَ اِثْنَاءَ الْوِشَاحِ الْمَفْصَلِ

“Cum Pleiades apparent in celo, ita ut apparet medium balthæi, cujus gemmæ auro sunt interstinctæ.”

Ib. הַמְּדִינָה הַמְּדִינָה. And the chambers, &c. By this the constellations in the southern hemisphere are probably intended; and, as the ancients laboured very much under the notion—as indeed the people of the East still do—that every thing was regulated by the influence of the stars, it is not unlikely that, here too, all these constellations are named, as being instrumental in bringing on and keeping up the storm, which Job is certainly describing (comp. Judg. v. 20); asserting, however, at the same time, that God is the maker and controller of these powers. The passage, already alluded to in Amos (viz. v. 8, &c.), is manifestly of this character. So is also Job xxxviii. 31–36. The south, too, is mentioned as the quarter from which tempests and storms come. See Job, xxxvii. 9, 17; Eccl. i. 6; Zech. ix. 14; Ps. lxxviii. 26, &c.: and, in the first of these, we have the word הַמְּדִינָה, without the adjunct הַמְּדִינָה; and in the last, הַמְּדִינָה only. It was a general belief among the Greeks and Romans too, that these constellations were influential in exciting storms and tempests. Pliny, who was a sedulous observer, and faithful reporter, of the notions of his times, says (Nat. Hist. lib. xviii. 69): “Ante omnia autem duo genera esse celestis injurie ueni- nisse debemus. Unum quod tempestates vocamus, in quibus grandines, procellæ, cæteraque similia intelliguntur: quæ cum acciderint, vis major appellatur. Hæc ab horridis sideribus exeunt, ut sapius diximus, relati Arcturo, Orioue, Hæcis," &c. See also ib. cc. 67, 68. The discovery of this sidereal influence Pliny ascribes to Democritus; which, however, Cicero, and Aristotle long before, had attributed to Thales.

10. עַר אֵין, &c.; i. e. so far, that there can be no investigation, beyond the research of men. Ib. in the parallel member, so far as to exceed number. נִפְלְאוֹת, signifies wonders, either in or out of the order of nature. The whole of this verse is, with a very trifling variation, to be found in ch. v. 9, in the speech of Eliphaz.

11. הֵן יַעֲבֹר, Behold he passeth, &c. This is, I think, the earliest intimation we have in the Scriptures of the metaphysical, or invisible and omnipresent, character of the Deity. Before this time, God is mostly spoken of as a visible and corporeal being; and not unfrequently after it: without, however, intending to inculcate any thing contrary to his omnipresent, or truly spiritual, nature. The earlier notion was, perhaps, better adapted to the simplicity of primitive times; and, if intended to give some idea of the incarnation which was to take place in the "latter days," was not without its force.

הֵן יִחַתֵּךְ. Behold, He taketh, or snatcheth away; i. e. violently. This particle may also be rendered by when, or if, which is its Chaldee or Syriac usual acceptation. See Noldius. Ib. מִי יוּגֵר. Who can effectually turn him back? See Gram. Art. 235; comp. Eccl. viii. 4.

13. אֶלֹהִים. As to God, &c. A nominative absolute, (Gram. Art. 216, 10, 11). In such a case as the preceding, He turneth not away his wrath. Ib. שָׁחֲחוּ. They have bowed, bent, or sunk down. Verbs having the second and third radical letters the same, are not universally subject to contraction, Gram. Art. 204, 3; and this, among other instances, will shew that even the same verb is occasionally found in both forms. See Prov. xiv. 19; Hab. iii. 6. In Ps. xxxv. 14, we have קָדַר שְׁחֲחֵתִי, calamitously I have been depressed; i. e. bowed down with calamity: and in each case, the preterite, stating a usual fact, may be translated as a present tense. Ib. עֲזָרֵי רָהֹב. The helpers, &c. The leading notion inherent in רָהֹב, seems to be, fearing; then, secondly, reverencing, regarding with awe, terror, dread; and, thirdly, considering such, as fierce, insolent, &c. Jauhari gives a curious illustration of the second sense of this word in an ancient Arabian proverb, which is this:

رَجُلٌ رَهْبُوتٌ خَيْرٌ مِّنْ رَّحْمُوتٍ أَيْ لَانَ تَرْهَبَ خَيْرٌ مِّنْ اِنِّ تَرْحَمَ. A feared man is better than a commiserated one; which he interprets by saying, It is better that thou be feared than pitied: meaning, perhaps, that a man so circumstanced as to insure fear, i.e. who has influence sufficient for this, is better off than one who is commiserated for his wants. Comp. the cognate roots رَهف, رَحَب, and رَهَم.

14. אַף וְ, &c. The precise force of the first of these particles, is much the same with that of אַף, root אָפַף. So אַף of אַפְּפָה, comprehending, including. The second (וְ) is equivalent, perhaps, to הִנֵּה, or הִנֵּהוּ, behold, mark, &c. See ch. viii. 6. The compound will then signify, see, mark, moreover; i.e. in addition to what has been said, and nearly equal to our much more, much less, &c. as the case may require. Shall I answer Him? Shall I therefore (Gram. Art. 234, 2), choose my words with Him? The paragogic ה, in אַפְּפָהוּ, has much the same force in the second member, that אַף, with the epenthetic ו, has in the first. I dwell upon this, because the exact force of the Hebrew text will never be felt, until these particles are well understood.

15. אֲשֶׁר. Because, were I just, I would not, could not, might not, answer, &c. taking אֲשֶׁר, in the sense of quòd, eo quòd. The exegetical sense appears to be, Were I indeed what I ought to be, truly informed and truly good, then surely I should be the last to think of disputing with God: my business would be to supplicate Him as my judge; because I should then know and feel, how far my present state is from that of perfection. The same sentiment seems to pervade the next verse. אֲשֶׁר is an unusual form, compounded apparently of the form אֲשֶׁר, and the prefix אֲ. Gram. Art. 157, 17. Still I am greatly inclined to believe that all is not quite correct here. I suspect, therefore, that אֲשֶׁר for אֲשֶׁר + מִן + אֲשֶׁר was the original punctuation of this combination; and that the sense was, lit. For not judging me, i.e. I would supplicate (Him) not to judge me: מִן occurring frequently in this sense and usage. Rosenmüller cites מְלוֹשֵׁן, Ps. ci. 5, here, as exhibiting the same form with אֲשֶׁר. It will be seen, however, on a moment's inspection, that the insertion of the ו—which makes all the difference—is questionable in this word also; not to dwell on the (ו), which is appended to it. The fact is, therefore, this word is not of the same form with מִי־שָׁפַט; and that not so much as one example of it any where occurs. My own opinion is, that מִלִּשְׁפָּנַי, lit. from slandering me, is here also the true reading. Let others judge.

16. לֹא אֶשְׁמָעוּךָ. I would not, could not, trust, פִּי־יִשְׁמָעוּךָ that he would attend to; or, as we say familiarly, that He would give me his ear, i.e. that I should be regarded: for the reasons given in the following context.

17. הֲבָנָה. To no purpose, &c. prospectively; i.e. for no ostensible object that I can discover. That I am not perfect, I allow; yet, as I retain my faith, which justifies me in expecting that mercy will be extended to my sins, I am at a loss to know why I am thus severely tried. Comp. 2 Sam. xxiv. 24; Job. i. 9; Prov. xxiii. 29.

18. לֹא יִתְנֶנִּי. He gives, or grants, not, הָיִיב (the) bringing back of my spirit, i.e. my refreshing, or, that I be refreshed. Ib. בְּצִלְהָרִים. (With) bitter things. Form מִצְּהָרִים, Gram. Art. 161, form viii. The dagesh is perhaps euphonic. Not unlike this is a passage in the Selections of Sheikh Ahmed, p. v, from Ishāk Ibn Yusūf, ed. Calcutta:

وَقَدْ نَلْتُ أَنْوَاعَ الشَّدَائِدِ كُلِّهَا وَمَارَسْتُ أَهْوَالَ الْخَطُوبِ الْكَوَارِبِ
وَذُقْتُ حَلَاوَاتِ الرَّمَارِ وَمَرَّةَ وَعَلَّمَنِي حُكْمًا دَوَامُ التَّجَارِبِ

I have been put in possession of various and every sort of misfortunes; I have contended with the most fearful and distressing circumstances; I have tasted the sweet and bitter things of time; continued experience has taught me (its) law.

And again in the next page:

لِلَّهِ عَيْشٌ قَدْ حَلَا لَكِنَّهُ مِنْ بَعْدِ مَرَا

Life, indeed, was once sweet; but afterwards it became embittered.

19. אִם לִזְכֹּךְ. Lit. If, or putting the case (it is), as to strength I speak; powerful behold (is He). The ל is often used in this sense, and then is nearly synonymous with אִם. Gram. Art. 216, 15. Ib. אִם-לִי־שָׁפַט. And if as to judgment. מִי יִצְדִּיקֵנִי, who appoints, can or shall appoint (for) me. Comp. Jer. xlix. 19; L. 44; cited, perhaps, from this very place, and where the last clause seems to explain what is here said.

20. See vr. 15, where a similar sentiment is advanced.

21. נַפְשִׁי. My soul; i.e. here, self. Arab. نَفْسِي.

22. אֲחֵרֵיהֶּיא, sup. דִּבְרָהּ. Comp. vr. 3. It is one, i.e. both good and evil must stand convicted before Him; because none is so perfect as to be able to abide His scrutiny: and hence it is that all die,—a manifest allusion to Gen. iii. 19. The latter part of this verse will find a parallel in Eccl. vii. 15; whence it will appear, that the doctrine so little understood in the days of Job, was well known to the Preacher.

23. The meaning seems to be: Should the cruel, nevertheless, wantonly inflict death, will He consider the wasting of the innocent as mere sport? Certainly not: He will avenge it.

24. אֲרָץ, not אֶרֶץ, “The earth,” as the Auth. Ver., but A land, any land; putting a case, as before, but omitting the usual particle אִם. Ib. יִכְסֶה. *Doth he cover, &c.; i.e. Does he throw a veil over, so as to skreen or conceal their faces, which would otherwise answer (עֲנֶה בָם), as to their iniquity. The sense seems to be: Should a land be subject generally to a tyrant, or a tyrannic populace, still those employed to administer its affairs shall not escape Divine vengeance, if they dare to act unjustly.—In such a case the armies of Egypt were destroyed, because the will of the tyrannic Pharaoh was unhesitatingly complied with. In a similar case too, Babylon fell; and so did ancient Rome: and, generally, persons in office acting otherwise than truth and righteousness shall prescribe, shall experience discomfiture in one way or other. This verb is often used in this sense. See Prov. xii. 16; Hos. ii. 11; Ps. xxxii. 1; Job, xvi. 18; Neh. iii. 37. Ib. אִם־לֹא. *If not; i.e. If God is not such as these sentiments require, then (אֲפֹן) tell me, who, i.e. of what sort, He is; for hitherto I have heard of no such God.

25. בְּנִי־רָץ. Than a runner. See my Translation of the Travels of Ibn Batuta, p. 101, note; and comp. 1 Kings, xiv. 27; 2 Kings, xi. 13. Ib. בָּרָחוּ. They have fled, as if pursued: לֹא רָאוּ, have not seen, experienced, טובָה, good, or prosperity.

26. הִלְפּוּ. *They have passed by; i.e. have done so, and do so habitually. Gram. Art. 237, notes. Ib. עִם־אֲבֵיבֵי הַיָּם. With the reed-vessels; i.e. have, as it were, borne them company, and so departed with the greatest speed. The second word here, meaning vessels, is used for ships, boats, or the like, just as vessel is with us. אֲבֵיבֵי is* apparently synonymous with אָבָה, ch. viii. 11. See the note. The Arabic أَبَاء is, in all probability, the same word. Jauhari says of it, وَالْمَدَّ الْعَصْبُ الْوَاحِدَةُ أَبَاءَةٌ وَيُعَالُ الْآبَاءُ بِالْعَتَمِ وَالْعَصْبُ الْوَاحِدَةُ أَبَاءَةٌ وَيُعَالُ الْآبَاءُ بِالْعَتَمِ وَالْعَصْبُ الْوَاحِدَةُ أَبَاءَةٌ; i. e. الْآبَاءُ, with the vowel fatha, and meddu, The reed; as a noun of unity أَبَاءَةٌ, i. e. one reed. They say, too, اَجْمَةُ الْحَلْفَاءِ, the reed, or אָבָה, of lake weed, and الْعَصْبِ, of the reed, specifically. See Schultens on this passage. Again, under اجم, he tells us, that الْاَجْمَةُ is مِنَ الْعَصْبِ, a sort of reed, of which the plural is اَجْمَاتٌ, &c. In Isa. xviii. 2, we find mention of the אָבָה, running on the face of the waters; whence, those carried in them are termed אָבָה, i. e. swift messengers, just as Job says of his days, which are here compared by him to these swift vessels in their progress, אָבָה אָבָה, are swifter than a courier; and, in this place, are like an eagle rushing on his food. Herodotus, lib. i. c. 194, describes such vessels as were used on the Euphrates; and Bruce tells us such are used on the Nile. The Welsh, too, use such still on the Severn, and term them coricles, probably because covered with leather. Heliodorus, in his Æthiopia, lib. x. p. 460, gives a description of vessels of this sort: his words are: ὑπεραιούντο κατὰ τὸν Ἀσταβόρραν ποταμὸν οἱ μὲν κατὰ τὸ ζεύγμα, οἱ δὲ πορθμείοις ἐκ καλάμων πεποιημένοι· ἃ δὲ πλεῖστα καὶ κατὰ πολλὰ μέρη τῆς ὄχθης ἐσάλευσεν. . . ἔστι δὲ ὁξυδρόμωτατα τῆς τε ὕλης ἕνεκα, καὶ ἀρχοῦς, πλὴν ὅτι οὗο (που) καὶ τρεῖς ἀνδρας ἀνεγόμενα. κάλαμος γάρ ἐστι οἴχα τετμημένος, καὶ τομὴν ἐκάστην σάξιον παρεγόμενος. . . “transmittebant Astaborram fluvium, alii per pontem, alii navigiis ex arundine factis, quæ plurima et in multis partibus ripæ vacillabant. . . Sunt autem celerrima tum propter materiam tum propter onus, quod non plures quam duos trèsve viros ferant. Arundo enim in duas partes dissecta, ex qualibet sectione navigiolum præbet ac efficit.” So also Theophrastus, Hist. Plant. iv. 9, Αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ πάπυρος πρὸς πλεῖστα χρήσιμος. καὶ γὰρ πλοῖα ποιοῦσιν ἐξ αὐτοῦ. And Plin. xiii. 11 (22), Ex ipso quidem papyro navigia texunt. And vi. 56 (57), Etiam nunc (naves) in Britannico oceano vitiles corio circumsutæ sunt (such are the coricles of the Welsh just noticed): in Nilo ex papyro, ex scirpo, et arundine. See also Lucan. Pharsal. iv. 36; Achilles Tatius, iv. § 248; Prud. adv. Symm. ii. p. 242; Plutarch. de Isid. et Osir. § 358; Hieroz. of Bochart, Pt. II. lib. II. cap. II.; Gesenius, Comment. über den Jesaia (ch. xviii. 2). Diodorus Siculus, also, lib. III. xlii. tells us, that the Nabatean Arabs took to this sort of piratic life, after the kings of Alexandria had made the Arabian gulf navigable. His words are: καὶ ληστρικά σάφη κατασκευάζοντες ἐλήστευον τοὺς πλεόντας, κ. τ. λ. See also ch. xxiv. 18. Strabo, too, notices a small sort of vessel of this sort used by the Arabs, which was—just as the coricles of the Welsh now are on the Severn—covered with leather. His words are: πλέοντες ἐπ' αὐτὰ διὰ τῶν στενῶν δερματίνους πλοίας, “Navigantes ad ea per angustias, navigiis ex corio confectis.” Lib. xvi. § 19. See ch. xxiv. 18. Mr. Rich tells us (Residence in Koordistan, vol. ii. pp. 163, 164, notes), that such robberies are still practised on the Tigris.

27. אִם־אֶמְרִי. If, or putting the case that, my word has been, &c. אֶמְרִי, read Omri, the accent here (Tiphkhá anterior) being always placed on the first syllable, when analogy would require it to be elsewhere, is not allowed to interfere with the vowel of this syllable. Gram. Art. 61. Ib. אֶשְׁכַּח־אֶנְזֶה. Let me forget,—forsake, &c. Gram. Art. 234. I take the latter of these verbs also to refer to שִׁחִי: it being a thing usual with the sacred writers to add such words, for the purpose of strengthening, or otherwise defining, their expressions. Gram. Art. 241, 18. The following אֶבְלִיגָה וְאֶבְלִיגָה כִּנִּי, let me even, &c., or, taking it in its own order, my countenance let me even make joyful. That the copulative ו is so used, see Numb. xxx. 8; Prov. xxxi. 28, &c.; Nold. Concord. p. 283, &c. אֶבְלִיגָה. According to the Soorah, بَلَّغَةَ, بَلَّغَةَ, signifies light coming on at the latter part of the night, and كُشَادَكِي مِيَانِ اَبْرَوَانِ, extent between the eyebrows; and اَبْلَجَ الْوَجْهَ مُشْرِقَهُ, the countenance's lighting up, or being gladdened: which exactly suits our passage. We have also, وَجَّهٌ بَلَّاجَةٌ for παρρησία, in Erpen. N. T.; 1 Tim. iii. 13.

28. יִנְרָתִי. I have dreaded, &c. A state familiar to those who are nervous: they can seldom allow themselves to believe that God can ever be merciful enough to forgive all their sins. So adds Job, For I know, &c.

29. אֶזְכִּי. I am wicked, &c. Why then am I thus exercised with pain, both from within and from without? comp. vv. 17. The two succeeding verses follow out this sentiment.

30. Job here recurs to the sentiments with which he commenced this discourse, vv. 2, 3, &c. אֶשְׁנַנִּי, I take to signify, that I should effectually answer Him; i. e. overcome

Him in argument. The epenthetic ׀ seems to supply this corroborative sense. Gram. Art. 235.

33. לֹא יֵשׁ. There exists not, &c. בּוֹדֵקִים, imploder, mediator. The 32d and 33d verses contain an anti-climax—as do the 30th and 31st,—or descending gradation.

34. יִסֶּר, the apocopated form of יִסְרֶה. See Gram. Tables of the Verb, and Art. 233. Used here to express petition (ib. note). Let Him remove, or, O that he would, &c. הִבְעִיתַנִּי. Let it not affright me. We have the epenthetic ׀ inserted here, probably, for the same purpose as in vr. 30.

35. We have here the paragogic ה and ׀ in the verbs, marking, perhaps, the consecutive character of the context; as if he had said, Were I liberated from this calamity, my mind would not experience the instability and inequality of confidence which it now does. I should address Him, and not be afraid: because the terrors with which He afflicts me, would then be removed. But this, alas! is not my present state. Ib. בְּיִלְאֵי־כֶן. Lit. Behold, or for not so, as to me (is it) with me. I take יִלְאֵי here as a nominative absolute, which would more regularly stand at the commencement of the sentence; but, as the language is highly impassioned, a transposition of this sort need not be wondered at. We have a similar transposition in vr. 19, in the particle הִנֵּה, probably on the same account.

CHAPTER X.

1. בְּקָטָה. Whether we derive this word from קוּט, קוּץ, קוּץ, or from their Arabic or Syriac equivalent or cognate roots, the exegetical sense will be much the same; i. e. wearied, goulded, cut, pained, or the like. The form of the word requires that בְּקָטָה be the root in kal; if קוּט, then בְּקָטָה would be the regular form: but no great stress can be laid on the vowel points; nor is the niphal species universally formed as the tables require. See Gram. Art. 193, 4-6. All the patriarch means is, I am pained, worn, weary, &c. with life.

אֶזְזָבָה עָלַי וְגו'. Lit. Let me leave my complaint upon myself; i. e. give myself up to the expression of it. In vr. 27 above, we have אֶשְׁכַּחַהּ שִׁיהִי, immediately followed by אֶזְזָבָה: but the context here requires a different sense; a sense which the usage of this verb will fully justify. Comp. Exod. xxiii. 5; Deut. xxxii. 36; 1 Kings, xxiv. 10, &c. So in the Arabic, the verb عَزَبَ is applied to cattle grazing at large and freely; to an unmarried person, &c.; which appears to be its primary sense: and hence its secondary one, to leave, abandon, forsake; which is only a different application of the same original idea.

2. אֶל הַרְשִׁיעַנִי. Account me not, pronounce me not, wicked: i. e. condemn me not. Gram. Art. 157, 6. Ib. הַרְרִיבֵנִי. Thou contendest me (See Gram. Art. 206), for with me.

3. בִּירְמַעְשֶׁךָ. That thou injure, or oppress? Comp. ch. xiii. 25. Job here puts an impossible question, to shew the great difficulty to which his case had reduced him. Ib. יָבִיעַ בְּפִיךָ. Lit. The thing laboured, i. e. wrought by thine own hands. Ib. הוֹפִיעָה. Thou hast shined. This word is applied to the appearance of the Almighty, and thence to express the light and splendour flowing from Him. Deut. xxxiii. 2; Ps. l. 2; xciv. 1; Job, xxxvii. 15, &c.; and, in this and similar cases, must signify approval, giving countenance to, &c.

4. אִם־יִרְאוֹתָ. Lit. Indeed, or Whether, like the seeing of a mortal man, seest thou? So the Arabic usage of أَمْ. Kor. Sur. ii. أَمْ لَمْ تُنذِرْهُمْ. Whether thou address them not, &c., but without an interrogation. In this, and the following verse, אָנֹכִי and גָּבֵר retain their pure etymological significations, which are, weak, or mortal, man; and great, or powerful, man, respectively.

6. פִּי הַבְקָשׁ. That Thou inquirest, &c.: i. e. great, wise, and glorious, as Thou art, I cannot discover what can be intended by the sad system of affliction by which I am exercised. The same sentiment often occurred to David: as it has, and does, to many at this, and every, period of time. Nor is it necessary that we should know all God's purposes: that they shall work together for our good is wisdom enough for us; and this is the proper work of faith.

7. עַל־יְדֹעֶתְךָ. Lit. On, or upon, or in, thy knowledge; i. e. simply, I recognise thee as my Lord and Maker; and Thou knowest, בִּי לֹא אֲרָשֶׁע, that I am not determinately wicked, or guilty, as these my accusers will have me to be. It should be observed, that it is a very different thing in Job to say that he is not guilty, that is, of the crimes laid to his charge by his friends; and to persist in affirming that he is a sinner in God's sight generally : the former was a duty to himself; the latter, a duty to God. He adds, nevertheless, Be the real cause of my affliction what it may, it is well known to God; and to myself, that deliverance is to be expected from no other.

8. עֲצָבוּנִי. Lit. Have tied me together; i. q. תִּקְּיֵאֲנִי, vr. 10. Arab. عَصَبَ, circumdedit, cinxit: vittâ fasciâve revinxit. Syr. حَصَبَ, ligavit fasciâ, &c. The following, יָחַד קָבִיב, at once, or as one, round about, refers, I think, to this verb. וַיַּעֲשֵׂנִי. And made, or finished, me. Comp. Gen. ii. 3. בָּרָא — לְעֵשׂוֹת. He heaved out, or formed, for completion. See my Prolegomena to Mr. Bagster's Polyglott Bible, Prol. i. § vii. par. v.

9. כְּחַמְצֵת עֲשִׂיתָנִי. Like the clay, &c.; a direct allusion to the creation of man : the last clause is worded in the very terms used in Gen. iii. 19. It is, therefore, a citation from that book.

10. תִּקְּיֵאֲנִי. Syr. حَصَلًا, undè حَصَلًا, congeries, &c. Thou condensest, puttest together, makest up, or compactest me. Job here, and to vr. 12, describes his own conception and formation, which, in the spirit of true philosophy, he ascribes to the miraculous wisdom and power of God.

11. תִּשְׁכַּכְנִי. This seems to be cited in Ps. cxxxix. 13, which see.

12. חַיִּים, &c. Life and favour, &c. Not only gavest thou me life, but graciously hast preserved me during my whole life. Comp. ch. xxxi. 18. Ib. וַיִּקְּרָאֲנִי. And thy appointment, i. e. thy Providence.

13. בְּלִבְךָ. In thy heart, i. e. The invisible means by which thy operations are brought about, as well as the ends for which they were undertaken, lie hidden within thy breast : no man can declare them. Ib. יָדַעְתִּי. This I know, and this therefore I proclaim.

14. רָאִיתָ אֲשֶׁר חָטָאתִי. If I have sinned, Thou hast observed me: thy knowledge of this will retain the fact against me. Ib. וּמִצִּיּוֹנִי. And from my transgression, &c.; i. e. although Thou hast been favourable to me, still thou wilt not consider me guiltless. This sentiment is carried on into the next verse : and both the justice and mercy of God are there plainly vindicated.

15. וַיַּדְרִיכֵנִי. Have I done righteously, &c.; i. e. If (supplying אֲשֶׁר from the preceding context) I have done what righteousness requires, as far as man can do it, still a sense of the imperfection of my services must be such as to overwhelm me with shame and blushing. See vv. 20, 21, above. Ib. שָׁבַע קָלוֹן. Full of vileness, and seeing my wretchedness, or, the seeing, experiencing (for verbs of sense are often used one for another) of my own wretchedness, I cannot so much as look up. Ps. xl. 13. Ib. עָנִי. My wretchedness, i. e. either moral or physical; but here moral, as קָלוֹן in the parallel requires. Comp. also ch. xxx. 16, 27; Ps. xxv. 18; lxxxviii. 10; cvii. 10; cxix. 92, &c.

16. וַיִּגְדָּה. But he is glorious, or triumphs, &c. Impers. Comp. Exod. xv. 1, 21, &c. The sense, "increase," often given to this verb, manifestly does not belong to it. If however we bear in mind, that Job is here comparing his case with that of the prosperous wicked (see vr. 3), we shall find no difficulty in seeing, that this applies to them distributively, or impersonally. He then resumes his discourse, as left at vr. 14. פֶּשַׁח לֵיּוֹן. As a fierce lion, &c. On this word see Bochart. Hieroz. pt. i. lib. iii. c. i.; Michaelis, Supp. N. 2455. Ib. וַתִּשָּׁב, &c. Lit. Thou turnest again, &c.; but, if taken as qualifying the following verb, it may be construed (Gram. Art. 222, 4) as an adverb; AGAIN thou becomest, or shewest thyself, marvellous towards me (Gram. Art. 157, 13, 14): i. e. suppliest me with strength for my day. I prefer the former. Admirable will, perhaps, be a better translation of this verb here than marvellous: as it is used in some other places to express the gracious and good works God has done for His people. This sense will occasionally give a pointed antithesis to the context: as, Ps. cxxxix. 14, נִרְאוֹת נִפְלְאוֹתַי בְּפִלְאוֹתַי. In terrible things have I become wonderful, or, an object of wonder and admiration: admirable are Thy works, &c.; i. e. not wonderful, considered only in the abstract, but as bringing good to the good, and evil to the evil, doers.

17. תְּחַדֵּשׁ עֲדָיִךְ. Thou renewest—&c., i. e. both by the reproaches of these my friends, and of others my professed foes—my pains, &c. Ib. וַתִּתְרַב, for תִּתְרַבָּה, in Hiph.: but, as the verb is apocopated, and would regularly become תִּתְרַבָּה, to avoid the difficulty of pronunciation, as in the segolate nouns, (Gram. Artt. 74, 2; 108; 119, 7), it takes the form תִּתְרַב, and hence, perhaps, it ought to be considered here as forming an ἀπόδοσις to the preceding member, thus: so, i. e. by this means, Thou makest the increase of Thine anger against me to appear. Gram. Art. 233, 3. Ib. תְּחַלִּיפוּת. Changes, renewals; but, as the language is here evidently military, reinforcements. Ib. וַיִּצְבֵּא. An army. The י here I take to be intensive, as in 1 Kings, viii. 27, &c. See Nold. p. 290, sig. 28.

18. אֶגְרַע. Had I expired, i. e. at that time: the present tense here, as in other cases innumerable, taking a time present to that had in view by the context generally. The same is the case with הִרְאֵנִי following; and also with אֲהַיָּה, and אֲבָבֵל, in the next verse, without any conversivum to mark this: the doctrine about which is, therefore, a mere figment: the particle having no such conversive power in any case.

20. יִחַדֵּל וְשָׁתַר. He would cease, lay on: i. e. to lay on (supp. יָדוֹ) his hand, see vr. 33 above: but here, to afflict. מִמֶּנִּי. From me, constr. with יִחַדֵּל. That he would cease from me, &c.; i. e. afflict me no longer.

21. אֵלַי. I go, constr. with אֶל-אֶרֶץ, to a land: not with the parenthetical clause, וְגַלְתִּי אֶת-שִׁמְךָ. And I return not. See Gram. Art. 241, 18.

22. אֶרֶץ עֲפָרָה. A land of singular or great darkness. עֲפָרָה for עֵיפָרָה. Gram. Art. 72: the root being עִיף, or עָוַף. In this case, the terminating ה, named paragogic, will be the Arabic ة of unity, or singularity; as in عَلَمًا, a singularly learned man. So אֶשְׁעָרָה. Great, or singular, salcation:—of עֵיפָה Amos, iv. 3, and יִשְׁעָה, respectively. The primary notion of this root seems to be, covering, doubling, involving, concealing, and hence, obscuring. Chald. עִי, duplicatum.

עֵיפָא, peplum. Syr. ع, duplicavit, involvit. Ethpa. deliquim animi passus est. Hence, עֵפְעֵפִים, eye-lids, will be, the coverings of the eyes, &c. Hence, too, the coming on of dark clouds, night, &c., may be well described by this term; as also may distress, or adversity, brought on by any cause whatsoever. See Job, xi. 17; Isa. viii. 22, 23; Amos, iv. 13; 1 Sam. xiv. 28. From the term הִפָּע occurring at the end of the chapter here, and signifying, giving light—alluding, as it should seem, to its brighter season, or day-time—I take the term עֲפָרָה to signify, the shadows of night, or the darker periods of the land spoken of, and which are compared with אֶפְלָל, thick or dense darkness. With this, עֲלֵמָה, shadow of death, I take to be in apposition. Ib. וְגַלְתִּי אֶת-שִׁמְךָ. And orderless, such as was the state of primeval night, Gen. i. 2. Emptiness, and want of cultivation, with darkness: i. e. הָיָה וְבָהָה וְהוֹשֵׁה. Or, as Milton words it, “Darkness fled; Light shone, and order from disorder sprung.” So Shakespeare, “Let order die and darkness be the burier of the dead.” Ib. וְהִפָּע כְּמוֹ-אֶפְלָל. Lit. And it giveth light like the thick darkness; i. e. The light, which is at any time to be seen there, may more properly be termed thick darkness: or, as Milton speaks, perhaps with this very passage in his eye, “Not light, but rather darkness visible," &c. Job here describes the region of the dead as a dark, dreary, sunless land, such as this earth was before light shone upon it. The description is grounded, no doubt, on the real character of Oriental tombs, which are formed of large chambers, constructed under ground. In these, cells are made, in which the several coffins are placed. And, as neither light nor air can be admitted, except when opened for the reception of some new tenant, their gloom and noisome stench (see Matt. xxiii. 27) cannot well be overdone in description. See also Isa. xiv. 8, with Lowth's notes.

CHAPTER XI.

2. אִישׁ שְׁפָתָיִם. Lit. A man of both lips. As the tongue is often put for language of a specific sort, see ch. v. 21, and Eccl. v. 2, i. e. as piercing, flattering, &c., so is the lip to represent sentiment, the making professions, or the like. Comp. Ps. xii. 3; xxii. 8; Zeph. iii. 9; Prov. xii. 19; xvii. 4; Job, xii. 20, &c.; and so, perhaps, Gen. xi. 1, 7.

3. תְּבַרִּיךְ. Thy strange or singular sayings, &c. Whether we derive this word from the Heb. בָּדַד, Arab. بَدَّدَ, sejunctit, or בָּדָד, Arab. بَدَّأَ, or بَدَّو, originating, feigning, being alone, &c., the general exegetical sense will be essentially the same, i. e. singular, rare, novel, things, or words. Or, if we suppose it to take its signification from בָּד, linen, and to be used in the sense of בְּגָד, a garment, or coat, the result will still be nearly the same, viz. cloaking, dissembling, &c. Comp. ch. vi. 15; Isa. xxiv. 16. Ib. מִכְלָם. Putting to shame. This word is nearly allied in sense and sound to the Sanscrit Glāma, Engl. glum, or gloom, and Lat. calamitas.

4. לִקְחֵי. Lit. My receiving, or holding, as relating to opinions: i. e. My doctrine. The word is manifestly a favourite with Solomon, who appears, on many occasions, to have imitated both the language and style of Job.

6. הַעֲלָמוֹת. Lit. Hidden things; i. e. treasures: which seems to be the proper exegetical sense of this term, in all the places in which it occurs. Ib. כַּפְּלָיִם לְרֵגְשֵׁיךָ. Two times double us to substance, wealth; i. e. greatly superior to it. Ib. וְדַע. And know thou, lit. But imperatives are often put for futures. See Gram. Art. 239, and the LXX. in this place. The sense, then, would have been much the same if the pret. or pres. וְדָעָה, or וְדָעָה, had been used; the ו signifying so, therefore, or the like: i. e. If God had supplied thee with the real knowledge of thy state, then shouldst thou have known that He thinks lightly of thee. Ib. לִשְׂחָה לְךָ.

This verb I take to be the Hipl. of נָתַתָּה , or נָתַתָּה . See the Dictionaries, and comp. Job, xxxix. 17, where the context is of a kindred character. Here, however, ascription of the thing implied by the verb is evidently meant (see Gram. Art. 157, 6, with the note): i. e. Because thou art sinful, God has so dealt with thee, as thus to declare that thou art foolish and deceived. Not unlike this are the verses cited by Ibn Arabshah, in a work entitled كتاب فاكهة الخلقاء &c., p. ۴۷۷, lately published by Freytag :

وإذا اراد الله انغاذ القضاء وظهور قهر للبصائر باتاناً
 جعل الدواء لذلك داء ممرضاً وفوائد الترياق سما تاتاناً
 والكون خصماً والمكان مناقضاً والعيش موتاً والصديف مقاتلاً

But when it is the will of God that fate should take effect, and that wrath should openly bereave, He makes medicine, for this, the cause of disease; the advantages of the specific, a killing poison. Then is all being an enemy; place, an adversary; life, death; and the friend, a destroyer.

I cannot help thinking, however, that the חָכְמָה , wisdom, here spoken of, is not the abstract property so called merely, but that person who is, in other places of Holy Scripture, termed the Wisdom of God; especially as the context immediately following has been cited by St. Paul, Rom. x. 6, &c., and referred to Christ. The apostle's citation, however, is generally supposed to be taken from Deut. xxx. 12, 13; which, as far as it goes, was perhaps taken by Moses from this place in Job. But, what is most remarkable, a considerable part of St. Paul's citation (vr. 7) is not to be found in Deuteronomy, but occurs here in Job only. St. Paul, therefore, whether he cited a part or not of this passage from Deuteronomy, must have taken the latter part of his citation from Job.

I believe, therefore, that he did so, and that he has put the true explanation on it; and, consequently, that Zophar here speaks of Christ. Besides, the context immediately following (here in Job) speaks not of wisdom in the abstract (and perhaps no part of the Old Testament does); but of the person and character of God. So again, in vr. 10, not an abstract quality, but a substantive person, must be meant. Compare also ch. xxviii. vv. 12-28, where (vr. 21) it is said to be נִגְלָמָה , laid up, concealed, as here. And, although this wisdom may be spoken of as a property, yet, as it is here mentioned as derived from revelation solely, it must have reference to Christ. See also Prov. viii., where something more than an abstract property must be had in view.

It is worth remarking here, too, that in the East, from the very earliest times perhaps, to the present day, the terms wisdom and intelligence have been used to designate a person; and that person who, as the Vicegerent of the unapproachable and invisible Deity, made, and still governs, the world. The Buddhists style this person Buddha, which, in the Sanscrit,—like the Greek Δαίμων,—signifies Wise one. The Brahmins have him in Brahma, and their most ancient pretended revelation the Veda, i. e. Wisdom, Anglicè Wit. So, in the Sanscrit compound Vedavit, i. e. Veda-knowing, or Anglicè Wit-witty. It is a curious fact, that the Oriental Philosophers, i. e. teachers of religion, have been for ages, and still are, divided on the question, whether the attributes of the Deity, as Wisdom, &c., have not distinct essences, i. e. are not distinct persons. See Poccoke's Spec., pp. 208, 218, &c.; and Tholuck's Speculative Trinitatslehre des Späteren Orients, Berlin, 1826. The Gnostics, a race of philosophers who endeavoured to make Christianity square with their own heathenish notions, considered Christ as this person: in which they erred, not so much in the general result thus arrived at, as in the means which they had recourse to for obtaining it. And, if heathenism is nothing more than an apostasy from true religion, as many very eminent writers have held—and which must be the fact if the Bible is true—we need not at all be surprised in occasionally meeting with many coincidences of this sort. (See my Sermon on the Sabbath, with the notes, and the authors there referred to.) The following is an extract from the Dabistān, a very curious Persian work on the creeds of the East. It is taken from the eleventh doctrine, on the creed of Hukamū, or Wise men, i. e. Philosophers:—مدار این طایفه بپراهن عقلیست و هداستنای هر دو گروه کنه واجب الوجود نمی توان یافت وجود وحدت وتشخص و هه صفات عین ذات مقدس اوست ... گفته اند حق عالم است بکلیات وبر جزئیات متغیر بر وجه کلی چنانکه در اعتقادات یزدانیه نموده اند... گویند حق فاعل قریب نیست چه شایسته مرتبه پادشاهی و دارائی نباشد که بخودی خود هه کارها پردازد بلکه مناسب آنست که بیکی از پیشکاران را که به بسیاری زیرکی وتوانائی بر کارها موصوف باشد برای امور سلطنت ورعایت تعیین نماید و او هم بفرمان پادشاه در کارهای دیگر وزرا ونواب بر پا کند وهریک از نایبان گماشتگان وکارکنان معین سازند تا هه امور پادشاهی بدان گونه که خواسته خسرو وفرمان مضبوط باشد

بنابراین عقل اول را که بیاری بهمین و کدخدای بروسود فروسود
 سرش و فرهنک آمیغی گویند ابداع فرمود و آدم معنوی او را
 نامند این الله خَلَفَ آدَمَ عَلَيَّ صُورَتِهِ یعنی مجرد و بسیط چون
 عقل کل برزخ و جوب و امکان است و محیط طرفین و جوب جانب
 این اوست امکان جانب الپسر پس نفس کل از جانب الپسر
 که طرف امکانست حاصل شده باشد و از روی حقیقت آدم
 صورت عقلست و صورت حوا نفس کل و از اینجهت گفته اند
 ظهور حوا از جانب الپسر آدم بود و صوفیه نیز برین اند
 چنانکه همین عبارت را شیخ محمد در شرح گلشن راز آورده
 و عیسی این الله عبارت ازین عقلست چه از حق بی واسطه
 صادر شده و حقیقه محمدیه نیز این عقل را دانند... و چون
 کمالات حضرت رسالت پناه پرتوی از ان جوهر است نور محمدی
 گویند... و جز این نام بسیار دارد و بتوسط عقل نخستین
 عقل دوم و نفس و جسم فلك اطللس پدید آمده و روان ساده
 سپهر را حوای معنوی گویند و بتوسط عقل دوم عقل سوم
 نفس فلك ثوابت و جسم فلك ثوابت بر اینگونه ابداع عقول
 و غیره i. e. The principles of this sect are founded on intellectual proofs. Each of the two (i. e. of the Oriental, and Peripatetic philosophers, which, as the author states, ever have existed, and are still found in every part of the world) agree that the essence of God is inscrutable; that his necessary existence, unity, personality, and all his other attributes, constitute his very essence. They say that God knows every thing generally, but is, in individual things, changeable as it respects the whole: as it has been shewn in the accounts of the Yezdani. They say, too, that God is not an immediate agent; because it would be unbecoming the dignity of royalty to do any thing in his own person. On the contrary, it is most fitting that the affairs of state be committed to some one of his attendants well known for his activity and ability; that he, by the command of his sovereign, appoint other ministers and officers; and, that these again should have their emissaries and functionaries, so that the whole business of government be carried on under the commands, and according to the will, of the sovereign. On this account it is, that God created the first Intelligence, which, in the Persic, is termed Bahman, and Lord; also Berusood, Ferusool, Serush, and Farhang

Amighi. And him they style the figurative Adam; since “God created Adam in his own form,” i.e. simply and un-mixedly; and, as the universal Intelligence is the means of necessary existence and power, and comprehends both; necessary existence may be said to constitute its right side, and power its left. Hence the universal soul is obtained from the left, which is its proper place. In truth, then, Adam may be said to represent the Intelligence, and Eve the universal soul; and on this account it is, that Eve is said to have appeared from the left side of Adam. The Soofees, indeed, hold the same, as the Sheikh Mohammed has stated in his Commentary on the Gulshani Rāz; and, that when Jesus is styled the Son of God, the meaning is to be sought in this first Intelligence, because he proceeded from God without any intervening agency. They also consider Mohammed as being the same Intelligence... and, as the perfections of his person constitute a ray of light from that essence, he is termed THE MOHAMMEDAN LIGHT. Besides this, he has many other such names. Now, by the mediation of the first Intelligence, was the second Intelligence, and the soul and body of the azure heavens brought into existence; and hence they style the revolving, pure, crystalline heavens, the typical Eve. Again, by the intervention of the second Intelligence, the third Intelligence, viz. the soul and body of the heavens of the fixed stars, were created; and in the same manner were the Intelligences and souls, &c.

That the philosophy of ancient Chaldea, Persia, and Egypt, contained these notions, see Bruckeri Hist. Crit. Philos. tom. i. p. 132, &c.; and my Sermon on the Sabbath, notes. This, as the author has well remarked, forms a main part of the religious philosophy prevailing in every sect in the East; and, as it is a tolerably good illustration of the sentiment of St. Paul, where he says, that “professing themselves to be wise, they became fools” (Rom. i. 22, &c.), and also of the passage before us, I have thought it worth while to give the extract, although it is longer than I could have wished. One thing to be observed here is, the immense danger of giving in to philosophical speculations on religion, and of adopting figurative interpretations in order to make every thing we may meet with square therewith; while, on the other hand, however foreign to our notions an authoritative interpretation given by an apostle may be, or however boldly figurative it may seem, it is not for us to reject it on any account whatsoever. In the present instance, as in the others referred to, the term wisdom appears to designate a person, and that person to be Christ. This, then, we ought to consider as a revealed doctrine; but not to be recurred to, either for the purpose of establishing any similar method of interpretation in any other place, or to set on foot, much less to confirm, any philosophico-theological notions we might happen to entertain, or be disposed to adopt. In such cases, therefore, when Scripture fails to be its own interpreter in the main, our duty is to remain contentedly in ignorance.

7. הִתְחַקֵּר. Whether (by) searching, &c. i.e. Is it possible for thee to find out, by any mode of inquiry, how subtle or learned soever it may be, the character, thoughts, modes of action, &c. of the Almighty? The whole affair is (vv. 8, 9) too high, deep, lengthy, and broad, for thy powers to comprehend, much less to develope thoroughly (נִדְרֵי-תִבְלִית). It seems extremely probable to me, that Zophar had in view some such reasoning as that which has just been cited from the Dabistān, which presumes to ascertain how the Almighty must have thought, determined, and acted, as much in the highest heavens, as in the unsearchable mysteries by which we are surrounded here below; the least of which, indeed, far exceeds the most comprehensive powers of man.

8. הִנְחֵי. Here, perhaps, a nom. absolute. Gram. Art. 216, 10. As to the heights, &c. So, again, in the following member. עִמְקָהּ, &c. As the question here evidently is about the Almighty—not about the search, or any other inanimate thing—I have introduced He is in, &c. as the place seems to require. Comp. ch. xxii. 12.

10. אִם-יִגְדֹּלֶהָ. If He oppose, &c. It is evident from the context that this verb is used here in a military sense. Comp. the Arab. خَالَفَ, adversatus fuit, repugnavit, &c.; and ch. xx. 24; 1 Sam. x. 3; Isa. xxi. 1; and Hab. i. 11.

11. אֲנִי שָׂוֵא. Men of, i.e. addicted to, vanity, &c. Such He distinguishes from others: it is added וְכַדְרָא, and so, accordingly, He seeth, discovereth, iniquity. Ib. וְלֹא יִהְיֶינָהּ, and shall not he understand and act accordingly? It is thus, therefore, that He deals with thee, making every thing adverse to thee, because of thine iniquity, vr. 6.

12. וְאִישׁ זָבִיב, i.e. Even the gross, dense, insolent, man, becomes bold, impertinent, daring, born as wild as the ass, even as the wild ass or onager. The lexicographers have, for some reason or other, supposed זָבִיב to signify hollow; and hence, supposing לִבְב to be cognate with it, have thought that it also signified the same thing. In the Arabic, indeed, أَتْبُوب signifies the spaces between the knots of a cane or reed; and, because a reed is generally hollow, and is hence used as a tube, the notion has probably prevailed, that this word signified hollow also! but all this is fallacious. The verb تَبَّ signifies mutivit, fremuit, caper libidinosus; تَبَّ عَتُوْدَهُ, magnificè semet extulit, et superbivit: II. Inter-nodia produxit planta. Cogn. أَنْبَ, and the Hebrew נֹב or נִב. The Arabic verb is, in the latter sense, well illustrated by the following verse in Ibn Arabshah's Life of Timour, p. v, Calcutta edition:

لَا يُؤَيِّسَتَكَ مِنْ مَجْدٍ تَبَاعُدُهُ فَاِنَّ لِلْمَجْدِ تَدْرِجًا وَتَرْتِيبًا
 اِنَّ الْعَنَاءَ الَّذِي شَاهَدْتَ رَفَعَتْهَا تَنَمُّو قَتَنَتْبَتْ اُنْبُوْبًا فَاُنْبُوْبًا

*Let not the distance of glory make thee utterly hopeless,
 For it is to be obtained orderly and gradually.
 The reed, too, whose height thou now seest,
 Sprang up and grew knot by knot.*

I. e. it increased shoot by shoot, until it arrived at its highest point. I take נָבִיב, therefore, to signify proud, insolent, &c. Ib. יָלָבַב. Takes heart, grows bold. Ib. וַיַּיֵר, i. e. and an ass, i. e. like the ass, אֶפְרָס, wild ass, is man born. Esau is, in like manner, styled אֶפְרָס אֶפְרָס, Gen. xvi. 12, because he was born hairy and was fierce, and because his posterity were, like the wild ass, also to be fierce, and to inhabit the desert country. The whole verse, therefore, is intended to apply to Job, as insolent, ignorant, and pertinacious.

Our Auth. Vers. has here, "Vain man would be wise, though," &c. It is true the verb לָבַב may signify being wise, from the circumstance that the heart (לֵב) was supposed to be the seat of thought. But the heart was also supposed to be the seat of courage, which is only a modification of thought. In the former acceptation the passage is without point; as Job certainly made no profession of wisdom. Nor can I see any connexion whatever, between the supposition of a man's being born wild as an ass, and his being desirous to be wise, or the contrary. According to Hebrew notions, however, a wild ass was esteemed a ferocious animal; and, according to Syriac usage, the verb signifies, corroboravit, audax, animosus fuit. In the Samaritan—which is corrupt Chaldee—ausus est, vim fecit, irrupit; and, in Conj. iv. of the Arabic, incessu vehementi fuit (see Castell). I think, therefore, the sense given in the Translation is the true sense of this passage.

13. אִם־יָדָתָהּ. If thou hadst, &c. I take all this to be in the past tense, not only because the verb הִכִּינֶרְתָּ is, but also, because the פִּי־יָזוּ, with which the 15th verse begins, requires it to be so. In this case, the imperative הִיָּזְתָּהּ of the 14th might also be construed as a preterite; i.e. as a present tense carried back into a past tense. But I think it ought rather to be taken as an impassioned parenthetical passage. The whole will then be as given in the text; and will imply, that if Job had formerly acted differently, i.e. with greater knowledge and less presumption, his state would now have been different from what it is: which is in unison with what is said above in vr. 6.

15. בְּמִיּוֹם . . . מְצֻקָה. Without spot . . . been pure, &c. The participial מְצֻקָה is capable of two senses: the one signifying fused, as metal fused by the refiner: in this sense, it may be applied to troops thrown into disorder: the other, pure or purified, as applied to metals fused for this purpose. In the context here, it is in the parallel with מְבִיּוֹם, without spot; and, therefore, ought to be taken as synonymous with it. In ch. xxxvii. 18, we have מְצֻקָה בְּרֵאֵי, which I take to be much the same as בְּרֵאֵי מְבִיּוֹם, as a mirror without spot, or spotless. This will throw some light on a very obscure passage in Isa. viii. 23, כִּי לֹא מְצֻקָה לְאַשְׁרֵי מְצֻקָה לָהּ, lit. for it shall not be darkened to her, to whom it hath been fused; i.e. made pure to her, i.e. Jerusalem, who shall now have been purified by affliction, shall be no more in a state of darkness and distressing obscurity, as in the former times, &c. Comp. Isa. i. 25, 26; and Job, x. 22. The preceding מְצֻקָה (ch. viii. 23), I take to signify the darkening, i.e. adversity fusing, which she was to undergo as in a “furnace of affliction,” ch. xlviii. 10.

16. כְּמַיִם רַבִּים. As waters, &c.; i.e. Thou shouldest think on thy troubles, as on things long gone by.

17. וּבְמִצְחֵךְ־רִיבִים. And than noon, ch. v. 14. וּבְמִצְחֵךְ־רִיבִים, shall a period arise, i.e. more bright and cheery than noon. Comp. Ps. cxii. 4; Isa. lviii. 8, 10. וּבְמִצְחֵךְ־רִיבִים signifies duration, i.e. any period of time. הִתְעַצְפָּה I take to be the second pers. sing. pres. of kal, with the paragogic ה, and to signify, and so shouldest thou be in obscurity, i.e. adversity. In Ps. xc. 10, we have precisely the same form in הִתְעַצְפָּה, and used likewise in the antithetic member of a sentence; i.e. and so, thus, consequently, shall we fly away: rather, I think, be in obscurity, i.e. come to the grave. Some of the ancient versions render, be punished; which is not very far from the mark. So here the end is, the time of prosperity so foretold. Ib. בְּבֹקֶר הַתְּהוֹמָה. Thou shouldst be, become, as the dawn; i. e. thy light, prosperity, &c. should be splendid and refreshing: or, thy light should gradually rise and expand itself far and wide. Ps. xxxvii. 6, is probably an imitation of this place.

18. וְהִצַּרְתָּ. And hadst thou, i. e. formerly been put to the blush, הַתְּשַׁבֵּב, now shouldst thou lie down in security.

19. וְהִלְלוּ בְּיָנֶיךָ. And many should (surely) seek thy countenance. The phrase here used seems to me to be ill understood. The verb is manifestly the same with the Arabic حَلَى, being free from, at leisure from, some person or thing; also, in private intercourse with, &c. Jauhari tells us, that اجْتَمَعْتُ مَعَهُ فِي خَلْوَةٍ is the same thing as خَلَوْتُ إِلَيْهِ, I obtained a meeting with him in private; and, اسْتَخْلَاهُ, he requested another to allow him a private sitting with him: and that there is an adage, أَنَّهُ مَعَ عُبُودِيَّتِهِ عَبْدٌ وَخَلًّا فِي يَدَيْهِ, that such an one is rich, notwithstanding his servitude; lit. a slave, yet fodder is in his hands! So the cognate خَلٌّ or خُلٌّ, an intimate friend: root خَلَّ. So also הִלַּל above, they shall seek to be on terms of confidential intercourse, and to have the privilege of private friendly interviews, thereby allowing to thee a superiority.

20. וּמְנוּחָם. And the place of refuge, i. e. the place to which they flee for assistance. But nouns of place are often used in the East to signify great persons, as مَدَاب, جناب; and مانوس, the very word in our text, as in the phrase مِيْمَنَت مانوس, i. e. the refuge of safety, as found on the coins of Hindustan, &c.; and may here so be applied: and, in that case, may mean idols, or the like. Ib. מְנוּחָם, for מְנוּחָם. A Chaldaism. Ib. מְנוּחָם נְפֹשׁ. Lit. A puffing of soul; i. e. a thing at which the mind expresses contempt or abhorrence. Comp. Mal. i. 13; and Job, xxxi. 39.

CHAPTER XII.

2. עַמֵּי אֱמִי. Auth. Ver. “Ye are the people;” which is both frigid and unexampled in Hebrew usage. Besides, the people generally are not remarkable for wisdom; not to insist on the fact that we have no definite article here. As a verb, however, עֲמַם signifies obscuring, shading, or the like. See Ezek. xxviii. 3; xxxi. 8; and Lam. iv. 1. In the first of these passages, it is used in connexion with חָכְמָה, wise. In the Arabic, too, we have عَمِيمٌ, plena, perfecta, completa res; whence, perhaps, the notion of people (עַמֵּי) originated, as consisting of a whole society or population: and as complete, perfect, &c. are also included in the sense of this word, it is hence made to signify præstantior, &c. pars hominum (see Castell); which may, properly enough, be applied to those who are supposed to be remarkably wise. In the Samaritan, moreover, עֲמַם signifies cognovit, &c., and is given as a translation of נִדָּע in Gen. xxvii. 2; xxviii. 16; conv. c. חכם. Castell. I take the word, therefore, to signify here, profound, wise, or the like. Ib. תָּמַת חָכְמָה. Does, or shall, wisdom die? By חָכְמָה is evidently to be understood here, knowledge of divine things, as in the Proverbs generally, and ch. i. 1-7 in particular; where it is said to be conveyed in enigmas. It is here, moreover, personified, as ib. ch. viii., and probably points to the person of Christ. By wisdom, religion has been meant in the East from time immemorial, as it is the case even now. Hence, first, the σοφοί, afterwards φιλόσοφοι, of ancient times, as well as the حُكَمَاءُ of the present, were all religious teachers (note on vr. 6, above); and hence, too, by “fools” is not only meant the ignorant, but the irreligious. So, among the Mohammedans, the ايام الجهالة, days, or times of ignorance, as in St. Paul, mean those of heathen darkness.

3. גַּם-לִי. Also to me there is, &c. An idiom not unlike the Latin est mihi, for habeo. Ib. לֵבָב. As the heart was supposed to be the seat of the senses (vr. 12 above), לֵבָב, was also made to signify intelligence, courage, &c.; here an intelligent heart. So, on the contrary, חֲסֵר לֵב, Prov. vi. 32, deficient of heart, i. e. a fool. Hence the Arab. verb. كَلَبَّ, polluit intellectu, and أَلَبَّ, ingenium, &c., just as with us the equivalent term often signifies feeling. Ib. לִשְׁכַּח, not falling, or one falling. Rosenmüller tells us, that we have a metaphor here, taken from persons wrestling, where one falls beneath the other. I doubt this: first, because no such practice was ever known among the Hebrews; and, secondly, because it is unnecessary to call in any such figure. נָפַל generally signifies falling, as leaves from trees, persons in battle, &c.; hence would naturally enough grow out the notion of inferiority, with reference to something else. And such comparison is here instituted, as the מָן, prefixed to מִצֵּד, is sufficient to shew. Comp. Neh. vi. 16; Esth. vi. 13, &c. I have dwelt upon this the more particularly, because I conceive it to be monstrous in principle, to apply to classical heathen authors for illustrations, when the customs from which these are to be drawn never existed among the writers intended to be so illustrated.; and, because this is very commonly done in the modern school of Germany, to the injury of revealed truth. Ib. וְאֵתֵּי. The particle אֵת, as to, with respect to, &c. is, in very many constructions, perfectly equivalent to the particles ל, לָ, or עַל. It will correspond here, therefore, to the ל, in the לִי preceding, and give a similar sense. The meaning will then be, But who is not intelligent as far as these things go? i.e. the deductions of a common natural understanding, such as those which you are now putting forth. See vr. 9, below.

4. שְׂחֹק לְרֵעִהוּ. Lit. A laughing (stock) or derision to his neighbour am I: one calling on God, and he shall answer Him. Comp. Lam. iii. 14. As comparison is evidently intended, I have introduced into the translation the particles necessary to mark this. Not unlike the oblique usage of the first person here, is the construction in Freytag's Hamāsa, pp. 138 and 139, viz. إِلَّا أَكُنَّ مِمَّنْ عَلِمْتَ. If I be not of those of whom you know, &c. Again: وَأَلَّا أَكُنَّ كُلَّ الْجَوَادِ. And if I be not the whole of liberality, &c. And again: وَأَلَّا أَكُنَّ كُلَّ الشَّجَاعِ, &c. And if I be not the whole of valour, &c. : i. e. If I am not the great exemplar of these virtues, the person to whom all comparison in this respect is to be referred, still, &c. So Hom. Odyss. β. 40: “Ὀὐχὶ ἐλάσ οὐτος ἀνήρ . . . ὅς λαὸν ἤγειρα.”—“Non procul ille vir—qui populum congregari.” Ib. שְׂחֹק צְדִיקָה. This is added apparently to shew, and to express, with some feeling of detestation, that the just and good are here on principle derided. The next verse exhibits a case exemplifying this: viz.

5. לְפִיד בַּח. With the particle of comparison, as before,— וְכֹחַ לְמוֹצְדֵי וְגו' . . . לְפִיד בַּח,—nothing being more common than such omissions. Ib. לְעִשְׂתוֹת, &c. Some copies read לְעִשְׂתוֹת, in the singular: but this is of little importance; the exegetical sense remaining much the same in either case. Lit. As a lamp of contempt, or contemptible, to the boasting, or boastings, &c., of the tranquil, or dissolute.
 This word has been supposed to have two totally different significations: the one, brightness, splendour, &c.; the other, thought, estimation, or the like. I believe it has but one.

In the Arabic we have عَتَّ, identidem dixit, corripuit gravi- bus, verbis, &c. Cogn. عَتَّ, erosit tinea lanam. And in the eighth conj., se scire simulavit, et integrum narraret;
 and عَتَّ, vitiosum fuit dictum, عَتِّي, modum excessit, عَتِّي, mala dedit: which are, perhaps, all in some degree cognate.
 In Ps. cxlvi. 4, we have עֲשֵׂתֵי הַיָּם, usually translated thoughts:
 in Jon. i. 6, יַהֲעִשֶׂת, He will think, consider: in Dan. vi. 4, עֲשֵׂתָ, He thought, determined. But, in Jer. v. 28, עֲשֵׂתָ, they have become rich, splendid: so עֲשֵׂתָ, splendid, Ezek.
 xxvii. 19; and עֲשֵׂתָ, Cant. v. 14. In these two latter cases, the LXX. and the Syriac seem to have taken the word, as if the same with עֲשָׂה, making, or fabricating; in the other versions it is as usually taken. Which seems to shew, that no authority better than conjecture has been had recourse to by either of them. I may perhaps be allowed, therefore, to have recourse to conjecture likewise. The Arabic roots, then, just cited, seem to agree in the idea of enouncing some- thing, either true or false, good or bad,—of effectually piercing through, being excessive, &c.; hence of reviling, injuring, taunting, in such enunciation, &c. One or other of these acceptations will, perhaps, suit all the passages in which the word is found: viz. Ps. cxlvi. 4, his evil enounce- ments, biting scurrilities, &c.; Jon. i. 6, Will declare, give out, some powerfully efficient edict, whereby we shall be saved; so also Dan. vi. 4; Jer. v. 28; have become imperious, insolent, taunting; Ezek. xxvii. 19, perforating, piercing,
i. e. implements of agriculture, war, &c.; and Cant. v. 14, עֲשֵׂתָ שֵׁן, the piercing of ivory, i. e. probably, such ivory net-work as we see in the Chinese spheres, very curiously perforated and wrought. Ib. שֵׁן. At ease: i. e. in pos- session of great wealth, and therefore insolent, lax, dissolute, &c.: and such were the merchants of Arabia, to a great degree, in the days of Strabo, who says, lib. xvi. (ed. Casaub. p. 535): “Διὰ δὲ τὴν ἀφ’Ἑλληνιστίαν τῶν καρπῶν, ἀργυρίων, καὶ ῥάθυμοι τοῖς βίαις εἰσὶν οἱ ἄνθρωποι· κοιτάζονται δὲ ἐπὶ τῶν ῥιζῶν τῶν δένδρων, ἐκτέμνοντες (οἱ πολλοὶ καὶ δημοτικοί)· διαδεχόμενοι δ’ οἱ σύνεγγυς αἰεὶ τὰ φορτία, τοῖς μετ’ αὐτοὺς παραδιόουσι μέχρι Συρίας καὶ Μεσοποταμίας. Homines propter maximam fructuum copiam OTIOSI SCORDESQUE vivunt. In radicibus arborum cubant, excidentis plerique de vulgo, atque inde merces proximi suscipientes protinus alter alteri consequenti tradunt, usque in Syriam atque Mesopotamiam. That the Arabians followed merchandise to a very considerable extent in the precious metals, precious stones, &c., is shewn from various authorities in the Introduction, p. 55. Ib. in כָּבוֹן, &c., where the comparison appears to be carried on, but requiring that אֶתְרִיחַ be supplied from the preceding verse; or, at least, אֶתְרִיחַ, I. לְמִוְעָדֵי רָגֶל. The first of these words may be either an abstract noun, of the form אֶתְרִיחַ, root מַעַד, or a participle of the form אֶתְרִיחַ, and then will imply an agent. I prefer the first. The Arabic مَعَدَّ, celeriter traxit, and hence abs. percussus, will easily supply the kindred sense, tottering, as to a fall; vacillating, stumbling; just as the Heb. הָרַשׁ, hastening, hurrying, &c. is taken: Isa. xxviii. 16. The believer shall not hurry, i. e. stumble, and so be confounded. Comp. Rom. ix. 33; x. 11; where the true sense is given.

Albert Schultens has well illustrated this from the Arabic. I give his Latin translation: “Deus stabilivit crus meum, quum jam jam lapsarem.” Hamasa. On which the scholiast Febrizi says: “Offensio in gressu proverbialiter designat interitum, ruinamve.” And again: “. . . Neque gressus inter nos lapsabundi cespitant,” where the scholiast gives a similar interpretation.—The Proverbs of Meidani, as far as edited by H. A. Schultens, present another good illustration of this passage. Prov. cxxx: إِتَّقِ اللَّهَ فِي جَنْبِ أَخِيكَ وَلَا تَعْدَحْ فِي سَاقِهِ. Deum cole fratrem tuum observando, neque suffringendo ei crura. Id est, adds he, “Perdendo ejus famam, existimationem, et fortunas.” See Schult. Orig. Heb., lib. i. cap. ii. § 15. In Hariri Makam. 50, we also have,

قَبْلَ زَوَالِ الْقَدَمِ وَقَبْلَ سُوءِ الْمَصْرَعِ

. . . . Before the fall of the foot, and before the evil of downfall. Opposed to this is the phrase ثابت قدم, firm of foot, as in the adage, ثابت قدم بگفت کسی بد نمی شود.

“A resolute person (i. e. firm of foot) is not to be diverted from his purpose by the ulcive of any one."—ROEBUCK'S Oriental Proverbs, part i. § ii. num. 658. More literally, and more applicable to our purpose, He who stands firmly does not become bad at the saying of any one: i. e. He whose foundation is good is not to be moved at mere evil report. We have, moreover, a good illustration of this expression in Freytag's Hamāsa, p. ۷۲۹, in these words: ثم وضع قدمه على الارض فقال من ازالها عن مكانها فله مائه من الابل فلم يغم اليه احد. Then he (Amir Ibn Ohaimar) placed his foot on the earth, and said: He that moves it away from its place shall have a hundred camels. And not so much as one man arose against him. Here, in Job, the sense seems to be not unlike our kicking out, away, &c. Comp. chh. xviii. 11; xxx. 12.

6. יִשְׁפְּלוּ. They are tranquil, relaxed, dissolute: opposed to פָּר, bound, pressed. Arab. سَلِيَ, liquavit butyrum; Jauhari, وَهُوَ فِي. And SALWA is a name for honey; وَالسَّلْوِي الْعَسَلُ. And SALWA is a name for honey; وهو في سَلْوَةِ الْعَيْشِ أَي فِي رَغْدٍ He is in the SALWA of life, i. e. desire, wish. On the form of the verb, see Gram. Art. 119, 11. Ib. לְשׂוֹדֵדִים. Of the destroyers, lit. violent; where ל has the force of a genitive, as in לְרֹדֵד, &c. Some make this word to mean robbers. The general acceptation of it seems to suit the context best here. Ib. רַב־בְּחִינָה. Lit. Things greatly confided in. See Gram. Art. 154, 12, and the note. On the force of the plural form here, ib. Art. 223, 3. Ib. לְאִפְסָר. Propterea quod. בְּיָדוֹ. Into his hand, i. e. his power. Ib. הָבִיא. Hath brought in, supply, קְבוֹאָה, income. See Gram. Art. 230. I cannot, therefore, accede to the opinion of Rosenmüller and others, who tell us that such passages as this mean, “manum suam pro Deo habere,” as in Gen. xxxi. 29, &c., where we have יָשָׁן לְאֵלָהּ יָדִי. I suspect that אֵל (usually of אֵל, or אֵיל, power) is nothing more than the demonstrative pronoun this, these; and that the meaning is, My hand, or power (is equal) to this, i. e. to do it: as in Gen. xxxi. 29, &c. לַעֲשׂוֹת עִפְקָם. And, if so, Habak. i. 11 is not an instance requiring that explanation, any more than this in Job. So the phrases יָדִי, Exod. ix. 3; יָד עַם, Lev. xxv. 35; 2 Sam. iii. 12; xiv. 19, where we have אֵשׁ for יָשׁ construed with ל. So Job, xxxi. 27, יָדִי לְפָי יָדִי, i. q. לְפָי יָדִי, so, לְאֵלָהּ יָדִי, &c. Jaubari under بَدِي — وَمَا لِي بِغُلَّابٍ بَدَارِي — And the hand signifies power. So, he gave him the hand, i. e. he strengthened him: and, there are not to me, towards such an one, two hands: i. e. forbearance (אֵין לֵי) בְּפָלוּנִי יְרִים). The word בֶּד is also used to signify favour; and then the plural takes the form בְּדֵי; as, قَارَ لَكَ عِنْدِي; and, بَدِيًّا وَأَنْعَمًا. For surely with me he has favours and benefits: and, تَكُنْ لَكَ فِي قَوْمِي بَدٌ بِشُكْرُونَهَا. May thy hand be such on my people (that), they may be thankful for it. See the rest of the idioms in Jauhari, which are numerous; and Schleusner, Lex. in Vet. Test. Græc. in voce χεῖρ. In this case, therefore, as God is said to have brought wealth into the hand of such an one, there is for these things a hand, i. e. a power (with him), to perform them, יְשִׁלְאֵל יְרוּ לַעֲשׂוֹת, &c. We have a usage not unlike this in the Eunnawābig of H. A. Schultens, Lugd. Batav. 1772, p. 8, viz. وخذ بأيدينا. “And take hold of our hands, for the acquisition of what you love and wish.” This, I think, will throw some light on another passage, which has hitherto appeared very obscure to many. It is Exod. xvii. 16. וַיִּאָמֶר פִּי יָד עַל-פֶּסַח יָהּ. For he said: Because (his) hand (has been) against the throne of God, Jehovah’s war (shall be) against Amalek from generation to generation. The meaning of which is: Because Amalek has made war against Israel, amongst whom Jehovah sits and rules as a king (Numb. xxiii. 21; xxiv. 27; and, in Exod. xxiv. 10, whose throne is described), he has in fact exerted his power, put forth his hand, against the throne of God himself, on the principle of, “He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye.” Zech. ii. 12. Le Clere seems to have been the first among the moderns, who saw the true meaning of this passage, although the ancient Syriac, as well as the Persian of Tawusi, also gave it. Le Clere, however, thinks פֶּסַח, instead of פֶּסַח (a defective form of פֶּסַח), ought to be read here, because the term פֶּסַח, my banner, occurs in the preceding verse, and the mention of war in this; which is ingenious: but hitherto has been sanctioned by neither MS. nor ancient version.

7. וַיִּאָמֶר. But, nevertheless, &c. Ib. וַיִּתְּנָהּ, and vr. 8, for וַיִּתְּנָהּ, with a single epenthetic ו, implying a consequence. Gram. Art. 235. The ו is here in its light or single form, as in אֶזְרִיבִּין. The following are also instances, which I had not observed when the last edition of my Hebrew Grammar went to press: viz. Numb. xxiii. 13; Dent. xxix. 14; xxxii. 10; Judg. v. 26; Obad. v. 13. See also Gram. Art. 175, 21-24.

8. או שִׁחַ. i. e. supplying the ellipsis, או שְׁלֵלָהּ או שִׁחַ; after which is added, as before, and for the same reason, וְהִרְבֵּה. Some take שִׁחַ here to mean speak, as if it were the Hiph'il of שָׁחַ, for הִשָּׁחַ. But, no such Hiph'il form occurs: and, when the word does occur, the context requires that it signify enounce, declare, &c., but not speak, or ask, in the sense of putting a question. See Judg. v. 10; Ps. cv. 2, &c. I have taken it therefore in the sense of shoot, twig, in which it occasionally occurs. See Gen. ii. 5, &c.

9. Supply here, לְאָמַר, saying, which the passage manifestly requires. Ib. יָדַע, hath known, i. e. habitually, and does so still. Gram. Art. 237, note, ib. The passage, from vr. 7 to this place, is well illustrated by Theodore's Sermon on Providence, Paley's Theology, and the Bridge-water Treatises.

10. אֵלֶּדֶי בְּיַדֵּה נַעֲסָ, &c. So in the Arabic, أَلَدِي بِيَدِهِ نَعَسَ. In whose hand (is) the soul of Khadijah.—Ib. וְהִרְבֵּה. Yea, or even, the spirit, &c.; which is a climax, and periphrasis declaring the power of God. This passage was probably in the eye of Solomon when he wrote Eccles. iii. 21; viii. 8; xi. 5; xii. 7.

11. מִלִּין תִּבְחֶן. Try, or prove, sentences, sentiments, sayings. מִלַּל is cognate with בְּמַל, בְּמֹל, &c., signifying cutting, deciding, &c., as elsewhere shewn: not merely speaking. Besides, the palate proves or tries meat, as to its nutritive goodness, not merely whether it is meat of this or that specific name or character. The passage signifies, therefore, that the ear enables a man to judge of the goodness or not of a doctrine, just as the palate does of the goodness or badness of food. And to this the context agrees.

12. בְּיִשְׁיָם. In, or with, confirmed, established, hence, aged men. I cannot agree with Dr. Gesenius, who seems to suppose that this is the same word with the صَمَمًا, of the Syrians, or قَسِبَسٌ, senex, of the Arabs. It seems much more natural to suppose that, as יָשׁ signifies substance generally, and hence אִישׁ, a substantial or respectable man, יִשְׁיָם is nothing more than a reduplication of this, signifying, the more respectable, aged, &c. of society; which the cognate roots will abundantly support: e. g. أَسَّ, fundamenta jecit: whence ʿĀSĀS, fundamentum, and ʿĀSĪS, radix cujusque rei, &c. Chald. Syr. and Arab. ʿĀSĀS, curavit; ʿĀS, fundum; ʿĀSĀS, senex. Syr. ʿĀM, sanavit. Heb. ʿĀSĀS, fundamentum. Chald. ʿĀSĀS, fundamenta. Syr. Chald. ʿĀR, i. q. Heb. ʿĀS, whence ʿĀRĪN, fortis: as a verb, הָרְחִיטְשׁוּ, became firm, men. I think, therefore, that it is quite unnecessary to have recourse to a word whose first radical letter is quite at variance with that here used, especially as ʿĀM is obviously derived from a root cognate with הָרְחִיטְשׁוּ, hard, firm; and, therefore, formed by the analogy had recourse to in this. Ib. ʿĀRĪN. And length; an abstract used for a concrete. Supply ב, from the former member.

13. עִמּוֹ, or עִמּוֹ, or עִמּוֹ. So with him: the comparison manifestly receiving its completion here, as the terms גְּבִיחָה and הַבְּנִיחָה, corresponding with similar terms in the preceding verse, tend to shew. I have continued the interrogatory form to this place, which the passage manifestly requires.

14-19 contain matter adduced in proof of what has just been said: viz. of the wise, great, and irresistible operations of God. The allusions, in this 14th verse, are probably made with reference to the destruction of Sodom and the neighbouring cities; which might have taken place about the time in which the ancestors of Job placed themselves in the land of Uz. This passage is apparently alluded to by Isaiah, ch. xxii. 22, and Rev. iii. 7. In vr. 15 we have, apparently, another allusion to the land of Sodom, &c., which became a sea. In vr. 18 the sense seems to be, He lays open, i. e. undoes, the decrees, or decretal powers, of kings, and then girds up their loins for captivity and slavery. 17. 19, מוֹלִיךָ, and vr. 19, בְּהִנָּח, causes to march, i. e. from their posts and dignity, making them a spoil to their conquerors. From the circumstance of Jethro's being priest (כֹּהֵן) of the whole district, as it should seem, of Midian, he must have been possessed of very considerable political power; as must also Melchisedec, who was king of Salem, and a priest of the Most High. Some difficulty has, however, been created here, as to the force of the term שׂוּלָה: some wishing to make it signify, deprived of sense; others, spoiled; and others, spoil. The first of these have been greatly influenced by the parallel, יְהוּלָל, and, as they would have it, by the verb ʿĀSĀS in Ps. lxxvi. 6. But the context in this place stands in need of no such meaning: spoiled, or carried away as spoil, suiting the context, according to my notions, infinitely better. Nor is it necessary to suppose that יהוּלַל, in the parallel, must necessarily change, or altogether regulate, the sense of שׁוֹלֵל: it is quite enough to satisfy the parallelism, if the general exegetical sense is analogous. Now, to make judges, counsellors of state, and generally persons high in office, fools, or mad, is much the same thing as to say that they shall fall from power, and become captives, or spoiled, by their enemies, or a spoil to them. I prefer the latter sense; because, first, I find nothing restricting this term (שׁוֹלֵל) to the sense of a passive participle: and the (sing.) number is against it. In the second place, מַלְאָכָא signifies spolia bellica, in Castell.; Aquila has ῥάπτουρα; —Arab. سَلَى, propulit; bello insecutus fuit: سَلَى, propel-lentes; homines dispersi in varias partes:—all of which seems to me sufficiently strong to determine our question in this place. In the next verse, many have taken בְּמִתְנִיחָם וַיֵּאָסְרוּ as signifying, He again restoreth them to power, by a solemn investment and girding with sword-belt. So Dathe, &c. But against this the context militates, which speaks of deprivation, not of restoration, in the main. Besides, there is a manifest difference between the sense of the verbs אָסַר and אָסַר: the latter generally signifying, girding up so as to make fast; the former, tying up so as to deprive of power: as in the case of captives, which are hence termed אֲסֻרִים and אֲסֻרִים. Comp. ch. xxxviii. 3; xl. 7; and 2 Kings, xvii. 4; xxiii. 33, &c. Whence it must be evident, that the remark in Simonis Lex. Winer's edit. &c., sub voce מִתְנִיחַ, stating that מִתְנִיחַ means the softer part of the flesh, &c.; while מִתְנִיחַ means the harder, and the part on which burdens are placed (i. e. the shoulders), is a mere fancy. Nor, again, will Ps. lxi. 11 in any degree tend to prove the latter assertion. For here, בְּמִתְנִיחֵנוּ בְּמִתְנִיחֵנוּ cannot mean weight upon our loins, but pressure, binding, &c. See the root מִתְנִיחַ, and cogn. מִתְנִיחַ. It is true, Amos (ii. 13) speaks of the pressure of a cart-load; but then this is spoken of in the sense of pressure, and not as of the weight of a burden. The whole is therefore groundless, and mere fancy. The אֲסֻרִים of this last verse is used, apparently, in the same sense as אֲסֻרִים is in the 12th. 1b. מִתְנִיחַ. Much has been said on the etymology of this word; but, as far as I can see, with little certainty or truth; although a sense has been obtained not unsuitable to the places in which it is found. My belief is, that both Schultens and Michaelis (Suppl. Lex. Heb.) have taken the wrong Arabic root, viz. سَلَف, instead of صَلَف: the latter of which is constantly used in a bad sense, as here, and one which seems to me to be most suitable, as صَلَفًا, hard, barren ground; صَلَفٌ, empty, boasting person, &c.; وَسَكَابٌ صَلِفٌ, also, a cloud that has little water in it, but much thunder: and the adage, رَبِّ صَلَفٍ تَحْتِ الرَّاعِدَةِ, Many a boaster under a thundering sky, applied to one who is ready enough to promise, but never to perform. This adage is manifestly had in view in the Enmawābig of H. A. Schultens, Lugd. Batav. 1772, p. 10, حَبِّذَا الْوَادِقِ إِذَا وَعَدَ. Welcome the rainy cloud when it thunders, and the true man when he promises. See also his notes. And again: مَنْ يَبِيعُ فِي الدَّيْنِ يَصَلِفُ. أَي لَا يَحْظِي. عِنْدَ النَّاسِ. He who acts perfidiously as to debt, fails; i. e. is neither favoured nor beloved by men. If, then, this be the root, emptiness, or the like, will be the leading notion contained in our word; which, when applied in a causative form, as in יִסְלֵף, will signify, to make or pronounce empty, void, ruined, &c. as shall best suit the context: and receiving its point here from the opposition it bears to the term אֲיִרָנִים, or יְשֻׁשִׁים, substantial, wealthy, established, aged, and reverential personages. Not unlike this is the passage in Harith's Moallakat Poem, vr. 42, ed. Vullers:

وَأَتَيْنَاهُمْ بِتِسْعَةِ أَمْلَاقٍ كَرَامٍ أَسْلَبَهُمْ أَغْلَاءً.

“Et adduximus ad eos novem reges illustres, quorum prædæ erant opimæ et præclaræ.”

20. שִׁפְהָ לְנֶפְעָנִים. Lit. The lip of the trusty. By the first of these words is generally meant profession, just as פִּי signifies either the mouth, or the thing, command, &c. uttered by it. See ch. xi. 1; Isa. xxxiii. 19; Zeph. iii. 9; Ps. xii. 3, 4; Prov. vii. 7, &c. The form of construction is here obviated by the insertion of the particle לְ. Ib. נֶפְעָנִים. Lit. Those who have acquired trust, or confidence, and hence permanency in their posts: such being the force of the Niphthal form. Gram. Art. 157, 19. See Prov. xi. 13; Numb. xii. 7, &c., usually in a good sense. Ib. וְטַעַם. Lit. And the taste: but, as the judgment may hence be said to be guided, the term is frequently used for decision, or decree, and hence for respect, or authority, particularly in the Chaldaic; to which the language of this book greatly inclines. So we have, in Latin, sapientia from sapor; and insipidus, tasteless, for foolish.—Comp. Ezr. v. 9; vi. 14; vii. 23; Jon. iii. 7; Dan. iii. 12, 29, &c.

21. שִׁפְהָ בַז. Lit. Pouring out contempt, i. e. as out of a vessel. Ib. גְּדִיבִים. Lit. Liberals: and hence applied to princes. See Prov. xxv. 7; 1 Sam. ii. 8, &c. Ib. גְּמִזִּיהָ. In Ps. cix. 19, גְּמִזָּה should seem to signify a girdle; and, as the girdle implied activity, strength, or the like, it is not improbable that this is likewise the sense here. In Isa. xxiii. 10, this too is most probably its signification. Now, as we have in the cognate roots זָרַח, זִיחַ, and זָרַחַת, the notion of distance, elevation, distinction, brightness, &c., it is probable that both גְּמִזִּיהָ and גְּמִזָּה are nothing more than Heēmanti nouns, derived from one or other of these cognate roots.

From the last we have מֶרְחָה, and מֶרְחָה, signifying, excaudescētia, vehemens scintillatio prunæ, &c. Insolence, violent heat, rage, or the like, will suit our context here well. In the other places, splendid, dazzling, garment, or cincture, is perhaps meant. Ib. מֶרְחָה. Of the haughty. The root is evidently מֶרַח. Arab. أَقَفَّ, conciunavit inspissando; whence أَفَيْتٌ, valdè præstans et perquam liberalis,—de equo, velox, cursu præcellans.—Castell. Hence أَقَاتَى, large tracts of country, &c. مَرَّ فِي الْكَرَمِ, i. e. الْأَقَفُّ, is one who is excessively liberal.—Jauhari. When applied to streams, it will necessarily signify swift and full; when to men, those elevated in station, powerful, and violent: comp. Isa. viii. 7; Job, vi. 15, &c. We have, too, Job, xl. 18, מְרִיחֵי נְחֹשֶׁת, which I have, with Rosenmüller, rendered tubes of brass, as being channels for the marrow, just as the bed of a river is for the running stream (מְרִיחֵי, i. e. when full and overflowing).

But, as أَقَاتَى signifies viarum diverticula et inflexiones, the bones of an animal, if supposed to be composed of brass or copper, may well enough be represented by such fusion of these metals as may imitate the branching out of the bones from some principal one; especially as the following member of the verse cited compares the same bones to bars of iron.—So Harith, in his Moallakat, VI. ౧౮ :

وَفَلَكُنَّا غُلَّ أَمْرِ الْقَيْسِ عِنْدَ بَعْدَ مَا طَالَ حَبْسُهُ وَالْعَنَاةُ.

“Deinde fregimus Amrulkcisi vincula, postquam diu viuctus erat et vexatus.”

22. מִי חֹשֶׁךְ. Of darkness, as a genitive case, see Gram. Art. 224, 11. Rosenmüller thus: “Abstrusa profert ex tenebris, et tartareas umbras educit in lucem:” which I cannot allow. מִי חֹשֶׁךְ I think cannot bear the sense of profert:

nor is it elsewhere construed as such with מן. His bringing of hellish darkness into light, as proposed for the next member, is, moreover, heathenish. My opinion is, that by עֲמֻקוֹת is here meant, deeply laid schemes, such as those of the powerful, mentioned in the preceding verse, usually are. See Isa. xxxi. 6; Prov. xxiii. 27, &c. By darkness is most likely meant, evil, not fit to be known, and therefore kept secret. If then we supply this word (עֲמֻקוֹת) to the next member, we shall have a climax: yea even the secret things of, or belonging to, the shadow of death: i. e. of deadly and murderous character he bringeth out into the light, and duly exposes; and, by this means, reduces and ruins their contrivers. This, I think, is given as a reason for what had just been said; or, as the Latin adage is, “Quos Deus perdere vult, prius dementat.”

23. מְפַשְׂטֵי. Multiplying. This word is pure Chaldee, or Syriac, as is the use of ל marking an accusative after a transitive verb. Ib. הִשְׁטִיחַ, expanding, extending, as a consequence of the multiplying just mentioned. Ib. וַיִּקְרַח, i. e. And leadeth or reduceth them. Some have thought, and with reason, that, as this is parallel to וַיִּזְבְּדוּם, it ought to be taken in a bad sense, either signifying captivity, or at least, the bringing of such people back to their original boundaries and circumstances. Our term reduce affords at once an exact translation and interpretation of the Hebrew וַיִּקְרַח. The following verse is to the same effect.

24. מִסִּיר. As in vr. 20, causing to depart, pass away, &c. the heart, wisdom, or courage, of the heads, chiefs, of such people, and so making them to wander and finally to perish: which is, perhaps, only an amplification of what had been said in vr. 22. Comp. ch. vi. 18.

25. וַיִּמְשְׁחוּ אֶת עֵינֵיהֶם. They (now) feel, grope; i. e. being deprived of light, and therefore of the use of their eyes, they try like blind men what can be done by groping, or feeling about. For the precise force of this term, see my Sermons and Dissertations, p. 181-2. Dr. Gesenius translates this passage, “palpant tenebras,” as if this darkness was to be touched or felt! He then cites Exod. x. 21, where we have וַיִּמְשַׁח אֶת הָאָרֶץ, which is usually taken to mean, darkness that may be felt: and so Rosenmüller takes it. In such constructions as these, however, it is to evince the greatest ignorance, or disregard, of Hebrew Grammar to suppose that the particle ב ought in every case to be prefixed, if the sense in darkness was intended to be conveyed. See my Gram. Art. 219, with note, and Art. 220. The Jerusalem-Targum, therefore, as cited by Rosenmüller in loc., has, beyond all doubt, given the true sense of this passage; i. e. the Egyptians should grope or feel about in darkness. Comp. Dent. xxviii. 29. If we take מַרַשׁ, or מַיַשׁ, as a root cognate with מַשַׁשׁ here, we shall see reason sufficient why the form used is מַיַשׁ, instead of מַרַשׁשׁ. — Ib. the verse concludes with the sentiment previously expressed, viz. that having lost their wisdom, strength, and sight, they wander and err like the drunkard. See Introd. p. 80.

CHAPTER XIII.

1. הַיְהוּדִים Behold, the whole, i. e. of the particulars previously mentioned. וְהָיָה. And, at that time, consequently considered. Gram. Art. 233, 4.

2. לֹא נִפְלֵא, &c. See on vr. 3, last chapter.

3. אֲנִי אֶשְׁאֵל. But, otherwise, nevertheless, I will speak of God; i. e. I would rather change the theme—as in ch. v. 8—it being a much more profitable, and indeed a wiser, thing, to investigate our question from its very fountain-head. אֶל-שָׁמַיִם, and אֶל-אֱלֹהִים, do not necessarily signify to the Almighty, or to God, no more than לְאֵל, vv. 7, 8, does to God. Nor will the context here justify any such rendering. See Nold. Concord. Part. p. 41, sig. 9. So πρὸς often occurs in the Greek Test. See Schleusner, Wahl, &c.

4. מַשְׁחֵי-שָׁמַיִם. The first of these words signifies generally in the Chaldee, joining, adjoining, plaistering over, &c.: in the Syriac, defiling, polluting: and in the Pihel form, closely prosecuting any thing. The cognate form in the Arabic gives the same sense, as applied to language. طَعَنَ الْكَلَامَ تَطْعِينًا تَدْبِيرًا. He applied sedulously to (his) composition, i. e. he well considered it. Kāmoos. In these senses, it seems to be cognate with the Chaldaic תַּפְּסַל, adhæsit, and תַּפְּסַל, adhærerere fecit; and the Arabic تَعَلَّرَ, subsedit: تَأَفَّلَ, comedit crassamentum—consedit cum alio, &c.: أَتَعَلَّرَ, sedimentum fecit: and تَعَلَّرَ, qui comedit תַּפְּסַל: and تَأَفَّلَ, sedimentum quod subsidet, pec. Fimus. See on ch. vi. 6. Hence the תַּפְּסַל of Ezek. xiii. 10, 11–14; xxii. 28; the untempered mortar of the Auth. Vers.,—a term not sufficiently condemnatory. “Forgers” of lies, seems to me to fall short of the mark. Glozers over, deckers out, of falsehood, i. e. persons whose object it is to put off that which is false for truth. See the passages in Ezekiel just mentioned; and, if the term is to be used in a medical sense, as the רִפְאֵי following seems to intimate, then the anointers, plaisterers over, &c. of falsehood, i.e. in order to impose what is corrupt upon the unsuspecting or uninformed, for health and soundness. Ib. רִפְאֵי אֱלִילִי. Of the sense of the first of these words, there can be no doubt; nor can there be any, as far as I can see, that the second must mean idol. The Jews, holding as they did, that an idol was nothing in this world, a thing of nothing and vanity—as they very well might (see I Cor. viii. 4)—came next to the conclusion that אֱלִילִי, which signifies idol, must, therefore, mean nothing, or vanity, also. These blind guides our first lexicographers necessarily followed; and these, too, the German lexicographers of the present day—thinking with them, as they very much do, on subjects of theology—also follow. There are, however, but three passages in the whole Bible, viz. this under consideration, Jer. xiv. 14, and Zech. xi. 17, that can be made to bear this sense at all: and in these, the term idol will suit the context, as I think, much better. In the remaining seventeen, nothing but idol can be used. Let us now see how the word might have been derived. The root must be אֱלִיל, which in Chald. signifies exploravit; and אֱלִילִין, exploratores. So the Syr. ܐܠܝܠܝܢ, dux, explorator, &c.: the same is the case with the Samaritan. In Arab. ٱلْعَيْتُ, citavit (Gr. θεῶν, curro, θάω, video cum stupore: whence θεῶν), nituit, resplenduitque color: perturbatus fuit, &c. ٱلْعَيْتُ, fœdus, jusjurandum: radix, origo: Deus. The cognate roots are אֵיל, אול, אלה, אלה, and perhaps עלה, עלל, and עול. The particle אֱל, is probably derived either from אֱלִיל, or אלה, implying a strong prohibition, grounded on an imprecation: not from אֱלִיל, in the sense of nothing or vanity. Our phrase, רִפְאֵי אֱלִילִי, must, therefore, signify healers, or physicians of, or attached to, idols; i.e. as these were regularly teachers of religion, idolatrour teachers, healers, i.e. learned or wise men (and such, as already remarked, are the ٱلْحَكَمَاءُ of the East even now), recommending the doctrines of idolatry.

5. הַחֲרֵשׁ פְּתַרְרִישָׁן. This reduplication, with the paragogic ך, is used to imply excess. Gram. Art. 222, 4; 235. Ib. גִּתְהֵי. Then, i.e. consequently (Gram. Art. 232, 4, &c.), would it, this silence, be to you for (true) wisdom. The word חֲכָמָה, wisdom, has reference to the preceding רִפְאֵי, physicians, who were the professors of it, i.e. חֲכָמָה. These, Dan. ii. 12, are termed generally חֲכָמִים; in vr. 13, הַקְּבִימָא : and, in vv. 2, 10, the different specific classes are enumerated. Well indeed might Job declare, that this would be wisdom with his opponents ; for, there is no surer mark of true wisdom than silence, where real knowledge is not possessed ; or of folly, to be full of talk on all such questions.

6. שְׁמַעְרֵנָּא. Hear ye now, &c. Job, having obtained silence, first attacks the principles of his opponents, on the grounds already alluded to ; affirming that what they advanced was deceitfully and hypocritically said, excusing God indeed, and endeavouring to justify Him, but in a way which He must necessarily abhor ; and which was most likely to bring down heavy judgments on themselves. God, he seems to say, requires no arguments to be adduced in His favour, which are not grounded on truth.

8. הִקְבִּי רַחֲמֵי הַשָּׁמַיִן. Will ye accept His person, &c. A common way of speaking of favour shewn in judgment ; a thing forbidden by all laws. Ib. לִשְׁלֹשׁ. If, or putting the case that, for God, &c. The verse may mean, Will ye favour him in his cause ? or will ye take upon you openly to discuss the matter for him ? i.e. Will ye attempt to do either the one or the other ? For so the interrogatives הֲ, and אִם, are often found. See Gen. xxvii. 21 ; 2 Sam. xvii. 6, &c. This last I take to be the true sense of the passage ; and to imply, that, with their sentiments, this would be a condemning undertaking.

9. בְּיַיְחֹדֶךָ. That one, i.e. I, or any one else, impersonally, should thoroughly investigate your principles ? Or, like the mockery carried on among men, ye should go on to mock Him ? Which of these is it most safe and prudent to do ?

11. הֲלֹא שָׂמְרָתוֹ. “ Shall not his majesty, excellency,” &c. : root שָׁמַר.

12. זְכָרֶיךָ, &c. Your memorials, &c. We have in Ps. xlix. a passage not unlike this. The Psalmist says אֲזַפֵּן לְמִשְׁלַל אֲזִנִּי. Let me incline mine ear to the parable, i.e. shew in what way the γυνώσκειν, rules of action of the heathen, are faulty and wrong. He then goes on to tell us, that they boast of their wealth ; rather, grow mad in it (יִתְהַלְּלוּ). They consider that their houses shall never fail (vr. 12), and they call the lands after their own names. He adds (בְּמִשְׁלַל), such an one is treated in parable, as a beast that perisheth. He goes on : Their posterity approve of their sentiments, i.e. recite them as memorials, &c. The memorials of such, Job here says, are but parables of ashes, i. e. of dust and ashes; the terms אֶפְרַיִם, and עֵפְרָיִם, often going together. He adds, For heaps of clay are your heaps, i. e. Your houses, elevated lands (for such were the best, where the country was subject to inundation, as this was),—hillocks, tumuli, perhaps, or sepulchres,—are but masses of clay at best; and, therefore, things that can avail you nothing in the time of visitation. Schultens takes (עֵפְרָיִם) here to signify heaps or mounds, as thrown up by way of defence in fortifications, metaphorically applied to arguments set up in defence; which is now generally followed: but whether elevated grounds, tumuli, or such mounds, are intended or not, the exegetical sense will still remain much the same.

13. וַיָּבֹרַךְ עָלַי מָה. Then come over me, &c. The particle מָה (Arab. مَا, and occasionally مَم, which is the very Hebrew form), when taken indefinitely, is, according to the Arabian grammarians, equivalent to the term شَيْءٌ some thing, any thing; as, شَيْءٌ مُعْجَبٌ لَكَ, مَرَرْتُ بِهَا مُعْجَبٌ لَكَ, i. e. I passed by something (that would be) astonishing to you. It will lose its א alif in certain cases, and be written מ; but when followed by a pause, as it is here, it is written מֵ; as in אִقְטַصִי زَيْدٌ اِقْتِصَاءً مֵ, i. e. Zaid determined a determination of something. DE SACY'S Ibn Mālik, p. 217. In a similar sense they use the expressions وَكَانَ مَا كَانَ, so came to pass, what came to pass; and هُوَ مَا هُوَ, some accommodation. Proverbs of Meidani, Num. 71, Schultens's edit. Comp. 2 Sam. xviii. 22, 23, 29; Prov. ix. 13; Job, xxvi. 7.

14. אֲשֶׁן בְּשָׂרִי. Should I take my flesh, &c. equivalent, perhaps, to our worry myself: i. e. Why should I put myself into so perilous a situation as to speak of such a being as God is, had I not indeed strong grounds and reasons for doing so? The first member has been illustrated by Schultens from the Arabic proverb, لَحْمٌ عَلِيٌّ وَضَمٌّ, "Caro super ligno lanionis, pro iis," adds he, "qui expositi sunt periculis; which has been copied by Rosenmüller. A better illustration, however, is to be found among the "Proverbia Arabica Meidanii," of H. A. Schultens, N. viii. in أَكُلُ لَحْمِي وَلَا أَدَعُهُ لِأَكْلٍ, I may eat my own flesh, but I will not leave it for any eater." "Edere carnem alicujus," adds

H. A. Schultens, “est, vel locerare ejus famam, vel ejus cruciatu ac suppliciis se pascere.” And A. Schultens, in his Job, c. xix. 22, to which his successor, the editor of Meidani, refers us, gives this from Ennawābig, تقول انا صابم وانت في لحم اخيك سايم, Dicis Ego jejuno, et carne fratris pasceris. And again, from the Hamāsa, لا نزقا للماء ولا للمحوم صديقي اكلوا, Non levis ad obtretationem; neque carnes amici mei comedens. See also ch. xxxi. 32, and Freytag’s Hamasa, p. ٥٢٢, where similar language will be found. To the same effect is the following member. וַיִּשְׁפָּן וַיִּשְׁפָּן, &c. Comp. I Sam. xxviii. 21; Ps. cxix. 109; to which the passage of Xenarchus, cited by Rosenmüller from Athenæus, lib. xiii. p. 569, is a parallel: . . . ἐν τῇ χειρὶ τῆν ψυχῆν ἑζον, &c. That is, taking one’s life in one’s own hands, despairing of help from any other quarter; which, in religion, is to give up all faith in God.

15. הֲוֹ יִקְהַלְנִי. Though, &c. This particle does not universally signify behold, as usually rendered. In some places, and particularly in the books approaching to the Chaldaic and Syriac idiom, it stands for if, since, though, &c. like the Syr. ܐܢܝ, and Arab. اِنْ. See Jer. ii. 10; Ezra, v. 17; Prov. xxiv. 12, &c. Ib. לֹא יִסְתַּחֵל. Shall I not (still) hope? The Masora, with some copies, reads לֹא יִסְתַּחֵל, in Him will I hope. I prefer the textual reading. The exegetical sense is much the same in either case; and, unless I am greatly mistaken, clearly indicates in the speaker a belief in a future life. His meaning seems to be: How could I thus expose myself? how place my life in jeopardy, did I not trust that, though he should slay me, yet would not my hope be cut off? He adds, as if to confirm this, My ways, i.e. religious faith and views, only will I advance and uphold in this argument, and in his presence (comp. Epist. to the Hebrews, xi.); and my conviction is, that this undertaking shall turn to my salvation, &c. Job, therefore, places himself on a ground totally different from that on which his opponents took their stand.

17. בְּלִבִּי. My speech, sentiment, the matter of my discourse: so the Arabic كَلَام. Ib. וַיִּשְׁתַּחֲוּ. And my shewing, or proof, supp. תִּקְבְּרוּ, receive ye, &c. Both the nouns here are of Chaldaic derivation.

18. עָרַבְתִּי בְּשִׁפְטַי. I have set in order the (matter for) judgment. I have laid open the case. Ib. יָדַעְתִּי. I know,

I am fully sensible, or feel that I am just. I give my opponent the same privilege, the same opportunity for justification, that I require for myself.

19. מִי־הוּא. Lit. Who is He? &c. Considerable difficulty has been felt by many in this place, and well it might; for, if Job thus calls upon his friends, or upon any one of them, it is not easy to conceive why he should have asked this question. He must have well known the persons or person with whom he was contending. It is generally allowed, however, that it is not any of his friends, nor yet any other man, that he here calls upon, but God; who, he was wise enough to see, was at the bottom of all his afflictions. But, in this sense, the interrogation with which this verse commences becomes still more inexplicable. If God was the person really meant—and this I think is plainly the case,—How then is it that the patriarch asks, Who is He? &c. Surely he must have been as well informed on God's character now, as he was on other occasions; and if he was, he could scarcely expect to receive greater information from his less clearly discerning friends. I am induced to believe, therefore, that we have not an interrogation here, but that the term יִתֵּן ought to be understood, and the ellipsis thus supplied, מִי־יִתֵּן הוּא יָרִיב, signifying, O that He would contend. In this case, הוּא will plainly refer to God, just as the Arabic هُوَ often does; and the passage will give the sense laid down in the Translation, which falls in well with the following context. Comp. Isa. l. 7, 8, which is apparently an imitation of this place. Ib. עָתִידָה אֶתְרִישׁ. I now am silent, i.e. I pause for his interposition. Ib. וְיִפְגַּע. And (lit.) I expire. If this latter term is to be taken in its usual Hebrew sense, very great impatience, such as cannot long be borne, is perhaps all that it was intended to express; as in the example, “Give me children, or else I die.” מָתָה אֶזְכְּרִי. I am a dead woman, Gen. xxx. 1. This word, in the Arabic, however, signifies primarily emptiness (الجَوْعُ ضِدُّ الشَّبَعِ), i.e. is opposed to fullness: Jauhari and Firozabādi), used as a verb. جَاعَ الْيَبِّ عَطَشًا وَأَشْتَقَّ, i.e. signifies he thirsted for, was desirous of it; which, if applied here, will give the same exegetical sense, viz. greatly desiring, impatient, &c. It may, nevertheless, be intended to point out Job's great affliction, which seemed to threaten him with an early death.

20. Job here requests, as it appears to me, that if God would please to inform him of his error,—if any such thing were indeed the cause of his misfortunes,—He would so far ease him of his sufferings and fears, that he might fully enter into the question; knowing, as he well did, his own unworthiness (ch. xiv. 1, &c.), but still believing that it was not on account of any heinous or habitual course of sin that he was thus afflicted. Ib. וְאָזְנֶךָ. Then, &c. marking the last member of a hypothetical sentence, takes away the necessity of apocopation in the subsequent verb. Gram. Art. 234, 3.

21. כַּפְּךָ מֵעָלַי. Lit. Thy hand remove away from on me. Affliction is often represented in the Scriptures by saying, that the hand is laid on, &c. See Gen. xxii. 12; xxxvii. 22; Exod. vii. 4, &c. Job here prays, therefore, that his affliction might, during this hearing, be remitted. Ib. וְאִיִּתְּךָ וְגו'. And Thy fear, &c. The revelation of the Almighty was occasionally made in great terror. See Gen. xxviii. 17; Heb. xii. 21, &c.

23. כַּמֶּנֶּה לִּי. How many mine, &c. This I take, not as an interrogation, but as in connexion with הֲשִׁיבֵנִי, i. e. answer me, saying, How many, &c. as given in the Translation. And this sort of construction is continued, I think, to the end of vr. 25; all of which may be considered as an expansion of what is said in vr. 19, above.

25, הֲעֲלֶה וְגו'. Whether a leaf, &c. That is, Whether it is a principle with Thee deeply to afflict Thy weak and defenceless creatures; which I cannot believe.

26. כִּי־הִקְדַּחְתָּ. For, or because thou writest, registerest, down, against me bitter things, &c.; which may be illustrated by the adage in Ennawābig,

المَرَضُ والحاجة خطبان امر من نقيب الخطبان

“Morbns et egestas duo negotia amariora quam succus colocynthidis.” See also ch. iii. 20; ix. 18.

Ib. וְהוֹרִישֵׁנִי. Lit. And causest me to possess, &c.; i. e. puttest me in possession of, or investest me with, the afflictions due to my sins when a youth, and as if repentance, faith, &c. afterwards persevered in, availed nothing.

27. וְהִשָּׁתָּ. And causest to be placed, i. e. dearest should be placed, &c. On this usage in this and the last verb, see Gram. Art. 157, 6. Ib. וְהִשְׁמַר. And watchest, i. e. by thyself or by others, all my paths: puttest me under restraint, or in prison. Ib. עַל-שָׁרְשָׁי. Upon the soles, &c. This ought to be construed with the preceding וְהִשָּׁם, &c. Gram. Art. 241, 18. Thus: And thou condemnest my feet to the foot-lock: on the soles of my feet doth it become impressed, engraven, &c. Comp. Ezek. viii. 10; xxiii. 14; Ps. cv. 18. בְּרִגְלִי בָּאָה בְּפָאָה נְפִישׁוֹ. The iron entered his person.

28. וְהָיָא וְגוֹ. And, or so, he as rottenness, &c. This, I think, manifestly belongs to the next chapter: great efforts, indeed, have been made to connect it with the preceding matter of this verse; but, as far as I can see, without the least success. The patriarch is clearly commencing a new and more general subject. And he, he says, i.e. man generally, under such circumstances, grows old, or wears away, as rottenness, or like a garment which the moth consumes, &c. In ch. iv. 19, we have similar language similarly applied. Comp. Ps. xxxix. 12; Isa. l. 9; which must place this matter beyond the reach of doubt.

CHAPTER XIV.

1. Job, having stated generally the charges brought against him, enters now more in detail on the frailty of man; and then passes on to the merciful, permanent, and omnipotent character of God, and particularly on his kindness in conniving, as it were, at the transgressions of men: without which, he concludes by observing, the most mighty and otherwise perfect must inevitably perish.

Ib. וְלִידָא אִשָּׁא. Man, the child of woman, &c. intimating not only his original weakness, but also that of her who produced him; alluding, probably, to Gen. iii. 16, &c. This should be considered as the commencement of a general topic, in which the natural debility of man is intended more particularly to be described. He adds, “few of days,” i.e. his whole period at best is short; and this “full of grief,” i.e. restless agitation. The construction here is termed distinctive. Gram. Art. 225.

2. בְּפָאָה פִּי יָצָא. He comes, or opens out, like a blossom. וְנִפְלָל, and is nipped, or cropped, off. וְלֹא יַעֲמֹד, “and standeth not,” i.e. is too weak to do so. יַעֲמֹד, rather means, stands fast, or firm. See my Sermons and Dissertations, pp. 176–8, which is here beautifully contrasted with the fleeting character of a shadow. The LXX. has, καὶ οὐ μὴ στή. See ch. viii. 9.

3. מִן. Moreover, &c.: root מִן, from seg. מִן, whence מִן, Gram. Art. 77: lit. including, accumulating, moreover, &c. i.e. Notwithstanding the weakness and infirmity of man, Thou deignest to observe his ways, mark his iniquities, and bring him to judgment. Comp. Ps. viii. 5, &c. Ib. זָה. Lit. This (being), i.e. such a being as this. Ib. וְיִשְׂרָאֵל. And me thou bringest, &c.; i.e. Thou condescendest to try a creature so weak, worthless, and transitory, to afflict and distress him. Even me, he adds, Thou forest into judgment with Thee, for no cause that I can assign: turning, however, now from the general topic, and applying the whole to himself.

4. מִיִּצְהָרִים. Lit. Who giveth clean of unclean, i.e. Who can give out, lay down, pronounce, make (comp. שָׁוִים, and שָׁוִית; and see Gram. Art. 154, 8, note, and ch. xxxvi. 3) that one of the number of the manifestly unclean, be clean or holy? Our translators have, I think, greatly mistaken this place—as if it had been written מִיִּצְהָרִים קִדְמוֹתָם, or קִדְמוֹתָם—alluding, as they seem to have thought, to the first verse. The allusion, however, appears to be to the verse immediately preceding; and the passage to mean, But, as for man, who can of the unclean—as it is the case with him—say that he is clean! The answer is, No one; i.e. My duty, when so brought to my account, is resignation to God's will, and trust in His mercy alone. He then proceeds, as before, to speak of the shortness of human life.

5. וְהֵם וְגו'. Surely engraven (are) his days, a number (are) his months with respect to thee, i.e. they are few. Comp. the use of this word מִסְפָּר, Gen. xxxiv. 30; Dent. iv. 27; xxxiii. 6; Isa. x. 19, &c. Ib. אֶתְּךָ. Not “with thee;” but with respect, reference, regard, to thee: and this sense is applicable, perhaps, to every place in which the word is found. The Jewish with—as if this word were synonymous with עִם—has misled the translators in places almost innumerable; e.g. Gen. xxxvii. 2, וְהָיָה נָעִר אֶת־בְּנֵי בִלְהָה, and he (was) a child, boy, with respect to the sons of Billiah, &c., i.e. he was much younger than they. Not, “And the lad (was) with the sons of Billiah,” &c., which the terms בְּנֵי־זָקֵן, child of old age, in the next verse, seems abundantly to justify. Besides, the lad, requires that the Hebrew be וְהָיָה נָעִר, not וְהָיָה נָעִר. Ib. חֻקָּי. Lit. His decrees. I prefer taking the singular with the kethir, i.e. the extent of his life, &c. with which the following וְיִשְׂבַּח יוֹמָהּ, i.e. until, during which, or while, he satisfieth his day as a hireling, agrees.

6. וְיִשְׂבַּח מִצְּלָיו. Lit. Look from on him; i.e. be favourable to him. Comp. Gen. iv. 4, 5; Exod. v. 9; Ps. xxxix.

14; exix. 117, &c. וַיִּהְדָּל. Supply רָגַז, and let him cease troubling, or being troubled, ch. iii. 17: as if he should say, His period hast Thou limited; this he cannot pass, in any case: but now remove Thine afflicting glance from off him, until, or that he may (Arab. حَتَّى), satisfy his day as a hired labourer.

7. He now proceeds to shew that, in this respect, man is inferior to the unconscious stock of a tree; for, though cut off, it will again send forth branches. וַיִּזְרַח וַיִּהְלֵךְ, still it will RENEW. This verb is so used, Isa. xl. 31; xli. 1, &c. which it is important should be distinguished. In the Arabic it seems to take its senses thus: first, succeeding, coming after, another; then, becoming its substitute, &c., and so keeping up his office or station, as in خَلِيفَةً, a calif, who was supposed to be a successor and locum tenens of Mohammed, just as the modern popes are said to be successors of St. Peter, and he of Christ. When applied to herbs or trees, as in these examples from Jauhari, الْحَلْفَةُ تَبَتْ يَتَبْتُ بَعْدَ, التَّنْبَاتِ الَّتِي يَتَهَشَّمُ وَحَلْفَةُ الشَّجَرِ تَمْرٌ يَخْرُجُ بَعْدَ الثَّمْرِ الْكَثِيرِ, i. e. חֲלֵפֶת (signifies), a herb growing up after others which have become flaccid and dry: and (spoken), of a tree, the fruit which is produced after much (former) fruit. In the first of these senses is the word here used by Job; exactly like our law terms growing and renewing, when speaking of tithes. Ib. לֹא הִדָּל. It faileth not, opposed to וַיִּהְדָּל, in the preceding verse.

8. אֶסֶן יִזְקֵן. Putting the case, supposing, that it grow old, &c. וַיִּדְעָפֵר, and in the dust, &c. It should be observed, that עָפָר, dust, is often used in this book where the more common Hebrew has אָרֶץ, or הָאָרֶץ, and which is in the parallel member here. Ib. גָּזְעוּ. Lit. Its cutting; meaning the stock, or stump, from which the main part of the tree has already been severed. We have here an abstract used, instead of a concrete, form.

9. מְרִיחַ, &c. From the scent, exhalation, &c. The word רִיחַ is used in the Arabic to signify, help, aid, &c., and, as a verb, "Percepit ex re aliquâ bonum adorem; and it is construed with מֵן, as it is here: it. respiravit, spiritum duxit, refocillatus fuit, &c.; and, according to Janhari, تَرَوَّحَ الْمَاءُ إِذَا أَحَدٌ رِيحَ غَيْرِهِ لِقُرْبِهِ مِنْهُ, i. e. הַרוּחַ, is said of water, when it receives the odour of something else, on account of its being near it. Ib. וְנִשְׂפָה הַבֵּיר. And will produce crop, &c. The latter word is but ill accounted for by the lexicographers. The Arabic and Æthiopic, قَصَرَ, præcidet, פָּחַז: irretivit, nodis constrinxit, would in the form הַבֵּיר, suggest the notion of cropped off, bound up, &c. which would very well apply to the ingatherings of the harvest, just as our word crop, or the more technical term used in old tithe treatises, garba, does. I translate the phrase by produce, which appears to me to be its precise force in our idiom.

10. וְנִבְרָר. But (stout) man, i. e. the most brave and warlike, dies. Ib. I read וְנִבְרָרִישׁ וְנִבְרָרִישׁ as belonging to the same member of the sentence, and as explanatory of the term נְבִיחָה, immediately preceding. This makes the context orderly, and just what the oriental idiom requires. I consider the authority of the accents as but little.

11. וְנִבְרָר, &c. Lit. Waters have gone from the sea, and a river may parch and dry up; i. e. These things may happen, without at all rendering such waste or drought permanent. He adds:—

12. וְנִבְרָרִישׁ נָפַח. But (when) a man hath (once) lain down, he riseth not, &c. to heighten the comparison, and the more forcibly to describe his utter impotency. Not to imply that there shall be no resurrection; for he is now speaking of man's earthly and mortal state only, and of the character which belongs to it; as the next verse will abundantly shew. Ib. עַד-בְּלֹתַי. Until, &c. Let not the reader imagine here, that our patriarch means to say that so long as the heavens remain men shall not awake, but that, upon this event taking place, they shall. All Job intends is, that, as men and such as they now are possessed with earthly consideration, &c., they never more shall arise at all. The force of the particle seems to be, during such space, &c. without reference to any thing that may follow. In English until implies, on the contrary, some event to succeed the period named; and hence very frequently the Scriptures have been mis-construed and misapplied. So Luke, xxi. 24, ἕως ἡμερῶν ἡσυχίας τοῦ λαοῦ τῶν ἔθνων, “until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled;” as if Jerusalem should be rebuilt after such period: than which nothing can be more fallacious. See 1 Sam. xv. 35; 2 Sam. vi. 23; Isa. xxii. 14, &c.; Noldius, under נָפַח, Schleusner, Wahl, &c. under ἕως, ἕως, ἕως, ἕως, and ἕως.

13. מִי יִתֵּן. Who can enounce, i. q. Oh, that some one would, &c. Ib. תִּבְרָרֵנִי. Thou wouldest lay me up, i. e.

as treasure, &c. in the grave. Comp. Isa. xxvi. 19, 21, which affords an excellent comment on this place. Ib. תְּשִׁית. Wouldest appoint my statute, i.e. decree for me, i.e. what I should think and do in this my state of tormenting anxiety. וְיִהְיֶה לְךָ. And wouldest bear me favourably in mind, still think kindly of me. Which, I think, must imply that even his being laid up in the grave was not to be continued for ever. The substance of both the preceding remarks is combined in the next verse.

14. אֶחָל. I will hope, until my renewal come. If this word (viz. חֲלִי־פָתִי) is to be taken in the sense, in which חֲלִי־פָתִי is in vr. 7, viz. renewal; a new life, after death must be meant. Job seems to say that, warfare as this life is, still he would entertain the hope, that his renewal should eventually arrive; and this, although he might be laid up, during the period of God's displeasure—no matter how long that may be—even in the grave.

15. תִּקְרָא. Call Thou, and I, אֶעֱנֶךָ, will accordingly, or surely, answer thee. Ib. תִּכְכֹּף. Grovest pale for—longest, or wilt affectionately long, after, &c. i.e. God, having so laid up his servant, will now receive his answer in judgment as that of a son, or friend, whom he has long detained from his presence, but kept secure from the fury of his adversaries. This is, I think, a plain and obvious recognition of a judgment to come, and also of the manner in which God will deal with those, who are beloved and befriended by Him here on earth.

16. לֹא תִשְׁמֹר. Wilt not (angrily) observe, reserve, my sin. Comp. ch. x. 14; Jer. iii. 5; Amos, i. 11, &c. i.e. God, although watchful over the steps of Job, and dealing with him accordingly in this life, will, nevertheless, when that period shall arrive, regard him with favour: which he goes on to say more particularly:—

17. הִתְרַם. Sealed up (is) my sin, &c. Comp. Deut. xxxii. 34. וְהִתְרַם־לָּךְ, and Thou layest a covering, &c. over my iniquity. See on this verb, ch. xiii. 4. He then returns to his former theme, and depicts the fall of those who are otherwise circumstanced.

18. וְאִלֵּים. *But otherwise,—i.e. things being different,—(even) a falling mountain perisheth, i.e. becomes decomposed—*which is a geological truth—even a rock removed from its place. That is, not being so circumstanced as to expect God's favour, the greatest of men or of powers (often compared in the language of Scripture to mountains, see Jer. li. 25; Zech. iv. 7; Rev. viii. 8) fall and perish; even the rock, however hard and firm, is made to give way. Comp. ch. ix. 4-7, &c.

19. מִיַּדֵּי הַבְּרָקִים מִיַּדֵּי הַבְּרָקִים. Lit. Waters have reduced the stones. Rosenmüller tells us here, that the order is inverted. I think not. The nominative, unless it be the most important word, comes last in the order universally. See Gram. Art. 212, 3, 216, 217, 4. Ib. הַבְּרָקִים יִבָּרֵךְ. It bears away, i.e. the waters mentioned just before, taken in the aggregate; a very usual mode of construction in the Arabic. See Gram. Art. 216, 7: i.e. The waters, soft and flexible as they may seem, have yet powers sufficient to reduce and wear away the hardest rocks, and even to bear away the soil of the land, and so to ruin it. So Major Rennell, in his Description of the Kizzel Ozan River, as cited by Mr. Rich, "Residence in Koordistan," vol. i. p. 226: "From the upper level of Media it descends with a rapid and furious course through a frightful chasm, which its waters have worn through the base of the mountains, which is many miles in width," &c. Ib. הַבְּרָקִים, So hast thou brought to destruction (times innumerable) the hope of mortal man.

20. וַיֵּלֶךְ לְמָקָנֵהוּ. And he proceeds, i.e. לְמָקָנֵהוּ, to his place. Comp. ch. v. 26; x. 21; Ps. xxxix. 14. So the Arabic phrase, in Abulfed. Ann. Musl. دَهَبَ إِلَى مَكَانِهِ, He passed to his place, i.e. the grave. Comp. Acts, i. 25. This verb, moreover, contains the notion of proceeding gradually, step by step, Gen. viii. 3; xii. 9; xxvi. 13; and particularly with reference to death. See ch. vii. 9; xix. 10; Hos. xiii. 3; Ps. lxxviii. 39. And thus the context suggests as its precise force here. Ib. מִשְׁפָּהָה קָרְנָיו. Changing his countenance; bringing on the marks of age and infirmity, just as the waters alluded to fret and wear out the stones. So Shakespeare, "His complexion shifts to strange effects after the moon."

22. אֵין. Only, i.e. this and nothing else doth he perceive (אֵין), supplying the verb from the preceding verse. Job, therefore, after stating his own confidence in God's mercy, closes his defence or speech, by declaring the miserable state of those who happen to be otherwise circumstanced; allowing,—rather confirming,—the general statements previously made by his opponents, without also allowing the justness of their application. We seem here to have a confusion of the sufferings of life, with the state of death. All that is meant however is,—and this by way of recapitulation,—that all which such persons can generally attend to is, their own immediate sufferings.

CHAPTER XV.

1. Each of the three friends of Job having now spoken, Eliphaz commences a series of replies; and, as it was likely enough would be the case, he returns to his former positions, for the purpose apparently of defending them, and certainly not in a temper improved by what he had heard. There is a remarkable likeness observable in these two speeches, as we shall notice in the sequel. Ib. הֲהָקִים. Doth, or should a wise man? &c. It should be remembered that in ancient times (as already remarked, ch. xi. 6), the WISE, الْحَكَمَاءُ, were the professors and teachers of religion, as well as of law, &c.; and that, hence in the Scriptures, the wise are the well informed in these respects; the fools, those who are differently circumstanced. Ib. בְּצִת־רִיחַ, is best explained by the following קָדַיִם, east wind, which is constantly represented in the Scriptures as injurious: hence, vain, puffing, pretending, &c. may be its meaning.

2. הוֹדִיחַ, Contending, or by contending: the Hiphil infin. or verbal noun of יָחַד. These, like all other nouns, when construed as specificatives (see Gram. Art. 219, note, ib. 4), may be supposed to involve the prep. כִּי, לְ, &c.; and hence be rendered as Latin gerunds.

3. לֹא יִסְפוֹן, Profiteth not. Great has been the difficulty felt in accounting for the different senses of this word; meaning, as it here probably does, profit; in other places, poverty; and in others, being in danger, &c. I think, with Gesenius, that the leading notion is that of being at rest, sitting still, residing quietly in one's habitation. Hence would naturally enough arise the sense of profit, wealth, and the like. Hence, too, supposing this to arise from idleness, would the terms being still, at rest, &c. be applied to poverty. And, again, as a want of care and caution, with regard to one's enemies, might likewise be implied, this word would be taken, in other contexts, as equivalent to being in danger, peril, &c. When, however, Gesenius takes it, in this last case, to be a denominative verb, as he terms it, from שָׁפִיץ, signifying a knife, he seems to me to take for granted the thing to be proved; for, now a question will arise, as to what the etymology of this word (שָׁפִיץ) must be; which is manifestly not in a primitive form. I should rather think that שָׁפִיץ is one of those augmented nouns (see Gram. 154, 12, note), signifying habit, profession, &c.; and in this view שָׁפִיץ may signify any thing reducing another to quietness, stillness, as a knife in slaughtering animals, &c. So, in the Arabic, سَكَنَ, quies, sedatus, firmus, ac stabilis fuit; and transit. stabilicit, &c. It. Pauperem, miseramque reddidit. سَكَيْتَ, culter: سَكَّارٍ, cultrarius: سَاكِنٌ, otiosus.—Comp. the exordium of the first speech, ch. iv.

4. וְעַתָּה. Moreover, but, &c. See root פָּחַח, and note to vr. 3, ch. xiv. i. e. in addition to thy unsatisfactory statements, thou goest on to disseminate infidelity. Ib. וְהָפַח פְּחַחֶיךָ, Thou makest fear (i. e. of God) of none effect. High. of פָּחַח. The Arab. فَرِيَ is continually used (conj. viii.) in this sense in the Koran. Ib. וְהִתְנַחֵץ. And cuttest off, or away: הִתְנַחֵץ, complaint, crying out, as in prayer: i. e. By this conduct thou inducest others to cease from prayer, and so to give up religion; for this, הִתְנַחֵץ, is mostly taken to mean. Comp. vr. 6, ch. iv. The opinion of Eliphaz respecting Job, is now manifestly less favourable than it was at first.

5. וְיִלְמַד. Supposing a public disputation to be here held, this word will signify, It (i. e. thy mouth) teaches us what opinion we ought to form of thy piety; i. e. it publishes, proclaims, or is the author of, thy own conviction. See vr. 6. Ib. וְהִתְנַחֵץ. The crafty, sophisticated, who, while they make their defence, betray the badness of their principles. Comp. Gen. iii. 1; Prov. xii. 16, &c. Ib. וְהִתְנַחֵץ. Lit. And thou chooseth, &c.; but, as this latter clause is apparently intended to contain the grounds and cause of the former, for, inasmuch as, seeing, &c. will give the true force of the particle ו.

6. וְהִתְנַחֵץ. It bespeaks thee bad, i. e. it therefore convicts thee. This is Eliphaz's first general conclusion; and surely it is sufficiently severe. He now proceeds more specifically to make good his objections.

7. וְהִתְנַחֵץ. Whether the first, &c. There certainly is a tradition among the Orientals of very ancient standing, to this effect, that, before the world was created, an agent was produced by the Deity who was to act as his vicegerent, or prime minister. In Dan. iii. 25, we read, “The form of the fourth is like the son of God.” Among the Hindoos, Brahma is this character; among the Buddhists, the Adhi Buddha; among the Greeks and Romans, Apollo; with Plato, Philo, &c. the Logos; among the Soofee Mohammedans, Mohammed, whom they term the first Intellect;

among the Druzes on Mount Libanus, the Hakim Biatur Allah. According to the ancient fathers of the church, Christ was this person, and identically the same with the יהוה of the Old Testament. Him, again, the Targumists term the Memra (מִמְרָא), or Word of God; who is undoubtedly the same with the Logos, or Word, of St. John. I know of but one way of accounting for this getting into the minds of the heathen, which is: Revealed religion must have been more ancient than apostasy from it, just as the Bible is more ancient than profane literature. Heathenism was, therefore, merely a system of separation or schism from the true church, in which this and other parts of revelation were retained, but greatly distorted. This Being, or Person, is occasionally termed Wisdom by the Targumists, as Gen. i. 1; Targ. Jerus., and apparently by Solomon, Prov. viii. where vv. 23, 24, this very passage of Job is copied. And to this St. Paul probably alluded, when he termed Christ the power and wisdom of God, 1 Cor. i. 24. Eliphaz, therefore, seems to accuse Job of wishing to assume this character. See note on ch. xi. 6, above. Ib. וְלִפְנֵי גְבֻעוֹת. And before the hills, &c. The passage in the Proverbs runs thus, From everlasting was I avoited; from the first (מִרִאשִׁית, from the head; whence, probably, the blunder of Minerva's being produced from the head of Jove), from times before the earth; in there being no great depths, was I brought forth (חִזְלֵלְתִי). And in vr. 25, לִפְנֵי גְבֻעוֹת חִזְלֵלְתִי, the very words of Eliphaz! Now Eliphaz, both here and in his former speech, manifestly refers to revelations formerly made. Similar sentiments are uttered, and former documents referred to by Bildad in ch. viii.; and, as these, from the citations apparently made from them in this Book of Job, seem to have treated very abundantly of moral truths — of which we shall see more by and by, — it is not improbable that a considerable number of them are preserved in this book, and the Proverbs of Solomon; and that under the terms wisdom, learning, and the like, true religion, and its author, are enigmatically depicted in all.

8. הֲבִסְתִּיר. Lit. Whether in the secret of God dost thou obtain an audience? The best comment on which is Prov. viii. 22–31, for this puts the Being there spoken of exactly in this situation. Comp. Jer. xxiii. 18, 22, which seems to be a copy of this place. Ib. וְהִגַּדְתָּ. And cuttest off, i. e. appropriatest, securest, wisdom to thyself. It is remarkable enough that Solomon's wisdom (vr. 14) terms itself counsel, substantial, intelligence, בִּינָה, and גְּבִיחָה, might. The Logos of Plato, &c. meant reason or intellect. The first-born, according to the Soofee Mohammedans, is, as remarked above, the first intellect, الْعَقْلُ الْأَوَّلُ, الْحِكْمَةُ, wisdom. The Buddha of the Buddhists, means etymologically the same thing as does the Δαίμων of the Greeks. The Apollo of the heathen was famed for being the author of all wisdom. I cannot help thinking, therefore, that Eliphaz has here the same Being in view; and that he accuses Job of something like an intention to assume the person and character belonging to Him alone. On this subject generally, see Euseb. Prep. Evangel. lib. vii. capp. xii-xv.; Stillingfleet's "Origines Sacrae;" Gale's "Court of the Gentiles;" Grot. "De Veritate Christ. Relig." &c.

9. מָה יָדַעְתָּ. What hast thou known? &c. i. e. If indeed thou art in possession of such knowledge as thy assumptions seem to imply, tell us what it is. הִבְדִּינוּ, discriminatest, understandest, &c.; and it, i. e. הַדָּבָר, the matter is not with us, well known, and familiar.

10. בְּ-רֹאשׁוֹ. Also the gray-headed. Arab. قَالَ ... شَيْبٍ. El Asmai has said, that الشَّيْبُ signifies whiteness of the hair, i. e. gray-headed. On יִשְׂרָאֵל, see ch. xii. 12, to which the remark of Eliphaz seems to be intended as a reply. Hariri Makam. 50, has —

أَمَّا تَرَي الشَّيْبَ وَحَطَّ وَحَطَّ فِي الرَّأْسِ حُطَّطًا

Dost thou not see that the gray-hairs are mixed, and that they hure drawn lines upon thy head?—

Ib. גָּבִיר. Lit. Great, in days, beyond thy father; and so this word גָּבִיר is used in the Arabic. The point of the remark seems to be, If thou art older than the hills (v. 7), how does it happen that there are men with us older than thy father? A remark not unlike this was offered to our Lord by the Jews, John, viii. 57, which seems to confirm the view here taken of the dispute.

11. הַמְנַחֵם מִמֶּנּוּ. Are the consolations? &c. The use of מ, in מִמֶּנּוּ, appears to be equivalent to the Latin apud. See Nold. p. 458. יְדַבֵּר אֱלֹהִים, and the word of God. This term (דָּבָר) occasionally occurs in this sense with the article. See Isa. ix. 7; xxix. 21; xxx. 21; l. 4; Prov. xiii. 13. Ib. לְיָסָר, i. e. for gentleness, easy, unimpressive. See Isa. viii. 6; 2 Sam. xviii. 5. Eliphaz had in ch. iv. as well as the other respondents, appealed to a revelation : and here he says that to this Job paid little or no regard.

12. מָה לִּקְרָבֶךָ. What doth thy heart take, receive, acquire in learning, &c. for thee? Usually, “carry thee away;” which is unexampled in the Hebrew, and, I think, in all the Oriental dialects of this family. לִקְרָב generally signifies, accepting, taking, and the like (see the dictionaries), and often in the sense of learning something ; which is apparently the sense of it here. לִקְרָבֶךָ. I take to stand for לִקְרָב לְךָ, takes for thee,—a mode of writing by no means uncommon. See Gram. Art. 206, and the places marked in the margin of the text. Again, if Why, &c. was intended, לְמָה, עַל־מָה, or the like, would have been used in this place, rather than מָה. The sense seems to be, as in vv. 8 and 9 above, What knowledge hast thou acquired superior to ours?—and the passage to be added by way of repetition, in order to confirm the sentiment there expressed, and also to give force to that in the verse immediately following. Ib. וְרַזְמִין עֵינֶיךָ. Do thine eyes fix, fasten, lay hold, upon, &c. A similar usage occurs Gen. xx. 10, מָה רָאִיתָ כִּי וּגו', What hast thou seen that? &c. The verb רָזַם, Arab. رزم, seems to have, as its leading sense, make fast, be firm, or the like. So Jauhari, الكَرَّازِمُ مِنَ الرَّازِمِ, said of camels, means one firmly fixed on the ground, so as not to be able to rise from fatigue, &c. He adds : وَتَعَالَى لِلثَّابِتِ الْعَالِيَمِ عَلَيَّ وَجْهَ الْأَرْضِ, it is also said of one standing firmly on the surface of the ground. And, again, رَزَمَ الْقَوْمُ دَارَهُمْ إِذَا أَطَالُوا الْإِقَامَةَ بِهَا, a people رָزَمَ have established their dwelling, when they have lengthened out their time of residence in it. And again, رُزِمَ الرَّجُلُ إِذَا أَصْرَبَهُ الْمَرَضُ, رُزِمَ is said of a man, when disease presses grievously upon him. So also Tebrizi, on a passage in the Hamāsa (Freytag's edit. p. ۳۴۲) وَرَوَى بَعْضُهُمْ قَارِزِمٌ بِهِ مَا رَزَمَ أَيِ اثْبَتَ بِهِ مَا ثَبَتَ لَكَ مِنْ قَوْلِهِمْ اسْدَ رُزِمَ وَرَزَامٌ إِذَا جَثَمَ عَلَيَّ الْغَرِيْسَةُ وَهَمَّهُمْ عَلَيْهَا قَارِزِمٌ بِهِ مَا رَزِمَ. That is, fix firmly on him what he has fixed on thee ; from the expression (viz.), a lion, رָزِمَ and رَزَمَهُ, when he lies upon the prey, and grows over it. Schultens takes the sense of reheventius irutus fuit ; but this seems to be only a secondary acceptance, derived perhaps from the notion of something pressing hard upon one. Comp. the cognate verbs רָזַף, and רָזַב, in both of which the same notions prevail. The sentiment intended here seems to be, What has thy heart received or discovered, and thine eyes fixed upon (רָזַבְתִּין, with the epenthetic י, implying certainty or excess), which is not well known to us? I deem it superfluous to say any thing here on the favourite metathesis, by which this word is transformed into רָזַי, Arab. رَمَزَ, as I also do on the want of unity, point, and subject, which that substitution evidently introduces into the context. I can understand, by the eyes fixing or fastening on some thing (which is the sense of הִזָּה, to behold), that the person in question has and keeps firmly in view, something to which he pertinaciously adheres. I have rendered these verbs in the preterite, because the sense of the following verse seems to require it.

13. בִּיתְשִׁיב. *That thou causest to turn about, i.e. refreshest, רִיחָךְ, thy breath, or spirit. Ib. אֶל־אֱלֹהִים, perhaps for עַל־אֱלֹהִים, a very common case, against God. Eliphaz accuses the Patriarch, if I mistake not, of having taken up some notion which he is determined not to give up, and which is such as to encourage him to rebel against God.*

14. מִיָּהֱמוֹת. What is mortal man, &c. The passage seems to be intended as a retort upon Job, in nearly his own words. See ch. ix. 1; xiv. 1.

15. הֵן בְּקִדְשָׁיו. Behold, in his holy ones or saints, &c. These saints, most likely angels, are also mentioned in the first address of Eliphaz, ch. v. 1. We need not suppose here, with the Neologians of Germany, that this notion could not have been familiar to the Hebrews earlier than the times of the captivity; for we read of them appearing to Abraham and Lot, even before the times of Job. See Gen. xviii., and the Introduction to this work. In ch. iv. 18, this sentiment is given rather more at length; and there the term מַלְאָכָא, angel, accompanies it, apparently as an explanation.

16. כִּהְיֶה וְנִבְאָה. One who has become abominable, &c. We have good instances here of the force of the Niphhal conjugation; see Gram. Art. 159, 19: and which suggests an allusion here to the fall of man.

17. סִחֲפֵיהֶן. Let me shew thee. An apocopated form of the Pihel of הִזָּה (see Gram. Art. 233, 3); a word much in use in the Chaldee and Syriac. Ib. וְרָאָה, for וְרָאָה. Gram.

Art. 177, 3. Ib. וְאֶסְפָּרָה. And let me recount; i. e. as a consequence: Gram. Art. 234, 2. The construction seems here to be inverted for, Hear me, and I will show thee; and let me recount accordingly, even what I have seen; i. e. either what he had seen, i. e. experienced, or else as written in books: the latter obviously, as what follows is clearly a citation. Comp. ch. iv. 8, 15, &c.

18, 19. By חֲקֵמִים is manifestly meant here, as before, teachers of religion; and, from the following context, these must have been the patriarchs: men who possessed the lands as feudatory lords, and among whom no stranger sojourned. Comp. Gen. x. Ib. וְלֹא כָדָרוּ. And withheld not, kept not back. Comp. Ps. xl. 10. If the sole possession, just mentioned, referred to the times and persons immediately subsequent to the flood, those who are here said to have been their fathers must of necessity carry us up still higher, to times and persons preceding that event: which the context evidently requires.

20. כָּל־יְמֵי. All the days, &c. to the end of the chapter seems to be a citation; and the persons, particularly alluded to, to be Cain and Nimrod. Ib. הוּא מְהוּלָּל (is), it: i. e. the whole period of his life subjected to, brought into, circumstances of, pain. Comp. ch. xxx. 16; Ps. lxxviii. 33; xc. 9. In this case, הוּא מְהוּלָּל will refer to כָּל. That this well suits the character of Cain, will be seen in Gen. iv. 14. וּמִכָּפֹר, i. e. a small number, few, &c.: ch. xiv. 5. It is manifest that, in both members here, the terms marking certain periods of time are the subjects of the discourse.

22. לֹא יֶאֱמִין. He confides not, &c.; a favourite expression with Eliphaz: see vr. 15; ch. iv. 18. Ib. וְנִצְפֵי. And watched, way-laid: the participial passive noun, for נִצְפֵי. So Cain: "Every one finding me shall kill me." Comp. Ps. xxxvii. 32. Ib. אֶל־יְחָרֵב. Lit. For the sword; i. e. to be destroyed by it.

23. לָדָר הוּא. He wandereth, &c. So Cain, Gen. iv. 14. וְהָיִיתִי נֹדֵד וְנָדָר; and vr. 16, he is said to have resided in a land named נֹדֵד, in memory of his wanderings. Ib. לֶלְחֶם אֵינָהּ. Lit. For bread wherever—. This passage has proved exceedingly troublesome to the translators and commentators, apparently for this reason: it has not been generally seen, that the Hebrew language admits of considerable variety in the position of its words: hence great fear was entertained, lest, by transposing the words, violence might be done to the context. But, as it is evident enough that such variety is found in fact, we need no longer fetter ourselves with that consideration. See my Gram. Art. 241, 18, &c.; and above, ch. ix. 19, where we have הָקִי transposed in a similar manner. Jerome, too, has so taken this passage: viz. “Cum se moverit ad querendum,” &c. Ib. בְּדָבַר, seems particularly to mark the circumstances of Cain.

24. עָתִיד לְפִידוֹר. Prepared for the assault, &c. The only difficulty we have here is with the word פִּידוֹר, and the difficulty has been found to be great, particularly as this precise word occurs no more in the Hebrew Bible, nor ever apparently in the sister dialects. The root must evidently have been כָּדַר; Arab. كدر. In Isa. xxii. 18; xxix. 3; however, we have פָּדַר, which manifestly requires a sense very nearly allied to that of our word. Injury and war are clearly intended by the prophet in each of these places; and, in the latter, we have some of the terms used here by Eliphaz: e. g. vr. 2, וַהֲטִיקוֹתַי; vr. 3, וַיִּצְרֹתַי; and the whole turn of expression is military. In Job, we have וַיִּבְתְּהוּ עָרַי; וַיִּבְתְּהוּ עָרַי; so that the prophet apparently had in his eye this very passage of Job. Castell thinks that a camp was meant, because פָּדַר is thought to signify a sphere, or ball, and because camps were made round. Camps among the Greeks were certainly sometimes made circular, as Xenophon tells us; but it no where appears that they were so among the Hebrews or Arabs. Certainly the camp in the desert was rectangular, not round. Besides, it is far from certain that פָּדַר means a sphere: and, if it is cognate with כָּתַר, it should rather mean inclosing, binding about, or the like, than round—much less spherical. I take כָּתַר to be truly cognate with כָּדַר, as I also do קָדַר, sepicit, murum vel parietem struxit, &c. Arab. جَدَرَ, pariete circumseptus fuit locus: corroboravit, &c.; كَثَرَ, multitudine superavit; كَبَّرَ, gibbus cameli. See also عَدَرَ, and كَدَرَ. This last, incommodis molesta fuit vita: effudit aquam nubis, &c.; ab alto demisit rem. 7th conj. celer et festinus fuit. Which, applied to war, should signify accumulation, force, &c., in hurry, agitation, rushing downwards, forwards, or the like, as in a tremendous attack: and this I take to be the meaning of the word here.

25. נָתַח יָדוֹ. He laid down his hand (comp. Isa. xxiii. 11; Exod. xv. 12, &c.); i. e. laid it on with violence, as to God, אֱלֹהִים: he rebelled against His appointments. וַאֲלֵ-שָׁמַיִם. Even as to, or against, the Almighty, he became, or made himself great. וַיִּתְגַּבֵּר.—Comp. Gen. iv. 5-13. Compare also Gen. vi. 1-5, in the last verse of which we are told, that these (i. e. הַנְּפִילִים) were אֲנָשִׁי מֵעוֹלָם הַנְּפִילִים, the Giants (i. e. Heroes), who were from ancient time men of name. The verb יִהְיֶבֶר, above noticed, seems to identify itself with the גִּבּוֹרִים here mentioned, who certainly were the posterity of Cain. It is worth while to remark, that near the end of the fourth chapter here (Gen.) we have an account of the birth of Seth; and we are told, at the same time (i. e. vr. 26), that then, and apparently in his family, began men (publicly) to call on the name of God. The next chapter, viz. the fifth, gives his descendants down to the times of Noah. The commencement of the next chapter tells us of a different race, whose daughters were taken as wives, apparently by the religious race (sons of God) of the family of Seth. At vr. 4 we are told, that in these times, and afterwards, the נְפִילִים were in the earth; who, from what follows, were evidently the same persons with these גִּבּוֹרִים, or Giants; and the same does the etymology of the word imply: which, as I believe, has never been satisfactorily made out. I may be excused, therefore, if I offer what I can on it. The root נָפַל, in the Arabic, signifies generally, giving something liberally, more than is deserved; assigning the spoil; taking the greater part of the spoil, &c. نَوَقَلَّ, vehementia, angustia:—Mas hyæna; Hylax. نَافِلٌ, excessus; نَافِلَةٌ, abundantia: acquisita præda. Nothing is more common in the East than the practice of naming warriors after certain animals, as the Lion, Tiger, &c. So Ali, أَسَدُ اللَّهِ الْعَالِبِ, the lion of God, the conqueror; and in Mr. Bopp's Sanscrit Nalus the hero is termed a Tiger. Several of Mohammed's companions received, according to the Kāmoos, the name of نَوَقَلَّ, probably from their warlike characters. In the Chaldee too, we have גִּבּוֹרָא, i. q. the Syr. גִּבּוֹרָא Giant, or Orion. See Job, ix. 9, with the notes on it; xxxviii. 31; Isa. xiii. 10. This word, therefore, is perfectly equivalent to גִּבּוֹר; and, in all probability, this is the true etymology of the vox reatissima, נְפִילִים. I cannot help thinking, moreover, from the allusions here made by Eliphaz, as well as from the circumstance that the whole of this race perished at the flood, that Cain and his family are the persons had in view. These were the first Giants: their second race, after the flood, are said to have made war on the Gods, and to have perished in the attempt. See ch. ix. 9, above; and Euseb. Evangel. lib. ix. capp. xiv. xv.

26. רָרַחַ. He, God, runneth, rusheth, upon him, &c. רָרַחַת. On the neck: equivalent, perhaps, to רָרַחַת, on the shoulder, Isa. xi. 14. So Ibn Arabshah, in his Life of Timour, p. ۴۱, رَاكِبِينَ اَلْتَعَاھَم مِّن وَّرَائِهِمْ. Lit. Riding their shoulders from behind, i. e. attacking them in the rear, as in the "adsultare tergis pugnantium" of Tacitus, Agricola, xxvi. The עָרַף of the Hebrew is used much in the same sense. Exod. xxiii. 27; 2 Sam. xxii. 41; Job, xvi. 12, &c. Ib. בְּעֵבְרָה. Lit. On the thickness. See Schultens on the place.

27. בְּחֵלְבֹו. With his fatness, i. e. his wealth, riches. As if he should say, he has blindfolded himself by means of his wealth. So the Jews are said to have a veil on their hearts; to have uncircumcised ears; to have made the heart fat, and the like: all implying mental blindness, darkness, and ignorance, and thence obstinacy. Ib. נִינְעֵשׂ. And (so) made, &c. Ib. בְּיָבֻה. Prosperity, wealth, &c. It is of little consequence, whether we take the Arabic فَاَم, فَوَم, or فِيم, for the root of this word; the first signifying, to fill up with fat; the second, meaning corn; the third, powerful, &c.: the general exegetic sense remaining the same in each case. The main question to be determined however is, What are we to understand by the following words, viz. עָלֵי-קֶבֶל? "Upon the loins" has usually been taken: but to this I object on many accounts. 1st. It cannot be shewn that קֶבֶל ever means the loins: it rather means the small guts. See the passages. 2dly. I doubt whether עַל עֵשָׂה can be found, having any such sense as this; and, 3dly, if it could, still it would be difficult to say how this could apply in a sense any way suitable to the corresponding previous member: unless it be supposed that fattening the bowels might be taken to signify the same thing as fattening the heart; which I greatly doubt. I am inclined to think, therefore, that the passage ought thus to be taken, lit. So he maketh wealth for, or into, a confidence: taking עַלֵי in the sense of אֵלַי, or לְ (Gen. xii. 2; Jer. xxxvii. 15), which is common enough. Comp. chh. viii. 14; xxxi. 24; where the parallel member has מִבְּזָהָב, and where זָהָב, gold, is the sort of wealth so taken. Comp. also Ps. lxxviii. 7; Prov. iii. 26. If this be the sense of the clause, then it will stand as a sort of consequence to the preceding; and the apocope, in נִינְעֵשׂ, be easily accounted for (Gram. Art. 233, 3): i. e. Since he has covered his face with his own fatness, i. e. thus blinded himself, he has accordingly taken wealth for his god.

28. נִכְרְדוּהוּ. The force of the Niphthāl form is here remarkable: to be, become, cut down, or destroyed, i. e. at some future period. Ib. לֹא יִשְׁבּוּ לָמוֹ. They possess not for them- selves, i. e. Men, impersonally, shall not inhabit, because destruction awaits them. Ib. הִתְעַתְּרוּ. Have become prepared, made ready, for heaps: where the correspondence between the forces of the Niphhal and Hitpaḥel forms is obvious. See Gram. Art. 157, 19. Ib. לְהֵיזֵר לְגַלְיִים, ellip. for לְהֵיזֵר לְגַלְיִים, i. e. to become for heaps.

29. לֹא יִטָּה. Shall not extend, lay down, fix, to the earth, as the poles, pins, and covering of a tent, so as to be permanent (Gen. xxxiii. 19, &c.); and, metaphorically, נָטָה לְרַבּוֹ מְעַם יְהוּדָה. He laid down, fixed, his heart, from (its being) with Jehorah, &c. It will be observed that we have here a climax. Such shall not grow rich, his wealth shall not endure; and it is added, וְלֹא יִטָּה וְגו'. Neither shall extend, &c. to the earth their wealth, &c. The getting of wealth is the first thing denied; its permanency, the second; the third, its being extended over, fixed, or attached to the earth, or land, i. e. so as to constitute a permanent princely family. The metaphor seems to be taken from the act of pitching a tent in which a family is to reside. So Isa. liv. 2: "Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth (נִפְתַּח) the curtains of thy habitations: spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes," &c. And this is spoken with reference to increase, strength, and permanency, as attending the true church. Ib. לְטָרֵף. Lit. To the earth, with the verb in Kal יִטָּה, to be taken impersonally perhaps, it extends, &c., or is extended, to the earth or ground; i. e. so as to take and retain it in possession. We have, in Ps. xvii. 11, a passage not unlike this, and situated in a similar context. After speaking of their being inclosed in fatness, the Psalmist adds: עֵינֵיהֶם יִשְׁרִיגוּ לְנִתּוֹת פְּאָאָרָץ. Their eyes have they applied to laying down, fixing, extending (their power) in the earth. Where I take פְּאָאָרָץ to be equivalent to our לְטָרֵף. Comp. Ps. xlix. vv. 7, 12, where the subject is of the same character. Ib. מִנְּקָם. Acquisition, wealth. Arab. تَوَلَّى. Giving, presenting. تَبَدَّلَ.

Quod quis consequitur, opes, &c. Syr. ܡܢܘܢ. Deprehendens. Æth. ጠፋፊ: Defendit, protegit. Heb. נָקָה. Consummavit, &c. Comp. Isa. xxxiii. 1. Hence מִנְּקָם, for מִנְּקָהָם. Gram. Art. 75.

30. Comp. vr. 22. Ib. יוֹנְקֵהוּ. Sarculus ejus: the metaphor is taken from the branching of trees, intimating his posterity. Ib. נִשְׁלַחְתָּהּ. The שׁ being prefixed to this word, shews it to be of a Chaldaïc or Syriac form: the root is להב. See Hoffman's Syr. Gram. p. 184; Jahn's Elementa Aramaicæ... linguæ, p. 89, &c. In Cant. viii. 6, we have שֶׁלֶהֲבַתָּה, or, according to Ben Naphtali's reading, שֶׁלֶהֲבַתָּה. Flame of the Lord. In Ezek. xxi. 3, this place of Job seems to be imitated. And, on the whole, שֶׁלֶהֲבַתָּה seems to intimate some extraordinary immission of fire, by way of judgment. Comp. Job, iv. 9 (where it is termed נְשֵׁמַת אֱלֹהִים, breath of God) with Isa. xxx. 33. Allusion is probably here made by Eliphaz to the destruction of Sodom, Gomorrah, and the rest of the cities of the plain. Ib. פִּי. His (i. e. God's) mouth. Comp. ch. iv. 9.

31. אֲלֵי־צַדִּיק. Let him not confide, trust. This, to vr. 35, forms the peroration of this speech of Eliphaz, and may probably be a part of the ancient document already referred to. נִתְּנָה. Has become subject to error: where the force of the Niphthal form is apparent. By שֵׁוּא is here generally meant falsehood; first in religious belief, and secondly in its consequences, vanity, misery, and disappointment, in every respect.

32. הַמְּלֵא. Lit. Shall he become filled. The allusion is to precocious fruit, which, in consequence either of some disease in the tree, or of some blast sent upon it, presents its fruit earlier than it ought to do, which presently withers and dies. Such tree is sometimes termed in scriptural language, "the vine of Sodom" (Deut. xxxii. 32); and such vine is here mentioned, vr. 33: which affords a further inducement for believing that the allusion is to the destruction of Sodom, &c. by fire. It should seem, moreover, from what we now have of the patriarchal Scriptures, that mention was often made in them of the extraordinary judgments of God. See Jude, vv. 11, 14, 15; Numb. xxi. 14, 28; ch. i. 16; Gen. xix. 24.

33. כְּזֵיתָה. Like the olive. That the olive grew in these parts is evident from the testimony of Diodorus Siculus, lib. iii. § xlili. His words are: πάσας δ' ἐλαιαὶς καταπεπυκνωμέναις ὁμαρῶσιν; πῶς παρ' ἡμῶν.—"Olivis tamen a nostratibus diversis passim innumbrantur."

34. בְּלֵבֶיךָ. Obtuse, sterile, as the rock impenetrable. See note on ch. iii. 7. The context here requires, however, that it be taken to signify senseless, struck dumb and lifeless, as by lightning: for this is the destroying fire spoken of.

35. הָרִיה, to be construed as if ב were prefixed, as a significative (Gram. Art. 219, note; 222, &c.); i. e. in or by conceiving, &c. Ib. וּבְטִבְחָם. Even, yeu, their viscera, &c. The Hebrews universally make the heart, or viscera the seat of thought. This speech closes very much like that of Eliphaz, given in ch. iv.

CHAPTER XVI.

2. רַבּוֹת. Many things. In the languages of this class, generally, the feminine gender is used to mark things; in opposition to the masculine, which is taken to designate intelligent agents. Gram. Art. 216, 7. Ib. מְנַחֵמֵי עָמָל. Lit. Consolers of misery: where, however, the following substantive stands in the place of an adjective, Gram. Art. 224, 4-8, i.e. miserable comforters.

3. הֲיָהָהּ, &c. Is there any limit? i.e. there is surely no limit: alluding to the words of Eliphaz, ch. xv. 1. Ib. Or, if this be not the case, מַה הַיְמַרְיָהּ, What makes thy opinion appear the true one, so as to justify thy answering? Various have the attempts been here to discover the force of the word הַיְמַרְיָהּ, as may be seen in the Commentators. I take the Arabic usage of أَمْرَضَ, as given by the native lexicographers, and as signifying, He came near, approached to, the truth, in his opinion. So Jaulhari: أَمْرَضَ الرَّجُلُ, &c.—see note on ch. vi. 25—which he exemplifies with the following extract, not unlike our passage here in Job: وَلَكِن تَحْتَّ ذَاكَ الشَّيْبِ حَزْمٌ إِذَا مَا ظَنَّ أَمْرَضَ أَوْ أَصَابَا. But there is beneath this gray (hair) a foresight, (which) when it surmises, thinks aright, or hits the truth. This, I think, as it is well suited to the context, and receives the support of many as far as their conjectures have gone, is the true scope and drift of this passage: i.e. What makes thy opinion seem true, or, persuades thee that thou art in possession of the truth?

4. אֶרְבֶּקָהּ. With the paragogic ה, implying a consequence. Gram. Art. 234, 2. That is, taking such premises, I might also argue to the same effect. אֶחַבְרָהּ. I might put sentences together,—fabricate, string together, a rhapsody, against you, &c.

5. I take אֶמְצֵא עֲלֵיכֶם to be written for אֶמְצֵא עֲלֵיכֶם. See Gram. Art. 206. Ib. יִחַשְׁבֶּךָ. May hold back, restrain, you, for יִחַשְׁבְּכֶם, which would be difficult to pronounce, and inelegant. “Subandi קִבְּרָתְכֶם dolorem vestrum,” says Rosenmüller. But Job is not speaking of their disease; he is arguing against the vanity of their arguments. Neither could he imagine that these arguments—supposing his friends were as diseased as he was—could in any degree moderate their affliction. This would be to argue on the very grounds which he took upon himself here to condemn. He only means, apparently, that he might, as they had done, check the course of their arguments; which would, however, amount to nothing in the end.

6. אֲשַׁדְּרָהּ. The paragogic ה here, and in the following verb (אֲשַׁדְּרָהּ), serves to keep up the connexion with the preceding premises, which must necessarily be rendered in the same mood and tense.

7. הִקְלַסְנִי. He hath reduced me to nought; i. e. taking לָס as the root, as in הִזְנִיד, from the part. בָּנָה, &c. Ib. אֲדָרְתִּי. My society, my family, household, &c.

8. וַתִּקְרַעְנִי. Chald. and Syr. صَدَّبَ. Corrugatus. Arab. قَمَطَ. Constrinxit simul quatuor pedes ovis, &c. Ib. לָגַד הָיָה. It hath been, &c., i. e. this circumstance has been adduced as such, on the grounds that none but a grievous sinner could be thus afflicted. Ib. וַתִּקְרַעְנִי. So, accordingly, &c., it, the circumstance alluded to, has arisen, בִּי, against me. Ib. בְּקִלְטִי. Lit. My deficiency, or want. This word, occasionally used to signify lying, rather means the keeping of something back, deficiency, and thence leanness, &c. וַתִּקְרַעְנִי. It answers; or, which is the same thing, supplies an answer, &c.: i. e. My wretchedness is taken as proof sufficient of my sinfulness, as in the preceding member.

9. אֵשׁוֹ. His wrath; i. e. God's wrath. Ib. וַתִּקְרַעְנִי. And acteth fiercely, cruelly, &c. The lexicographers have generally taken this word as equivalent to شَطِنٌ, i. e. שָׂמַן, opposing as an enemy: but the Arabic supplies us with the very word here, and, as I think, in the sense which it every where requires, viz. سَطَمٌ; which, according to Jauhari, is the same with صَطَمٌ, and which the tribe of Tenuim write ستم. He then tells us, that حَدَّ السَّبَبِ السِّطَامُ means the edge of a sword: and that we have in the Hadith, الْعَرَبُ السِّطَامُ الْإِنْسَانِ أَيَّ حَدُّهُمْ. The Arabs are the Sītūm of men, i. e. Their edge. The author of the Kāmoos further tells us, that it is taken to signify an iron poker, and أَسْطَمٌ, most noble: perhaps as we say, aristocratical, i. q. most martial, from "Αστῆς, Mars. In the Syr. حَظَّو, compedivit, cinxit, and حَظَّو, chalybs. From all of which it must appear, that acting fiercely, sharply, hardly, or the like, is the sense of the root. So, in Ps. lv. 4, בָּאַף יִשְׁׁמְרוּנִי. In wrath do they fiercely pursue me; which could hardly be, In wrath do they hate me, &c. And here, הִרְקֶה and וְלִטְּוֹשׁ are, perhaps, in some degree, synonymous with this word, or at any rate may serve to explain it. I take צָרָי, however, to be the nominative to each of these verbs.

10. פָּצְרוּ. They gape. Comp. Ps. xxii. 8, 14, &c., which is evidently modelled, in a great degree, after this place. Ib. וְהִמְלִאוּ. They fully pursue, or follow. See Deut. i. 36; Josh. xiv. 14; 1 Kings, xi. 6. לְלִבָּת אֶחָדִי, or the like, is necessary to fill up the ellipsis.

11. וַיִּשְׁׁרְטֵנִי. God shutteth me up. The verb is used to signify shutting a door, or gate, closing up, as in a siege, &c. Exod. xiv. 3. And in this latter sense is it to be taken here. Ib. וַיִּרְטֵנִי. He casteth me down. I shall only add to what Schultens has said on this word (see in loc.), the following from Jauhari, الْوَرِطَةُ الْهَلَاكُ; i. e. قال ابو عبيد وأصل الورطة. ألنرتة signifies destruction. أرض مطمئنة لا طريق فيها. Abu Obeid has said, that the origin of this sense is, level land in which there is no road: and hence, I suppose, the notion of perplexity, loss, ruin, &c. The cognate roots are رطا, رطو, رتو, and رتا. Heb. רטח, and רטط. Heb. and Chald. روط, رتت. Syr. رٓوٓ. All having cognate significations.

12. וַיִּפְרָרְנִי. And He hath vexed me. Chald. פִּרְרַר. Movit, contrivit. Syr. ܦܪܪܐܢܝܢܐ. Imbecillitas. Arab. فَرَّرَ. Disquisivit, فرقر, movit, agitavit, fregit. Ib. بِجْجَرِي. By my back, i. e. the back part of the shoulders: see ch. xv. 26. Ib. وَيَفْضَلِي, redup. of فاز, dispersit. Arab. فَصَّ. Separavit, diremit, rem. فَصَّصَ, properavit, praeceps fuit in sermone. فَصَّصَ, fregit rem cum dirulsione: to which فَجَّه, Chald. فَجَّه, Syr. فَجَّه, and Samar. פגגה, are cognate. See Gram. Art. 197, 3, &c. These, like all similar reduplications, are used generally for the purpose of implying excess. Ib. לְמַטָּה. For a mark. Arab. نَطْرًا (a نظر). Arium terriuelamentum, quod inter segetes erigitur. مَنظَرٌ. Aspectus, facies, &c. Comp. Lam. iii. 12. So Ibn Doreid, speaking of the servants of a great man, says:

وَهُمْ لَمِنَ أَمْلَفَ أَعْدَاءٍ وَلَوْ شَارَكْتَهُمْ فِيمَا أَقَادَ وَحَرَي.

“Sed sunt ei, qui ad inopiam fuit redactus, hostes; etsi socius eorum fuerit in re, qua profuit, et sapientiā polluit.”

13. רָבָּוּ. His arrows. It is of little consequence which of the cognate roots we take here, viz. רבב, רבה, רוב.

Arab. رَبَّ, رَبَّأ, رَوَّب, رَبَّأ, رَوَّب, رَمَي, رَمَي, رَمَي. Syr. رِب, رِب, رِب.

(whence رِب); all signify, increasing, shooting out, or the like: to which the notion of magnitude, shooting, extending, &c. may naturally enough be referred. Some take “archers” here. I think—and the ancient interpreters are generally with me—the context rather requires arrows, or darts; alluding, perhaps, to the piercing pains to which Job was subject. Ib. יַצֵּלַח, &c. He harroweth. יַצֵּלַח, Chald.

دَكَس, Syr. فَكَّح. Secuit, sulcarit, &c.: alluding to the arrows, perhaps, just mentioned. Comp. Ps. cxxix. 3.

Ib. יַחֲבִיל. Bears, forbears, spurs. Syr. سَطَّ. Arab. حَمَلَ.

Portavit: hence, perterritus patienter, &c. Ib. יַחֲרָהֵי. My gall. Schultens has shewn from the Kāmoos, that مَرَارَةٌ signifies the gall-bladder. He might also have shewn, that الْمِرَّةُ is taken to signify the intellect, pride, firmness of mind, strength, patience, &c. الْقُوَّةُ, الْأَحْكَامُ, الْأَصَالَةُ, الْعَقْلُ,

وَالطَّائِفَةُ: and that, by what Job says here (the viscera being usually taken as the seat of sense, &c.), he probably means that of these he had now been in a great measure deprived. This is probably the exegetical sense intended. Nor is the passage without a parallel in the authors of Arabia, for we have in Ibn Doreid, vr. 143, Haitsma's edit.:

وَلَا أَقُولُ إِنَّ عَرَّتِي نَكَبَةٌ قَوْلَ الْقَبُوطِ أَنْتَدَّ فِي الْبَطْنِ السَّلَا.

“Neque dicam, superveniente mihi adversitate gravi, dictum desperantis; ruptæ sunt in ventre secundæ.”

Which the scholiast tells us originated in the occasional rupture of the caul inclosing a young camel in the womb; an accident fatal both to mother and young: thence, says he, it is used metaphorically to signify complete desperation.

انقعد انقطع السلا الجلدة الرقبعة التي يكون فيها الولد واذا انقطعت هلكت الناقة وهلك الولد وهذا عبارة عن البأس التام.

14. رָبָּوּ, &c. See ch. xiv. 26.

15. גְּלִדִי. My skin. Chald. אֶרְגִּלִּיד. Decorticatus est. Syr. ܓܠܝܢܝܐ. Congelatus est. Arab. جلد. Cutis. Ib. וְעַלְלִיתִי. And have made to enter. Chald. עַלְלִל. Ingressus est. Syr. Ethpe. Intravit. Which in Pihel will be, made to enter, or the like: i. e. My strength (for of this the horn is usually made an emblem) is merged in the dust: which is only a repetition of the sentiment expressed at the close of vr. 13.

16. הַמְּרַרְרָה, or הַמְּרַרָה: the first of which is a sort of passive form. It is of little consequence to the general sense, however, which we take. Chald. מְרַר. Conturbatus est, effervuit, &c. Syr. مَرَّرٌ. Vinum, مَرَّرٌ, fermentum. Arab. حَمَرٌ. Rubuit facies. Our translators, not aware of the Chaldee character of this book, generally took the sense as if derived from pure Hebrew, רוֹמָר, lutum. The LXX. took it, as I have done, σφγίζουσαι: and so Aben Ezra. Ib. וְעַל עֵצְעָי. And on my eye-lids, &c.: i. e. As the eyes afford a never-failing index of the state of the mind, so here they intimated the grievous pains under which Job was suffering, exhibiting rather the agonies of a dying man than any thing else.

17. עַל לֹא. Because (there was) not, &c. The language here seems to have been copied by Isaiah (liii. 9); which is not unlikely, as Job's sufferings were not wholly dissimilar to those of our Lord. I take the passage, however, rather to point out a comparison; viz. Because, or, Even as . . . so, i. e. in like manner, was my prayer pure, or considered pure by the Almighty. This Job's faith assured him of, as it should seem from his own professions.

18. אֶרֶץ. Earth, or, O earth, cover not, &c. Ib. מְקוֹם לִישְׁעוֹתַי. Place, residence, be for my cry; or, rather, Let my cry nowhere remain, i. e. housed, concealed, and unavenged. In all such cases, it is of the utmost importance to determine whether a term is to be understood objectively or subjectively. See Gram. Art. 224, 10. The passage, from this, as well as from what follows, evidently contains an allusion to the murder of Abel (Gen. iv. 10), whom Job probably considered circumstanced not unlike himself: pure as to his faith, but grievously misunderstood and cruelly dealt with.

19. נִבְעַתָּה. Behold now also: i. e. as God had borne witness to the injury done to Abel, so should he to that of Job. In this sense, therefore, the אֶל־תִּכְסֵי, and יִהְיֶה, in the preceding verse, are exegetically futures: thus, Because, &c. . . therefore the earth shall not cover my blood (sup- posing matters to be carried to the greatest extremity), nor shall the place of my complaint exist: for my witness is in the heavens, &c. Ib. שְׂהֵדָה. My eye-witness. “Schultens nimis subtiliter,” says Rosenmüller, “ex Arab. شَاهِدٌ, testem oculatum.” He then refers to Gen. xxxi. 47, by way of proof; but no such proof will that passage afford: because שְׂהֵדָה will signify either an eye or ear-witness. In the Arabic, the distinction noted by Schultens certainly obtains. So the Soorah, مشاهدة معابنه ديدان. To witness, i. e. with the eyes.

20. שְׂהֵדָה. My interlocutors, interpreters, mediators, &c. The word occurs only five times, and this sense obtains in four of them at least: viz. Gen. xlii. 23; 2 Chron. xxxii. 31; Isa. xliii. 27; Job, xxxiii. 23; and this, now under consideration. In ch. xxxiii. 23, the passage is very peculiar, and deserving of particular notice: it runs thus, אֲנִי מַלְאָכָה מֵאֶלֶף. An angel, or messenger-interpreter, one out of a thousand, to announce to man his righteousness; so shall he act graciously towards him, and say, Redeem him from descending to destruction; (for) I have found an expiation, &c. See the place. He must be next to blind, I think, who cannot see in these words the doctrine of a Mediator between God and man inculcated. But more on this when we come to that passage. So, in the place under consideration, My interlocutors, mediators, are my friends: not, “My friends scorn me,” because, first, It is hardly natural that Job should call these men his friends here, and, at the same time, term them his scorers. Secondly, this word nowhere occurs in the sense of scorner: nor, if we may judge from the passage just cited, is it necessary to suppose that Job ever ascribed any such sense to it. Nor, thirdly, does the plural number used here necessarily call for a plural number in the translation and interpretation of the text; and thence, for its being referred to Job’s friends: because, when speaking of any thing excellent, the plural is often used when one only is meant, as in אֱלֹהִים, בְּעֲלִים, הַקְּדוֹת, &c., Isa. liv. 5, &c. In all which cases, greatness, or excess, as great mediator, &c., seems to be meant. See Gram. Art. 223, 3. And, fourthly, the plural number here rests on no authority beyond that of the vowel-points. Certainly the LXX. have preserved no vestige of it whatsoever: and the same may be said of the Syriac, if indeed a conjunction (ו) has not there been interpolated. The preceding שְׂהֵדָה seems to require the singular number; as, in both cases, the same person is, in all probability, meant. My opinion is, therefore, that מְלִיצֵי רַעֲיִי, My mediator, interlocutor, &c. is my friend, is the original and correct reading; just as פְּלִיטָה, in the singular, is in ch. xxxiii. 23, where the same person is manifestly meant. Whether we have a wilful corruption of the text by the Jews here, I will not say; but certainly, ignorant as they are, and opposed to every thing about a Mediator, I can suppose that the authors of the vowels might propose this reading in the plural number, for the purpose of making the passage point to Job's friends, which would also make it necessary to give a new sense to the term מְלִיצֵי: and this, probably, has been the case. The root in the Arab. is لوص, whence لاصص, furtim aspexit, ænigmaticè locutus est, &c. Whence, perhaps, the notion of representing things differently from their real or primitive state; i. e. by giving other terms to any narrative, either enigmatically, or by real translation into another language: and then, again, in a bad sense, by holding them up to ridicule: which last notion can hardly obtain here. And, if so, Job had in his eye here the promised Mediator and Redeemer. But more on this hereafter. Ib. אֶל־אֱלֹהִים. To God, &c. That is, having such a witness in heaven (vr. 21), and such a real friend there, my weeping eye shall constantly be turned towards him.

21. וַיִּזְכֶּה. So pleads, or shall he plead, i. e. carry on the business of a מְלִיצֵי, mediator, לְגַבֵּר, for a man with God, בְּבֶן־אָדָם, even a son of man, i. e. as a son of man, or man generally, for his friend, לְרַעֲיוֹהוּ. "In לְגַבֵּר," says Rosenmüller, "est ל' nominativi nota, ut 1, Paral. iii. 2; Ps. lxxxix. 19; Jesaj. xxxii. 1," &c., which is all perfectly fictitious; it being evident to demonstration that ל', in these places, has the force of as to, with respect to, &c. The true and literal rendering is given above; which, as it appears to me to be perfectly natural, stands in need of no such fictitious assistance as this. That Job had some knowledge of an Intercessor with God is evident from ch. xxxiii. 23; and such must have been the Angel who (Gen. xlviii. 16) had redeemed Jacob from all evil. Comp. Dan. iii. 25; vii. 13; Gen. xxiv. 7, 40, &c. This falls in well with the preceding verse, and with the sense there given of מְלִיצֵי. I must, moreover, object to any, and every, method of interpretation, which is satisfied by merely extracting any sort of sense from any context generally. The character and religious views of the speaker ought, in all cases, to be carefully weighed, and his expressions elsewhere used to be considered; and particularly those which are connected with his immediate circumstances, hopes, and consolations. And, this being done, I think we must come to the conclusion here, that Job speaks of the Redeemer, the Intercessor (as he indeed termed him), whom he considered as his constant and faithful friend; and to whom he should in a few years (vr. 22) go, and from whom he should no more return. I shall be told here by some, that all this must have been more than the patriarch could have known. My answer is: I have no means of judging of his knowledge, except by his words; and to these I have here given the obvious, easy, and natural, translation and interpretation. If others have better means of getting at Job's knowledge than these, let them adduce them. I only request that they may contain something better than mere hypothesis.

CHAPTER XVII.

1. רִיחִי קִבְּלָהּ. My spirit is bound, i. e. suffers great pressure or pain; not unlike the passage in Shakespeare's King John. When brought out into the open air, the king is made to say, "Ay marry, now my soul hath elbow-room:" i. e. it feels relieved from the pressure formerly experienced. In ch. vii. 15, Job says, Strangling, מִצְרִיטָה, suffocation, trieth, presseth on my soul. See the note. The same, I think, is the meaning here. As to the etymology of קִבְּלָהּ, the primary notion seems to be binding: hence, a rope: and, as this was used for marking out portions of land, it was used to signify, apportioning out, either for good or bad. See 2 Sam. viii. 2; Ps. xvi. 6. Again, as binding one with a rope produced pressure and pain, so women in child-birth, or persons generally in the pains of death, were said to suffer constrictions, pains, or bindings, as if girded about with ropes, מִצְרִיטָה. Gr. ὀδύνη. Comp. Acts, ii. 24; Ælian. τὸν τῶν ὀδύνην λῆσαι δεσμοῦς; Eurip. Ion. v. 45; Pind. Olymp. vi. 51; Æschyl. Agam. v. 1428. The word is also taken to signify a net, and hence is applied to women conceiving, as if netting. It is also applied to usury, as a debt binding, restricting, &c. Hence, too, the notion of ruining, destroying, &c. Very much the same may be said of the Arabic حبل خبل. See the dictionaries.

Ib. נִזְכְּרָהּ. My days are become few. It has been usual to suppose that זֶכֶד here, was used for דָּעָה: put out, extinguished, as of a candle or lamp. It being usual to write ז in the Chaldee, where we have ז in the Hebrew. To extinguish, or put out, any one's days, like a candle, &c., seems to me to be hardly Hebrew or Oriental phraseology; at least I cannot call any such to mind, as occurring in any Oriental author whatsoever. Kromayer, and after him Schultens, have shewn that the Arabic زَعَكَ affords a different sense, viz. Brevis, sordidusque (i. e. زَعَكَوَكُ الْقَصِيرِ اللَّئِيمِ). We ought here to add, the cognate, زَعَجَ, contrivit, compressit; زَعَتَ, acriter egit jumentum: and, in another form, viz. أَنْزَعَتَ, equivalent to our Niphāl in בִּזְעָבִי, citò incesserunt jumenta, &c.: i. e. My days have been swiftly driven. So ch. vii. 6, which see. Ib. הַקְּרִים — נְאֻלִּים generally signifies the large subterraneous chamber, or tomb, in which certain niches were hewn out to receive the separate coffins: these were termed בֵּרֵי בִּרְכֵי, or קְרִים. See Isa. xiv. 11, 15, 18; and Lowth on the place. These niches were, probably, the הַקְּרִים of Job.

2. אֶסֶלֶא. Surely, &c. See Nold. Concord. ed. 1734, p. 70. הַהֲלִים. This word has usually been supposed to derive its signification from הֲרִל, ludificavit, &c. But, in that case, I cannot see how the term עֲיִי, occurring at the end of the verse, can be connected with it. In the Arabic, we have هَتَرَ, continùe pluviam emisit cœlum: manârunt ex oculis lacrymæ. To this we have the cognate هَتَنَ, and هَطَلَ, which have the same, or very nearly the same, sense. It is remarkable enough that Schultens, Eichorn, Gesenius, Ewald, &c., should have given us so many conjectural etymologies of this word without perceiving this, which exhibits the very word הֲרִל, and, as it appears to me, the precise sense required in this place. A question may now arise, as to the sense of this word occurring in other parts of the Bible. It will be seen (ch. vi. 16; xvii. 8) that, from clouds promising, but not affording, rain, several Oriental proverbial sayings have originated. So Jude: Νεφέλαι ἀνώγειν ὑπὸ ἀέμου παροξυσμέναι. This verb too, as may be seen in the lexicons, signifies to give rain occasionally, and at intermitted periods. Hence the notion of inconstancy, and deceptiveness, might have arisen. Hence, too, certain derivatives from this root are taken to signify, a fox (هَيْطَلٌ), a wolf (هَيْطَلٌ, or stupid robber), &c. If this may be relied on, Job here uses this word in its primary sense; in other places it occurs in its secondary sense only.

Ib. וַבְּהִמְרוֹתָם. And in their embitterings. The root is here evidently מְרָה. Exacerbat, irritavit. Syr. عَدَبَ. Amarum fecit. Arab. مَرَى. Mulsit in pluviam dissolvit ventus nubem, &c. I take the word to be of the form הַמְצִיחַ, for הַמְצִיחָה, as a verbal noun of the Niphal species. There is, however, a cognate root in the Arabic هَمَرَ, impulit, effudit aquam, lacrymas, &c.; from which we have الْتِمَار. The flowing of water, &c., precisely answering to the Niphal of the Hebrew. Some take the form to be that of Hiphkil, with an euphonic dagesh. The exegetic sense will be much the same in either case.

3. לָיְיָהּ נָפַד. Lay down now, supp. הַיָּד, thy hand. So Abraham, Gen. xxiv. 2; xlvii. 29; לָיְיָהּ נָפַד וְנָוּ. Lay down now thine hand, &c., i. e. for the purpose of binding thee to the observance of certain conditions, as the context, in each of these places, evidently requires. This, therefore, clearly directs us to a custom then in use. Comp. Prov. vi. 1; xi. 15; xvii. 18; xxii. 26. Ib. נָפַדְנִי. Pledge me. The root عرب, from which we have عربان, a pledge, &c., has so many significations attached to it, that it seems almost hopeless to extract any thing specific and satisfactory from them. Of this latter word, however, the author of the Kāmoos gives this account: العربان والعربون بضمهما والعربون محركة وتبدل عينهن همزة ما عقد يد المبتاع والعربون محركة وتبدل عينهن همزة ما عقد يد المبتاع, i. e. נָפַדְנִי, and נָפַדְנִי, each with the vowel u; also נָפַדְנִי: the ר having a vowel: their ע is also changed into ס occasionally: that by which the price of any thing sold is confirmed; i. e. the pledge or earnest that it shall be carried into effect. Hence the ἀρραβών, and arrhabo, of the Greeks and Latins. Ib. לְיָדִי וְיָדְךָ. Shall strike to, or on, my hand, i. e. in order to confirm thereby such compact. The custom of striking hands is just as much a mark in the East that a bargain is concluded, as it is with us in the West; and in law it is there quite necessary. So the author of the Kāmoos, under صَقَفَ لَهُ الْبَيْعَ . . . وَصَقَفَ يَدَهُ:—صَقَفَ بِالْبَيْعَةِ وَعَلَى يَدِهِ . . . صَرَبَ يَدَهُ عَلَيَّ يَدِهِ وذلك عند وجوب البيع: i. e. He struck, or clapped, to him a sale . . . and he struck his hand in a sale, or on his hand . . . he struck his own hand upon the hand of HIM; and this (is) among the necessary (transactions) of sale. Particulars on this subject may be seen in the Hidāya by Mr. Hamilton, in the chapter on Buying and Selling. Job seems to say to Eliphaz, give me thy pledge: who comes forward to strike this bargain, i. e. of thy sincerity to me! This appeal is made: but, as no regard seems to have been paid to it, Job directs his complaint to God, and laments more strongly the character of his friends.

4. אָפְּנָהּ, &c. Hast laid up, hidden. This root, in the Arabic, affords the notions of folding up, covering over, &c.; hence, a sort of pocket, house, nest, &c. The sense here seems to be, that God had so covered over, concealed, or veiled over, the hearts of Job's friends, that wisdom was with them a thing entirely unknown; or, rather, that God considered them as so circumstanced, and therefore He raised them not. הַרְוֹמִים, for הַרְוֹמִים אֹרְחִים. Hence perhaps the notion of uncircumcision of heart and ear.

5. יָצַד. He points out, i. e. some one does, or they do, impersonally, friends for a portion, or spoil; alluding to the perfidy of his friends, who had just refused to renew their assurances of constancy with him: which was just the same thing as to leave him exposed to the attacks of robbers. Ib. וַיַּיְבִי. And the eyes, &c. That is, retributive justice, so visible in God's moral government of the world, will destroy such. Comp. Prov. xxx. 17.

6. וְהַתְּפֵחָה. And an abomination. Roots cognate with this are numerous: as, تَبَّ, Danno affectus fuit. Syr. ܬܒܐ, ܬܒܐ. Vomit, sordes. Chald. ܬܒܐ. Expuere. Arab. تَابَ. Turbatus, præstrictus fuit. Æth. ተገሏ: Sput, expuit. Arab. تَغَّى. Iratus fuit; تَغَّيَّ, repudiavit, detestatus fuit; تَغَّيَّ, paucus, vilis fuit. From which, perhaps, it may be allowable to infer that the celebrated תּוֹפֶת, Tophet, of the Hebrews took its name, designating it as an utter abomination. 2 Kings, xxiii. 10, &c. The Persic تافتى, turning, of Gesenius, is quite as improbable an etymology of this word, as the Rabbinic תּוֹפֶת, beating drums. Ib. לְפָנֵיהֶם. Lit. In facies; against, or to the faces: contr. for לְפָנֵיהֶם. Before their faces. Comp. Jer. vii. 24. Rosenmüller has, after Schultens, "abominatio despuenda in faciem." The passages he adduces, however, viz. Numb. xii. 14; Deut. xxv. 9; have בְּפָנָיו, and בְּפָנָיו, constructions manifestly unlike this in Job; not to insist on the clumsiness of their application here.

7. וְהַתְּפֵחָה. The apocopated form for וְהַתְּפֵחָה. Root פָּהַ, cognate with Heb. פָּהַ. Hiph. הִפְּהַ. Cogn. נָכַח, contrivit. Syr. ܦܐܢ. Increpavit. Arab. كَبِيَ. Mærivit; كَبِيَ, imbecillus.

Chald. ܩܪܫܐ. Repressit. Aph. ܩܪܫܐ. Dolore affecit. Syr. ܩܪܫܐ. Exhalavit spiritum frigidum. Arab. كَهَّ. Decrepitus fuit; كَهِي, imbecillus fuit; redup. كَهَّكَّ, id. Heb. and Chald. פורה. Niph. פָּוַרָה. Austus. Syr. ܩܪܫܐ, id. Arab. كَوِي. Cutem ussit; redup. كَوِي, quassato corpore incessit; كَا, root كَيَا, formidavit. Hence, to waste, wear away, become languid, as of a lamp from long burning, the eye from age, or vexation: pale, as of the skin from weakness, &c. The Concordance will supply the places. Comp. Ps. vi. 8; xxxi. 10; with this place.

Ib. וַיִּצְרֵי. And my members: lit. forms, figures, formations, which, as the eye is mentioned in the preceding context, ought apparently to be referred to the members of the body. Ib. פָּצַל. Like a shadow, i. e. unstable, fleeting; so the term is frequently used by the Greeks and Latins, as well as by the Orientals. We have in the Makāmāt of Hariri, by M. de Sacy, p. ۲۱۷, a passage which may be adduced as an additional illustration to that given by Schultens on this place. On the terms استثقال ظله, the growing heavy of his shadow, we have in the scholia the following remarks, الظل بوصف بالتثقل بمبالغة في ثقل صاحبه يقال للمستثقل ذلك علي ثقيل اي احث ما يوجد منك وهو الظل السريع الانتقال, i. e. the shadow is described by weight, hyperbolically, with reference to the weight of its originator. It is said of a person who has grown heavy, thy shadow is heavy upon me; i. e. the lightest thing which is found coming from thee—which is the shadow swift in departure—is heavy upon me. By parity of reasoning, the shadow of an afflicted man must be taken to signify the lightness and emaciated state of the person from whom it is supposed to proceed; all of which tends to shew, that the person, not the thoughts, &c. of Job must be had in view here. See ch. viii. 9. The following verses to this effect are given in M. de Sacy's Scholia to Hariri, ۵۹۹ —

العيش نوم والمنية بقظه والمرء بينهما خيال ساري
فاقضوا مآربكم مجالا أنما اعماركم سقر من الاسفار

Life is a sleep which fate awakens;

Between which two, man is but a passing shadow.

Make ready your necessaries quickly therefore,

Since your life is but one of the ordinary journeys.

The Arabs likewise speak of the shadow of a cloud being deceptive, when it appears to promise rain, but gives none. So Hariri Mah. xxiii. as cited by Schultens, Notæ in Elnawabig, p. 114—

وانا اظلا سكايبها لم ينتفع منه صدا لجهامة الغرار

“Nam, quum umbrosa nubes ejus imminet, sitis inde non sedatur, quod nubes sit fallax.” Comp. ib. p. 14, and I Chron. xxix. 15.

8. וְשָׂמַי. Just as the people generally (i.e. the profane) exultingly cite Job as a parable; so shall the just, on the other hand, be astounded at this, and (Ib.) the pure of hands be excited against the profane. Comp. 2 Cor. vii. 11; Ps. lxxiii; Jer. xii.

10. וְאַלֶּם כָּלֶם. Lit. But, as to them all. It is a remarkable feature, common to both the Hebrew and Arabic, that the affix of the third pers. is universally found with nouns which with us would be in the vocative case, and which should be construed as if it were of the second. Dathe, therefore, evinces a disregard of the Hebrew idiom, when he proposes here to read, with some MSS. וְאַלֶּם כָּלֶם; although I am very willing to allow that this would, according to our idiom, give the sense of the passage; which is this, But, O all of you, repent, &c. The exegetical sense is sufficiently obvious: it is an expostulation with Job's friends on their blindness and obduracy. Ib. תָּשׁוּבוּ וּבֹאֵי. Return, repent ye, and come in. The precise signification of בֹּאֵי is, coming in; as of סוּצֵי is, going out. Here I take coming in to signify, coming to a sincere reception of the truth among the family of the faithful. So a proselyte is termed דַּחֲבִיל, a comer in; and infidels, apostates, &c. to be “in outer darkness,” “without,” &c. See Deut. xxiii. 2-9. With this word is אָרְרָה, perfectly synonymous; which will throw some light on Isa. xxi. 12, שָׁבִי אֶרְרִי, which I take to signify, repent, come in; i.e. It is a call to the inhabitants of the south country, to avoid by timely repentance the dreadful calamities which were hanging over them. The same is probably the sentiment of Job here: the passage in Isaiah was perhaps copied from this. See Prov. i. 23. Ib. וְלֹא אֶשְׂפָּז. For I find not. This Job assigns as his reason for giving them the advice just noticed.

11. זַמְרֹתַי. My vain thoughts, purposes. This word is generally used in a bad sense. It is used in the Chaldee and Arabic to signify, a bridle, ring, or halter, used with camels; as זָמָה, frænum, capistrum, &c. Arab. زَمَّ, ligavit habenâ jumentum, &c. زَمَمٌ, object, design, i. q. قَصْدٌ. زَمَامٌ, funiculus annexus annulo, qui per cameli nasam trajicitur. Hence, perhaps, prejudiced notions, plans, projects, by which a man is led along as a brute is by the bridle, בְּתִקְרֵי, are broken as ropes are. See Ps. ii. 3. Ib. בְּתִקְרֵי. The possessions, here, prepossessions, of my heart, have all given way; for with me the allurements both of youth and wealth have departed.

12. אִזְרֵי קָרוֹב, supp. נְשִׁיבוּ. They lay down, represent, i. e. They lay down night for day—error for truth—representing light theoretically, at the same time, as nearer, more eligible, than darkness. He seems to say, The doctrines of these men are most deceptive; for what they teach leads to error, not to truth. In fact, they put the night in the place of the day; still telling us that light is nearer, is more simple and easy of apprehension, than darkness. That is, they profess one thing, but in fact teach another: which a man need live only one day to see abundantly exemplified in the world. No men, according to my experience, talk so much about enlightened views, times, &c. as the propagators of error and of gross darkness. Comp. Isa. v. 20.

13. רִפְּזֵי. Cogn. רבט, רבץ, and רבץ: Arab. رِبَاضٌ, رِبْدَةٌ, and رَفَدٌ, suffulcivit, sustentavit, &c.; I have constructed, or would construct, my couch.

14. לְשִׁחָתָהּ, &c. To corruption have I called or cried, giving the name, My father, &c. Not unlike the passage in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet. "O here set up my everlasting rest, with worms that are my chambermaids;" or the speech of Constance in King John, "Aud ring these fingers with thy household worms, and be a carrion monster like thyself."

15. תִּקְוָתִי. My hope or expectation, must here refer to earthly hope, &c. necessarily.

16. בְּדֵי. Clothes or linen, of the grave (hence lies, i. e. things cloaked over. Comp. בגד, garment—perfidy). As the antecedent referred to seems to be יַבְדֵּי, my bed, in vr. 13, this word (בְּדֵי) ought, perhaps, to be referred to it. It has been usually taken to signify bars, as used for fastening large folding-doors; but I do not see how such sense can obtain here, as it does nor appear that any such things were ever used in sepulchres. That linen used in garments is so called, is evident from Ezek. ix. 2, 3, &c.; as it also is, that the Egyptians buried their dead in linen. See also John, xi. 44, 45. I think, therefore, that such linen dress is had in view in this place. It seems to have been customary in the East, from a very high antiquity, to bury their great men with much pomp, laying them on a rich couch, and interring much plate and other valuables with them. See my Translation of the Travels of Ibn Batuta, p. 220, with the note; where this traveller tells us of a Chinese Emperor so interred. Strabo (lib. xv.) moreover tells us, that when Aristobulus entered the tomb of Cyrus in Persia, he saw a golden couch, a table with drinking-cups, a golden bowl, and much elegant clothing adorned with gems. His words are: “Ἰδεῖν ὅτι κλίνην τε χρυσοῦν, καὶ τράπεζαν σὺν ἐκπύμασι, καὶ πύελον χρυσοῦν, καὶ ἐσθῆτα πολλὰν, κόσμον τε λιδοκόλλητον.” So Hom. Odyss. b. 97: εἰσόκε φᾶρος ἐκπέλωσω . . . λαέεργη ἤρωι ταφῆιον—“Donec vestem perfecero—Laerti heroi sepulchralem.” Some take בְּרֵי here to mean solitudes, i.e. of the grave, because בָּרַד is used to signify alone. But this phraseology in unknown to the Bible.

Ib. נָחַתָּ, I take to be the third pers. pret. masc. kal, of the root נָחַת. Lit. It descends, i.e. taking as a whole the things just mentioned. Schnurrer prefers נָחַתָּ, i.e. first pers. plur. kal, agreeing with the LXX. καταβησόμεθα. Others take נָחַת, rest, for the root, and נָחַתָּ for the third pers. fem. pret. kal. It resteth, or shall rest,—in each case the exegetical sense remaining nearly the same.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1. בְּלָדָד. Bildad. On this person, see the Introduction.

2. עַד-אֲפָרָה. To what extent, i.e. either as to time or space is it, that you would fix the limits of speech. Much has been said on the word אֲפָרָה here. I think, with Rosenmüller, that it exhibits the Chaldaic form, as in אֲפָרָה, for אֲפָרָה, Dan. iv. 9; and אֲפָרָה, for אֲפָרָה, Ezra, iv. 13, 20, i.e. by inserting a א, instead of the dagesh of the Hebrews. The form of construction (אֲפָרָה) used here before the particle ל, is nothing more than what we often have in the Heb. as in בּוֹ הוֹסִי, Ps. ii. 12; Nahum, i. 7, &c. Comp. ch. xvi. 3. This place may, therefore, be cited as an instance of Chaldaising in this Book. From the circumstance of the following verbs being in the plural number, we may suppose that some difference of opinion prevailed, on the subject in dispute, among the friends of Job.

3. כְּבַהֲמָהּ. Lit. Like the beast, i. e. infuriated. The two following words ought, I think, to be read as if in a parenthesis, and בָּרַח, &c. construed as if following כְּבַהֲמָהּ immediately, as I have given it in the text; otherwise the passage will be unmeaning and unconnected. This sort of parenthesis has already been noticed more than once. It seems almost universally to have escaped the observation of the translators and commentators. The verse, in this view, ought to end at the word נִשְׁעַן; which will now apply, not to Job, but his friends; and is perhaps proverbial. See Isa. li. 20. I take נִשְׁעַן to be the Niph'al of שָׁעַן: it being very common to conjugate verbs terminating in ש, as if in ה, Gram. Art. 202, 4, 5.

4. בָּרַח נִשְׁעַן. Lit. Tearing his person, or self. Rosenm. "O discerpens animam suam," &c. Auth. Vers. "He teareth himself," &c. This Rosenm. thinks refers to ch. xiii. 14; xvi. 9. But the first of these is manifestly metaphorical, and can in no way relate to anger as entertained by Job, but rather to the perilous circumstances in which he had been placed. The second passage (ch. xvi. 9) refers to a subject perfectly at variance with that had in view here: which must suffice on these passages. Again, there appears no reason for supposing that, although Job was grievously afflicted, he was ever outrageously angry. Not a vestige of this sort can be found in the whole book: the whole is, therefore, a mistake. On disjointed or parenthetical passages such as this, see Gram. Art. 241, 18. It should seem, from נִשְׁעַן above, that unclean beasts were had in view by the speaker; and, if the הַאֵשׁ of Isa. li. 20 was the oryx, as some think, it certainly was a very furious animal, and most likely an unclean one, although the הַאֵשׁ of Deut. xiv. 5 was not. The הַחַיָּה הַנִּהְיָה נִשְׁעַרְתָּ אֶל־הַיָּד of Isaiah well comports with the terms of Bildad here. I have no doubt, therefore, the whole of this was intended to apply to Job's friends, tacitly insinuating that Job thus intended to designate them. Diodorus Siculus describes ὁ σαρκολόγος ταύρος, the carnivorous bull, as the most fierce and indomitable of all animals; and which, when taken in a net, suffocates himself with rage, Lib. iii. xxxiv.

1b. הֲלִיבְעַנְךָ. Whether on thy account, for thy sake, &c. It seems evident, I think, from what follows, that Bildad thought Job made infinitely too much of himself and his cause; and that, if what he wished should come to pass, then must the whole course of nature be altered. His arguments shaped to this effect, might be read as pressed in a string of interrogatories, preceded by this word throughout, for the purpose of giving them the greater force. I have, however, retained the usual form. Ib. תִּפְּזָב. Be deserted, &c. St. Paul expresses a similar sentiment in 1 Cor. v. 10. This, with the following וְיִצְּתָהּ צֵר, and a rock be removed, &c. seems to be proverbial. Comp. ch. xiv. 18. We have in the Life of Timour by Ibn Arabshah, p. ۳۴۳, edit. Calc. יִסְהַל עִנְדָּהָּ قָطַעַ الْجِبَالِ وَتَعَدُّ الْقُبُورِ وَتَعْدُبُ عِنْدَ أَدْنَاهَا شُرْبُ الْبُحُورِ, i.e. the cutting through of mountains, and removal of rocks, would be easy with respect to them (i.e. the difficulties mentioned just before), and, as to the meanest of them, the drinking up of the seas would be sweet. See also Lev. xxvi. 43; Isa. vi. 12; vii. 16, &c. Schultens and Dr. Hunt have also illustrated this place from the Arabic. See Rosem. in loc.

5. יִדָּעָה. Fail, or become extinguished. Ib. תִּשְׂבֵּיב. Flame. Arab. شَبَّ, accendit; شَيْبَبٌ, ardor, flamma.

6. הָתִשָּׁף. Hath grown, or shall grow, dark. Syr. سَفَع, vesperans. Arab. حَشَك, copiosus pluit cælum. Hence, I think, the application of this word to darkness, &c.: not from حَسَك, as Schultens thinks; which, in fact, has not the least connexion with that notion.

7. יִצְּרָה. They shall be confined, &c. The root here is יִצַּר, of which יִצְּרָה is the pres. kal; as יִצְּבֵהוּ for יִצְּבֵהוּ. See Paradig. The roots, צָרַר, צָרַר, צָרַר, צָרַר, צָרַר, צָרַר, צָרַר, Syr. ܘܨܪ, Æth. ጸደረ: are manifestly cognate; all partaking more or less of the idea of binding up, thence forming, fashioning; oppressing, injuring, afflicting, putting into narrow or confined circumstances; opposed to רָחַב, Arab. وَسَع, ישע. Schultens, on the passage, will give Arabic examples of the use of such terms as straitening the steps, &c. Ib. יִצְּרָה. Steps, which, in context such as this, is best rendered by strides. To contract or extend the steps is taken in the Arabic to signify, diminishing, or extending, the good fortune, respectively, of any one. See Schultens on this place.

8. בִּיִּשְׁלַח. For he shall be sent, driven, or cast. The insertion of בִּי here, seems to me to intimate a change in the direction of the argument, and to refer back to vr. 3, in which we have mention of an enraged beast; and, in this view, the passage will greatly resemble Isa. li. 20, just referred to, where the Jews are compared to a סִנְיָ, oryx, caught in a net. And so Job's argument, as taken by Bildad, is now directed against the patriarch himself to shew that he was wrong, not his friends. In this view of the case, Bildad evinces considerable dexterity in his reply, and as great a want of good feeling as could have been expected.

9. יִלְחֶזְקוּ. Shall seize, &c. Allusion is made here to what was mentioned at vr. 4, and the whole apparently turned upon Job. עֲנִי. The noose. The roots סָמַם, and סָמַם, are cognate, and signify obturavit, obduxit, &c., and collegit, contraxit, &c. סָמַם, infortunium: סָמַם, vehemens calamitas: both growing out of the notion of stricture, restriction, or the like. עֲנִי too in the Chaldee, has the same signification, as arctavit, cogit, strinxit. Our עֲנִי, therefore, directs us here to the noose or hnot of the gin or snare.

The imagery here used is very common among the Arabs, insomuch that the snare is proverbial with them. The origin of this is commonly ascribed to Tarafa, the author of one of the seven celebrated Moallakat poems; but there can be no doubt it was in use long before his times. The sentiment of Tarafa alluded to is this: Reiske's Tarafa, Lugd. Batav. 1742, Prologus, p. xlii:—

قد ذهب الصياد عنك فابشري * * * *

ورفع الفخ (הֶפֶךְ) فما تحذري لا بد من اخذك يوماً فاصبري

“Nunc abiit a te venator: ergo latere. Sublatus est funis: quare quod timeas nihil est.

Fieri non potest tamen quin aliquando capiaris, ergo patienter modo fatum expecta.” Comp. Ps. xlix. 6; cxxiv. 7; Eccl. ix. 12.

Frequent allusions seem to be made to this passage of Job. See the Concordances, under כָּבֵד, and Snare. According to M. de Sacy's Commentary on Hariri, however (p. 318), the usage is Persian or barbarous, which is undoubtedly wrong, and perhaps one of the editor's own notes.

10. עֲבֹתָ. Is hidden, laid up, &c. i.e. in the earth, so as not to appear on the surface. חַבְלֹ. His rope. The word is occasionally used in the Arabic for net, by a metonymy giving the material, instead of the thing made out of it. Ib. יְצַלִּי מִתִּיב. On the path, i. e. but concealed from the view by something spread over it for that purpose.

11. בְּלִהוֹת. Terrors. טַחַטַּח, terruit, consternavit. Arab. بَلَّاهَ, بَلَّاهَ, stupor cordis. Cogn. טַחַטַּח. בַּהֲלֵי. לִי. Lit. And they shall disperse him. As the verb signifies dispersing, dissipating, when applied to armies, &c.; so, when applied to one, should mean, dissipating, confounding, or confusing; and so in the Arabic, تَغَاوَصَ, is, confusum, ordine ductuque carens negotium, &c. Ib. לְרַגְלָיו. At his feet, i. e. close to him, or, as we say, at hand. Comp. 1 Sam. xxv. 42; Hab. iii. 5; Job, xxx. 15.

12. יָהִי. The apocopation of this verb here is probably intended to mark an inference, see Gram. Art. 233, 3. I have accordingly expressed this by so in the text. רָעַב אֱנוֹ (רָעַב יָהִי לְרָעַב אֱנוֹ, I read). Hunger shall be his strength, i. q. יָהִי לְרָעַב אֱנוֹ, his strength shall become hunger, i. e. faintness.

13. בְּגָדֵי עוֹרוֹ. The clothings of his skin. I have already taken the term בָּד, ch. xvii. 16, to signify clothing, coating, &c., and have there referred to the Egyptian practice of burying their dead in linen. It is not improbable that the word is Egyptian. We find it used in Exod. xxviii. 42, &c., where the cloth so used could scarcely have been other than Egyptian. Ib. יֹאכַל. He shall eat, or devour. This marks a direct recurrence to נֶפְשׁוֹ בְּטָרֶף in vr. 4, see ch. xiii. 14; and suggests a full explanation of the things alluded to: the only difference is, what was there supposed to refer to Job's friends, is here very artfully turned against Job himself. בְּגָדֵי עוֹרוֹ here, therefore, is equivalent to נֶפְשׁוֹ there, in the main. Ib. בְּדָוִו. His members. See the dictionaries under בָּד. Ib. בְּכוֹר מָוֶת. The first-born of death, which I take to be a periphrasis for the worm, see ch. xxiv. 20; and, as worms are very soon generated in a dead body, I take the term first-born here to allude to that circumstance. The second member carries the case to the state after death, which is natural enough.

14. מִבְּטָחוֹ. The object of his confidence, his idol be that what it may. Comp. Ps. xl. 5; lxxv. 6; lxxi. 5, &c. Ib. לְמֶלֶךְ בְּלִהוֹת. To the king of terrors. A periphrasis for death. Pluto or some such being, according to Rosenmüller. The Hebrews however never speak of an "orci princeps," in the heathenish sense of those terms, as far as I have been able to discover. Gesenius makes פְּלֹהוֹת nom. to the verb; and ל, in אֲלֵכֶם, i. q. כֶּ, which is fanciful.

15. תִּשְׁבֹּן. It resideth, i. e. now, מְבַטְחוֹ, his object of faith, i. e. his idol. And, as inanimate things are generally taken as feminines, the verb is here given in that gender. Gram. Art. 216, 7. וְתִצְעֶינָהּ. Lit. And shall cause him to march; which—if taken in a military sense as the term seems to imply, the warfare of such an one (ch. vii. 1) being now supposed to be finished—will probably imply dismissal to his sovereign, in order to the receiving of his reward. And, as idolatry may be considered as holding covenant with death, this is put as the origin of the evils here meant. Ib. מִבְּלֵילוֹ. Lit. From its not (being) his, i. e. which is no longer to be reckoned upon as his property, the period of its destruction being at hand. In this view, כְּבִטְחָהּ will be the nominative to both the verbs here. Ib. יִזְרָה. Pub. for יִזְרָה; the ז being incapable of receiving dagesh: root זרָה, sparsit. Ib. נִצְרִית. Sulphur. Allusion is here apparently made to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrhah by lightning; which is said to bring with it the smell of brimstone. So Pliny, Hist. Nat. lib. xxxv. c. 15: “Fulgura quoque sulphuris odorem habent, ac lux ipsa eorum sulphurea est.” And Persius, Sat. ii. 24, 25: “Jovenne ignovisse putas, quia, cum tonat, ocyus ilex sulfure discutitur sacro, quam tuque, domusque?” Rosenm. &c.

16. יִבְשֶׁוּ, for יִבְשֻׁוּ. Become dry. Ib. יִפֹּל. Be cropped off. Niph. of מָלַל, in the sense of מוּל, with which it is cognate. There is, therefore, no necessity for recurring with Rosenmüller to a Chaldee form.

17. עַל־פְּנֵיהֶינָּהּ. Lit. On the face of (parts) without; i. e. however far his fame may have reached, his name have been known, this must come to an end.

18. יִהְדָּפוּ. They drive him, i. e. men generally, impers. Ib. From light, &c. i. e. from every thing felicitous; which is often termed light in Scripture: hence the “outer darkness” of the New Testament. Ib. וּמִתְּבָרָל. And from the world, i. e. from human society, i. e. the world, in the modern English and French acceptation. יִבְדָּדוּ. They cause him to wander, as it was the case with Cain: to which this is probably an allusion. See Gen. iv. 14; and ch. vii. 4.

19. לֹא יִנּוּ לוֹ וְלֹא יִבְרָךְ. Lit. No posterity to him, and no descendant. The etymology of יִנּוּ has usually been traced to the Syriac or Arabic term, نون, or نون, signifying a fish; and, because fishes are said to be numerous, it has been concluded that this word must signify a numerous posterity. I very much dislike this sort of deduction; because, from its vagueness, any thing may be extracted from any premises. I would prefer the following in this instance, viz.: we have in the Syriac ܒܝܢܢܐ, and ܒܝܢܢܐ, signifying funiculus cannabinus, linea piscatoria, semen quoddam esui aptum. We have here, therefore, the notion of length, drawing out, &c. in the first and second of these; and in the third, of produce or increase.

Let us now see the cognate roots. In ܐܢ, we have effudit, fundit. ܐܢܝ, i. q. ܚܢܐ, ad extremum perfectionis terminum pervenit; and iv. conj. procrastinavit, distulit: whence, ܐܢܝ, tempus, ܐܢܐ, mora, from ܐܢ, tempus. Cogn. ܐܢܝ, torpuit, languit; and conj. vi. morum nexuit. From all which lengthening out, extending, in one respect or other, seems to be meant. Now, in Ps. lxxii. 17, we have a verb, manifestly cognate with these, used thus: יְהוָה יִשְׁמְרוּ לְעוֹלָם יְהוָה יִשְׁמְרוּ, Let his name remain for ever; before, or in the presence of, the sun let his name (יְהוָה) be drawn out, continued, perpetuated, i. e. so long as the sun shall endure, his name shall be continued. It has been usual to translate this passage by “sobolescet nomen ejus,” which appears to me great nonsense. I take יְהוָה, therefore, to signify, posterity, as drawn out and extending through a long period of time. Fish, too, may hence have been so termed, on account of their numerous progeny, but not the reverse.

ܢܚܕܐ. Descendant. This word, which is equally ill-accounted for in the lexicons, &c., I take to be very nearly synonymous with the last. Gesenius takes it to be allied to the Æthiopic ܢܚܕܐ: tribus: but this is certainly a derived sense. We have in the Syr. ܢܚܕܐ. Traxit, extendit, subduxit. In Heb. נָחַד. Dux. In Arab. نَحَدَ. Superavit. II. Ornavit, instruxit domum. Æthi. ܢܚܕܐ: Peregrè abiit: whence ܢܚܕܐ: via, iter, &c.; and hence ܢܚܕܐ: tribus, as a branch, or the like, of some parent stock. Hence too, perhaps, ܢܚܕܐ, and ܢܚܕܐ. Pastor, princeps pastorum, as the leader of the flock,—for shepherds lead their flocks in the East: not as one who marks his sheep by putting spots on them. I am induced to believe, therefore, that ܢܚܕܐ is here to be understood as signifying a descendant; lit. descent: an abstract being used here for a concrete noun. Ib. בְּעַמּוֹ. In, or among his people; i. e. shall not have the privilege of raising a family, and of perpetuating his name.

20. עַל-יְוִמוֹ. On his day, i. e. by a metonymy, the circumstances, events, of his day: the Arab. دَهْرٌ, بِوَم, and Pers. روز, and روزگار, being often used in this sense, as will be shewn at length elsewhere. תִּשְׁבִּי. Shall become confused, astonished. אַחֲרֵיָם. After-people, posterity, &c.; opposed here to קְדָמָיִם, former ones: and, as the reader is by the context here carried on into these after-times, those present to the real time of the narrative are termed קְדָמָיִם, because they may now be so considered. See Gram. Art. 231, 7, 12, &c. Ib. אֶחָזִי שְׂעִיר. Lit. Took, or have taken, horror or fright. שְׂעִיר signifies hair; and, as the letter s is often substituted for an aspirate, and vice versâ, as in super for superius, &c., the Heb. שְׂעִיר is easily converted into our hair. Fright is expressed, or believed to be expressed, by the hair standing erect: hence, perhaps, horrified is etymologically i. q. hairified. The hint I take from Gesenius. I do not however see any necessity for supposing that we have here an hypallage, viz. apprehendent horrorem, for horror eos corripiet, as Rosenmüller will have it. It seems to me quite as natural to say, that people take fear, or fright, as that fright takes them.

21. אֲנִי-אֶלֶּה. These only, i. e. these events, and no other, attend the dwellings of the evil. Ib. וְזֶה מְקוֹם. And this is the standing-place, state, portion of—. Ib. לֹא יָדַע. Not, him that knows not, but that recognises or acknowledges not God. The whole context here seems to say: Dissatisfied as thou art, Is it to be expected that, for the mere sake of satisfying thee and suiting thy notions, every wicked man is necessarily to be made an example, and the world accordingly stripped of the greatest part of its inhabitants? Besides, thou comparest us to the beasts, who very naturally run to such an excess of rage as finally to prey upon one another. Consider thy own case. Does not every subject thou touchest upon, virtually place thee in this predicament; and shew us that all thy arguing really bears upon thyself, and not upon us?—This, I think, gives point to the argument of Bildad; and, at the same time, both supplies a variety to the dispute, and affords an easy interpretation to the context. In no other sense, I must confess, can I see any point, or object, in the reasonings of Bildad.

CHAPTER XIX.

3. תִּהְיֶה לִי לְעִוְלָה. Ye treat me contemptuously. From the various ways in which this verb has been interpreted, it is quite certain that nothing better than conjecture has been employed upon it. From its situation it is obvious that something like hard, cruel, &c. treatment, must be meant. The best method, perhaps, of inquiring into its real force will be to examine the cognate roots, as the root itself is not found in the Hebrew. To begin then with הִסְתַּר. Abscidit, deliravit, it. vexavit, cruciavit; conj. iv. irrisit, maledixit. הִסְתַּר, obstupuit; הִסְתַּר, great admiration, astonishment; חִסְרָה, in familiari consuetudine iniquè et pravè se gessit; חִסְרָה, contempsit aliquem. כָּרָה. Fodit; vide חִפַּר, signifying both to dig and to put to shame: whence, perhaps, other verbs signifying digging, may also have the same secondary signification: just as we say, to “cut one to the heart,” &c.

Syr. حَفَا. Ægrè tulit. Arab. كَرِهَ. Aversatus, detestatus fuit; كَرِهَ, fodit; conj. iv. Sermo ad fallendum adornatus fuit; تَكْرَر, contempsit. From which it will appear, I think,—if any reliance is to be placed on the principle, that roots cognate in form are also cognate in sense,—that תִּהְיֶה לִי, here used must mean something very nearly allied to the sense given to it above. Rosenmüller thinks it is in the Hiphhil form. I see no strong reason for this, particularly as the י, proper for that species, is wanting, and the (-) under the preformative may stand there, on account of the slight aspirate (ה) following. But this is a question of no importance whatever here.

4. כִּי שָׂגַתְתִּי. My error; by a meton. the consequence of my error: i. e. if I have done wrong, then surely I myself shall be the sufferer, according to your own shewing.

5. אִם אֲשַׁמְנֶה. Lit. If indeed; i. e. Putting the case that ye really do this. וְתוֹכַחְתֶּם. And ye chide, reprove, implead, הִרְפָּתִי, my reproach, or state of misery, עָלַי, against me,—

6. דָּעַתְּ אֵלַי. Know therefore, viz. that what you heap on me as a reproach is really a visitation from God. On this force of the particle אֵלַי (or אֵלַי) see 2 Kings, x. 10; and Noldius, sub voce. Ib. תִּפְתָּחַנִי. Hath bent, or bowed me down.

Syr. مُذْمَلٌ. Fraus. Arab. عَاثَ, Act. عَوَّثَ. Avertit, divertit, &c. Ib. تَشْتَبِيهِ. His net. Syr. عَضَمٌ. Luquens. Arab.

مَصِيدٌ. Rete. I am inclined to think that Job here means, by this word, a sort of noose used by hunters, as well as by cavalry in the East, which they throw over the head of the person or thing pursued, and so bring it to the ground. This instrument is termed کمند, kamand in the Persian: as in this passage of Panduāma of Saadi:

كَرِيمًا بَبَخْشًا بَرَّ حَالٍ مَا كَدَّ هَسْتَيْمِمْ اَسِيرَ كَمَنْدٍ هَوَا.

Bountiful God, afford forgiveness to our state;

For we are bound in the (کمند) noose, snare, of lust.

In some of the MS. copies of the Shahi Namah we have a drawing of this instrument, and of its use.

Ib. חֲפָקָה. Hath fixed, or placed round about. Root חֲפָקָה.

Syr. نَقَف. Applicuit, propinquus fuit, cepit. Arab. نَقَفَ. Gravissimo ictu percussit. Cogn. נָקַב. Fixit, transfixit.

נָص. Perforavit. نَقَبَ. Perfodit, invasit eum, et affecit armuū. Comp. cogn. قَبَّ, Syr. عَصَا, Arab. قَبَا (قَبُو), قَاب (قوب), in all which the same leading notion is obvious. I think, therefore, that the pressing and galling character of the kamand or hunter's noose, is here alluded to; which well suits the idea of Job's being bent or bowed down, as in the text.

7. אֶשְׁרֵיךָ הַחַסִּים. I cry out (of) violence. The latter of these words would be termed by the Arab. grammarians a تَمْيِيزٌ, or specification. See Gram. Art. 219, note. Ib. מִשְׁפָּט. Decision: i. e. The dispute which had now for some time been carried on, remained still as far from determination as before: God having afforded no intimation of His will upon it.

9. כְּבוֹדִי. My glory. From this verse it should seem, Job had been vested with princely power: generally, however, wealth and power might be meant.

10. נִהְיֵינוּ. He destroyeth. Root נִהְיֵינוּ: applied mostly to the destruction of cities and houses, but here to the ruin of Job's person and property. Ib. נִיַּעַע, Hiph. of נָסַע. Causeth to pass away.

12. בָּאֵלֵינוּ. They come in, i. e. invade, in a military sense. נְדָדֵינוּ. Lit. His sections. Arab. جَدَّدَ. Succisa res; جَدَّدَ, secuit, &c. Ib. נִשְׂלַחֵנוּ. And they cast up, &c. Root, שָׁלַח. Arab. صَلَّتْ. Terra sicca, et præ ariditate durior; r. صَلَّرَ;

cogn. صَوْلَةٌ, صَوْلَةٌ, fortificatio; cogn. وَصَلَ, junxit rem rei; cogn. شِيلَ, شِيلَ, impetivit alterum: it. rem rei indidit, &c.; heap thing on thing, &c.; and hence, in a military sense, throw up an embankment. Job does not seem to allude here so much to his predatory neighbours the Chaldeans, &c., as to the general ills which had accumulated upon him.

13. סִחַרְזָרִי. Lit. Have only become estranged; i. e. have become that and nothing else: i. q. have wholly become so. Not unlike this is the line (51) in Tarafa, Reiske's edit.:

—تَحَامَتَنِي الْعَشِيرَةُ كُلُّهَا وَافْرَدَتْ اَفْرَادَ الْبَعِيرِ الْمَعْبُدِ.
... "Tota me familia aversata exterminavit, ceu camelum scabie detritum."

14. קָרְבָּי. My near of kin. Ps. xxxviii. 12; Numb. xxvii. 11.

15. בְּיָמֵי בֵּיתִי. The sojourners of my house. These were probably foreigners, who resided with Job for the purposes of service, trade, agriculture, or otherwise. Gen. xv. 13; Exod. ii. 22, &c. שִׁבְחָהּ. Have disregarded me; which is, perhaps, the precise meaning of this verb.

17. רִיחֵי זָרָה. My breath is strange, &c. Rosenmüller, "Fastidio est uxori meæ, nam זָרָה est אִזָּרָה. Arab. دَارَ. Fastidivit, abhorruit." Winer tells us, under זָרָה, that three Arabic roots seem here to have run into one; viz. ذَارَ, زور, and زَبَرَ. It would have been more philosophical to have considered these as cognate with the Hebrew, and thence to have endeavoured to elicit the exact signification of the Hebrew verb. The note of Rosenmüller is fanciful. To be strange or foreign was much the same thing as being worthless, among the Hebrews. Exod. xxx. 9; Lev. x. 1; Heb. xiii. 9; Jude, 7. יִבְטְנִי. Lit. My viscera. Arab. البَطْنُ, is according to Jauhari opposed to الظَّهْرُ, i. e. the interior, as opposed to the exterior. Hence, the belly, womb, &c., are termed بَطْنٌ, as forming the interior, or viscera, of man; and بَطَنَ, as a verb, interiorem partem ingressus est, &c., and — as the noun signifies belly — ventrem percussit; distentus fuit venter, &c. Not, as Winer has imagined, distentus as a primitive; much less, as Gesenius thinks, pr. vacuus, inanis, and thence membrum muliebre, or i. q. بَدَنٌ, corpus, maxime cularer; which is very fanciful. בְּיָמֵי בֵּיתִי. I take to be equivalent to Shakespeare's "Thy own bowels which do call thee sire, the mere effusion of thy proper loins," &c. As to בְּיָמֵי, about which much has been said by commentators, I think with Gesenius that it is either the plural of the noun הַזְּבָח , in the proper name Hannah; or else, is a sort of infinitive fem. sing. of the verb זָבַח : signifying, in the one case, entreaties; in the other, entreating, being favourable to, &c. See Ps. lxxvii. 10: either will suit the place. Of Job's wife, we know that she disapproved of his adherence to God under his calamities: see ch. ii. 9. And, of his children, that he exercised the most paternal solicitude for their spiritual welfare: see ch. i. 5. In the first case, רוּחַ זָרָה might mean nothing more,—whether we translate it as in the text, or, My spirit is strange, foreign, &c. to my wife,—than a reminiscence of her conduct and character. We have, in the Arabic, an usage not unlike this. Freytag's Hamasa, p. 448: $\text{فَكَيْفَ أَصْطَبَارِي يَا قَتَادَةَ بَعْدَ مَا شَمِمْتُ الَّذِي مِّنْ فِيكَ أَتَأْيِي صَمَاحِيَّةَ}$. How then could I bear, O Katāda, after what I have smelled from thy mouth coming into the aperture of my ear? Which the Scholiast makes equivalent to $\text{اَثَّرَتْ رِيحُهُ فِي الْاِذْنِ فَكَيْفَ يَكُونُ حَالُ الْاَنْفِ}$. His stink (with us, bad odour) was so bad that it affected the ear; what then must be the case with the nose? Comp. vr. 23; Gen. xxxiv. 30; Exod. v. 21, &c. In this point of view the passage will relate to the early times of Job's troubles, and before he had lost his wife and children, as apparently a considerable part of this context does: and, if so, the difficulties hitherto felt here are now all met. I take the וְ , in וְהַזְּבָחִי , to exhibit one of those instances of comparison of which Noldius has given us examples (sign. 61), Eccl. v. 6; Isa. liii. 7; Ezek. xxx. 12, &c.; and the sense of the passage to be, that, as Job considered, and made, it his duty to exercise a tender regard for the spiritual welfare of his children; so his wife made it hers to treat this and him as strange and foolish. This he dwells on now as very afflicting.

18. בְּסִיּוּלֵיהֶם . The vile, moreover. Auth. Vers. “Yea, young children.” In ch. xvi. 11, the word signifies the evil or vile beyond all doubt; and here the circumstance of their being said to arise and speak against Job, makes it extremely improbable that young, or sucking children, could be meant. So also the Syriac and Vulgate. Ib. הִקְרַמְתִּי . Lit. Let me arise, i. e. grant that it is so, then (וְ) they speak against me, i. e. in the gate, or public place of judgment.

19. $\text{אֲנֹכִי בְּיָסוּדִי}$. Men of my foundation, i. e. household, familiars. Rad. יסוד. See Lex. Simonis, ed. Winer. Ib.

וְנֹזָה, for וְנֹשֵׂר. See Gram. Art. 177, 3, note. The singular נֹזָה is here to be taken distributively, and hence the following verb is put in the plural number.

20. בְּעוֹרֵי. To my skin, &c.; i. e. My leanness is such that my bones appear adhering to my exterior flesh and skin. Aquila, ἐν δερματί μου, καὶ ἐν κρέατι μου ἐκολλήθη τὸ ἔσθον μου. So עוֹרָם עַל-עַצְמוֹתָם. Their skin adhered to their bone. Lam. iv. 8. See also ch. xxxiii. 21. Ib. וְנֹשָׂה מִלְּטָה. Lit. So I become escaping, am put into a situation to escape, with the skin of my teeth: the skin of the gums, as Rosenmüller and some others think. Jerome takes it to mean the lips; which, falling away with an emaciated body, appear only as a covering or skin to the teeth. I think Jerome is right. The formula was perhaps used as an adage, to denote a person's escaping from death with a body greatly reduced and emaciated; and, after all, difficult to keep alive.

21. גְּדוּלְתָהּ. The hand of God, &c. By this Job plainly declares, that his sufferings had been inflicted by Almighty God,—that they were not to be accounted for on any supposition of heinous transgression in himself; and, therefore, he calls for their friendly commiseration and support. Comp. I Sam. vi. 9, where a distinction is made between this sort of visitation, and what may be called a common occurrence: the one being paraphrased by גְּדוּלְתָהּ גְּדוּלְתָהּ, great evil, and the other termed מְצַרְתָּהּ. Ib. מְצַרְתָּהּ. Hath touched, affected. Arab. نَجَعَ, used of food of any sort, to take effect, fatten; of words signifying praise, blame, advice; to take effect. So in Heb. to touch so as to injure, to get diseased as by contact or contagion.

22. כְּמֹהֵל. Like a hero: usually, "like God." Which I think objectionable. 1. Because the verb רָדַף, pursue, in the sense of persecute, is nowhere applied to God. God, as in the preceding verse, may be said to afflict; but to persecute would be harsh, and certainly without a parallel. The term, however, is frequently applied to pursuit or persecution by man, as an enemy. 2. To be unsatisfied with one's flesh, would also be harsh and unusual, if applied to God. Not so to a persecuting or pursuing mighty man. 3. To say that God afflicts in one verse, and then persecutes in the next, would be incongruous; but, to apply this persecuting spirit to the miserable comforters of Job, would be in place. They had continued unjustly to accuse him: under this, and the afflictions sent by the Almighty, his flesh had been consumed, as noticed in vr. 20. He might well say now, therefore, under their continued upbraidings, that they were unsatisfied with his flesh, which hitherto they seemed to be devouring. In this case, indeed, the full reading ought to be לֶשׁ; but, as the pronunciation remains the same whether the ם be written or not, it is often omitted. Gram. Art. 72. I once thought, that לֶשׁ must have been the original reading here; which, without the euphonic vowel, would be read לֶשׁ, לֶשׁ, or לֶשׁ, and signify the hart, or gazelle (for in the Arab. أَيَّ and عَزَائِل, as one of the fables of Loeman informs us, signify the same thing). In this case to be satisfied with the flesh, would admit of a direct interpretation. I am unwilling, however, to adopt this now, especially as the sense just given appears to be more suitable to the place. See ch. xxxi. 31, particularly the adage cited from Meidani, and formerly applied to this place by A. Schultens.

23. וְיִיָּהוּן. O that, &c. From what occurs here, writing must have been in use in the country and times of Job, as noticed in the Introduction. It signifies nothing, whether we suppose this to have been hieroglyphic or syllabic; it is enough for our purpose if it was such as could be read at all. From the term וְיִיָּהוּן, one would suppose it rather to have been cut or graven in the leaves of such book, than to have only been a stain like our ink. And such is in use in a considerable part of the East to this day. I suspect, too, that this was the primitive sense of כתב; not only because it has הקה in the parallel place of the following member here, but also because it is still used in the Arabic to signify sewing or closing up, with a sort of needle or graving tool; and to designate things written, as things decided, or cut, as it were, in tables. We have, too, in the next verse, הנב, used in a similar sense, and synonymous with כתב in this. See also Isa. xxx. 8.

24. בְּעֵט. With a style. Lit. An impresser, digger, or digging instrument. Arab. عَاطَ (root عوط). Ingressa, demersa fuit, res in rem, &c. Comp. Jer. xvii. 1, &c.: here an iron tool, or instrument of this sort. Ib. וְעִפְּרָת. And lead, i. e. with lead to be infused, and so to fill up the cavities thus engraven, for the purpose of preserving (לְעַד for ever) the writing from erasure by decomposition; which might otherwise take place from the action of the air on the edges of stone exposed to it. According to Ibn Moeri, as cited by H. A. Schultens in his edition of some of the proverbs of Meidani, it was customary with the ancient Arabs of Yemen to inscribe their precepts of wisdom on the rocks, in order to preserve them. They had accordingly this adage: أَبْعَى مِنْ وَحْيِي فِي حَاجِرٍ. “Perennius quam quod lapidi inscribitur;” which they used when speaking of something which was most durable. In this sense Job evidently utters the sentiment now alluded to.

25. וְיָדַעְתִּי וְיָדַעְתִּי. But, as for me, I have known, and do still know (see Gram. Art. 237, note); i. e. It is in vain for you to persecute me, for I well know that my Avenger is living and vigorous. You, like any mighty man (פְּרוֹ אֵל), may drive and persecute me; still I am assured that my Avenger, or Avenging Redeemer, is living and mighty (אֵל, comp. 2 Sam. xxiii. 20). Ib. אֵלֵּי. My Avenger. The first usage of this word probably implied associating with, or accompanying another, as a part of his family: and thence intimated the avenging of any insult or injury which might be offered to it: which indeed stood foremost—as it now does—among the laws of hospitality prevailing in the East. Hence too, perhaps, the notion of being polluted, i. e. lying under the stigma attached to any injury so inflicted, and bound to avenge it, unless satisfaction were made in one way or other. Hence, also, it seems to have been taken to signify the next of kin, whose duty it was to redeem an estate that had been pledged; as also to marry the widow of a deceased near relative. Comp. the Arabic roots جال, جول, and جيل. A Redeemer, in this sense therefore is rather an Avenger or Restorer of lost rights, by interposing his prowess and right as the next of kin. The other word used in the Scriptures for Redeemer (פִּדְיָה) rather means One who pays down, either for another's person, or for some infraction of the law committed by him, the price of an equitable compensation. In both these senses, Christ was the Redeemer of man. Hence, persons termed גְּאֻלִּים, are those who have been saved by some singular interposition of God in their favour. See Isa. xxxv. 9, 10; li. 10; lxii. 12. In the two former, the terms פְּרוֹ אֵל, i. e. the ransomed of Jehovah, immediately follow; intimating that the persons so avenged should be ransomed with a price, not unlike that paid by Pharaoh and his host on the liberation from Egypt. See also Ps. cvii. 2. Job has respect in this place, therefore, to the character of God as his avenging Redeemer, who should clear him of all the things now laid to his charge. In other places, as we shall see hereafter, he speaks of Him as the Redeemer who should ransom him.

וְאֵלֵּי רֵיךְ. And in the latter age, or hereafter. I have taken this word as if used adverbially, supposing that the word דָּוָר, age, ought to be supplied by the ellipsis. Our Auth. Ver. supplies יוֹם, day here, which will give the same general exegetical sense. Some have thought that this word ought to be taken as if opposed to רִאשׁוֹן first, and therefore signifying last, as found in Isa. xliv. 6, “Thus saith Jehovah the king of Israel, even his AVENGER (בְּצִלָּו), Jehovah of Hosts, I am FIRST (רִאשׁוֹן), and I am LAST (אַחֲרָיִם), &c. I prefer the former method, however. See Ps. xlviii. 14; lxxviii. 4, 6; cii. 19. In all which cases, I think it is evident, that the times termed the last days by the apostles and prophets, are meant by Job.

Ib. עָלֵי-עָפָר יִקוּם. On the dust, i. e. the earth shall he arise, or take his station, or stand. Rosenmüller, and others, after M. de Sacy, make the Arabic phrase, قَامَ عَلَيَّ, to signify, he stood to, in the sense of assisting or avenging another. By adding the word עָפָר, then, we have shall assist or avenge the dust of the earth. And, as Job may be supposed to be dead when this shall come to pass, to avenge his dust! I must object to this, however on three grounds: first, to avenge the dust of any one, is phraseology neither Hebrew nor Arabic. It cannot, therefore, be admitted in this place. Secondly, the preposition עַל, used after יִקוּם, in the first species of conjⁿ, usually signifies against, never for; as the Concordances will abundantly prove. But if עַל were used for אֶל here, which is sometimes the case, then some such verb as יִלָּקֵט must be understood, as in 1 Sam. iii. 6. To this the usage of the verb in the Arabic very frequently agrees. Thirdly, this verb is occasionally construed with עַל, in the sense of on or upon, as 2 Kings, xiii. 21; 1 Chron. xxviii. 2; Neh. ix. 4. We are reduced, therefore, to the necessity of taking it here to signify, either shall arise against the dust of the earth, or on the dust of the earth. The first of these will be manifest nonsense. We are compelled, therefore, to take the second; and this our Auth. Ver. has very properly taken. In this book, however, as already remarked more than once, the term עָפָר, dust, is frequently used for אֶרֶץ. So Ibn Doreid, in the Arab. ed. Haitsma, p. 62, قَا حَرَمٌ عَرُّ التَّرْبِ, your glory is the dust of the earth; or, as the scholiast gives it, وَجَدَ الْاَرْضِ, the face, or surface, of the earth. We have, therefore, shall arise, &c. upon the earth. This, then, I take to be a recognition by Job of the promise first made to Eve, that one to be born of her seed should bruise the serpent's head, and so avenge her race for the injury done to it at the time of the first transgression: and of that made to Abraham, that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed; of which it is not possible Job could be ignorant. He looked forward, therefore, in the most perfect confidence to that latter age or day, and to that avenging Redeemer, who should then arise and establish his kingdom and power upon the earth. Besides, if there was a prediction made by Enoch, which was preserved to the apostolic times (Jude, vv. 14, 15), declaring that the Lord should come in the last days to judgment (v. 18), and to convince the ungodly of the hard speeches which they had uttered; it is scarcely possible this could have been unknown to Job; or, that on such an occasion as this, he should not have had recourse to it. I have no doubt, therefore, that the patriarch had his eye here on these things, and that they formed the grounds of this very remarkable declaration.

Ib. וַיִּרְאֵהוּ, &c. And (that) after, &c. Job had, vr. 20, alluded to the consumption of his flesh, and to the skin covering his teeth, in a similar sense. He now alludes, apparently, to the perforations or wounds visible in his skin, which, as David says, stunk, and were in a state of corruption. After, says he, they (impersonally) have thus pierced through and deformed my skin—after my reins shall moreover have melted away and completely failed within me—after all these things shall have come to pass, and I shall have lain long in the earth; still from, or out of, my flesh (וַיִּרְאֵהוּ) I shall see, look upon, God. He adds, in order as it should seem to cut off every possibility of mistake, וַיִּרְאֵהוּ לִי, lit. that—as for me, I shall see, &c. The Auth. Ver. has here, “whom I shall see,” &c.,—a manifest transgression against the Hebrew idiom, as the merest tyro must see. The term וַיִּרְאֵהוּ, I take here to signify, that, since, &c. See Nold. sub voce, sigg. 12, 13, who gives Neh. ii. 3, &c. by way of illustration; and, it is remarkable, this passage is parenthetical just as our passage here in Job is. וַיִּרְאֵהוּ, I take to be a nominative absolute, as the construction manifestly requires. See Gram. Art. 216, 12. The repetition of וַיִּרְאֵהוּ here, is given for the sake of emphasis, as apparently וַיִּרְאֵהוּ, and וַיִּרְאֵהוּ, are. All of which contains, as far as I can see, a most decided declaration on the part of the patriarch, of his belief in the resurrection of the dead. See also ch. iii. 20–26; vi. 8–12; vii. 13–16; ix. 21; xiii. 15; xvii. 13, with the notes; and xxi. 25; xxx. 23. We may now touch upon the different particulars in this verse. וְאַחֲרָיִם , and (that) after—i.e. supposing the construction $\text{וְאַחֲרָיִם יָדָעְתִּי לְנִי}$ to be continued—I know that after, &c. $\text{זָרָה בְּעֵינֵי זָרָה}$, they (impersonally, somebody, anybody, &c.) have pierced through thus or this, or, passively, it shall have been pierced, &c. The only place in which this verb occurs again in the Scripture is Isa. x. 34, where we have $\text{לִבְרֹזִים . . . בְּקִרְיָה}$, shall cut through with iron, i.e. with axes, or the like. In the Arabic it signifies, gravisimo ictu hasta, fuste, percussit caput: perfremit ita ut exideret cerebrum, i.e. in either case to destroy. זָרָה , thus, adverbially. So Gen. xlv. 17; Isa. xlv. 21, &c., or, referring it to בְּרוּרִי , this, i.e. skin. בְּבִשְׂרִי , è carne meâ. It is rarely indeed that הוֹרָה is found so construed; yet it is natural enough to suppose, that one may see out from a situation, or place. I do not see, therefore, how it can be otherwise taken here. Comp. הִשְׁתַּחֲוִי .

It is true, a sense very different from that now offered has often been deduced from this remarkable passage. Many learned men have seen any thing here but declarations respecting the Saviour and the resurrection of the dead; and, I will allow, had I been willing to persuade myself of the soundness of such interpretations, I could have easily acquiesced in their views. I feel bound however to follow the text, not to wrest and force it to follow me. I cannot for a moment suppose, as some have done, that it is the business of an interpreter first to determine, either that the ancients could or could not be informed at this period of doctrines such as these; or, that it is his duty to take any sense which may possibly be made out, but which shall in no respect savour of mystery. It is the duty of an interpreter, according to my notions, carefully to follow the easiest sense which his author will afford, provided it is in accordance with other and prior declarations of kindred writers; lightly to press the grapes, as Bacon words himself, and thus, by the slightest pressure, to extract the purest and finest wine. This, whatever I may have done, it has been, and ever will be, my intention to do.

28. בְּיָמֵי הַהֵוא . For ye say, i.e. ye shall say at that time—carrying the present on to a paulo-post future tense—ye shall say, when these things shall have come to pass, $\text{כִּי־יִדְרֹסוּ־לָנוּ}$, lit. how persecuted we him! i.e. how greatly persecuted! &c. Not unlike the self-condemnation expressed by Joseph's brethren, Gen. xlii. 21. Ib. 7. When. See Nold. sign. 58; Numb. x. 5; Deut. iv. 36, &c. שָׂרֵשׁ , root, principle, ground-work. בְּמִצְאֵי בִי, shall have been found in me. There is a various reading here, viz. בֵּן, in him; but which is less suitable to the context, on my view of its meaning. On this use of the preterite tense, see Gram. Art. 231, 12; Corollary, and 236, 5.

29. פִּי־חַמָּה אֲשֶׁר לְעֹבוֹת, ellip. for פִּי־חַמָּה עֲוֹנוֹת. For wrath, which is for transgressions, i. e. reserved for, dealt out to, or due to, transgressions; it being the business of a נֹסֵף, or avenger, on the part of God, to punish these: which is frequently done in this world by the instrumentality of the sword, famine, &c. Ib.: הִדְרַעְנֵן שְׂדֵיךָ, for: אֲשֶׁר דִּין. See Gram. Art. 177, 4. Know ye surely that there is a judgment. On the paragogic ׀ attached to the verb, see Gram. Art. 235. It may be remarked here, that it is a principle of the Scriptures to consider any thing done or determined among believers, as determined — subject of course to certain conditions — for ever. An illustration of this principle we find in “Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven,” Matt. xviii. 18, &c. So the children of God must be adopted on earth, justification must take place on earth, and so must sanctification. In like manner, judgment first takes place on earth according to the Scripture, by the visitations of God; which are all followed by the same taking place above finally. And so it is said, “Where the tree falleth, there it shall lie,” Eccl. xi. And here, there is a judgment beginning with the sword, and ending in everlasting confusion.

CHAPTER XX.

2. לָכֵן שִׁעֲפִי. Therefore my thoughts, &c. This particle (לָכֵן), which is for the most part inferential, would naturally come after the reasons given, and immediately before the conclusion; but here, as on some other occasions, an inversion takes place, and it precedes both. שִׁעֲפִי, my thoughts. The etymology of this word is by no means well ascertained by the lexicographers. It appears to me to be most naturally compared with the Arabic سَعَى, concessit . . . ulceribus in capite et facie laboravit puer: scissio contigit circa unguis cameli. سَعَى, fissio circum unguis, &c. سَعَى, ramus palmae, cum foliis. Hence, Heb. פַּעֲרָה, fissura in rupe, Judg. v. 8; ramus, Isa. xvii. 6. פָּעַר, ramos amputavit; and פָּעַר, or שְׁעָפִים, partes divisæ, opiniones. There is a remarkable passage, viz. 1 Kings, xviii. 21, in which this word occurs, and which, I think, has been misunderstood. It stands thus: עֲדֹמְרֵי אֶתֶם פִּצְחִים עַל־יְשֵׁתַי הַשְּׁעָפִים, which may, perhaps, be thus translated: How long will ye be leaping over the two branches, or fissures? The passage seems to me proverbial, and to have been used much as ours is, when we say that a man has two strings to his bow, or has too many irons in the fire. If, however, the prophet had intended to say, “between two opinions,” as our version has it, the text would most naturally have given, עַל־יְשֵׁתַי הַצֵּד, &c. not בִּין־יְשֵׁתַי הַצֵּד, &c. In Exod. xii. 13, &c. where leaping, or hopping, over, is intended, we have בָּסַח עַל, just as it is here. The word (שְׁעָפִים) seems to imply sudden and unsteady opinions, as branches suddenly shooting out, &c. Ib. חֲדָשִׁי בִי. My haste (is) within me, i. e. I am thus in haste to answer.

3. אֶשְׁפָּק. I am hearing, or in the hearing of. Ib. רוּחַ. Spirit, i. e. feeling, disposition, &c. מְבִיָּרָה, where מֵן is equivalent to the Latin genitive case, Gram. Art. 224, 11, as expressed in the translation.

4. הַזֹּאת. Whether this, &c.? i. e. with which the next verse, begins. Ib. מְבִיָּרָה. Lit. à sæculo: from ancient time. It is best explained here by the following מְבִיָּרָה שֵׁם אָדָם, since the placing, &c., which is a manifest allusion to the creation of man, as recorded in the Book of Genesis, ch. ii. 8. וַיִּשֶׂם אֱלֹהִים אֶת־הָאָדָם, are the words.

5. מְבִיָּרָה. Lit. à propè, from near time, &c. So the Arabic مَبْدَأٌ قَرِيبٌ, propè, proximè, &c. Castell: which I take to signify, of quick or sudden growth, and hence, naturally, of short duration. “Quod brevis est,” says Rosenmüller, by which he means, of short duration. I think it is equivalent here to עֲדֵרֵי־נֶפֶשׁ, to intimate sudden decay, in the parallel. See Prov. vii. 19; Dan. ii. 47. The two next verses are explanatory, and keep up the same general idea.

6. נִשְׂאוֹ, r. נָשָׂא, form נִשְׂאוֹ; the נָ being rejected, Gram. Art. 76, as in שִׂוֵּא, Ps. lxxxix. 10, and שְׂאוֹת, ch. xiii. 11, all from the same root: elevated, something elevated, or exalted, glory, dignity, &c. The expression is not unknown among the Latin poets; as Virgil, “Caput in nubila condit,” Æneid; and Horace, “Sublimen feriret verticem caput.” Comp. Ps. lxxiii. 9. The Arabs have an adage well suiting this passage, which is this, انفخ في السماء واسته في الماء, His nose in the heavens; his buttocks in the water: spoken of one whose notions of self are high, his conduct base.

7. לְיָצִיחַ. Utterly, entirely. Arab. نَصَحَ, pura, sincera, fuit:—verè rectèque se habuit, plenè et ad satietatem hausère potum cameli, &c. Hence the notion of completeness, entireness, &c. when applied to time, will signify continuity; to action, completeness, &c.: which last appears to me to be its real force here. To “perish for ever,” seems to want simplicity, the word perish alone implying perpetuity. In the other case the sense will be, that no part shall remain on which destruction shall not pass.

8. וְיִפְתְּחוּהוּ. They shall (not) find him, i.e. any one, every one, &c. impersonally. Ib. וַיִּדַּד, r. בָּדַד. Cogn. נָדַד. Arab. نَدَّ البَعِيرُ.... نَعَرَ وَذَهَبَ عَلَيَّ وَجْهَهُ شَارِدًا. So Jauhari, A camel. نَدَّ, i.e. flies, and passes away, wandering at his pleasure. نَادَ (r. نود), nutavit, vacillavit, pec. præ somnolentia (Σο νοδ). Castell; which is just the application of the word in this place. Hence, be made to wander, guided by no distinct rule or object, just as it is the case in visions of the night, here termed לְיָצִיחַ, and opposed to הָלַם, in the beginning of the verse. This word too when applied to a routed army, or the flying of a bird, has respect to the disorder and unsteadiness of course taken, rather than to swiftness in either case. These distinctions, in the meaning of words,—however trifling they may appear in the estimation of some,—should never be lost sight of by any one who wishes to be a successful interpreter of Holy Writ, as they will afford the only means of solving many difficulties with which he will meet. Unstable then as a dream, is the best state and hope of the wicked said here to be. See also ch. vii. 4.

9. וְיִפְתְּחוּהוּ, for וְיִפְתְּחוּהוּ, r. וְיִפְתְּחוּ. This word occurs only in two more places, viz. in ch. xxviii. 7, and Cant. i. 6. It is apparently cognate with the Arabic سُدَقَةٌ, or سَدَقَةٌ; which Jauhari tells us signifies in the dialect of Najd, darkness, but in that of other provinces, light. His words are: السُّدَقَةُ وَالسَّدَقَةُ فِي لَعْنَةِ نَجْدِ الظُّلْمَةِ وَفِي لَعْنَةِ غَيْرِهِمُ النُّوْرُ. He goes on to say, that some make it to signify a mixture of light and darkness, as the morning twilight: ويعضهم يَجْعَلُ السُّدَقَةَ اخْتِلَاطَ النُّوْرِ وَالظُّلْمَةِ مَعًا كَوَقْتِ مَا بَيْنَ طُلُوعِ الشَّمْسِ

إِلَى الْإِسْعَادِ. And again, السَّدَفُ أَيضًا الصُّبْحُ, i.e. סָדַף, also means the dawn. It. cogn. صَدَفَ, prosperavit, &c. Comp. شَدَفَ, i.q. شَتَّحَصَّ. Hence, if opening as the dawn, when the increasing light of the sun discovers to the beholder the true appearance of things, be supposed to be cognate with this verb, we can easily see how viewing, beholding, &c. might eventually have predominated in it. In Cant. i. 6, it is applied to the burning heat of the sun, which well comports with this etymology. The other cognate roots pointed out will supply similar notions. I am, therefore, inclined to think with Rosenmüller, that the etymologies of Schultens are here, as on many other occasions, fanciful; although none of the German critics, as far as I have seen, have succeeded in offering any thing much better. Gesenius's أَسَدَفٌ, niger, and hence أَسَدَفَ, caligavit, is indeed a remote approach towards it.

Ib. וְלֹא תֹכֵחַ. And adds not, i.e. repeats this sight no more: a very common idiom. Gram. Art. 222, 4. Ib. מְקוֹמוֹ. His place, here personified as in other places.

10. יִרְצֵי. Shall give, render, satisfaction, &c. Auth. Vers. “Shall seek to please;” which has no point here. רָצַח means rather to plucate, than to please. So also the Arabic in the same form, رَضِيَ, contentum reddidit. To this the corresponding member answers well by stating, that his wealth shall be given back, i.e. to those from whom it had originally been taken by force. See vv. 17–19, where this sentiment is reiterated. I think therefore that both Schmurser and Rosenmüller are wrong in taking the sense of רָצַח, brake to pieces, here: and the same may be said of the ancient versions generally. Ib. וְיָדָיו. Nay his own hands, i.e. not only shall his children, but rather, by an epanorthisis, he himself shall give up this wealth. See Gram. Art. 216, 4, which in this view forms a sort of climax.

11. עֲלֵהָיו. Circumstances, vanities, of his youth. Such words as נְעֻרָיו, youth, זְהוּרָיו, age, &c. have been thought by some to signify the times, or the like, of youth, age, &c. Gram. Art. 142, 4. “Non sunt peccata juventutis,” says Rosenmüller, “ut quidam voluerunt, sed peccata occulta, ut Ps. xc. 8,” &c. But, I can see nothing in that passage to determine the word to this sense, no more than I can in others, viz. Ps. lxxxix. 46, and here ch. xxxiii. 26; where we have יָמָיו עֲלֵיזָבוֹ, the days of his youth, &c. What our author seems to mean is, that whatever the times of his youth, i.e. of his best vigour, may have enabled him to acquire, as vain riches, honours, dignities, &c.—which might be said to have filled his bones with marrow, and have given him great influence—shall, with himself, be reduced to inefficiency and uselessness in the end. Ib. הַתְּשָׁקָב, fem. A very common construction in the Arabic, see Gram. Art. 216, 7, i.e. the things so obtained shall then be valueless.

12. יִבְחֹרְדָּהּ. He retain it: by the power of the epenthetic ב, hence (i.e. because it was sweet), have retained it. See Gram. Art. 235. Rosenmüller, “occultaverit,” &c. The true sense of this word has not, I think, yet been made out. Keeping back, or retaining, seems to me to be its primary import; thence, secondarily, concealing, i.e. when applied to speaking, and not telling the whole truth; thence, thirdly, the being cut off, &c. as no more appearing. בְּחָשׁ, if not originally the same word, is certainly very nearly allied to this. See its usage. בָּזַב, too, has probably the same primary sense: and hence ⁵כּוֹזֵב, avarus, angusto animo. Comp. the Arabic جَكَدَ. Æth. ከጸገ: negavit. It. Arab. كَحَّتْ, brevis. كَحَّتْ, partem illi de opibus concessit. Pretty much in the same manner is יִבְחֹרְדָּהּ, in the next verse, to be understood, and may be said to form an exact parallel to this.

14. לֶחֶמוֹ. Lit. His bread: but, as bread is used for every sort of food, and frequently for feasting, the context seems here to require this latter sense. In vv. 10, 11, 14, we have allusions made to ill-gotten wealth. Zophar seems here therefore to say, the pleasant feastings, obtained by evil means, shall become entirely changed, turned (יִבְחֹרְדָּהּ), take another character, become as bitterness, or the gall of adders, within such a person. Ib. מְרוֹרָה. Bitterness, gall, i.q. מְרָרָה, ch. xvi. 13. It seems to have been a common opinion of the ancients, that the poison of serpents consisted chiefly of gall. So Pliny, as cited by Rosenmüller, “Et ne quis miretur, fel venenum esse serpentium.” “Nec aliud venenum dentium esse, quam fel serpentium, et inde venis sub spina ad os perrenire, diligentissimi auctores scribunt.” Hist. Nat. xi. 37, &c. See also Bochart, Hieroz. Pars II. lib. III. cap. v.

15. וְרִשְׁפָה . . . וְרִשְׁפָה. The epenthetic ב seems here to give strength to the passage. Gram. Art. 235. The sentiment, moreover, appears to be much the same with that expressed in vr. 5.

17. שֶׁל־יִרְאֵה. Lit. Let him not look, &c. i.e. Take it for granted that he never shall. The true apocopated form is יִרְאֵה; but these formations often take that of a segolate noun, and for the same reason. Gram. Art. 108. Constr. with ב, look with pleasure, satisfaction, &c. Ib. פְּלִגְוֹת. Lit. Divisions. It is usual in the East to cut channels from the rivers, and by means of these to draw water into the gardens and other plantations. These may, therefore, be termed rivulets, or streamlets. פְּלִגְוֹת are here, therefore, such streamlets, i.e. drawn from the rivers which run along the valleys, as shewn in Russel's History of Aleppo. Compare Ps. i. 3. By the honey and butter of these is necessarily meant, by a metonymy, the wealth which they bring with them into such enclosures. Warburton, as noticed in the Introduction, has supposed this passage to be an allusion to those parts of the law of Moses, which speak of a land "flowing with milk and honey;" as if none but a writer who had read Moses could think of such things as these. Yet we have in Pindar, Olymp. i. line 155 (Heyne's ed. p. 19), μειλιτέεσσας εὐόδιαν; which the scholiast explains by, Μέλιτος ρεοῦσα (γῆ), ἀντι τοῦ ἡδίστων ἀνάπαυστον: and Ovid, as may be seen in Rosenmüller here, "Flumina jam lactis, jam flumina nectaris ibant."

18. יָגַע. Thing laboured, or laboured for: r. יָגַע. Ib. בְּחֵיל יָגַעוּ בְּן תְּמַרְתּוֹ יְהוָה, בְּחֵיל תְּמַרְתּוֹ, for יְהוָה בְּן תְּמַרְתּוֹ יְהוָה. As the power, influence, of his laboured (wealth) is, so shall be his restitution. Comp. Hos. iv. 7. This will account for the form of construction visible in חֵיל תְּמַרְתּוֹ, r. בּוֹר: Syr. عَمِنَ, emit (i.e. by exchanging one thing for another). عَمِنًا, ammona. Arab. مَارَ (r. مور) transivit (cogn. مَرَّ). مَارَ (r. مير), prospexit suis de comœatu, it. reulidit. مَائِرٌ, cibo instructus. Cognate with these roots is أَمَرَ, imperavit; whence أَمِيرٌ, imperator, because abounding in wealth, and أَمْرٌ, multum fecit, or multus fuit. Comp. Isa. iii. 6. Ib. יִצְלַח, exult, rejoice, or enjoy. Arab. عَلَسَ, bibit. عَلَسٌ, fortis strenuus. Cogn. عَلَصَ, nauseavit. عَلَاصٌ, herba quaedam, ex qua embamma, et obsonium elaboratur, et ex qua jus conficitur.

Cogn. Heb. עלץ, which see. I have rendered לֹא by never; because any word negating action generally, will, when the negative implies continuity, be equivalent to never, &c. which will occasionally suit our idiom better.

20. שָׁלוֹ. Quiet, satisfaction, &c. Arab. سَلَا, liquefecit. سَلَا (r. سلوا), liquavit butyrum, &c. Hence, tranquillo contentoque animo fuit, &c. It. cogn. صَلَا (r. صلي), ussavit, lacius habuit, and conj. ii. flexibilem reddidit, precatus fuit Deum, &c. Ib. בְּבִטְנוֹ. In his viscera. This class of writers constantly use לֵב, the heart, בְּקֶרֶב, or, בְּפָנוּ, interior, for the seat of thought: they never speak of the head, as often noticed, in this sense. Ib. בְּחִבְרוֹ. With his desirable (matter, store, &c.) לֹא יִפְלֹט, he does not deliver, supp. בְּפָנָיו, himself.

21. שְׁרִיד. Remainder, survivor. Arab. شَرِدَ, fugax fuit. Ib. לְאֶכְלוֹ. Lit. For his food. Schmurrer, Rosenmüller, as well as our own translators and others, seem quite to be misapprehended this passage. “Nihil evadit voracitatem ejus.” “Nemo effugit vorationem ejus.” “There shall none of his meat be left,” &c. seem to me to be as wide of the mark as can well be imagined. Nothing can be more common than the usage of אֶכֶל, eating, for meat and provision: nor any thing more usual than שְׁרִיד for remnant, person remaining. It is often construed with ל, see Josh. viii. 22, &c. Ib. לֹא יִחַיֵּל. Shall not (i.e. שְׁרִיד, a survivor) exult. לֹא טוֹבוֹ (in) his good, prosperity. Such specifying word stands in no need of the preposition ב. See Gram. Art. 219, note, and Art. 220.

22. בְּמִלְאוֹת סִפְקוֹ. In the fulness of his sufficiency, i.e. even when enjoying his wealth, וַיָּצַר, he shall be in distress, straits: r. וַיָּצַר לוֹ, inipers. used here in the sense of צָר, or צָרָה, which are cognate roots. Comp. Gen. xxxii. 8; Judg. ii. 15; x. 9; 2 Sam. xiii. 2. סִפְקוֹ is used here in the Chaldaic or Syriac sense, in which it often occurs. This word in the Arabic, whether written سَفَق, or صَفَق,—which are cognate forms,—very probably once meant the same thing, as it did in the Hebrew or Chaldaic, i.e. primarily, perhaps, clapping the hands, thence exulting, thence striking a bargain; and ultimately, wealth, sufficiency, and so on. Something to this effect has been cited by Schultens from the xxist consessus of Hariri, viz. يَتْبَاهِي بِغُوزِ صَفَقَتِهِ, gloriabatur quod adeptus esset complusionem suam. The term

صَعَّقَ, clap of the hand, is also used to imply the conclusion of a good, or bad, bargain. So Jauhari, رَابَعَةً صَعَّقَةً, a gaining-clap of the hand; or, صَعَّقَةً خَاسِرَةً, a losing do. The former of these might be implied in the phrase, בְּפָלְאֵיהֶם כִּדְקָהוּ. The sense will then be: Since his sole object was gain, so, &c.: where the term דָּקָה is equally appropriate; because such bargain was confirmed by the parties striking hands. Ch. xvii. 3. The ב in כִּדְבָרָם probably implies an inference with assurance here. See Gram. Art. 235, &c.

23. יְהִי לְמַלְאָא. So shall it come to pass, be, at the filling, &c. i.e. when he is doing so, God shall send, &c. I take the apocopated יְהִי here, to imply a consequence. See Gram. 233, 4, and the passage as parallel to Ps. lxxviii. 30, 31; and signifying virtually the same thing as in the preceding verse. Ib. יִשְׁלַח. He shall send, i.e. God, as the context sufficiently determines. Ib. בְּלֹחֶמֶתוֹ. In his eating, feasting, or fattening. This word (viz. לָחַם) is apparently a verbal noun of the form לֹחֶמֶת, Gram. Art. 190, 6; of this לָחַם will be the root, which is used to signify bread, thence food of any kind, and feasting. In the Arabic its equivalent (viz. لَحْمٌ) signifies flesh (for eating): hence the verb لَحِمَ, being desirous of it; لَحِيمٌ, carnosus; and لَحِيمٌ, carnis appetens; carnivorus. From the notion of eating, we probably have that of becoming fleshy; hence perhaps that of adding thing to thing, making solid, &c.: and thence, of fighting, making war, and so on, just as we have in جَدَلٌ, twisting as a rope; thence becoming great, as in جَدُولٌ; and lastly, جِدَالٌ, contention. See also عَظَلَ, in Golius, and the cognate roots, لَهِم and لَحِم.

24. מִדְּנִשְׁקָה. From the weapon. Arab. نَسَبَ, ordinavit . . . ita ut partes inter se cohærent. نَسَبَ, odoratus fuit, pec attrahendo . . . fixa inhæsit, &c. Hence, to stick to, adhere, either in a good or bad sense; as kissing, or killiug (Angl. vulg. sticking, and Samar. scidit, secuit). So Virgil, "adhæsit lethalis arundo." Ib. תְּהַחֲלֶהוּ הַיָּרֵחַ. The brazen bow shall make it pass, i.e. the iron missile; or, it may be, shall make it pass him, i.e. through him. The verb seems here to be used in the sense of the Arabic حَكَّفَ, restitit, adversatus est,

&c. i.e. as fast as he fled from one difficulty, another met him. See Judg. v. 26. Ib. נְרוֹחַשָׁה. Lit. Copper. Whether brass, which is a compound, was known at this day or not, it is impossible to say. In any case, the brass or copper spoken of here could never have formed the elastic part of a bow. And hence, perhaps, our translators rendered the word by steel. Oriental bows were composed of three parts; the handle (قَبْضَةٌ) — which was straight — formed the middle part, and this might be made of wood, brass, copper, or any other strong substance. To each end of this were fastened pieces of horn or of any other elastic substance, thus,  and to the extremities of these the nerve, or thong, was applied. Now, if these horns, &c. happened not to be in one and the same plane, the bow, when drawn to its full extent, would fail to emit the arrow; because, at this particular juncture, either the horns would break, being drawn out of their proper direction; or else they would veer round. And hence such was termed a deceitful bow, הַשָּׂתָה רַמְיָהּ, Ps. lxxviii. 57. The horns might also be attached to the handle by means of copper or brazen ferulæ; and hence the bow itself might have been termed brazen.

25. הִשָּׂה. He hath drawn the sword, i.e. some one, impersonally; and hence the verb may be taken in the passive. Ib. יֵצֵא. It goeth out, i.e. הִנֵּה, the glittering blade, מִגְּבֵהָ, From (the) body. I can discover no reason here for translating this by è tergo, especially as Rosenmüller himself who gives it in his notes, renders it by “corpus ejus,” in his translation. Ib. הִנֵּה. Glittering, is properly an epithet given to any polished weapon, but particularly to the sword or spear: so, בִּרְקַתِ السַיْفِ, the sword shines, i.e. flashes like lightning. Ib. מִצְרוֹרָתוֹ. Out of his gall. See vr. 14. Ib. יִהְיֶה, He departs; which the Arabians sometimes express by saying, ذَهَبَ إِلَيَّ مَكَانَهُ, he passed to his place, as in Acts, i. 25. See ch. xiv. 20. Ib. אַיִמִים. Terrors, horrors. Arab. fumm excitavit. Cogn. غَمَامَ (v. غَيْم), nubibus obductum fuit cælum. It. كَيْلًا أَوْمًا, tempora infelicia, iniqua, &c. Ib. עָלָיו. Lit. Upon him, supp. shall be, or fall, הָרָה.

26. כָּל־חֹשֶׁךְ. The whole of darkness, i.e. its aggregate of terrors, horrors, and miseries. Ib. לְפָנָיו. Lit. For his things laid up; or, in the place, or in the lieu of his great earthly wealth: to which, perhaps, St. Paul made some allusion, when he said, “Treasurest up wrath against the day of wrath,” &c. Rom. ii. 5. Ib. לֹא־נִכְזָקָה אֵשׁ. An unblown fire, i.e. no naturally kindled fire; and hence also unquenchable; and, perhaps, the same with that so named in the New Testament. If, indeed, the declamations made in the two preceding verses may be understood as marking the miserable death of such person, then also must those now adverted to relate to the misery and outer darkness to be encountered by him after death; and the aggregate of darkness, here said to be laid up for, or in lieu of, his earthly treasures, will well describe such after-state of misery. Job, as we have seen (ch. xiii. 15; xiv. 13, 14, &c.), looks beyond death for justice, and for the fulfilment of his hope. It is quite natural therefore we should here be taught that, in an after-life also, the prosperous wicked should receive the due reward of their iniquities; and, if so, this is the first place in Holy Scripture which propounds this doctrine. Ib. תִּפְסַחְלֶהּ. It shall devour, or prey upon him. Comp. Ps. xlix. 15; Isa. xiv. 11; lxi. 24, with Mark, ix. 44, 45, 46. Ib. יִרְעַר יְשָׁרִיד. Shall (the) survivor perish. If we take either יִרְעַר, or רֵעַר, for the root here, shall be in evil case, plight, will be the sense. I am inclined to think, however, that the sense of רָעַע, broken, destroyed, &c. is rather required by the context. See vv. 21, 22, preceding. I have therefore so given it with Dathe.

27. שָׁמַיִם. The heavens, i.e. the order of things above constituted under God, and which are therefore occasionally put for God himself, e.g. Dan. iv. 23, “the heavens do rule;” Luke, xv. 21, “I have sinned against heaven.” So, in the case of Abel, Gen. iv. 10; as also in that of Cain, וְרָאָה לֹא־תִהְיֶה אֶרֶץ כְּפִי אֶבֶן, the earth was raised against him. Ib. Gen. vr. 14, every one meeting him would be ready to kill him.

28. יִגָּל. So shall go into captivity. I take the apocryphal יִגָּל here, as in vr. 23, to imply an inference.

Ib. תִּפְסַחְלֶהּ. Dispersed,—i.e. things, alluding to תִּפְסַחְלֶהּ, above,—as water poured out. See 2 Sam. xiv. 14, i.e. the things, goods, which he has acquired. Ib. אֵשׁ. His wrath. The pronoun here must necessarily be referred to God, which can hardly be omitted in the translation.

29. We have here Zophar’s conclusion which is good in its way, but inappropriate. אֶרְרֶה. His rule. If we take אֶרְרֶה in the Arabic sense of “imperio aut præfecturâ polluit, vehemens, gravis, et durus fuit, vel evasit, see note or vr. 18, above; and suppose this to be a verbal noun of the form מִצְוָה , like the Arabic أَمْرٌ , mandatum sererius graviorque, or i. g. عَجَبٌ , res admiranda; something like command, or rule, will be the sense of the passage, and something like this the preceding term בְּחֵלֶת , heritage, really requires, i. e. the result, consequence, of his unjust and oppressive power.

CHAPTER XXI.

2. תִּנְחַמְתֶּיכוֹם . Your great consolation. I take the plural number here to denote excellence. Gram. 223, 3. As if he should say, You may console yourselves with the consideration that you gave me a diligent hearing: nothing beyond this will be due to you.

3. שְׂאִינִי . Bear with me, indulge me. This verb (שָׂא), when followed by בְּ , has the sense of favouring, &c. either in a good or bad case. See Gen. xxxii. 21; Mal. i. 8, 9, &c. Opposed to this is נָפַל , used also with בְּ , Gen. iv. 5, 6. Ib. דְּבָרִי . Lit. My speaking or declaring: verbal noun or infin. of Pihel. Ib. תִּלְעֵיג . Thou mayest mock. The imperative, as used in our Auth. Ver. seems to me, to be too strong here.

4. הֲאֵינִי . Whether, as to me. We have here a nominative absolute, preceded by the interrogative particle הֲ . Gram. Art. 216, 13–15, 179. Ib. שִׁיחִי . My complaint. Arab. صَيْحٌ , clamor, afflictio. The primary notion seems to be latent in شَبِيحٌ , penuria, sterilitas, cautio, &c. Hence شَاخ (r. شَبِيحٌ), culpavit, vituperavit, &c. صَاح , profudit se ex involnecro plenior racemus; سَاح , fluxit aqua per superficiem terræ. Syr. صَم , voluit, delectatus est. Hence שָׁח , meditating, Gen. xxiv. 63; and שִׁיחַ , stirps, frutex, &c. Gen. ii. 5. Job here seems to say, I do not suppose that man will attend to my cause with justice; I have therefore laid it before God. Ib. וְאִם . And if, i. e. putting the case, allowing it to be so, מִדַּע , why should I not be impatient? תִּתְקַר רִיחִי , as תִּתְקַר רִיחִי , signifies shortness of spirit, i. e. impatience, Prov. xiv. 29; so must the verb thence formed. Comp. Numb. xxi. 4; Judg. xvi. 16; Eccl. vii. 8.

5. וְהִשְׁתַּמֵּי . And be astonished, confounded. Imp. Hiph. for הִשְׁתַּמֵּי , see Paradig. The variation in the vowel is thought to have arisen from the pause. וְשִׁיבִי, and lay, &c.

So Saadi in his Gulistān, or Rose-Garden, أَنْكَسَتْ بَرَّ دَنَدَانَ, the finger on the teeth, i. e. as a mark of astonishment, and intimating silence in consequence. So Plutarch. de Iside et Osiride: Δὸν τῶν στόματι τὸν ὀάκτυλον ἐγγεῖσι παροσκαίμενον ἐγγεμυθία και σιωπῆς σήμειον.

6. וְזָכַרְתִּי. I have called to mind. Arab. ذَكَرَ, which the Persians often translate by یاد کرد, he called to mind, memory. So Gol. זָכַר, memoratio cordis; which the context here seems to require. Ib. פָּלְצִיחָה. Fear, trembling. Syr.

פָּלְצִיחָה, perfolit. Æth. ፈለሰ: migravit de loco in locum. vi. incertis sedibus vagatus est. Hence perhaps absence, and thence, horror of mind. Arab. cogn. فَلَسَ, inopem pronuntiavit. iv. exhaustus fuit; and فَلَّصَ, contractus est: to which the English flush, and blush—comp. Heb. חָפַר—bear some analogy.

7. יָחִי. Quare, indefinitely, not interrogatively. See Exod. iii. 3. Here, How the wicked, &c. suits this context best, and is equally applicable to many others. Ib. יָחִי. They are healthy, vigorous. This verb signifies not only to live, but also to be lusty and strong. See Deut viii. 1; Ps. xxii. 27, and חַי; 2 Sam. xxiii. 20; Kethib, where the marginal reading has אִישׁ חַיִל; Exod. i. 19, חַיִּיחָה, “lively,” i. e. healthy, vigorous, masculine, &c.

8. לְפָנֵיהֶם. In their presence, i. e. during their own time. So apparently, Gen. xi. 28, וַיָּמָתָה הָרָן עַל־פְּנֵי הָרָח, so Haran died in the presence, i. e. during the times, of Terakh. Here, Their seed becomes established during their own times, עִמָּם, with them: not removed to a distance, but on their own lands. Ib. וַיִּשְׁאַף־אִיהֶם. And their numerous offspring, which the reduplication of this word seems intended to express: רַב־אִשָּׁה.

9. שָׁלוֹם. Secure, or safe. Arab. سَلَّمَ, cortice arboris concinnavit corium, pellemve. Hence, generally, completed, put into a state of safety, or security, from danger, &c. Ib. וְלֹא שִׁבְטָה. Neither (is) the rod, &c. So David, Ps. lxxiii. 5, “Neither are they plagued like other men.” This was a matter of great difficulty to David, of terror to Job. Indeed, the psalm seems to be a good commentary on this place of Job.

10. שִׁוְרוֹ. His ox. A generic term applied either to the male or female, as the word ox is with us; not to black cattle particularly as Tod's Johnson makes it: nor do the passages which he cites justify any such notion. Ib. עֶבֶר. Concepit. See Bochart Hieroz. pars i. lib. ii. cap. xxx., where he has most satisfactorily shewn, that this is the Chaldee usage of this word; and therefore a word very likely to have been used by Job. See also Castell, sub voce. To which may be added the Arabic, تَعَبَّرَ. Suscepit à femina prolem. Syr. حَصَدًا. Tempus carpendi semen. Æth. ሀበረ: Dicitur de frugibus cum ob siccitatem cæli arescunt. Castell; where the primary notion is considerably varied. Ib. רָלַס וְנָעַל. Et non respuit, i. e. tauri semen. Ib. תִּפְדָּלַט. Lit. Causes to escape; i. e. safely brings forth. Cogn. מַלַּט. In the Chaldee usage, however, ejecit, vomit, evomit. Æth. ላለለ: Separavit, segregavit, &c. The remainder of this verse requires no note, except to remark that, as in a former case, the last member here is rather put as a consequence, than as an explanation of the first.

11. עִוְלֵיהֶם. Their sucklings. Comp. Gen. xxxiii. 13; 1 Sam. vi. 7, 10, &c.; where we have עֲלוֹת, suckling mothers; r. עוּל. Arab. عَالَ (r. عول). Sustentavit, aluit, familiam suam. Cogn. עָלָת (r. غَبِل). Gravida, vel cum viro concumbens lactavit infantem. Not غول, as Winer gives; nor yet Syr. لָحַץ, lactans, which he also gives. Ib. יִרְקְדוּן. They skip, leap, like the young of cattle full of health and in the enjoyment of plenty.

12. בָּרַף. Lit. With the tabret. Arab. دَفَّ. Pulsavit, strike often. Angl. Tap, dab, dabble. Gr. τῦτ, undè τῦττω. Per metath. Pat, Bat. Gr. παττω. Sansc. पत् attack.

Ib. בַּבִּיר. Gr. κινύρα. Arab. كِنَارَةٌ, à Syr. حَبْدٌ. Scapus canabibis, because the strings were made of that material. An instrument which according to Josephus had ten strings, and was played with a plectrum: Antiq. lib. vii. c. xii. Ib. עֲנָב. Vulg. The organ: which is, I think, very doubtful. One would suppose from the etymology of the word, that it was an instrument adapted to amatory subjects or occasions: the root ענב having the sense of loving, both in Hebrew and Arabic, as the lexicons will shew. According to Josephus, it was a sort of psaltery or lyre, to be played with the fingers, which the LXX. render, in Gen. iv. 21, by κινάρα, and this place in Job by ψαλμός. It is worthy of remark, that, in both these places, it occurs with פְּנִיָּה; as also in Job, xxx. 31; and with other similar instruments in Ps. cl. 4. The context too, in this place, requires that it be considered an instrument adapted to festivities.

13. וַיִּדְרֹגֵנָה. And in a twinkling. Arab. رَجَعَ. Iteravit.
Cogn. رَعْرَع. Agitata fuit in terræ superficie clarior aqua.
Per metath. رَعَج. Corruscavit serie continuata fulmen, &c.
Ib. וַיִּשְׁוֹל. The vault, or great chamber, in which various niches or compartments were assigned to the several coffins. See Maundrel's Journey to Aleppo, and note on ch. xvii. 2. Scheidius has written a very elaborate treatise to shew that, by this word, the ancient Hebrews often meant a place of departed souls, answering in many respects to the ᾠδὴς of the Greeks and orcus of the Romans. Nothing, however, can be more certain than that, upon a fair review of this work,—as it is the case with many more of the school of Schultens,—no reliance whatever can be placed upon it. By וַיִּשְׁוֹל, the Hebrews certainly meant nothing more, or less, than the vault of the grave. In connexion with this may be mentioned the poetical notions (first borrowed from the heathen poets, beyond all doubt) so finely portrayed by Milton, in which we have a place of damned spirits, all as precisely described and believed in as if Divine Revelation had laid open the whole; whereas, not one word to this effect is to be found in the Bible. The war in heaven, and consequent expulsion of certain angels,—as taken from the Book of Revelations,—has, I contend, been totally misapprehended; which intimates nothing beyond the havoc made by Satan in the church on earth. See my Exposition on the place. On the contrary, the Scriptures describe Satan as a spirit that was a liar and murderer from the beginning, i. e. from the time in which he tempted and ruined our first parents;—as walking up and down, and to and fro, in the earth;—as thus seeking whom he may devour;—as the Prince of the power of the air, and of this world;—as Ruler of the darkness of this world, working in the children of disobedience;—as the head of a family at enmity with God, whose end is to be eternal perdition. The whole, therefore, of this story of ᾠδὴς or orcus, to which the Neologians of Germany are eternally appealing,—as well as of this now existing Pandemonium of Milton,—is a mere fancy, and involves a grievous theological error. See ch. xviii. 14.

Ib. וַיִּקְרָנוּ. They are brought down. This, according to the vowels, is certainly the form proper for the Niphāl of הִרְתָּ. See 1 Sam. ii. 10. וַיִּקְרָנוּ will be the true Niphāl form of נָחַת, Descendit. And here, I think, there can be no doubt that the point in ת is erroneous. Surely it is absurd for ever to be forming grammatical rules,—after Alting,—to meet irregularities of this trifling sort.

15. נִפְגַּעְעֵבּוּ. Lit. We meet him. This verb usually signifies meeting: the context will determine whether it is to be taken in a hostile, friendly, or supplicatory sense. The preceding term, viz. נִפְגַּעְרָבּוּ, sufficiently determines that the latter is here intended. I take it to signify publicly meeting God in such service as that was which Job performed when he sacrificed for his sons, ch. i. 5. Comp. Mal. iii. 14.

16. הִנֵּה. Behold, &c. Job here places the question in its true light. You say that wicked men must necessarily fail, and perish, here on earth. I say I tremble when I see so much proving directly the contrary. But then, what of that? This prosperity which I thus see, and which you say cannot exist, is neither brought about nor maintained by the power (רַף) of these men. An inscrutable Providence, on the contrary, governs all these things. You therefore are arguing on grounds which you do not understand. But, whatever the fate of such men may be, let their principles be far removed from me. Ib. רַחֲמָה. Be it far away. I take to be a preterite, used to enounce a strong imperative. Gram. Art. 236, 2. רָמַי. From me. Chald. for Heb. רָמַי.

17. כִּפְיָהּ. How often! &c. See Ps. lxxviii. 40. Job here evidently allows the doctrine—as well he might—which teaches the instability of the wicked, and appears to allude to the words of Bildad inculcating this: ch. xviii. 5. Rosenmüller takes this (כִּפְיָהּ) in the sense of How rarely? The soundness of which I greatly doubt; because I find it used in no such sense in the Scriptures: nor indeed in any instance in the cognate dialects. He appeals to ch. xxiii. 23, “ut supra,” as he says; but that chapter contains not twenty-three verses. Ch. xiii. 23 must be the place; where, however, he has given no note. One glance at the passage however is quite sufficient to shew, that the particle will not bear that sense there. This is not a bad specimen of modern German commenting on Scripture. See also my Sermons and Dissertations, Diss. I. Ib. נֵר. Light. كَبِيرٌ. Luminare. Here put by a metaphor for prosperity. Ib. יָחַלֵּק, i. e. God apportions in his wrath, בְּאַפָּי: the pronoun (ו) here can refer to no other.

18. נִגְבְּהוּ, for נִגְבְּהוּ, as in many other instances. Lit. Hath stolen it away, i. e. before one is aware, suddenly, and violently, as the following term, כּוּפָדָה, whirlwind, tornado, implies; these being much more sudden and violent in the East than they are with us. Arab. الْجَنُوبُ. The south wind; and جَنَبَتِ الرِّيحُ. The wind has southed, i.e. turned to the south, إِذَا تَحَوَّلَتْ جَنُوبًا. The verb (גנב) here therefore is still applied in the East, as in this passage, to signify the blowing of the south wind, which is there always the most violent. See ch. xxxvii. 9. Ib. סִפְּחָה. Lit. Finisher; r. סוּף, terminus, finis, &c. Not merely consumptio pulveris, stipularum, &c., as Wiener thinks, but of every thing liable to be injured by it. Comp. Ps. i. 4, which is, most probably, an imitation of this place; Isa. xxi. 1; Zech. ix. 14. Arab. سَافَ. Exterminavit.

19. אֱלֹהִים. God, &c. Here most of the commentators, Jewish and Christian, have seen, that Job was taking up and allowing the arguments of his opponents; as if he should say, אֵלֵינוּ יָשָׁרְתָם. Ye have said so and so; which I also allow. I differ from them in insisting, that this is what Job was doing from the beginning of the sixteenth verse. Ib. אִינִי. His iniquity. Here seems to be a play on the word אִינִי, facultas, and אִינִי, iniquity: the first requiring the verb לָיַטְּ, layeth up; while the latter will afford the sense of vain, or ill-gotten: unless indeed אִינִי, wealth, is here to be understood, by a metonymy, as the true result of his wicked labours: but punishment, as their just due or fruits, seems rather intended: imitated in Ps. xciv. 23. Ib. וַיֵּדַע. And he shall know, i.e. feel this: verbs of sense being, in this class of languages, often substituted one for another. This I take to be an epanorthosis by which is intended, Nay, he himself shall know and feel it.

20. וַיֵּרֶא, &c. They see; i.e. during his own life he shall have sensible demonstrations, that destruction shall be the portion of his family. בִּירוֹ. His ruin, &c. Arab. كَيْدٌ, or كَيْدٌ. Fraud, wickedness; and, by a metonymy, its consequence, destruction. Hariri, Cons. xxi., i. q. كَلَاكٌ, destruction.

21. בְּבֵיתוֹ. Lit. In his house, i.e. in any consideration respecting it, as to, &c. חֲצֵצְרֵי. Have been cut, i.e. decided. Chald. חֲצֵצְרֵי. Dimidiavit, discriminavit, &c. Arab. أَخَصَّ. Dedit alteri portionem suam; خَصَّ, proprium fecit, &c. It. חֲצֵצְרֵי. Calculus; חֲצֵצְרֵי: hence calculated, according to Cocceius. Others, חֲצֵצְרֵי. An arrow; and, because arrows were anciently used by the Arabs in divining (Poc. Spec. Hist. Arab. p. 324), ^{سَهْمٌ} an arrow, was hence taken for fate, sors, i. e. the thing determined was thus known. But this is a very round-about process. Shorter thus, if fate must be called in: cogn. ^{حُصٌّ} sors, &c. The former method, however, is more simple and direct. Ib. ^{הַדְּנָשִׁי}. Its months; i. e. of his house, for it is to this that the view of the failing rich man is now directed.

22. ^{יִלְמַד}. Shall one teach: impersonally, any one, &c. Ib. ^{רָמִים}. Exalted, or lofty, either creatures or things; i. e. determines their powers, course, and ends. Comp. Isa. xl. 13; Rom. xi. 34; 1 Cor. ii. 16: all alluding to this place. The next four verses go to declare, from the circumstance of one dying in one state, as to worldly affairs, and another in another, that no argument can be grounded on this to shew, what the real religious character of any such persons is. See Saadi's Pandnama, ch. ^{قضا وقدر}.

23. ^{בְּעִצָּם}. In strength. Arab. ^{عَصَمَ}. Lucrum fecit; عَصَمٌ, manubrium arcus; عَظَمَ, magna fuit res. Cogn. ^{عَظَبَ}, induruit, &c.; عَظُمَ, magnum mare, &c. Chald. ^{עִצָּם}. Roboravit, &c. Ib. ^{הַיָּמִין}. Integritas ejus: or, if we take עִצָּם to signify self, In his very entireness, i. e. prime vigour.

24. ^{עֲטִיבֵי חֶלְאֵי}. His bottles are filled, &c. "Loca peccorosa ejus plena sunt lacte," Rosenmüller. The same is given both by Gesenius and Winer. Those who wish to see how variously this passage has been interpreted, and on what grounds, may consult Bochart, Hier. par. i. lib. ii. cap. xlv. orig. ed. p. 457; or Rosenmüller's Scholia where Bochart is abridged, and Rosenmüller's own opinions are also given. My own opinion is that all have failed; and, therefore, I proceed in my turn to endeavour to supply the needful.

It is very evident, I think, that, although ^{عَطَنَ} and ^{مِعَطَنَ} signify a place in which cattle lie round about water, yet that watering, saturating with water, or the like, is the primary notion included in the root. So Gol. after Jauhari and Firozabadi, ^{عَطَنَ} . . . maceravit pellem, &c. . . ut deglabraretur et mollesceret; i. e. saturated it. And Jauhari, ^{عِنْدَ الْمَاءِ} ^{وَيَمْبَرِكُ الْإِبِلُ} ^{وَالْمِعَاطِنُ}, i. e. عِنْدَ الْمَاءِ is the place in which a camel kneels at the water in order to drink. And ^{عَطَنَ}, i. e. عَطَنَ, is used of a camel ^{اِذَا رَوَيْتَ ثُمَّ بَرَكَتْ}, is used of a camel when it has drunk enough, and then kneels down. He adds :

وَهِيَ اِبِلٌ عَاطِنَةٌ. She is termed A SATURATING, or drinking camel (קַפְּסָאָה). It is clear, I think, therefore, that the primary sense of the word itself is, drinking in, being saturated, or the like. And hence Castell gives عَطِيْنٌ, pellis, which is the very Hebrew word here used, viz. קַפְּסָאָה, and which, as it exhibits a participial form, might signify literally saturated, filled; i. e. a skin so dressed and prepared for use. And, as the Orientals make bottles of such skins as this—of which the ἀσθὺς of the New Testament will afford a good example (see Scapula and Stephanns, under the word)—it becomes extremely probable, that the word here used signifies such leathern bottle, and nothing else. It is remarkable enough, too, that وَاسِعُ الْعَطِيْنِ وَالْبَلَدِ, lit. Ample of irrigated pasture, or drink, and region, is given in the lexicons, as equivalent to “Liberalis, et munificus.” So, in the Greek, ἀσθὺς is used “de homine obeso, et vini, gurgite,” as Scapula tells us. Cogn. קַפְּסָאָה. Arcula. Chald. It. Arab. عَدْرَن. Stercoravit terram, repletus fuit potator.

If it be objected that קַפְּסָאָה here, in the sense of bottle, will form no parallel to the עֲצְמוֹתָיו, his bones following, and as observed by Bochart, my answer is : It is not necessary that these seeming hemistichs should, strictly speaking, be universally parallels. In many cases the latter stands as a consequence to the former hemistich ; of which we have good instances in the next two verses. It is marvellous that Bochart should never have observed this. In this view, therefore, the sense of the passage will be : His bottles are filled with new milk, and (hence) his bones are watered with marrow ; i. e. from his general prosperity he grows fat. It should be remarked too, that עֲצְמוֹתָיו and יְשָׁקָה correspond to one another well in the parallelism. From all which I conclude, that it is as clear as such a case can require, that קַפְּסָאָה, in this place, signifies that sort of leathern bottle in which milk, wine, &c., are kept in the East, and nothing else.

27. תְּהַמְסֵנִי. Lit. Ye force, urge violently, or drive עָלַי against or upon me.

28. נָדִיב. The Prince. This word signifies, more literally, liberalis, a liberal person ; which, having רְשָׁעִים in the parallel place, induces me to think that Libertine would be the best interpretation here ; for such Job's friends appear to have thought him to be. Ib. מְשֻׁבְּרֵי לֵב I take to be in apposition with אֱהָלָה, and to have been added by way of epanorthosis. Gram. Art. 216, 4. Job seems to say that the doctrines they had so tenaciously persevered in, they now applied by saying of him, "Where," &c.; i. e. We find no such person now: Divine vengeance has changed his state.

29. הֲלֹא שִׁאלְתֶּם. Have ye not asked? &c. That is, Are not your notions on this subject the most vulgar and crude possible? By persons passing by (עוֹבְרֵי דֶרֶךְ) is generally meant, common travellers. Ps. lxxx. 13; lxxxix. 42; Lam. i. 12; ii. 15, &c. Ib. וְאִתְּתֶם. And of their signs, tokens, intimations, are ye ignorant? i. e. You have inquired of men generally, and, in the result, i. e. such information as ye have obtained, ye persevere: which is indeed true enough, but by no means applicable to my case.

30. כִּי, &c. This seems to be a recurrence to the sentiments of Job's opponents, and therefore may be prefaced by some such word as לְאִמֹר, saying. Ib. עֲבָרֹת. Great wrath. I take this plural to intimate excess. Gram. Art. 223, 3.

31. מִי־יִגִּיד. Who could declare? Lit. bring forward, but here, denounce? I. e. Who ever dared to affirm, in the face of a rich and powerful tyrant, that his way was evil? For, supposing that he actually did (וְהוּא עָשָׂה) perform any evil deed; yet, Who was there who had courage and power sufficient duly to punish him? See Rev. xiii. 4.

32. וְהוּא, &c. Seems to be a continuation of the common sentiment just noticed, and which concludes at the end of vr. 34. Ib. גְּרִישׁ. The heap, tumulus, tomb. Chald. גְּרִישׁ.

Coacervavit; גְּרִישׁ, acervus. Syr. ܡܳܐܳܝܳܢܳܐ. Id. The English word tomb seems to me to be a word precisely of this description. Tombs (tumuli) were originally mere heaps of earth, apparently intended the more ostentatiously and safely to preserve the dead bodies of eminent men. In Tartary and China this custom prevailed; and considerable wealth was occasionally buried (see my Ibn Batuta's Travels, p. 220) in these tumuli. The Pyramids of Egypt carried this system to a higher state of perfection. In our own country, many of these ancient tombs are still visible; and, in some of our midland counties, tump (as potatoe-tump, in Shropshire) is still retained among the peasants. The Arab. جَدَشٌ. Ambivit rem, capiendi ergo: and جَدَشٌ, pl. أَجْدَاشٌ, terra crassa, seem nearly allied to this word: to which جَادَسٌ, durus, validus, and جَدَثٌ, sepulchrum, are probably cognates. See note on ch. v. 26, above; and on vr. 33 below.

Ib. וַיִּשְׁקוֹד. He watched (assiduously); Prov. viii. 34, &c. : i. e. His watchings, anxieties, &c. to acquire wealth and influence, were undertaken for the tomb, to end there, and to be drawn on in funereal pomp to the chambers of the grave. But this last member is capable of another sense, viz. One, some one (impers.), watched at, or over, the tomb. Which might have been customary in the East. Some think, that the watching here mentioned alludes either to a statue on his tomb, or to an inscription, which may be said to watch for his fame. If this be correct, the whole verse will read thus : As for him, he was led on to the chambers (of the grave), and one kept watch at his tomb. The former is undoubtedly the better interpretation.

33. מְרִיקָהּ. They were sweet, afforded sweetness, or seemed sweet. רִגְבֵי, &c. Stones, &c. Arab. رَجَبَ. Fulcivit arborem, &c. ; forte fuit lignum. Cogn. رَجَمَ. Fecit, struxitve tumulum congestis lapidibus : apposito marmore cippo, ornavit ; رَجَمَ, sepulchrum, tumulus, &c. ; رَجَمَ, lapides ad sepulchrum erecti. I have no doubt therefore, that the רִגְבֵי בְחָל here mentioned, mean the same thing generally, as the רִגְרִזֹת and רִדִישׁ preceding, but particularly monumental memorials; and that by לוֹ מְרִיקָהּ is meant, This pomp and funereal apparatus afforded him his only gratifying but empty honour; they presented the only pleasurable prospect that could be reckoned on, as the conclusion of all his contrivances, plans, labours, and anxieties. Tarafa, in his Moallakat Poem (Reiske's edit. p. 27), seems to have his view directed to this sort of person and sepulchre. His words are :

اري قبر نحام بخيل بماله كقبر غوي في البطالة مفسد
تري جثوتين من تراب عليهما صغابح صم من صغبح منضد.

“Video sepulcrum auheli, auro inhiantis, esse sicut sepulcrum incurii, qui hilaritati immoritur, opes dilapidantis.”

Vides duo tumulos pulvere aggestos, quibus supereminet strues porrectæ sordorum latorumque (lapidum), sibi invicem innitentium.”

Mr. Rich, in his Residence in Koordistan, saw many of these tumuli or funereal heaps, one of which was 960 feet long, nearly as broad, and 57 feet high.—Vol. i. p. 19. See also pp. 13, 22, 25, &c. In some of these, p. 14, silver ornaments were found, as in the cases referred to in my Ibn Batuta above cited. About ancient Nineveh these mounts were numerous; but the most splendid of these monumental remains was a large and very tasty marble construction, not very far from the ruins of Persepolis, which Mr. Rich was induced to believe was the tomb of Cyrus. Ib. vol. ii. p. 219, et seq.; it. p. 253, &c. See note, ch. xvii. 16.

Ib. וַיִּסְתַּחֲוֶי י. And after him. This may refer to the funeral procession: and the following, וַיִּלְכְּדֵי, And before him, refer likewise to the same thing. As if Job had said, All the world is drawn out after him, and indeed a multitude almost innumerable precedes him. And so some have taken it. I believe however the meaning to be, that his example shall attract many to follow and adopt his practices, as indeed many have done before him, in imitating similar characters: a similar sentiment is expressed in Ps. xlix. 14, where a similar subject is treated of. The Arabs, too, have adages to the same effect; e.g. وَإِذَا وَجَىٰ أَبُو دُلْفٍ وَوَلَّتِ الدُّنْيَا; عَلَىٰ الْأَثَرِ. So, when Abu Dolf runs away, all the world runs after him (see Freytag's Hamasa, p. 718); implying that whatever a famous man does becomes fashionable. So Saadi, الناس علي ديني ملوكهم. Men follow the religion of their king.

34. הָהָל. With vanity, or vainly. A term of specification. Gram. Art. 219, with note, and note to 219, 5. הָהָל, therefore, will give the true sense. Ib. מְעַל. Perverseness. Arab. مَعَل. Hurry, corruption, &c. See Castell. Cogn. مَعَل, which see. נִשְׁאַר. Is left, or found to remain. Lit. Your answers (as a whole) remain perverseness, &c. : i. e. they remain, after due consideration, mere error. How then can you imagine that they can be acquiesced in by me?

CHAPTER XXII.

1. Eliphaz now commences his third speech, repeating and defending the sentiments he had already uttered, and this with increased asperity, as indeed it is usual in prolonged controversies. The order of the speakers is, Eliphaz, Bildad, Zophar. The first speech of Eliphaz commences with ch. iv.; of Bildad, with ch. viii.; of Zophar, at ch. xi. To each of which Job gives a reply. At ch. xv., Eliphaz rejoins; at ch. xviii., Bildad; at ch. xx., Zophar. In each case as before Job replies. Here the third series takes its commencement, and Job as before replies. At ch. xxv. Bildad rejoins, and as before Job replies. Zophar takes no part in this third series of discourses. Job therefore continues his defence up to ch. xxxii. ; when Elihu burns for the contest, and accordingly addresses Job at considerable length, i.e. up to ch. xxxviii., when God himself speaks. Ch. xlii. contains Job's reply, which is but short ; and the book soon after ends.

2. יִרְפֵּן. He, or it, profits, is profitable, &c. On this word, see ch. xv. 3. Ib. גִּבֹר. A bold, intrepid, or warlike man, as formerly noticed. This class of men was usually supposed by the vulgar to approximate nearest to God : hence, perhaps, the use of the word in this place, implying a sort of comparison. Ib. כִּי. Since, because, &c. The object of the speaker seems to be to affirm, that it cannot be inferred from the consideration that as one intelligent man, or intelligent men generally, may be serviceable to others, any great or powerful man is therefore serviceable to God ; and therefore to imply, that the dignity of Job, however great that might be, cannot be counted upon as acceptable to the Almighty. He carries the matter still further, for vr.

3. He adds, הֲהִנֵּה. Is it a pleasure (much less a profit) to the Almighty that thou be just? &c. Ib. וְהִנֵּה. Or indeed an advantage? &c. Arab. بَصَّعَ. Amputavit partem ; بَصَّعَ, pars resecta ; بَصَّاعَةً, pars opum : wealth acquired by merchandise generally. Ib. תְּהִי, for Hiph. הִתְהַי (comp. הִקָּב), i.e. Thou declare or pronounce perfect. Gram. Art. 157, 6.

4. הֲמִיִּירָאָהָךְ. Lit. Whether from thy fear? i.e. religious fear, or piety.

5. אֲדִירָא. Usually, "Infinite." But there are great objections to this. 1. In this case the ה following will be useless. 2. Whether we supply הִלֵּל by the ellipsis, or only prefix this (ה), or any other interrogative, the passage will be made any thing but Hebrew. I take this last member therefore to be a direct asseveration, and virtually having the same sense with the first, as given in the Translation.

6. כִּי־תִחַבֵּל. For thou bindest, i.e. puttest into a sort of bondage, by pledge. See also note on ch. xvii. 1 ; and again on ch. xxiv. 3, below. הִנֵּה. Gratis, without any price, consideration, or other cause ; unjustly, tyrannically. Ib. וּבְגָדֵי צָרִיכִים. And the clothes of the naked ; i.e. from those who were already in a state of destitution generally. Naked may also be understood in the sense of thinly clad ; i.e. comparatively naked. Exod. xxxii. 25 ; Job, xxiv. 10, &c. So Seneca de Benef. lib. v. 13 : "Si qui malè vestitum, et pannosum videt, nudum se vidisse dicit." Rosenm. The more general acceptance strikes me as the best here.

8. וְיָאִישׁ זְרָעַי. Lit. And, or so, the man of arm, i.e. powerful.—Because the arm, or hand, is principally applied in feats of strength and valour, either of these is often taken to imply power. So זְרָעַי, in the Arabic. See Castell, under זְרָעַי, and זְרָעַי. See also Schultens in loc. Ib. וְיִקְבָּלָהּ פְּנִים. Lit. And the accepted of countenance, i.e. the honoured. This may be taken as addressed to Job himself, as if upbraiding him with cruelty, when in prosperity. The passage appears to me to contain the generally received truth, that powerful men—men whom Divine Providence has enriched—take forcible possession of the land of any country; and then, by the awe of their persons,—which this enables them to keep up,—they continue to reside in it. This, from what follows, was evidently intended to apply to our patriarch.

9. וְיִדָּפֵא. Lit. It becomes broken. See Gram. Art. 216, 3. It seems quite necessary here to continue the second person from the preceding verb, וְיִשְׁלַחְהָ.

10. מְבִיבוֹתֶיךָ. Lit. Thy roundabouts, i.e. places round about thee. So Shakespeare's Macbeth: "The very stones prate of my whereabout." Ib. וְיִבְהַלְתֶּךָ. And . . . perplexeth thee. Arab. cogn. بَهَرَ. Anhelavit, —onus cum impetu imposuit; مَاهَلَ, properans. It. phrasis, بَهَلَّ وَبَهَلَّ. "Vanus, mendax et iners homo." بَهَّ. Qui vagatur. Chald. בְּהַל. Festiuvit, terruit.

11. לֹא תִרְאֶה. Thou seest not: i.e. metaphorically, because thou art ignorant of the real cause of thy affliction; and thou seemest so to be situated, as if a torrent of waters had overwhelmed thee. Ib. תִּכְסֶּךָ. Covereth thee, i.e. accordingly, as a consequence of what has just been said. Gram. Art. 235.

12. גְּבוּהַ שָׁמַיִם. Lit. The height of the heavens, i.e. in the height, as the following context seems to require.

13. הַבְּעָד עֲרָפֶל. Whether through the thick darkness, &c. Shakespeare: "Peep through the blanket of the dark, and cry, Hold, hold."—Macbeth.

14. עָבִים, &c. Thick clouds, &c. Comp. Ps. xviii. 12, which seems to be an amplification of this place in Job. Ib. דְּרוּג. And the circuit, circumference, &c. Comp. Isa. xl. 22. Syr. سِي. Circumivit. Arab. حَاج (r. حوج). A cià detorsit. And generally, perhaps, from the notion of convexity, or hollowness, opus et necesse habuit. Chald. דְּרוּג. Circinavit. I.e. As God is so far above us, Dost thou imagine that He cannot therefore see, and control, the ways of men ?

15. הַאֲרַח וְגו'. The path, &c., i. e. religious notions and ways. In the same manner are אֲרַח and נְהַיִבוֹת, also used. See the Lexicons, or Concordance. Ib. עוֹלָם. Ancient, i. e. either of the posterity of Cain before the flood, or the followers of Nimrod after it ; here termed אֲנָן מְהִי, i. e. men of vanity, or iniquity. אֲנָן, cogn. אִין. Arab. آَن (r. اَوْن, or اَبْن). Commodè, placidè, se habuit tempestivè accidit, &c., ab آَن, tempus. Hence, from the religious notion of the shortness, uncertainty, and fleeting character of time,—a thing, nevertheless, in which worldly men (i. e. מְהִי הַלֵּךְ) confided,—we probably have אֲנָן, vanity, as if temporary and uncertain. Hence too, אִין (for אֲנָן). Is not, exists not, &c. Comp. cogn. אָו, rediit, evasit, &c.: the notion also taken probably from time. Hence אֲנִיל. Stultus, a mere worldling. عَالٍ (r. عَوْل). Declinavit. עוֹלִל. Iniquus. Ang. Evil, &c. See also note to ch. xxi. 19.

16. הִמְצִי. Lit. Became wrinkled, withered away ; an effect of wasting. See ch. xvi. 8. וְלֹא עֵרָה. Lit. And not (in) time ; i. e. untimely, unseasonably. See Eccl. vii. 17, &c. Ib. נְהַר. The river : a term very generally used to signify the Euphrates : and, as Job resided in the neighbourhood of that river, which indeed often overflowed its banks, I have no doubt it is meant here. “Innui videter,” says Rosenmüller, “eluvio Noachica.” But, how could this be termed a river ? מְבִיל is the name usually given to it. נְהַר, it is true, like flumen, signifies something flowing : but then, as the word in each case has been used to signify a river (which, with us also, primarily signifies something flowing), I do not see on what grounds a recurrence to primary significations can be justified in a translator, in opposition to customary ones : besides, the deluge could not be said to flow. Ib. יִיפֶק. Lit. It is poured out ; here, was poured out on, &c. Allusion is more probably made to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrhah, than to the general deluge. The terms “depart from us” are not unsuitable to the manner in which Lot was treated. See Gen. xix. 9–14.

17. וּמָה-יִפְעַל. And what could He do? &c. We have here a very sudden change of person in the context, which may thus be expressed : Who said of, or to God, recede thou from us : and who asked, What could, or would, the Almighty do to, or for them ? But, as said, and asked, exhibit only slight differences of meaning, the writer (as in verbs of sense) seems to have supposed that the ellipsis would be supplied readily enough. Eliphaz here manifestly ranks Job among the sinners of antiquity; for he takes his express words, ch. xxi. 14, 15, and puts them into their mouths: as he also does, at vr. 18, those spoken by him in ch. xxi. 16.

18. וְנִצְנֵת וְגו'. But, as to the counsel, &c., is an instance of abrupt transition, not uncommon to the high sententious style of Scripture: we have a similar instance in Gen. xlix. 18. The passage here is manifestly taken from vr. 16 of the preceding chapter, and is apparently retorted upon Job.

19. וְיָרַא וְגו'. The righteous see, &c., is no very modest assumption on the part of Eliphaz, who manifestly ranks himself here with that class.

20. אִם־לֵאלֹהִים. Lit. Surely (is it) not? taken interrogatively. נִקְהַר. Withholden, restrained: i. e.—as the force of the Niphthal form requires—is become so. וְקִיבְנֵי. Our adversary. קִיִּם is here, probably, a contracted form of קָרִיִּים, or קָרִיִּים. Gram. Artt. 73, 75. And, as these are forms proper for concrete nouns, the meaning will be concrete as of a person or thing. So נְזִיר. Nuncius, for נְזִירִי, or נְזִיר. Arab. صَارَ. Ivit, r. صَبَرَ. קִיִּם, therefore, will be equivalent, or very nearly so, to קָה, 2 Sam. xxii. 40, 49. The reader may see an admirable specimen of Jewish reasoning on this passage in Rosenmüller, as cited from De Rossi. The latter part of this verse evidently alludes to the fall of Sodom, Gomorrhah, and the other cities of the plain, and confirms the notice of this above, vr. 16. See also Gen. xix. 27, 28; and if we suppose Job to have taken a similar view of this destruction, we shall have a good application of vv. 19, 20, here.

21. בָּהֶם. Lit. In them; i. e. in the things just mentioned. In Isa. xxxviii. 16, עֲלֵיהֶם, and בָּהֶן, are used in precisely the same manner; as is also בָּהָא, Job, vi. 29; לְהֶן, xxx. 24. See the notes. Ib. הַבְּבוֹאֲרָהָה. This, according to Rosenmüller and some others, is the verb with a paragogic הָ, which, on account of the pronoun following, changes into הָ. He then translates it eveniet tibi, and cites Job, xx. 22; Ps. cxix. 77; and Deut. xxxiii. 16, as vouchers: not one, however, of which is in point. The last, which gives הַבְּבוֹאֲרָהָה, is the only one possessing the least claim to the distinction of being a verb; but even this may just as well be construed as a noun. See also the LXX. The cases of Abraham and Lot are probably here alluded to, whose wealth was so great, that they were under the necessity of separating. See Gen. xiii. 2, 5, &c.

22. הוֹרָה. Lit. Instruction; r. הָרָה, jecit, projecit, &c. This word is often used in the Mosaic law, and for it. It will not follow, on that account, that it has here any reference to that, as some have thought. Ib. וָשִׁים. And lay up. “וָשִׁים,” says Rosenmüller, “imperativus Hiphil, abjecto ה characteristico, ut Gen. xlv. 1, &c.” But the passages pointed out afford no proof, that this word ought to be considered as the imperative of Hiphil, nor, consequently, that we are to suppose that ה has here been rejected. The truth seems to be, the root of this verb has two forms, viz. וָשִׁים and וָשִׁים. In the Syriac, I believe, the form with a medial ו never occurs, but only that with י; as וְשָׁטָא, positus (I make no account of the vowel in וְשָׁטָא, nor of the ו, in וְשָׁטָא). Arab. سَامَ (r. سِيم). Æstimavit, stabilivit, &c. The form therefore belongs to Kal, not to Hiphil.

23. תִּבְנֶהָ. Thou art, or shalt be, or, become built up: i. e. thy house, or family, shall be established.

24. וָשִׁית. Lit. And lay thou up, &c. An instance in which an imperative is used for a future: i. q. וָשִׁים, or וָשִׁים. Ib. דָּבָר. Wealth. Of this word Rosenmüller says, “Significatio non satis quidem certo definiri potest, quum nec alias in V. T. recurat, nec dialecti cognatæ suppeditent nomen, quod cum hoc satis conveniat. Attamen,” adds he, “significari illo aliquod ex præstantioribus metallis, aurum, vel argentum, magna veri specie inde colligitur, quod in hoc Versu ex parallelismi lege respondet auro Ophirino.” I have given this at length, in order to enable the student to judge on what grounds the sense attributed to a word often rests.—It is sufficiently obvious that בָּצַר, in the Hebrew, signifies cutting, cutting off, &c.; and hence, vindemiavit, cutting, or cropping, the vintage; and בָּצִיר, vindemia, the crop, or vintage, just as בָּצִיר, from בָּצַר, is more usually applied to crops of corn, and thence to the harvest. Cogn. בָּצַע. Secuit, abscidit. See vr. 3. דָּבַר. Dividing, and hence, sparsit, &c. Arab. بَصَرَ. Cudit, percepit (which differs from نَظَرَ, to look on, رَأَى, to see, in this, that it signifies also to understand, see into, as if piercing or penetrating into any thing. I suppose, therefore, that piercing, or cutting, into, was its primary sense). Cogn. بَزَل. Fidit, incidit venam: hence, بَزَالَةٌ, wealth, as in the phrase, مَا بَعَيْتَ لَهُ بَزَالَةً. See Castell. Syr. حَص. Breviavit. Arab. بَصَعَ. Amputavit partem; مَصَعَ, divisit.

See also ⁵מִצֵּר and ⁵בַּצֵּל. Cutting, cropping, therefore, or the like, must be the primary sense of ⁵קָצַר; and then, secondarily, the vintage, just as ⁵קָצַר, the crop, or harrest, is of ⁵קָצַר. Arab. ⁵قَصَرَ. And, as the harrest may be taken, by a metonymy, to signify wealth generally, so may the vintage ⁵קָצַר, also to signify wealth, and hence strength, defence, &c. See Eccl. vii. 1, 2; which will supply us with the connecting link that unites this word with ⁵קָצַר and ⁵מִבְּקָר, munimentum, &c. In this point of view, then, it will suit well with ⁵אוֹפִיר, Ophir in this verse, and with ⁵קָרָה in the next, as far as the parallelism is concerned. We need not now suppose then that it signifies any precious metal. The notion of Michaelis, as noticed by Rosenmüller, does not deserve a moment's consideration. Nor is the etymology of Abulwalid, as adduced by Gesenius, any better; who makes ⁵קָצַר first signify a cutting (which is correct enough), and then secondly a particle of native gold, merely because in the Arabic ⁵تَبْر (تَبْر, fractio) means a piece of such gold, or silver. Jauhari tells us however that ⁵تَبْر means only such particle of gold. Some have supposed this word to be of foreign, not of Arabic, origin; but, if it were, it is totally unconnected with our word ⁵קָצַר. Gesenius has very ingeniously corrected an error of Winer on this word: it is remarkable enough, that he was not aware on what unsafe ground he himself stood.

Ib. ⁵עַל-עָפָר. On the earth. It has frequently been remarked, that ⁵עָפָר, dust, is often used in this book for ⁵אֶרֶץ, earth. If this be the case here, ⁵עַל must mean on, or upon, not præ, more than, as taken by Rosenmüller, who cites Ps. lxxx. 8; Job, xxiii. 1; Deut. xxviii. 1; and Eccl. i. 16, as authorities. But it is evident that the three first of these require no such interpretation of this particle. Ib. ⁵וּבְבֵיטָן. And in the rock. Some MSS. and editions have ⁵וּבְבֵיטָן. And like the rock: which seems to me neither to supply any sense, nor to answer to its correspondent ⁵עַל-עָפָר in the parallelism. ⁵בֵּיטָן commonly signifies a rock, and thence any safe and strong place. Ps. xxvii. 5; lxi. 3. Treasuries, moreover, were strong places sunk in the earth, and arched over with stone roofs, not much unlike the top of a dome; as may be seen in the books of travels into Greece. Ib. ⁵נְהַלִּים אוֹפִיר. Lit. The torrents, or valleys,—Ophir. In apposition. See Bochart's Phaleg. lib. ii. c. 27. A periphrasis for the riches, particularly the gold found there. Some have supposed הַחֲלִים here to denote abundance, as the Syr. and Arab. of the Polyglott. But there appears to be no good ground for this, as the text now stands. I take the two last words to be in apposition.

25. בְּעֲרִיחַ. Lit. Thy wealths or great wealth, and hence strength; which last I have placed in the Translation. The word appears to be a plural of excellence. Ib. הַתּוֹעֲפֹת. Lit. Heights. Comp. Ps. xev. 4, where הַתּוֹעֲפֹת הָרִים is opposed to הַתְּהַרְרֵי-אֶרֶץ. Hence, Heaps or treasures of silver. وَعَفَّ, in the Arabic, however, signifies "Locus omnis durior, in quo restat aqua": and, if this sense govern the passage, it should be translated, Silver of thy strength or endurance; i. e. thy strong or enduring silver. הַתּוֹעֲפֹת, in this sense, will form a parallel to שְׂפָיִ, Almighty, preceding. The Targum has הַתּוֹעֲפֹת הַתְּהַרְרֵי. See Hieroz. Boch. p. i. lib. iii. cap. xxvii.

26. הִתְהַלֵּג. Lit. Become delighted; i. e. delight thyself, here. Comp. Matt. vi. 21.

27. וְהִתְחַוָּה. And thy vows, &c. This ought to be construed immediately after אֶלֶי, thus: Make thou thy prayer to Him, and pay thy vows; so shall He assuredly hear thee. The paragogie וְ, marked in הַ, intimates a consequence with emphasis. Gram. Art. 235, 3. Such transposed members may often be rendered as ablatives absolute in Latin, e. g. Having paid thy vows. Comp. Eccl. v. 3, 4.

28. וְהִתְחַוָּה. Thou shalt cut, decide, or determine. אֶמְרָא. Lit. A word; hence matter, any thing declared or given out, as an edict. Esth. ii. 1; Dan. iv. 14, &c. Ib. וְהִתְחַוָּה. Lit. So it, or, accordingly it, stands; i. e. is established. Ib. וְהִתְחַוָּה. Light shall shine: i. e. God shall send thee down prosperity, as the rays of light flow from the sun. Not unlike this is a passage in the Hamāsa, ed. Freytag, p. 118:

فَسَأَىٰ إِلَٰهِي الْعَمَّتَ مِنْ كُلِّ بَلَدَةٍ إِلَيْكَ فَأَضْحَىٰ حَوْلَ بَيْتِكَ نَارًا.

So my God shall drive the rain to thee from every quarter, and shall cause the light to shine about thy house, in descending (on thee).

Which, the Scholiast tells us, signifies that God shall make the world subject to the command of such an one (تحت امرك), just as Eliphaz says here, וְהִתְחַוָּה אֶמְרָא, &c.

29. הִשְׁפִּילוּהָ. They cast down, i. e. others, as opposed to אֶמְרָא, included in הִתְחַוָּה. See Isa. xxv. 11; where this verb forms a sort of opposition with הִתְחַוָּה, which is only another form of the הִתְחַוָּה, used here. Rosenmüller, "Quum humi- liatæ fuerint, scil. דְּרָרְקִיָּה, viæ tuæ." But in this case the verb ought to have been passive; and the same is true of our Auth. Vers. in "When men are cast down." Besides, if דְּרָרְקִיָּה had been the antecedent, the verb would probably have been in the feminine form, as in many instances already noticed. See Gram. Art. 216, 7. Gesenius gives, "Ubi submissee agunt homines, jubet elationem, i. e. modestos, mansuetos homines attollis:" which, according to my notions, is equally remote from the intention of the writer. Ib. גְּנָה.

Exaltation. Arab. جَاءَ (r. جَوْه), potentia, dignitas: it. Pers. جَاءَ. Cogn. Heb. גָּאָה, in altum excrevit, &c. We have גְּנָה here, probably for גָּאָה, by a contraction. Gram. Art. 86, 5. וְהִיאָמַר. And thou shalt say, i. e. command; alluding to the first part of the preceding verse.

30. אִי־נָקִי. Whosoever (is) pure. Rosenmüller, "Salvum reddet sontem." In his note, "Liberabit scil. Deus etiam non innocentem." I must confess this strikes me as perfectly irreconcilable with the doctrines propounded in this book. The sense of the particle אִי, which Gesenius (and after him Winer, Rosenmüller, and others) says is the Æthiopic ኢ: non, is perhaps the whole authority and reason adducible for this translation. But why not take the Hebrew אִי־ן abbreviated, as Buxtorf proposes, which will afford the same translation? Why go to the Ethiopic for what the Hebrew itself will supply? I object however to the sense arrived at, for the reason already given; and prefer taking the Hebrew particle, אִי, in an indefinite sense, usually pointed אִי, or אִי, quis; indefin. quicumque. To which the Arab. أَيٌّ, or Æth. ኢ: will correspond. This particle is a verbal noun (form פְּקִיד) from the root אָרָה, desiring. Arab. أَوَّي. Habitavit, &c. Hence אִי־ן, contr. אִי; as רִי is from רָוִי. Gram. Art. 73. Ib. וְנִמְלֵט. Yea, he shall be delivered. If the preceding וְנִמְלֵט is to be taken impersonally, and translated passively, the Niph. נִמְלֵט will afford a good explanation of it; and, with the וְ, yea, preceding it, will have the effect of strengthening the sense. פָּבֵר. By, rather, in the purity, &c. See Ezek. xviii. 22.

CHAPTER XXIII.

2. מָרִי Bitter, for מְרִיָּה (form מְרִיָּה, Targ. מְרִיר), contracted (by Gram. Art. 74) from מְרִירָה, in the sense of the cogn. מְרִיר, Gram. Art. 202, 3. Comp. 2 Kings, xiv. 26.

Ib. יָדִי כְבֹדָה. My hand is heavy. “Suffixum in יָדִי” says Rosenmüller, “non esse active, sed passive, accipiendum, manus s. plaga manu inflicta . . . qua percussus a Deo,” &c. And, in this way, the passage has generally been taken. Commentators do not seem to have been aware, that when this word (viz. כְּבֹד) is applied to certain parts of the human body, the meaning is that such part has lost its natural vigour, and hence has become heavy, tardy, and powerless. In Exod. xvii. 12, for example, we have יָדֵינוּ מִשֵּׁה כְבֹדִים, and the hands of Moses were heavy (which is the natural sensation when the circulation has been impeded by any means), i.e. from continually elevating them they had lost their power, and so fell heavily down; and hence it was necessary that they should be supported. So the term is applied to the eyes, Gen. xlviii. 10; to the ears, Isa. lix. 1; and to the heart, Exod. ix. 7, &c. Growing fat is used much in the same sense. See Ps. lxxiii. 7. In Isa. vi. 10, we have הִתְשַׁמְן, in the parallelism with הִתְכַבֵּד. We have a similar usage in Ps. lxxvii. 3, which has proved a great stumbling-block to the commentators. The passage is, יָדִי לִילָה נִנְרָה, and the main difficulty is found in the verb נִנְרָה. The lexicons give, cucurrit, fluxit, fluere factus, fusus, &c.; and the question is, How can these apply to the hand! In Ps. lxxviii. 33, we have פָּגַשׁ יָדָיו לְאֱלֹהִים, Cush shall thrust out (lit. cause to run out) his hands to God. There will no difficulty occur in observing, in the first place, some affinity between the notions of running and flowing; which will, in some degree, unite the phraseology of both these places. In the next place, נִנְרָה seems also to involve the notion of drawing out in length, either as to time or place. See its usage in the concordance. So, in the Chald. נִנְרָה signifies traxit; in the Syr. نَزَعَ, moratus est, tardavit, &c. In both cases, therefore, to thrust out, and to continue, the hands in that position, was probably intended by the Psalmist; and if so, allusion was, perhaps, made to Exod. xvii. 12, cited above; and the consequence would be, a sensation of heaviness and weakness, as in that case. Another analogy too, may be mentioned here, viz. the notion of weakness, as usually attached to any thing flowing, in the Hebrew, as Gen. xlix. 4, spoken of Reuben, פָּהָזוּ מַיִם אֶל־הַיַּרְדֵּן, swelling as the waters, exceed thou not; while, on the contrary, any thing standing fast (as in the verb נִנְרָה) generally implies stability and strength. In Ps. lxxvii. 3, therefore, pain seems to be implied in the term נִנְרָה; and hence, it is followed by מִצָּנָה הַפָּחַם, &c. How our Translators could find “my sore ran” in this, it is out of my power to say. The ἡ χεὶρ μου νεκρὸς ἐκτέτατο διηνεκῶς, of Symmachus, and Jerome’s manus mea nocte extenditur, are not far from the truth, particularly the former. So in the Arab. كَبِدَ, vir medio obesus fuit, كَابِدَ, obduruit contra rem, تَكَبَّدَ, crassum spissumque evasit, كَبِدٌ, difficultas, angustia. What Job intends to say therefore is, that on account of his sorrow (the cause of his sighing), his power was entirely gone, his hand had forgotten its cunning, had become unnerved. (See רָפָה in the concordance, and vr. 16, הֲרַף לִבִּי, and the note.) There does not appear, therefore, the least necessity here for having recourse to the metonymy recommended by Rosenmüller, Schnurrer, &c.

3. יָדַעְתִּי וְאִמְנָחָהּ. Lit. I knew, or had knowledge, and could find Him, i.e. had so much knowledge that I could do this effectually, see ch. xxxi. 25. The “where I might,” &c. of the Auth. Ver. is therefore inaccurate. See Gram. Art. 222, 4. Ib. הַתְּכַבֵּירוֹ. Lit. His appointment, or establishment, r. כּוֹן. This word, as used in Ezek. xliii. 11, evidently designates some part of the temple; and, from the context here, it should seem that the place meant is one in which questions were publicly propounded, and responses obtained: probably the same with the דְּבִיר in Solomon’s Temple. In the Syr. we have ܘܢܘܢ, arguit, corripuit, and ܘܢܘܢܐ, increpatio, &c.; as if the word itself carried with it the notion of inquiry and disputation. See the following verse. His appointed place, therefore, seems to be the sense here intended.

4. אֶעֱרְכָהּ. Lit. Let me arrange, set in order, &c.; but here the parag. ה shows this context to be dependent on the foregoing. Gram. Art. 234, 2. Ib. מִשְׁפָּט, judgment, by a metonymy, the case or question proposed for judgment. Ib. הַתּוֹכְחוֹת. Lit. Rebukes, or reproofs; here, arguments, r. וּכַח. Æth. ἄποῖμα: disceptavit, disputavit. Arab. وَكَلَّمَ, valide conculcarit pede suo, &c.

5. מִלִּים אֲשֶׁר יַעֲנֵנִי בָהֶם, ellip. for מִלִּים יַעֲנֵנִי בָהֶם. The words with which he would answer me. I have made the translation equally elliptical. The parag. ה, in each of the verbs here, has the same connecting power that has been just noticed in אֶעֱרְכָהּ.

6. וַיִּשָׁב בִּי, for וַיִּשֵׁב לִבּוֹ בִּי. Would place His heart upon me, i.e. His affections, or love. See note on ch. iv. 20; Isa. xli. 22; Hag. ii. 15, where, perhaps, it rather means attention, regard; which would fall below the exigency of the place here.

7. נֹכַח עִבּוֹ. Lit. Become impleaded, i. e. tried with Him; which, in our idiom, requires before Him. לְנֶגְדוֹ, entirely, or for ever. מִשִּׁפְּטָי. Lit. From my judge; which can hardly apply here to God, but rather to Job's opponents and enemies generally. More literally, From him judging me, i.e. as I understand it, from my opponents and adversaries, who persevere in affirming bitter things against me.

9. שְׂמֵאלוֹ. On the left hand, supp. from the preceding verse, וְלֹא אֶבִּין לוֹ, I perceive him not. Ib. בְּעֵשְׂתוֹ. Lit. In His working, i.e. in the operations of his hands generally as seen around me. Ib. וְלֹא אֶחֱזוּ. But I comprehend not. On the precise force of the verbs, רָאָה, he saw, נָצַר, רָאָה, נָצַר, and בָּטַר, בָּטַר. See the note on ch. xxii. 24. The root חָזַה (of which אֶחֱזוּ is an apocopated present tense of kal, as in אֶשֶׁה, of אָשָׁה, Deut. x. 3; Ezek. xii. 7, &c.) seems to be cognate with אֶחֱזוּ, prehendit, comprehendit, &c., and thence to signify, not merely to see, but also to comprehend, retain, fully to understand; which suits the context well here: and, perhaps, equally well in every other place in which it is found. Comp. Job, xv. 17; xxiv. 1, &c. Hence, חָזַה will not signify seer only, but one who comprehends, holds, and relates, as matter of instruction, what he has thus received. In Job, viii. 17, it is doubtful whether יִחְזֶה is not to be taken in the sense of אֶחֱזוּ. See the place. Arab. حَزَى. mensuram inivit conjectura, ariolatus est, &c. حَزَا (r. حَزَو), continuit in disciplinâ, &c. حَدَا, applicuit calcem calceo, atque ita dimensus fuit. حَدَى, adhæsit, cepit, comprehendit, &c. Ib. יִעֲטֶהּ. He veils, or pass. is veiled.

10. וְדַרְבֵּי אֱלֹהִים עִמָּי. Viam quæ est mecum. Rosenm. in loc. The phraseology, viz. the way that is with me, seems strange; but, as אֱלֹהִים must, in all such constructions, mean religious faith, belief, or the like; laid up, or kept, will suggest itself as necessary to supply the ellipsis; so vr. 11, וְדַרְבֵּי שְׁמֵרְתִי, and כִּפְתִּי, vr. 12. See also vr. 14, and ch. xxvii. 11, 13, where עָם is used in the same manner; Dan. x. 11, &c. Ib. פָּזְקֵב אֶסָּא. As gold shall I come forth; i.e.—alluding to the purifying of metals in a strong fire,—when God has tried me by affliction as far as shall seem good to Him, I shall both be divested of those earthly attachments which now probably soil my profession (see ch. ix. 31), and shall be acceptable to Him. Hence the many allusions, in the subsequent books of Scripture, to the purifying of metals, Ps. xii. 7; Isa. i. 22, 25; Prov. xxv. 22; Rom. xii. 20, &c. See also ch. xxviii. 1, &c.

11. בְּאִשְׁרוֹ. On His step, track, or path. The root אִשַׁר is cogn. with יָשַׁר, which see. Arab. أَشَرَ aut وَشَرَ, secuit, divisit, serrá—serratos fecit et exacuit dentes. Hence the notion of regularity, straightness, rectitudo; and thence, as a consequence, hilarity: أَشْرٌ, alacritas et lætitia modum excedens; أَشْرِي, lætitia exultans et effusus. See אִשְׁרֵי, Ps. i. 1, &c. In like manner, every thing crooked, tortuous (as עָוָה עֲקָשׁ, &c.) is taken to represent wickedness, and thence, as a consequence, sorrow. אִתְּקַח, hath taken fast hold; וְלֹא־אָטָה, and so I have not declined, or fallen. Apocope of אִתְּקַח, Hiph. of אָטָה. I take the apocope here to imply a consequence. See Gram. Art. 233, 3, 4.

12. וְלֹא אָמַיִשׁ. And I have not put away; that is, In addition to keeping God's path generally, I have also adhered to every precept of His. Which takes for granted, at least, that some precepts of God had been revealed prior to this time. I take אָמַיִשׁ in the sense proper for the Hiphhil form, as in Mic. ii. 3, 4. Comp. Ps. xviii. 24, which is an excellent parallel to this place. Rosenmüller prefers the sense of kal here; but as the following כִּפְתִּי, I have treasured up, taken to myself, and preserved, manifestly forms an opposition to this verb, the Hiphhil sense is necessary to the passage. Arab. صَعَنَ, in rectam seriem collocavit pedes: صَعْنٌ, vas coriaceum, uterculus, in quo deportatur aqua: sacculus pastoris, &c. Cogn. صَعَنَ, imposuit camelo onus. Hence the notion of getting together, and laying up. מִדְּקָרִי for מִדְּהִיֹּת דְּקָרִי, from being my statute, law, &c.; which makes the passage both easy and natural.

13. וְהוּא בְּאָדָר. Lit. But he on, or in one; I supply the ellipsis by יָשַׁם לְבָבוֹ, places his heart, mind, intention, on some one person, object, or thing. וְיָמֵי וְנֹרָא, then who shall effectually turn Him back? (Gram. Art. 235, 1), i.e. Who can resist him? Job's opinion evidently is, that God had caused his affliction: he now says, this affliction is inevitable.

14. וְיִשְׁלֵיִם הִקְפִּי. He shall perfect, bring about, my law, the thing impressed upon my mind as his intention, viz. that my way is right with Him: or, perhaps, more generally, He shall bring to effect that which His own law,—the law that I have adopted as my own,—requires, viz. that justice be done to me. So Paul (Rom. ii. 16) styles the Gospel of Christ "my gospel," i.e. that which I have adopted, and now preach. וְכִדְהָרָה, and like these things many others are with Him, i.e. they remain with Him for final decision and execution.

15. עַל־זֶה. On this account, i.e. for these reasons I hold that, from His presence, and by his permission and decree, I am thus reduced to difficulty. אֶתְּבַיֵּן. I understand the matter, I perceive its origin and course: and I fear (from) him, i.e. from Him my fears really come. To the same effect is the following verse, which was perhaps added to explain and confirm this sentiment.

17. לֹא נִקְמַתִּי. I have not been silenced, i.e. reduced to a deathlike state; which last this term often denotes. So Æth. ἄσπῆ: funditus eversus fuit. Arab. صَمِتَ, silit. מִפְּנֵי־הַחֹשֶׁךְ. Lit. By, or at, the presence of darkness. But darkness is usually put for adversity, as אֹרֶךְ, light, is for prosperity; that is, it is no common, or natural, calamity which has thus injured and afflicted me. וְיִמְצָנִי וְנֹרָא, I read כְּפִדְרֵי־אֵשֶׁל, lit. nor by, or at, the presence of the throne of thick darkness. The conjunction (ו) seems here to require, that מִפְּנֵי should in both cases be read alike, as also does the parallelism. In Ps. xciv. 20, we have, the throne of destruction, כְּסֵא הַהֲרִיֹת, which I take to be a good parallel to כְּסֵא אֵשֶׁל in this place, as to sense; and, in Ps. xlvii. 9, כְּסֵא הַקְּדוֹשׁ, the throne of his holiness, which are sufficient to shew that this word is thus applied. Here, however, כְּסֵא, or כְּסֵא, must be equivalent to power, i.e. must signify, by a metonymy, the power of some enthroned person; or, the power of darkness, the devil. So the πύλαι κρίσεως of Matt. xvi. 18; because the person giving judgment usually sat in the gate of the city. The passage in Matthew is, therefore, probably an imitation of this in Job. Comp. Luke, xxii. 53; Col. i. 13; Rev. xvi. 10. That passive verbs are construed with מִן, &c. see Gram. Art. 229, 6. The author of the Syriac version, and, after him, of the Arabic of the Polyglott, took this, or very nearly this, view of this passage; which, as far as I can see, is the only tolerable one.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1. מַה־עַיִן. What? Quid? Comp. of מָה, and עַיִן for יָדַע, Gram. Art. 76. Lit. What, to wit? Quare scilicet? In this respect it is, I think, that the compound differs from the simple מָה, or מַה; and this sense it will, perhaps, every where bear. Compare particularly ch. xviii. 3; xxi. 7; xxxiii. 13. Ib. בְּמַעֲרָבָה. Collected and laid up, &c. See ch. xxiii. 12. בְּמַעֲרָבָה, times, by a meton. for the events, or circumstances, of time. וַיִּדְעוּ, and they who know Him, i.e. the truly religious. לֹא־רָאוּ וְגוֹ. They do not see, comprehend, understand, his days? i.e. the truly informed, those who rightly understand God's word, see not, nor understand, either the seasons or the objects which His good Providence determines to bring about. So Acts, i. 7, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power." In stricter sense, God's day is that in which his righteous counsels shall prevail. So, "Abraham rejoiced to see my day," John, viii. 56; Luke, xvii. 24. Comp. Ps. cx. 3, 5; 1 Cor. i. 8; Phil. ii. 16. See "Day of the Lord," in Cruden. The first verse of this chapter, therefore, presents nothing more than a continuation of the argument urged in the concluding verses of the last; the sum of which seems to be, that, however Job's opponents might have obscured this question by their misapplied wisdom, the whole matter had proceeded from Divine Providence, which reserved to itself, in this case, both the times and particular modes of its own exertions.

2. בְּבֹרֵית יְשָׁרִים. The boundaries they, i.e. wicked men come up to, fearlessly advance to them; i.e. in a pregnant sense or metonymy, to break down, remove, or the like: v. בְּשָׂג, or בְּסָג, i. q. כִּיג. Cogn. שָׂגָה, et שָׂגָה, which see. This practice, in countries so imperfectly governed as those of the East have been at all times, must often have been had recourse to by wicked, thievish men; nor is it unknown in our own. Ib. וַיִּרְעֵי. And they feed, or pasture, i.e. on the land so approached: or, it may signify, the flock, so stolen, on the lands of others; but not as the Auth. Ver. "feed thereof."

3. נִחְזְּבֵי. "They pledge," usually. I nevertheless question its accuracy, on many accounts. 1st. To take any pledge is very far short of the crimes here mentioned. 2d. We have no good grounds for supposing, that any law ever existed against this in the East: certainly none is to be found in the Bible. It is forbidden, indeed, in Deut. xxiv. 17, to take the widow's raiment to pledge; but this is a very different thing. The raiment was necessary for the preservation of the health and life of the person. Not so the ox, any more than other property which was allowed to be pledged. Besides, it will be too much to suppose that a code so strict and particular as that of Moses actually existed among the Scenite Arabs at this day. 3d. The word נִחְזְּבֵי here used, does not necessarily signify, they take as a pledge, &c. Dr. Bernstein has already remarked (Rosenm. in loc.), that the verb may here be a denominative; that is, formed from the noun חֲזָבֵל, a rope, or cord, and thence a snare, see ch. xviii. 9, 10. So, in the Arab. حَبَلٌ, funē adstrinxit, reti cepit, fūdus inivit, &c. Castell thinks he finds the English cable-rope in this word, which is far from improbable, as many words adopted by us are manifestly of Oriental origin. To pledge, or take in pledge, is therefore evidently a secondary sense, implying that the thing so given or taken is under a bond; and hence, perhaps, the term "go free" (Isa. lviii. 6, &c.), "restore," &c. are used in opposition to it. If, therefore, we take the verb here in its primary sense, i. e. to bind with a cord, reduce to bondage, &c. we shall have a sense quite in unison with the context, and most suitable perhaps to the times and circumstances here had in view. The Jews appear to have found some difficulty here, as in one of De Rossi's MSS. נִחְזְּבֵי stands in the place of נִשְׁוֵי, — an evident attempt to make this place square with Deut. xxiv. 17, noticed above. The Syriac and Arabic of the Polyglott, too, have this reading, which I take to be a manufactured one, for the reasons just given.

4. נִבְּזֵי. Lit. They put down, in the true English sense of the phrase: they represent them as base. נִבְּזֵי, from the way, i. e. as irreligious, and deserving of hard usage. The term is applied to the dislodging of the feet, as in Ps. lxxiii. 2. See note on ch. xii. 5. Ib. נִחְזְּבֵי. Hence, they become hidden; they fly to the rocks and caves of the earth, Heb. xi. 38.

5. הֵן פָּרָאִים. Behold, as wild asses. We have here a vivid description of what the Badaween (i.e. desert) Arabs always have been and still are, in contradistinction to those who lived by pasturing their cattle. It was foretold that Ishmael's descendants should be of this character; and hence, perhaps, he was styled פָּרָאִי אִשְׁמָאֵל, lit. a wild ass-man. See Gen. xvi. 12. As comparison is evidently intended, the particle כִּי, like, as, must be understood. On the nature of this animal, see Bochart. Hieroz. Pars I. lib. III. cap. xvi. Etym. Arab. فَرَّاءٌ, ouager. Cogn. فَرَّيَ, secuit, peragravit terram. فَرَّ, fugit. فَرَّعَ, alacer, &c. Ib. בְּפִעֲלָם. For their work, but by a meton. for their reward, or hire of their work: in which sense this word is often used. Ib. מִשְׁחָרֵי. Lit. Dawners of—for the prey, as if לְמַזְרָה, to or for the prey, was proverbial with these people. This will account for the form of construction here used. Ib. יַעֲרֹבָה. The solitude. Hence, أَعْرَابٌ, Arabes, pec. Campestris, et Scenitæ. Gesenius thinks that by יַעֲרֹבָה, is meant الغور, i.e. the valley near the Jordan. This is very doubtful. Ib. לוֹ. To him, i.e. to each one of the persons had in view. Ib. לֶחֶם. Bread, food, or provision, generally: by a metonymy, taking the place for the thing produced or obtained in it.

6. בַּשָּׂדֶה. In the field, i.e. just as they sallied out into the desert for the prey; so here into the fields, each to cut the grass of others for his own use. In this view we have to supply from the preceding verse, וַיִּצְאֵהוּ, and all is easy and natural. Most of the ancient versions seem to have read לוֹ בְּלִילוֹ in two words, instead of בְּלִילוֹ his fodder, which Rosenmüller thinks makes the passage easier. I think it sufficiently easy as it stands; and that this division has been made, because its author—whoever he was—did not see how to supply the ellipsis. On this word see the note on ch. vi. 5. Ib. רָשָׁע, may be taken adverbially, wickedly. I think it more natural to take it as the nominative to יִלְקְטֵנָהוּ, lit. they cut or crop, generically as implying the whole species, and hence, as a plural. Very considerable obscurity rests on the primary and precise signification of this verb. From Amos, vii. 1, where it occurs twice, it should seem to signify something like our after-math (or after-mowth, perhaps); but whether cropping, or collecting, is the primary sense, it will be difficult to determine. In the Arabic we have لَقَسَّ, malè habuit. لَغَشَّ, i. q. يَبِيسُ بَالًا, dry, old. Cogn. لَعَصَّ, ussit pellem : angustus, pravus fuit animus, viii. i. q. أَخَذَ, accepit: لَعَزَّ, percussit pugno, i. q. لَكَزَّ, avarus. لَكَّسَّ, difficilis. لَكَدَّ, manu percussit. لَعَزَّ, à suo modo distorsit. لَعَتَّ, celeriter accepit rem universam, &c. From all of which, it should seem, that taking, injuring by pressure, hard treatment, diminution, or the like, is generally meant; which, when applied to fruits or fodder, would mean cropping off, or cutting down. And this seems to be the sense most suitable to Amos, vii. 1, just referred to. The Syr. لَحَمَّ, tardavit, &c. when applied to fruits, rain, &c., is perhaps a secondary sense, marking the last state of such fruit, &c. when fit for cropping or gathering. The Heb. לָקַט (lit. cutting), the grass or hay, either already cut, or ready for it, as our after-math. If this be the case, לָקַט, לָקַטָה, לָקַטָה; Lat. lego, lingo: Engl. lick, lag: Gr. λήγω, λήγω, &c. are more remote cognates. In this view, לָקַטָה will correspond, in sense, to קָטַרָה preceding, as the parallelism requires.

7. עָרוֹם. Naked, i. e. those generally who are in this situation; the singular here standing for the species. קָלוּנוּ, they lodge, or remain, &c. If we take לֹוֹן as the root, קָלוּנוּ will be the Hiphhil form; if לוֹיִן, it will be that of kal, which I prefer. I have added therefore here, in order to point out the connexion of the context; which, when the language was vernacular, might have been intimated either by the gesture or the sort of accentuation employed by the speaker. The want of these connecting particles creates much of the difficulty occurring in the more lofty writings of the sacred penmen. Ib. בָּקָרָה. In the cold, r. קָרָר. Arab. قَرَّرَ, firmiter mansit, frigit dies. Syr. عَم, frigescit. Æth. ቀረረ : id.

8. מִחָקָה. Lit. A place of refuge. See Concord. Syr. مَحْفَافٌ, benignus, &c. Arab. حَاشِيٌّ, præsidium, protectio, castrum, and مَعَادَ اللَّهِ, which Jauhari interprets by مَعَادَ اللَّهِ, i. q. מִחָקָה יְלֹהִים. Ib. חִבְּקוּ. They embrace. Arab. حَبَبَتْ, congressit simul, solidam ac firmam efficit rem. Cogn. حَبَبَكَ, bene contexit. Syr. مَحَبَّتًا, amplexus. Cogn. مَحَبَّتٌ, confudit, miscuit. צִיָּר, the rock. That is, they are driven for shelter among the crags of the rocks. Not unlike this is the passage in King Lear :

“ Poor houseless wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm (comp. צִיָּר).
How will your looped and windowed raggedness Defend you (הַיָּהוּדָה צִיָּרָהּ בְּכַסֵּי) 'gainst seasons such as this ? ”

9. מִשֵּׁד. From the breast. Comp. Isa. lx. 16. Chald. נְשָׂדָא, fudit, effudit. Cogn. פָּדָ. Syr. ܡܡܡܐ, mamma. Gr. πιτονη. Engl. teat. Castell. Arab. نَدَا, rigavit : نَدَيْ, mamma. They steal the unfriended even from the breast ; i.e. to use, or sell, them as slaves. Ib. יִחַבְּלֵי. See ch. xxii. 6 ; and vr. 3, above.

10. עָרֹם הֵלְכֵי. The naked they cause, or force to walk, proceed, go, &c. As this verb has no Hiph'il form, Pihel supplies its place. Nothing is more distressing than the almost naked state in which the slaves of the East live, and under which they suffer the extremities of heat and cold. Ib. בְּשֵׂאֵי. They bear, or carry, the sheaf, i.e. to this state of oppression and destitution is added, that of gathering in the crops in hunger : a species of labour for which the workman had a peculiar claim to good wages and feeding. Comp. Deut. xxv. 4 ; Jer. xxii. 13 ; Mal. iii. 5 ; Jam. v. 4. עֲמֵר, the sheaf. Arab. عَمِير, durior crassiorque pannus : cultus ; agricola. Cogn. عَمَرَ, arctius colligavit. عَمُور, manipuli, id. et i.q. عَمُور, Gen. xxxvii. 7.

11. שִׁדְרָהֶם. Their walls. שָׂדֵר, a wall. Arab. سُوْر, murus urbis. سُوْرَة, strues, ordo, &c. Chald. שִׁדְרָה, linea, ordo, series. Castell. Arab. شَوَار, supellex. I take the term, therefore, to mean those compartments in the oil-factories, in which the labourers made the fine oil named שִׁדְרָה ; which was probably so called on account of its clear and transparent appearance. See the root שָׂדַר. Ib. יִשְׂהִירוּ. They make the fine oil. In most cases, when verbs are formed from concrete substantives, the form taken is either Pihel or Hiph'il. Arab. ظَهَرَ, mundus fuit. ظَهَرَ, apparuit, vicit, &c. Cogn. صَهَرَ, ardore læsit, liquavit rem. صَهَارَة, medulla, res munda. These hardships are probably not unlike those of the Roman Pistrina, of which the slaves in Plautus complained and were in so much dread. See his "Asinaria."

12. לֹא יִשֵּׁים תְּפִלָּה. Setteth it not down as iniquity, i.e. visits it with no visible immediate judgment. See ch. i. 22; vi. 6. The verbs נָתַן, יָשַׁם, נָשְׂרָה, are often used in the sense of giving out, setting something to an account, or the like.

13. הֵיוּ בְּמַרְדֵי-אֹר. Lit. They have existed, continued among, the rebels of light, i.e. They are those who resist it. The context requires that light be here understood of true religion, which the Bible makes the groundwork of all real happiness. Comp. John, iii. 20, &c.

14. לְאֹר. Lit. At the light, at lucem. Comp. Gen. xlix. 27. But, whether this means, at the first appearance of light, viz. the dawn, or in the full light of day, is not quite certain. From the connexion with פְּלִילָה here, I am inclined to think that the dawn of the day is meant. During the night he remains as a thief, i.e. he steals about from place to place, hunting out objects for depredation; and, at the time of light, arises,—gets up, or, as we say vulgarly, he takes,—and kills the poor. If rising early from bed had been meant, יִשְׁכַּח would probably have been used. Comp. ch. i. 5; Gen. xix. 27, &c. It is true, both Gesenius and Winer make קוּם to signify surgere de lecto, &c. I doubt, however, whether that meaning can be fixed upon it in any case. The Arabic translator of the Syriac طَاع, has وَقَفَ, stood; which is not far, perhaps, from the true sense. Ib. יָהִי. He, accordingly, i.e. as a consequence of this, is or remains as a thief, as just noticed.

15. וְיִכְתֵּר וְגו'. Lit. So he lays concealment on faces, i.e. he persuades himself that he shall thus blind the world. This sense of יָשַׁם, or נָשְׂרָה, has been often noticed. פְּנֵים, faces, seems to me to require a general application; not to his own face, as the authorised version has taken it: for then it would rather have been פְּנֵיָהּ, or פְּנֵיָי. Comp. Prov. vii. 9, which is apparently an imitation of this place.

16. יִחְדֵּר וְגו'. He digs, impers. some one, &c. According to Arabic usage, this verb seems to signify under-digging, i.e. digging under the foundation of a wall,—a thing occasionally practised by prisoners even in this country. On this verb Jauhari says, حَتَرْتُ الْبَيْتَ حَتْرًا وَذَلِكَ إِذَا ارْتَفَعَ أَسْفَلَ الْحِبَاءِ عَنِ الْأَرْضِ, &c. I have (הַתְּרִיתִי)—a house, and this when the lower part of a tent is lifted up from the ground, &c., so making an aperture to such tent, or house: by which he seems to mean, that the skirts of the tent are so raised up, as to enable one to sew an additional skirting to it. Hence the word is applied to digging through the foundation, &c. It is remarkable enough, that neither Golius, Castell, nor Freytag (in their several lexicons), has given any thing equivalent to the ارتفع of Jauhari, which is the most important part of his explanation. יב. הַתְּמִיךְ לָמוֹ. They have sealed, i. e. determined upon, for themselves. Many understand this verb to signify, they conceal; because, I suppose, it is in the Pihel form. I doubt whether there is any thing in this, or whether the Pihel here can be relied upon as genuine. In the Arabic, this form often makes no essential difference in the meaning of words; and, supposing it to be genuine, I do not see why it should make such difference here. And, as putting a seal to any thing implies its completion; so here, by a meton. this verb may be taken to signify completed, or determined upon. The authorised version is right in the main therefore. יב. לֹא יִדְבֹר. They recognise, or acknowledge, not the light. It is something which suits not their purposes: hence they despise and hate it. See the following verse, which explains this more fully; and John, iii. 20.

18. קַלְהָרָג וְרַגְלֵי. Swift is he, &c. This, I think, is a description of the river-robbers, mentioned by Strabo, lib. xvi. § 18: Ἐπιπράττοντες μὲν καθ' ἡσυχίαν ἦσαν, ὕστερον δὲ σιγῆσι εὐκρίνοντο τοὺς ἐκ τῆς Ἀιγύπτου πλέοντας, κ. τ. λ. See also ch. ix. 26, and the note on it. In the first book of the Æthiopica of Heliodorus, we have the description of a regular establishment of such thieves, situated, as it should seem, in an island on a lake in Egypt. יב. הַתְּהַלֵּל. Vile does it become. Comp. Cogn. קלה. As in the rhetoric of the Orientals, it is not usual to give the same word, occurring twice in the same context, the same meaning in each case; so here the קל, which from its lightness implied swiftness, now taking the form of הַתְּהַלֵּל, must have some other shade of its primitive meaning; and here the context seems to require that of becoming vile. That is, as the marauders are quick and rapid in their progress, so the portion, heritage, &c. of those about them sinks in value, and is worthless. It is added, by way of explanation, לֹא יִדְבֹר, one looketh not to: no one looketh to, or hath any respect for, the way of the vineyards (דְּרָבֵי כְּרָמַיִם): which may mean, either that men place no reliance on the mode of culture usually adopted in these, from the consideration of these robbers; or, that no one, generally, directs his eyes to the paths leading to these: i.e. pays but little attention to them. And hence, their cultivation is but laxly carried on. Comp. here Jer. xlix. 9, where mention is also made of this practice generally. Rosenmüller and many others supply the particle of comparison (כִּי) here, and render the passage, “Levissimi, tanquam quæ super aquas labuntur, exsecrata eorum (ipsorum) portio,” &c.: which strikes me as a mistaken view of it altogether. Bouillier has taken pretty much the same course.

19. זָנְיָהּ גַּם-יָהוּם. In drought even in heat, i.e. in times of dearth and famine, when even bad men will occasionally exhibit some marks of feeling, these men יִנְזְלֵהּ, violently rob, carry all before them, just as the snow-waters when melted, perhaps by the same heat, swell the Euphrates, overwhelm the inhabitants, and carry away their flocks and tillage, taking pity on none. On the etymology of the first, see the Arab. صَوِيّ, — صَوِيّ, ship. Arab. صَوَايَةٌ, navigiolum. It is added, in order to give strength to the passage, שָׂאֵל הַמָּוֶה. Even to the grave they sin, i.e. They follow out sin in all its excesses, even to depths and darkness like those of the grave. Comp. Isa. xxxi. 6. הִקְצִיחוּן קָרָה. They have deeply fallen away. So βάθοσ, 2 Cor. viii. 2; Ps. lxiv. 7; Job, xii. 22, &c.

20. רַחֵם (or רַחֵם). Mercy: usually “the womb,” which is, I think, to mistake the primary for the secondary meaning of this word. Chald. רַחֵם, miseratio. Syr. رَحْمًا, id. Arab. رَحْمٌ, uterus, miseratio, &c. The whole verse goes to shew, that the judgment to be awarded to such offenders is the object had in view. How translators and commentators should therefore have seen nothing beyond the affection of mothers here, which has no connexion with the context, is marvellous. Ib. מִתְקָוָה. Lit. His sweetness, i.e. his solace. Comp. ch. xxi. 26, 33. This is the only earthly reward and termination of the career of such. Ib. לֹא-יִזְכָּר. He shall not be remembered hereafter generally. Ib. וְהִתְשַׁבֵּר. Nay, it shall be shivered, i.e. as a tree is by the stroke of the thunderbolt. Comp. Ps. xxix. 5, where the same verb is used in the same sense.

21. רָעָה. Lit. Evil entreating, injuring; r. רָעָה, used in the sense of the cognate רָעַע. Chald. רָעָה, breaking to pieces, &c. I have added the term “moreover,” merely to connect the context. Ib. יָטִיב. Lit. Does not good, or well. The vowels of this word are very anomalous, and have given great trouble to the grammarians. See Gesenius, Lehregebäude, pp. 388, 9; Ewald. Gram. p. 150, Engl. Trans. The elder grammarians supposed, with Buxtorf, that this form was a mere substitute for יָהִיטִיב (for יָהִיטִיב, Gram. Art. 86, 3): but this would naturally contract into יָטִיב, which is the usual form of all such verbs. Gesenius objects, — from the example of יָרַע, — which cannot well be a Hiph'il form. My own opinion is, that it has arisen from an error of the copyists, who, finding יָרַע, contr. for יָרַע, have prefixed י, with its proper vowel, supposing a י to have been omitted by error: and the same is probably the case with יָטִיב. All the anomaly, therefore, consists in the vowels, and is hardly worth the trouble of explaining.

22. וַיִּצְנֶה. And he drew forth, or draveth forth—as the place is sententious, i. e. after or to himself, in order to augment his own strength. Comp. ch. xxi. 33, &c. Rosenmüller takes it in the sense, in which it is found in Ps. x. 9; and if this be its sense (see also Job, xl. 25), the sentiment will not be unlike that found in 2 Kings, x. 4, as spoken of Jehu; none being able to stand before him. Some refer יָקָם here to each one of the אֲבִירִים, just mentioned; as if no one of them were able to stand before such an one. I think it more suitable to the context to take it impersonally, thus comprehending them, and all others. Ib. בָּחַיִן. In life. A Chaldaic plural form. Two MSS. have the regular Heb. form. See De Rossi's collations.

23. וַתְּנַלּוּ. One, some one, i. e. here God gives to him, &c. Ib. וַעֲיַנְיָהוּ. And, or therefore, his eyes, i. e. the eyes of such tyrant, are fixed, עַל־דְּרָכָיָהֶם, upon their ways, i. e. the ways, manners, movements, &c. of those about them. They find it necessary to be circumspect, and men are consequently in a sort of bondage.

24. רָפוּ. They are exalted in a sort of bondage, or lifted up. The Syriac Version joins this verb to the preceding verse, thus: Their eyes are lifted up on their ways. I think the Masoretic text is rightly divided here, and that the Syriac translator is wrong. If this, then, may be relied on, רָפוּ will be the Puh'al form of רָמָה, more regularly רָפָה. And, if this verb is used in the sense of רָמַה, or רוּם, the sense will be as just given. But, if the sense of רָמַה be taken passively, i. e. decepit, fefellit, we shall have, They are deceived: which would want point. The LXX. have Ἐμαρζάνθη, emarcuit: taking רָמַה vermis, perhaps, for the root: unless, indeed, Ἐμαρζάνθη is the true reading; which might have been a translation of the Puhal of רָמַה, decepit, &c., as noticed above. Ib. וְהִפְּרוּ. They are driven along. Arab. هَمَكَ. Instantanter ursit; iv. impletus fuit irá; vii. conturbatus fuit. Janhari has, اُنْهَمَكَ الرَّجُلُ فِي الْأَمْرِ أَي جَدَّ وَلَجَّ وَلَدَلَكَ تَهَمَكَ فِي الْأَمْرِ. i. e. It is said of a man, אנהמד, in a matter, i. e. he is busy and persevering: and thus (the v. conj. which is mostly passive) he was busied and constant in a matter. Rosenmüller, however, takes this as an Hophial form of הִפְּרוּ, which would regularly be הִפְּרוּ. And so the Syr. and Targum have it. Still I think it is irregular and forced. Job seems to say very nearly the same thing that he does in ch. xxi. 32, 33. It seems also to be opposed to what is said in vr. 22 above, and to intimate that things are now quite reversed. Ib. כָּפַל. Lit. Like, or, as all, the whole; which one would suppose must be understood as spoken of all others; i. e. they flourish for a season, upholden indeed by God's own appointments; but very soon is their strength withdrawn, and then they are led along to the tomb, and are there shut up for ever. Comp. Ps. xlix. 14, 19. Ib. הִפְּרוּ. See on the paragog. ה, Gram. Art. 235. Hence, They are, or shall be, accordingly, or surely, shut up. Arab. قَصَصَ. Constrinxit, &c.; قَعَصَ, carvea avis. Ib. וְקָטְלוּ for וְקָטְלוּ, root קָטַל. They are cut or cropped off: hence קָטַל, verbum, sermo, &c.; i. e. something decided.

25. וְכַזִּיבֵנִי. Makes me a liar, convicts me of falsehood. I take כִּי to be used indefinitely here, as the quis and τις of the Latins and Greeks occasionally are, and in Gen. xliii. 22, &c., as noted by Noldius. וְיָשֵׁב לֵאמֹר. Lit. And sets down for, BY NO MEANS: as if לֵאמֹר stood for יְהִי לֵאמֹר. Let it by no means be. This way of taking whole sentences, and using them as mere qualifying terms, adjectives, &c., is very common with Eastern writers. See the preface to the Anwāri Soheili. Ib. בְּלִתִּי. My speech, or my conclusion, or decision. See the last note. Upon the whole, this reply goes to shew that the wicked are allowed to practise all manner of evil, and still to prosper. They soon fall, indeed; but then, this does not seem to take place as if any Divine judgment took effect on the occasion. They fall only as other men generally, although it is true enough that their hopes perish: their fame sleeps with them: and, as in ch. xxi., the stones of the valley afford the only memorial of their once vaunted greatness and power.

CHAPTER XXV.

1. הַמִּשָּׁל. The causing, or giving rule. Inf. Hiph. of מִשָּׁל. — Rosenmüller prefers taking this as a simple Heemanti noun, as הַרְבָּה, הַשְׁקָט, &c. I remark, The context appears to require the sense of Hiphhil: nor is it certain that these words do not really involve that sense, although it may be inconvenient to express it in an European translation. See the places cited by him, viz. 2 Sam. i. 4; Isa. xxxii. 17. — I. e. By God's appointing rule in some, fear, reverence, or obedience, in others; agreement, harmony (שָׁלוֹם), is produced and maintained in His works, and particularly in the heavenly hosts. Ib. בְּמַרְוֵמָיו. In His high places: i. e. those who bear rule both in heaven and earth, whether intelligent or unintelligent beings; as His angels, the sun, moon, &c. See Gen. i. 16. Ib. עֹשֶׂה. Making, producing, continually; i. e. maintaining peace and harmony (Jerome, "concordiam"), by means of these His ministers. I have retained the word "peace" here, because I would not disturb the reader, with whom it is now familiar, although harmony, order, or the like, would have suited the place better. This remark must suffice for other similar cases.

3. לְגִדְרָיו. Lit. To his sections, battalions, or portions of a great army; alluding to what is usually termed in Scripture הַצְּבָא הַשְּׂמַיִם, 1 Kings, xxii. 19, &c.; הַצְּבָא הַמְּרוֹם, Isa. xxiv. 21; הַצְּבָא הַשְּׂמַיִם, Ps. lxxx. 15; הַצְּבָא הַשְּׂמַיִם, 2 Sam. v. 10, &c. Ib. אֹרְחָיו. His light, or luminary; alluding apparently to the sun: which should shew that his rule, as an important part of God's army, is here had in view; alluding perhaps to Gen. i. 16.

4. הַיָּמָה. How then? That is, considering God's attributes, in connexion with His stupendous appointments, how can weak mortal man (אָנוּשׁ), the mere child of a woman, hope to justify himself! Surely His ways must be right; and, if so, the very sufferings of Job afford proof sufficient that he must not only be wrong, but wicked; and, at all events, an unclean and impotent mortal.

5. רְאֵה הֵן הָיְתָה כִּזְמַת עַד-הֵן עָרִיבָה. Observe, behold, thus it has been, even to, &c. See Jer. ii. 10.

And, in any case, as וְ is a particle expressive of excitement, “observe” will express its meaning just as well as “behold,” or “lo;” and better, where it will suit the context better, as it is the case here. וְ . Even to; i. e. beginning with greater things, as the firmament, the sun, the angels, &c., and descending to the moon,—see Noldius, p. 533; and ch. iv. 18,—every thing is, in the all-pure estimation of the Deity, impure, dull, and destitute of glory. Ib. $\text{וְלֹא יַשְׁתָּחִי וְלֹא יִשְׁתַּבַּח}$. Lit. And He does not make, pronounce, or consider, glorious, or bright: taking the sense of the cognate root שׁחַח , for that of שׁבַח : a thing by no means uncommon, as Rosenmüller has observed here. The Arabic use of this verb (أشاح) would give considers, judges, esteems, unworthy. The LXX. have $\text{Ἐν σεληνῆ συντάσσει, καὶ οὐκ ἐπιφανέσκει,}$ as if they had read, $\text{וְהֵן יַצְרֵר וְגוֹ}$; while the Syriac translator manifestly read the text as it now is; as did Jerome, and, apparently, the Targumist. I see no necessity, therefore, for supposing that the text is incorrect. The various reading (viz. וְהֵן), found in Kennicott’s collations, is probably nothing more than an emendation made by some ignorant copyist. The mention of the moon naturally enough introduces that of the stars, in a descending order, as before; which, the speaker proceeds to say, are not clear וְנִבְרָא . The term “pure,” used here in the Auth. Vers., is not quite appropriate; but, as it applies also to man in the next verse, it is tolerable.

6. וְנִבְרָא . Lit. Mortal man (see the dictionaries, under אָנָשׁ), who is here compared to the רֵפְיָהּ , i. e. the worm which preys upon dead bodies. Ib. $\text{וְנִבְרָא בְּנֵי אָדָם}$. And the son of man. This was perhaps intended to raise the description a little higher than the אִלְוֵי אָדָם preceding. בְּנֵי אָדָם , too, contains the notion of redness; and it is here compared with הַתְּלִיָּהּ , the cochineal, or worm used in dying cloth scarlet. Taking these things together therefore, the writer seems to say, Much more mortal man, who is but a death-worm, nay the healthy, ruddy, young man, who may be compared with the scarlet dye-worm. On the הַתְּלִיָּהּ , see the Hieroz. of Bochart, pars ii. lib. iv. cap. xxxvii.

The argument of Bildad is but short; it is nevertheless extremely pointed, and contains the sum and substance of all the charges brought against Job, put in the form termed à fortiori. In his former replies, he argued from God’s usual proceedings with men (ch. viii. xviii.): he now takes the attributes of Deity, and argues more metaphysically, but just as unsuitably on the real question at issue.

CHAPTER XXVI.

2. מִהֲעֲזָרְךָ. Usually, "How hast thou?" &c. Better, I think, "In what," i. e. in what hast thou improved his condition? How is more suitable in the next member. Job seems to ask in What way has he been, or can he be, assisted by the aid, counsel, &c. afforded by such arguments as those just now urged? all of which, he goes on to shew, he fully allows.

3. וְהַרְשָׁקָה. And substantial, sound, &c. See ch. v. 12, note.

4. אֶת־מִי. Lit. As to whom. See Gram. Art. 229, 9. Ib. מִלֵּין. See ch. vi. 26; xxiv. 25, &c. By this term, I think is meant here those decisions of doubtful questions which are termed, in the writings of the Jews, תְּשׁוּבוֹת, and, in those of the Arabs and Persians, اجوبة, i. e. answers, particularly in their books on the عِلْمُ الْفَقْهِّ, or school divinity.

The Proverbs of Solomon, as well as the adages of all nations, are decisions of this sort, though less formal than those given in books written on casuistry; and such have always been believed to have proceeded from the wisest of men. Ib. וְנִשְׁפָּתָה. And the breath, &c. This word seems used here in the sense of enlightening, inspiring, or the like; just as it is in Prov. xx. 27. נֵר יְהוָה נְשִׁמַת אָדָם. A luminary of Jehorah is the breath of man: both of which, probably, took their origin from Gen. ii. 7. It will then mean, Whose instruction, i. e. means of obtaining divine light, has gone forth from thee? Schultens thinks the sentiment to be a retort upon Bildad, as he was just now retailing the arguments of Eliphaz. I see no strong reason for supposing this. It seems only to mean that, after all, Bildad possessed no good claim to the high theoretic knowledge which he here assumed.

5. הַרְפָּאִים. Can the Rephaim? &c. Frequent notices of a people so called are found in the Bible. In Deut. ii. 11, 19, we are told, that they formerly resided in the land of Moab, which was subsequently given to the children of Lot. See also Numb. xxi. 29, 30; and Deut. ii. 20, 21. It appears also, from Gen. xiv. 5, that the Rephaim resided in Ashteroth Karnaim; of which Eusebius says, rather obscurely, "Astaroth Carnaim terra gigantum quondam in supercilio Sodomorum (ὑπερὲς τῆν Σοδομίτην) quos interfecit Chodorlaomor."—Cellarius, Geog. lib. iii. cap. xiii. In Deut. iii. 13, we are told that a part of Gilead, all Bashan and Argob, were called the land of the Rephaim. I cannot help suspecting, however, that the whole of the forces encountered by Chedorlaomer and his allies were in reality Rephaim. The king of Bela (Gen. xiv. 2) was certainly king of Zoar, the place to which Lot fled on the destruction of Sodom, Gomorrah, &c., and which was afterwards held by Lot's posterity. And it is probable that not long after that event, it was solemnly consigned to him: that people being then perhaps so much weakened, as to be unable to wrest it from him. Hence, too, we have the term עַמְּקֵי רְפָאִים, the valley of the Rephaim. Again, it is certain they all met in the vale of Siddim, "which," it is added, "is (now) the salt sea:" i. e. after the fall of Sodom, &c. Again, we are told (vr. 5, ib.) that Chedorlaomer and his allies "smote the Rephaims in Ashteroth Karnaim, and the Zuzim in Ham, and the Emims in Shaveh Kiriathaim." But these Emims certainly were Rephaim (see Deut. ii. 10, 11). They were called Emims by the Moabites. And, if the Zuzim of Genesis are the Zamzumim of Deut. ii. 20, it is equally certain that they also were Rephaim. They were termed Zamzumim only by the Ammonites. If this may be depended upon, it will become probable that the inhabitants of Sodom, Gomorrah, and of the other neighbouring cities of the plain, as they are termed, were all in reality Rephaim; whose land, after the destruction of these cities, became a sea; and this prior to the times of Job. To these then, who might now be truly said to be laid under the water, is allusion probably made in this place. They had been known as a terrific warlike race, and to have been as famous for their tyranny and cruelty, as they had for their power. Ib. וְשִׁבְנֵיהֶם. And their neighbours: perhaps the Horites, Avims, and Caph-torims, who had also been exterminated (Deut. ii. 22, 23). Still, וְשִׁבְנֵיהֶם may refer to the word עַמְּ just preceding it. If so, it may then signify, And, or you, their inhabitants; and be a mere repetition for the purpose of strengthening the passage. Comp. Isa. xxvi. 19. In Jer. xlix. 18, and l. 38-40, we have express allusion to the fall of Sodom and Gomorrah; and, in each case, וְשִׁבְנֵיהֶם its neighbours, is added, as if it were a part of their ancient designation: formerly read, perhaps, in all of these places alike. In the latter place too, we have וּבְרֵאשֵׁייהֶם usually translated, and in idols: which can be justified by no passage now occurring in the Hebrew Bible. I am induced to believe, therefore, either that some of these people still remained as warriors among the Babylonians, or else that some sect did, following the creed perhaps of the ancient Emims, and maintaining the same warlike character. Ib. וַיַּחַלְלֵהוּ. They wound: i. e.

Can they,—once as courageous, unjust, and unfeeling, as thou (Bildad) art, but now laid beneath the waters,—inflict wounds on others? The whole verse seems to be used proverbially; and the next to shew, that even the powers of the grave—destruction—are under God's superintendence and control.

6. Exposed to Him whom I serve is the power of the grave; and with Him destruction has no covering.

Rosenmüller says, on the fifth verse, “Cæterum מַנְיָם רְפָאִים esse mortuos, Orci incolas, Manes, nos dubitare non sinunt loca Ps. lxxxviii. 11 . . . Prov. ii. 18; ix. 18; Jer. xiv. 9, &c.” And here, on מַנְיָם רְפָאִים, and מַנְיָם רְפָאִים, “. . . Manifestum est, intima terræ loca, manium sedes, . . . designari,” &c. I remark, nothing is more easy, or indeed more common, than to say that this or that is manifest, doubtless, and so on, when a little consideration will shew that the whole is perfectly groundless. And such, I will affirm, is the case here. That the Rephaim were an ancient people, who had been for the most part destroyed before the times of Job, is I believe evident, as just now shewn from the Bible. That they are often alluded to as a nation destroyed and gone, is equally clear; and, if so, we need not wonder that they are spoken of as dead, without its being at all intended to be intimated that the word Rephaim means either dead men generally, or the manes of dead men. My opinion therefore is, that Rosenmüller, with others innumerable, has made a very glaring mistake here. But, let us see what the passages pointed out really say. Ps. lxxxviii. 11, then only says, מַנְיָם רְפָאִים יִקְוּמוּ. Shall the Rephaim arise? &c. We have מַנְיָם רְפָאִים, dead, indeed, in the parallel member; but, What of that! Were not these Rephaim also then dead men? In the next verse, we have קֶבֶר, the grave, and מַנְיָם רְפָאִים in the parallel with it. But, Does it hence follow that the Orcus, or Hades, manium sedes, &c. must be meant by this! Might not the Psalmist have naturally enough said that, after death has taken place,—in the grave, in the place or circumstance of destruction,—no praise could be given to God? Is it necessary, I want to know, to fabricate here, and in other such places, an Orcus, for the purpose of making all clear and intelligible? I think not. The same reasoning will apply to Prov. ii. 18; and Isa. xxvi. 14; xiv. 9. In the last instance, we are told nothing more,—as far as I can see,—than that at the funeral of the king of Babylon, the ancient dead, consisting of the once mighty of the earth, shall be roused as out of sleep to meet and to welcome him. The context, in no case, carries us farther than the sides of the pit; telling us, however, that this king shall not, after all, have an honourable burial, but shall be cast out as an abominable branch (vv. 18–20). How writers could from these and similar passages, have determined, that beyond all doubt the Orcus, or Hades, of the heathen, must have been meant, I am at a loss to discover: unless, indeed, they had previously made up their minds, that Divine revelation and heathen story-telling, must necessarily mean the same thing. See also ch. iii. 8, note. The term שְׁאוֹל, hell, or grave, can here mean nothing beyond the depths, in which evil spirits and powers were supposed to reside, as shewn in the note referred to. See also note, ch. xxi. 13.

7. נִטְּהָה צְפוֹן. Lit. Spreading out the north; i.e. the north country. Ps. lxxxix. 13. עַל־הַרְהוּרָה. Lit. Upon emptiness; i.e. over a land destitute of cultivation. Comp. Gen. i. 2. It was a constant opinion of the ancients (as it is of the Arabs even now), that the northern regions have been condemned to universal darkness and sterility. Plin. lib. iv. cap. xxvi. (xii.): “Pars mundi damnata à natura rerum, et densâ mersu caligine.” And Solinus, cap. xv.: “Damnata pars mundi, et à rerum naturâ in nubem æternæ caliginis mersa.” The Arabs term it, in the books of geography, the land of darkness (ارض الظلام). See my Ibn Batuta, p. 78; and Boehart’s Canaan, lib. i. cap. xl. (not cap. ii., as erroneously cited by Simonis, and after him by Winer), where the above, and other citations to the purpose, will be found.

Ib. וְצִפְוֹן תִּהְיֶה אֶרֶץ אֵינָה. Lit. Suspending a land: i.e. making it dependent on the want of every thing (without any thing, בְּצִפְוֹן); by which I think is meant, condemns it to indigence. See Deut. xxviii. 66; and Hos. xi. 7. In the first of these members Rosenmüller sees, or thinks he sees, the Arctic pole arising up in the heavens, and remaining there without any thing to support it! And in the word וְצִפְוֹן, the whole of our hemisphere, which is northern: and for this his translation gives, “extendit super inane.” But what this “inane” means, he has not told us. In the second member, תִּהְיֶה אֶרֶץ, &c., he follows the usual rendering, “suspendit terram super nihilum:” by which he seems to intend the same thing as our Auth. Vers. does: for he adds, “velut super vacuum et nihilum niti, hemisphaerium, quod a nobis conspicitur, velut super inane extensum esse . . . ponderibus, ut Cicero ait (Tuscul. v. 24) librata suis,” &c. The whole of which, I think, never once entered into the mind of Job. The next verse seems too, to confirm the view I have taken: for, after speaking of the sterility of a land, it was natural enough to add, that God so bound up His clouds, that no rain should fall upon it. The next verse also countenances this, as we shall presently see.

8. עָנָן. The spreading cloud. As עָנָן manifestly bears its precise signification here, so the context requires that עָנָן also have that peculiar to it. Arab. عَنَانٌ. Res ipsa coram apparens, pec. pars cæli conspicua, latæ facies, &c. Whence it seems to me, that spreading, or the like, is the primary force of this word. See vr. 9. Comp. Prov. viii. 28. The strength, here said to be communicated to the clouds, agrees well, with firmament as given to רָקִיעַ, Gen. i. 6, by the older interpreters, as Père Simon has well remarked in his Histoire Critique du Vieux Test.

9. בָּצַחָו. Lit. Causing to take fast hold, i. e. closing up (which sense prevails in this word in the Syriac), securing, — פְּנֵי־כִסֵּהָ. The face of (the) throne. So that God seems to be inaccessible to the intreaties of people circumstanced as those just described; and hence He withholds from them His usual benefits. Or it may mean, His pavilion is entirely closed up and concealed from the view of man generally. Comp. Ps. xviii. 12; civ. 3. See also Nehem. vii. 3; 1 Kings, vi. 10; 2 Chron. ix. 18. Ib. פָּרָשׁוּ. Spreading, compounded of פָּרַשׁ, and פָּרַז, i. e. פָּרַשׁ and פָּרַז. This compound is perhaps equivalent to פָּרוֹשׁ פָּרַז, if indeed it is not a contraction of it. See Gram. Art. 197.

10. חָגַג חֶגְג. A law hath He circumscribed. Prov. viii. 27. בְּחֶגְגוֹ חֶגְג עַל־כַּנֵּי תְהוֹם is certainly an imitation of this place; and is quite sufficient to shew that the spherical form of the earth was known to the patriarch. See also vr. 29. The thing pointed out is, the regular spherical surface of the water, which could not have been produced and maintained without an exertion of Almighty power. Ib. עַד־תִּמְלִיתָ. To the completion, i. e. the limiting. So the use of this particle generally with verbal nouns, or infinitives. Comp. Numb. xxxii. 13; Ruth, i. 19, &c.; in the sense of usque ad usque dum. See Nold. The intention of the writer is to say, He has imparted to the surface of the great deep such a form (i. e. spherical), that the line distinguishing night from day is fixed, and determinable, as in the case of the twilights, &c. The idea presents an amplification of what we read in Gen. i. 14-17.

11. עַמּוּדֵי שָׁמַיִם. The cloudy pillars, &c. The use of עַמּוּדֵי שָׁמַיִם is well known and needs no comment, except to say, that the expression probably originated in the circumstance of the clouds, generally appearing to rest in the horizon upon the earth, and thence to reach to the highest parts of the heavens. Hence the term עֲמֻדָּה, pillar only, was perhaps at first used. The usage is not unknown to the Arabs now: for we have عَمُودُ الصَّبْحِ. The pillar of the morning; Gol. Extensus auroræ fulgor: and as a verb, عَمِدَ. Madore pluviae affecta fuit terra. Jauhari gives a passage from Lebid, in which this word is used apparently in the sense of cloud. It will be enough here to give the gloss of Elasmaï (الاصمعي) on it. يَعْنِي أَنَّ السَّيْلَ يَرْكَبُ جَانِبَيْهِ سَحَابٌ كَالْعَمِدِ أَيَّ احْتَاطَ بِهِ سَحَابٌ مِنْ تَوَاحِيْدِهِ بِالْمَطَرِ. He means, that a cloud rested on both sides of the torrent, as on an (عَمِد) over-ridden back. That is, the cloud enclosed it on all sides with rain. The word is therefore, in some sense or other, connected with that of cloud, rain, moisture, the rising of the dawn, &c; and, in the Hebrew, it is directly applied to the clouds. In the above phrase, the addition of the word עֲמֻדָּה, well supplies the ellipsis of עֲמֻדָּה. If this be the true import of these words, the ascribing of columns to heaven, &c., as if the whole represented some great edifice,—as is common among the Mohammedans,—might thus have originated; while it is evident that the primary notion only can be applied here.

Ib. יְרֹדְפָה. They agitate, neut.; i. e. become tremulous, or agitated. See Buxtorf's Lex. Rabb. under רָדַף, and רָדַף. Syr. اِف. Excussit alis; نَوَسَ، nictus unus oculi. Arab. رَقَّ. Nictavit oculus, &c. Ib. מִן־קִרְוֹ. At His rebuke; i. e. when He expresses his anger in the thunder-storm, at which time the greatest disorder, perturbation, and irregularity of motion, are perceived to take place in the clouds. From what follows, a storm seems to have been had in view. Comp. Ps. xviii. 13, 17; civ. 2-7.

12. רָדַף הַיָּם. He calmeth the sea. Rosenmüller prefers, "Commovet mare." But, if the Arabic sense of رَجَعَ is to be adopted, the sense will be, The sea returned, making הַיָּם the nominative: which will require by the parallelism, that רָדַף, in the following member, be the nominative to מִן־קִרְוֹ: but this he does not allow. Nor do the passages, viz. Isa. li. 15; Jer. xxxi. 35; necessarily require that רָדַף have the sense of commovet. My own opinion is, that they require a contrary signification, which the Hiph'il form of this root has certainly; but it cannot thence be argued, that the Kal form may not also have it. Besides, the term returning, when applied to the sea or any great piece of water generally, will necessarily signify its returning to the natural state, which is one of rest. See Exod. xiv. 26, 27, 28. So in the Arabic, رَجَعَ. Benè vertit beneque cessit illi, restituit. Pass. restitutus fuit valetudini, &c. In any view, the Auth. Vers. is indefensible here. See Introd. p. 41. Ib. מָחַץ רָהַב. He striketh down, or to pieces, the insolent. Arab. مَكَّص. Concussit terram pede sua. Cogn. مَكَّص. Agitavit lac vel utrem butyri cogendi ergo. Comp. Ps. lxxxix. 11.

13. בְּרוּחוֹ וְגו'. By His spirit, &c. This, I think, is an allusion to Gen. i. 2, where פְּגֵי הַמַּיִם may refer to the waters in the upper regions, noticed in vv. 6, 7. Ib. שִׁפְרָה. If this is to be taken as the preterite of Piḥel, with the fem. term. either רוּחוֹ, or יָדוֹ, must be supplied by the ellipsis; and, even then, the construction will not be natural. I prefer taking it as the pret. Puḥal, thus, שִׁפְרָה, was beautified; or שִׁפְרָה, beauty, &c. as a noun, with Simonis. The construction will then be regular. Ib. הִזְלָלָהּ וְגו'. Hath wounded, &c. I take the pret. here in a strong prophetic future signification. Gram. Art. 236. How this verb can signify formavit, it is quite out of my power to see. It does occasionally signify to bring forth, as the earth producing herbs, or as an animal producing young; but this is a very different thing from forming, as by the hand of the Creator. That sense is, therefore, untenable. If then we take הִזְלָל as the root, we shall have, in the Piḥel, perfolit, vulneravit: and, if this be allowed, the place will allude to Gen. iii. 14, 15, and it is paraphrased in Isa. xxvii. 1; where we have a manifest prediction of the coming, and victories, of Christ; and where this very fugitive serpent is said to be pierced with a sword! בְּחַרְבּוֹ הִקְשָׁה וְהִנְדוּלָהּ. See the LXX., Syriac, and Arabic versions of the Polyglott here, which give the same sense. If it be objected, that the transition from natural to spiritual things is abrupt, my answer is: Nothing is more frequent in these writers than transitions of this sort: besides, as the Scriptures previously revealed afforded matter for these expressions, nothing could be more natural than for Job to pass from the great works of creation to those of redemption. Rosenmüller finds the constellation of the great serpent here. I think the application of the verb הִזְלָלָהּ, in the sense ascribed to it by him, must appear to every one still worse in this acceptation. He then gives us some learned citations from Virgil and others, about this serpent: and very plausible, certainly, the whole appears. Is it not remarkable, that these laborious scholars can find any thing in the Bible but its most important doctrines?—Things, one would imagine, that could not have been lost sight of by a person so eminently pious as Job was.

14. קְצוֹת. Extremities, limits; here apparently, outlines, or slight reminiscences, of His ways. Ib. וְשִׁמְךָ. See ch. iv. 12, note. Ib. נִשְׁמָעָה. Heard, understood, apprehended. Comp. Ps. xix. 4. Ib. נֶרְעַם גְּבוּרָתֶיךָ. Usually, “The thunder of His power;” which gives not the whole meaning of the writer. In the preceding context the effects, not the mere expressions, of God’s wisdom and power are dwelt upon. One would hardly expect that this last verse would be less pointed. Besides, the thunder only, seems to me to be scarcely definite. Is it the philosophical reason of the sound,—which would be puerile here,—or the dreadful effects sometimes attendant thereon, that is meant? The first of these is not likely: the second only appears to me to suit the reasoning generally offered here. I am induced to think, therefore, that נֶרְעַם ought to be taken here as signifying the expression of God’s wrath, which the thunder might well be thought to intimate, and which, indeed, seems to be the primitive, and perhaps prevailing notion, contained in this word. See ch. xxxix. 19. Again, גְּבוּרָתֶיךָ. His powers, in the pl. seems to be intended to signify great or mighty power, as a plural of excellence. Gram. Art. 223, 3. Ib. וְתִבְוֵנָה. Understands, &c.; but here, from the contrast made in וְהִשְׁמַעְתָּהּ, must be intended to convey something like, fully understand, duly comprehend, &c.: i. e. Who can duly calculate upon the extent and effects of His wrath? His works and ways in creation are great and wonderful: but the exertion of His anger will extend into a state of unknown and untried being. See Ps. xc. 11; and ch. xx. 26.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1. וְיִשָּׁא אִיּוֹב. Lit. And Job repeated, &c.: i. e. he repeated וְיִשָּׁא, the taking up of מִשְׁעָלָיו, lit. his assimilating, comparing, or rule, of arguing, &c. The word is applied to the Proverbs of Solomon, and there seems to mean, decisions, rules, deduced either from revelation, experience, or discussion. Our Auth. Vers. has here “continued,” which is not the exact signification of the verb. Some, however, have inferred from its use, Gen. iv. 2, that Cain and his brother Abel were twins! See its use in the Concordance.

2. הִיאֵל. As God liveth; i. e. As sure as this is a fact, so sure also is some other event, &c. By this mode of swearing the Hebrews honoured God, because they thus ascribed to him all power, permanency, and truth; denying, at the same time, all such properties to every other being. Swearing by an idol, virtually affirmed the same of it. Hence it was that the Jews were commanded to swear by adducing God's name. It is a great mistake to suppose, as some have done, that an imprecation is necessarily implied on all such occasions. See note on ch. xxiii. 30. Ib. הִסִיר וְגו', are mere qualifying terms here.

3. בְּיָקֵל וְגו'. For the whole still, &c. to the end of the verse is parenthetical, and intended to affirm that Job is still in life, of sound mind, and in the full exercise of his reason. This expression, or its equivalent, is often found to occur: as, 2 Sam. i. 9; 1 Kings, xvii. 17, &c.

4. אִם־יִתְנַבְּרָהּ. Should they speak, &c. This appears to be the second term in the oath (for the Hebrews have two, at least), and is intended to stand on the same footing with the former clause; but, whether the thing so pressed is to be taken positively or negatively, must be collected from the context. In some cases, indeed, the negative particle is introduced, as Ezek. xiv. 18, where אִם is omitted; but, in vr. 16, אִם is given, and לֹא omitted: such omission, therefore, is a mere ellipsis. Comp. Ps. xcv. 11, and Heb. iii. 11. See Gram. Art. 242, 5-9.

5. הִלְיָהּ וְגו'. Lit. Profane! i. e. its natural consequence woe! be to me. This, to the end of vr. 7, seems to be prefatory, and intended to admonish Job's friends in the outset, that they could not be justified in the course they had taken; and that he would, at any rate, retain his own integrity.

6. בְּצִדְקָתִי. On my righteousness, &c.; i. e. Not his own righteous deeds, for these Job had more than once renounced, but his righteous law (הִלְוִי, ch. xxiii. 12, 14), and the commandment of God's lips:—his faith, elsewhere his integrity. Ib. לֹא יִתְרַף. Lit. It reproaches not, i. e. either actively or passively. But here the context manifestly requires the active sense. Gram. Art. 146, 8, note. בְּיָמָי. From my days; i. e. the events of my days, my afflicting circumstances.

The Arabic terms, ^سيَم (Heb. יָדָם), pl. ^سأَيَّام, ^سدَهْر, time, age, as well as the Persic ^{روز}روز, day, and ^{روزگار}روزگار, time, are often used by a metonymy, to signify the effects of time; as fortune, misfortune, &c. As in the following examples:

مَنْ رَأَى يَوْمَنَا وَيَوْمَ بَنِي التَّيْمِ إِذِ الْتَفَّ صَبْعُهُ بِدَمِهِ لَمَّا رَأَوْا أَنَّ يَوْمَهُمْ أُسِيبُ (أَشْتَبُ) شَدُّوا حَبَازَ بِمَهُمَّ عَلَيَّ الْكَيْدِ.

O Thou who sawest our day, and the day of the (tribe) Beni Eltain, when his sweat and blood were mixed!

When they perceived that their day was one of confusion, they strengthened their hearts on its grief.

The Scholiast tells us here that, اراد باليوم الواقعة, he means by the day, the circumstance; i. e. the effect of it, or the fortune which attended it.—Freytag's Hamasa, p. 143.

Ibn Doreid has the following passage (Haitsma's edit. p. 4, vr. 5):

وَعَاصَ مَاءَ شَرِيٍّ دَهَّرَ رَمِي خَوَاطِرَ الْقَلْبِ بِتَبْرِجِ الْجَوِي.

And time (fortune) has diminished the water of my youth; it has cast away the delights of the heart by the affliction of disease. See also vv. 165, 167, 168. The common Persian Dictionaries will suffice as to the Persian usage of this word, and particularly the Farhangi Shaoori, fol. ۳۳, Turkish version, vol. ii. See note on ch. iii. 5; xxiv. 1. עַתָּה and עֵתוֹת are so used occasionally, Isa. xiii. 22; Ps. xxxi. 16, &c.

7. יְהִי וְגו'. Then, or therefore, let be, &c. That is, as my faith is pure, and in this I am determined to abide; let my enemy, &c. therefore (Gram. Art. 233, 3, &c.) be, become, or be considered, כְּפָרְשֵׁי as a wicked man; i. e. unjust, severe, cruel, implacable, &c.

8. כִּי בִיחַד וְגו'. For what? &c. Supposing I were such an one, and rich, What could my hope be in that case? Ib. כִּי יִשְׁלַח. When God giveth ease. Rosenmüller takes this verb, properly enough, as the apocopated pres. of נִשְׁלַח; but then, he will have it to be in the sense of the Arabic سَلَّ, extraxit. “Ergo,” says he, “vertendum: quum extrahet Deus animam ejus e medio corporis.” I only ask, Is this Hebrew phrasology? Did any one ever find such a phrase, periphrasis, or what not, as extraxit animam in Hebrew for kill, slay, put to death, or the like? “This night thy soul shall be required of thee,” we have in Luke, xii. 20; but this is a very different thing from saying, thy soul shall be extracted out of thee. He thinks, moreover, that the interpretation above given of נִשְׁלַח cannot be allowed, because “שָׁלַח in Kal nusquam transitivo significato reperitur,” although he allows it may have a transitive sense, even in Kal, if we consider it as used for שָׁלַח. This objection, therefore, is worth nothing. But again, Why may we not suppose this verb to present the apocope of Hiphil, and to be read שָׁלַח,—for the vowels are not of paramount authority,—and which, in that case, will supply a sense suitable to the place? I see no reason for objection to this, and therefore I adopt it. The parallelism, too, requires it. Schmurrer proposes to read שָׁלַח requiret, exiget: this is forced, and has no parallel in the Old Testament.

10. אֲדַעֵנּוּ. This particle is often used in a subsequent member, an interrogative ה having preceded. See Gram. Art. 179, 3; and in this way I believe it is used here. See also Nold. Concord. part. p. 213; and Art. 1057, Annot. Ib. בְּכָל-עֵת. Usually, At all times, always: but as כָּל, lit. the whole, may be taken distributively, any will then be its proper translation; and, as the Hebrews have no other word to express this, כָּל ought to be so translated, wherever the context requires it: which I conceive is the case here. The meaning seems to be, Will such an one ever call upon God—even when in trouble—as a sincere penitent, and true believer? No: he will only murmur and complain.

11. אֲדַעֵנּוּ. As verbs terminating in ה never take the paragogic ה as others do (Gram. Art. 175, 6), and as the sense seems here to require it, I have translated the passage as if it had been added, Let me, &c.

Ib. בְּיַד-אֱלֹהִים. In the power of God; i. e. the things which He effects. Rosenmüller, “Docbo vos de manu Dei, i. e. de iis, quæ Deus agere solet.” This he thinks the remainder of the verse requires; which appears to me both vague and unsuitable to the term in question. Nothing is more common than the use of the term hand, for power, by a meton. The word שְׁפָדָה following, as well as the nature of the passage, seems to require this. For the construction of this verb with ב, see 1 Sam. xii. 23. In this case, ad rationem, morem, institutum, or the like, will express the force of the combination בְּיַד. Ib. עִם-יְשׁוּעָה. With the Almighty: i. e. the mode of His proceedings, as made known by His judgments on the wicked.

12. הִנֵּנוּ. Behold, &c. i. e. You are all generally acquainted with the proceedings of the Almighty. You know both that He often allows the wicked to grow rich, and that His judgments still hang over them. How then is it, that you argue as if prosperity universally attended none but good men, and as if adversity on the other hand as necessarily attended the wicked? Surely this course is foolish and sinful. Ib. הַבֶּל הַהֶפְזֵלִי, i.e. You always, or excessively, act vainly. Gram. Art. 222, 4.

13. הָ. This, i.e. which follows. Great difficulties have been found here by the commentators, all of which seem to have grown out of the opinion, that Job must necessarily refute every thing said by his opponents. While the truth is, Job objects only to the application of their arguments; not to the truth of the propositions advanced by them. Kennicott's conjecture, here dwelt upon by Rosenmüller, is scarcely worth notice.

15. וְקָבְרִי. Shall be shut up. To say, “shall be buried in death,” would be unmeaning and frigid. I suppose, therefore, either that the primary sense of this word is to conceal, COVER, &c. as in the phrase, وَلَدًا مَغْبُورًا, “Illum peperit mulier involutum secundinis, et pelle integra absque ullo foramine:” or, that we may here take it, by a metonymy, as implying the consequence of burying, i.e. the being for ever shut up, i.e. such an one shall not succeed in establishing a family: all his descendants shall drop off, and disappear. Ib. וְאִלְמֵינָתָי. And his widows, i.e. those of his family, shall not lament their loss: which implies both dishonour to him (comp. Jer. xxii. 18, 19; Ps. lxxviii. 64), and also, that none shall remain to do so.

16. אֲבִי-יִצְבֹּר. Though he, or should he, treasure up, &c. This is cited in Zech. ix. 3, the final member differing slightly. Ib. מַלְבָּשֵׁי. Raiment, lit. the thing put on. Articles of dress constitute a considerable part of the wealth of an oriental monarch to the present day. Every one has heard of the خِلْعَات, khilat, or robe of honour, presented as a mark of respect by the Moguls, kings of Persia, and others. See also Bochart's Hieroz. Pars II. lib. iv. cap. xxv; Virg. Æneid, lib. ix. v. 26, &c.

18. דָּקָשׁ. Like the moth, i.e. with a perishable material. Comp. ch. xiii. 28, &c. Ib. לְזִיָּר. Arab. نَاطِرٌ. Vinea, vel palmarum custos: a vine-dresser, a garden-keeper. See Isa. i. 8; i.e. just as the garden-keeper erects a temporary booth, for the purpose of watching his garden, so does the sinner his house. Ch. viii. 14, 15, with the notes.

19. וְלֹא יִאָּסַף. But it shall not be gathered, i.e. carrying on the same figure, rich in his tent, filled with the expectation that his vintage, &c. shall be plentiful; but it shall not be gathered for him: for when he opens his eyes in the morning as it were, all shall have disappeared, either from robbery or blight.

20. צַמִּיִם, i.e. like the waters, i.e. of the Euphrates when overflowing its banks, of which mention has been already made more than once elsewhere. Ib. לַיְלָה. By night; which may mean the time of adversity, when his wealth shall thus be leaving him.

21. קָרִים. The east wind, i.e. the ^ססוּמ, samoom, or poisonous east wind. Ib. וַיִּשְׁבְּרָהּוּ. Lit. And it shall whirlwind him, i.e. it shall deal with him as the whirlwind, or tornado, does when it carries all away before it, ch. xxxvii. 9; Ps. lviii. 10.

22. וַיִּשְׁלֹף. So He, i.e. God shall cast upon him. Suppl. רָעוֹת, evils, plagues, &c. Comp. Ps. lviii. 11, 12, where we have a similar conclusion.

23. מִמְּקוֹמוֹ. From his place, i.e. each of those who view his fall shall, from his place, hiss at and deride him.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1. One of the great and leading difficulties experienced by interpreters in making out this very noble specimen of patriarchal wisdom, has consisted in endeavouring to discover its connexion with the preceding chapter. The projects had recourse to for the purpose of doing this, it is not my intention to detail here. Those who wish to see them, must consult the commentators. I shall confine myself, therefore, to the view which I take of it. The reader will see in a moment, that the question discussed in the preceding chapter is, the vanity of earthly wealth when confided in, in opposition to a perseverance in the faith and practice of true religion. The principle which leads to either of these respectively, viz. worldly wisdom on the one hand, and divine wisdom on the other, severally forms the subject matter of the reasoning here. In vr. 8 of the preceding chapter commences Job's argument against the vanity of amassing worldly wealth without religion. In vr. 16 he resumes that subject, and continues it to the end of the chapter, describing the failure of every such miserable person. Our chapter begins by allowing, that a certain sort of wisdom is requisite for this; and not only so, but that this is carried among men to a very considerable extent. They investigate and determine the limits, and limiting principles, of almost every thing with which they are conversant, whether its situation be the visible heavens above, or the invisible depths beneath; the almost impenetrable deserts, the flinty rock, or the rapid and apparently irresistible streams. Job continues, All this I most readily allow. Still I say—allowing, as I do, much to man, and giving him every credit which he deserves—the wisdom by which our question is to be determined, is of a totally different description. Though he penetrate the deep, it is not there. The eye of the bird cannot discover it above; no, nor man in the depths beneath. God has, however, in his revelation made it known. It is therefore above all price. And how are we to account for His knowing it? Not because הוֹקֵר הוּא, He investigates as man does (vr. 3), and must discover knowledge by morsels. It is, כִּי הוּא לְקַצְוֹת־הָאָרֶץ וְגו' (vr. 24), because He looks (at once) to the extremities of the earth, &c.; and (v. 25, &c.) He not only sees, and therefore knows, but all that has come to pass is the work of his mighty hands. It is He that apportioned both weight and measure to the winds and waters, and has ever since maintained their just equilibrium; it is He who first created, and who still directs and guides, the thunderbolt; and it is He alone who has revealed that knowledge to man, which takes its rise in His fear, and ends in the acquisition of true wisdom. It is important to remark here, how strikingly the כִּי הוּא . . . וְגו' &c. in vr. 24, is opposed to כִּי הוּא הוֹקֵר וְגו', &c., in vr. 3; and how exactly the one applies to God, the other to man. This, I think, will afford a key to the true interpretation of this very interesting chapter; and, at the same time, shew how it is connected with the preceding one. We may now notice the several particulars.

lb. מוֹצֵא. This may be either a noun of instrument, or of place. In this first case, it would signify a means of egress; in the second, a place of egress. The term מִקְוֶה, in the parallel, seems to require the latter. By coming out, is probably meant the separation of the silver from the dross or earthy particles by which it is surrounded in the ore; not the coming out from the mine: for, in this latter sense, the first member would bear no relation to the second. מוֹצֵא here therefore is, in some respects, parallel to מִזְקָה, they fuse, or melt, r. מִזְקָה. Cogn. מִזְקָה, מִזְקָה, and מִזְקָה. On the gold-mines of Arabia, see Introduction, p. 55.

2. מִזְקָה מִזְקָה. Lit. Poureth out copper. Brass is a compound metal, and was probably unknown in these parts and times. Rosenmüller objects to the usual translation here, because the word אֶבֶן , being of the feminine gender, would require the verb to be תִּגִּיחַ , not יִגִּיחַ , as it is here. It is more than doubtful, I think, whether much weight can be allowed to remarks of this sort. Besides, אֶבֶן , pointed as it is, ought in strictness to be taken as a nominative absolute (Gram. Art. 247, 15), and construed, And, as to (the) stone, he. i. e. some one, any one, &c. impersonally, fuses (it) copper; which if taken passively, as is often done in this case, may be rendered is fused: and, in this view, both of the verbs here will agree strictly together. שָׁם , in the next verse too, is necessarily impersonal. Rosenmüller likewise tells us that נְחֹשֶׁת is, moreover, an adjective, not a substantive. He allows, nevertheless, that it is used as a substantive, chh. xl. 18; xli. 19, in this very book. This objection, therefore, has no weight. He then tells us, that the passage ought to be rendered, “et lapidem fundit æneum,” i. e. I suppose, the dust, or earth pours out (the) brazen stone; which is both incongruous with the preceding construction, and untrue in its philosophy: not to insist on the barbarous antibiblical term, brazen stone. Diodorus Siculus (lib. iii. xi.) gives an interesting account of the gold-mines situated on the confines of Egypt, Æthiopia, and Arabia; and shews how they are worked.

3. הָעֵץ שָׁם . He has placed or determined a limit, or boundary, i. e. Man, by his science, has ascertained the point at which light and darkness continually meet. See ch. xxvi. 10. Ib. וְלִכְלֵל־תְּבַלֵּית. And to every completion, termination, limit, or the like, i. e. the point at which any one thing ends and another begins, as in the place just cited; or, if the things were specified, from (וּמִן, to עַד). See 1 Kings, v. 13 (English Bib. ib. iv. 33), i. e. from one extremity to the other; or as Solomon has worded the sentiment at length, Eccl. iii. 11, $\text{מִרְאֵשׁ וְעַד־סוֹף}$. If allusion is here made to scientific investigations, the intention perhaps is, that precise exactness which is arrived at in questions involving the “pure mathematics,” and in which the results are really perfect. In the place cited, allusion is certainly made to the spherical character of the earth; on which a line is ascertainable where the limit of light and darkness will, at every possible portion of time, be. In this chapter and place, precisely the same thing is evidently had in view; and, therefore, the same word must necessarily have the same meaning. It is, moreover, certain that science was cultivated at a very early period in Chaldea, and probably in the very country and neighbourhood of Job. See Jer. xlix. 7; 1 Kings, iv. 29-33 (Heb. Bib. v. 9-14). Ib. אֲבָן אֶלֶּם. Lit. The stone of gross darkness, i.e. as the weight of any thing was usually ascertained by a stone; the word stone became used by a meton. for the weight generally: Lev. xix. 36; Deut. xxv. 13; Prov. xx. 10, 23; Mich. vi. 11: also, to intimate devastation, waste, &c. as in Isa. xxxiv. 11, which seems here to be the intention of the writer. If so, the quantities, measures, &c. of things situated in places inaccessible, or of deficiencies, want, misery, and the like, in such situations—as the following context seems also to imply—is the intention of the writer.

4. אֲרָצוֹת יָגוּ. A torrent breaketh forth, i.e. to the place in which this happens are man's investigations extended. The ellipsis of לָ, or אֶל (with מְקוֹם here), is carried on from אֲרָצוֹת, &c., and to be supplied from the third or fourth term in the preceding verse, i.e. even to the place where no inhabitant is to be found; i.e. they traverse deserts in quest of this sort of knowledge. If we read אֲרָצוֹת here with the LXX. and Syr. the sense will be more obvious, and the context more at unity with itself. Ib. מֵעִם, for מֵעִם יָגוּ. Lit. From being with, i.e. without sojourner, where there is no such person. See Ps. cxxiv. 4; ch. xxx. 14. Ib. הַנִּשְׁכָּחִים. Lit. The disregarded ones, i.e. persons subjected to the breaking forth of such torrents, and at such juncture unvisited by any; here מֵעִירָהֶם, by the foot, i.e. of any, unfrequented by men. דָּלִי. They became exhausted, diminished, reduced, i.e. the people so circumstanced as the following, מֵאֲנָשִׁים נָנוּ, from man they stray, or wander, so as to cease from being a people. The ellipsis seems to be as before, מֵהָיִיתָ אֲנָשִׁים, from being men, i.e. a society of men. See Deut. xxxii. 26. Comp. Arab. نَاعَ (r. نوع), and نَعَّ. Heb. נוד, most commonly and naturally applied to men, as Prov. v. 6; Isa. xxix. 9; Gen. iv. 12, &c.

5. אֲרָצוֹת יָגוּ, supp. ל הוּא הוֹקֵר ל, i.e. he—man—extends his researches to the earth; explains the process; accounts scientifically (תַּבְּלִיחַ, vr. 3) how bread is obtained from it. Ib. וְהִתְחַדְּתָהּ. And how its under parts are turned over (וְהִתְחַדְּתָהּ, lit. becomes turned over, i.e. by the process of the miner, פְּנֵי אֵשׁ, lit. like fire, for וְהִתְחַדְּתָהּ כְּפְנֵי אֵשׁ, i.e. becomes, and appears, brilliant like the fire; i.e. That which appeared to be opaque and dull, shews, by the work of art, by the exposure of its precious stones and metals to the light of day, the splendour and brilliancy of fire. The following context particularises on this, viz.—

6. מְקוֹמֵי-סַפִּיר. A place, or generically places. Supp. the ellipsis to, as before: (the) sapphire (are) its stones, and the עֲפָרֹת, lit. dusts of,—pl. in construction,—put, perhaps, by way of excellence, for the most precious dust, i.e. of gold, are לוֹ its, i.e. of it, belong to it. By this is probably meant the gold termed by Strabo, &c. χρυσός ἄπυρος. See Introd. p. 55. By turning over its depths, I think the author means to say, and turning up these to the view, the under parts of the earth really assume the likeness of fire. This is mentioned evidently as one of the wonderful results of science; and here, of that of geology, or mineralogy perhaps, just as what was mentioned in vr. 3, belonged to astronomy.

7. נְתִיבֵי וְגו'. A path, &c. i.e. each of the passages, or shafts, as they are termed, driven by the miners in digging for the precious metals, &c. Both the עֵיט, and the אַיָּה, mentioned here, are, according to Bochart, Hieroz. Pars II. lib. II. cap. viii., of the hawk species, and remarkable for their keenness of sight. On the verb נִשְׁפָּהוּ, see ch. xx. 9.

8. בְּגִי-שָׂחָץ. Lit. Young, or whelps, of the fierce. I take שָׂחָץ, here, to be equivalent to the Arabic شَاخِصٌ, apertus oculos fixosque habens: an epithet well suited to the glaring look of the lion or tiger; and thence to describe that class of animals. In שָׂחָל, I follow Bochart. See the Hieroz. Pars I. lib. III. cap. i.

9. בְּחַלְמֵי-אֵשׁ וְגו'. This is, no doubt, the خَلْمُوسٌ, "pyrites, silex, quo extunditur ignis," of the Arabs, used here perhaps for any hard rock. Schultens, and after him Rosenmüller, has given a passage from Pliny, Hist. Nat. lib. xxxiii. cap. xxi. (iv.), which see, admirably illustrative of this passage. The general sense seems here to be: Nothing, however immense or difficult, such as cutting down rocks of flint, or digging down mountains, has escaped the art and industry of man.

11. מִבְּכֵי וְגו'. Lit. From weeping, i.e. metaphorically, from sending forth water, as weeping sends forth tears. So in Latin, fleo, cogn. with fluo: and here, بَكَيٌ, with بَاكٌ, بَوَكَ, بَوَف, بَوَف, פּוּכַת (Gr. πηγῆ), فَك, which see. In digging under rivers for the precious metals, &c. it is necessary so to stop the natural fissures and pores of the earth, as to keep the place dry. The Thames Tunnel is a good modern instance of this sort. So also Semiramis is said to have changed the course of the Euphrates. See Isa. xxxvii. 25; xlv. 27.

Ib. חִבְּסָה. He restraineth. Syr. سَفَع. conclusit, obstrinxit. Cogn. סָפַר. Syr. and Chald. Arab. حَبَسَ, retinuit, &c. Cogn. حَبَسَ, congregavit. וְהִתְלַחְּתָה. Lit. And its hidden things i.e. the treasure peculiar to each; called perhaps its treasure, because lying concealed beneath it. Some copies, however, read ה without mappik: still the sense will, in the main, be the same. See ch. xi. 6. Ib. אֶל-אֹרֶךְ, for אֶל-אֹרֶךְ. To the light. Gram. Art. 219, note, &c. Here ends the recital of the progress of science and art in the times of Job; which, it must be confessed, were extensive.

12. וְהִתְקַדְּמָה. Arab. وَالْحِكْمَةُ. But, as for wisdom. Nomin. abs. Gram. Art. 212, 3, note, and 216, 10, 11. Abstract nouns will take the article generally without defining the word any further, than by marking its meaning the more specifically. Gram. Art. 221. By this word here is evidently meant that “wisdom which cometh from above,” i.e. peculiar to revelation. See notes on chh. xi. 6; xv. 7. Ib. מֵיִצְיָן. Lit. From whence does it come (comp. מֵיִצְיָן, with Arab. مَضَى. So the Lat. invenio, of in + venio), i.e. is found; or, as the Niphthāl form rather requires,—Gram. Art. 157, 20,—is discoverable, may, can, be found.

13. שְׁוָהָהּ. Its equal, i.e. any thing comparable, or that may be opposed, to it.

15. קָנֹדָה. As this word is found here in the parallel with קָבָה, it is not unlikely that it signifies gold of some sort; and, as we often find the phrase קָנֹדָה קָנֹדָה, viz. 1 Kings, vi. 20, 21, &c. it seems probable that קָנֹדָה, ought to be read here. If, then, we can ascertain what sense this word ought to bear, our work will be done. We have in the Arab. سَجَرَ, accenso igne ferefecit elibanum. Exemit vacuavit. Aquū implevit fluvium, &c. Cogn. صَجَرَ. Se commovit dum mulgeretur camela. شَجَرَ, mutavit; سَجَلَ, fudit, effudit, aquam. سَقَرَ, alteravit colore Sol æstu vehementior. سَكَرَ, clausit, quævit, ventus post vehementiorem flatum: med. kesr. Ebrinus fuit. سَكَرَ, lactis plena fuit ovis. Syr. مَجَى, accensus est. عَسَى, clausit. عَسَى, retinuit, &c. From all which, if any reliance is to be placed on etymology, considered with reference to the dialects, heating, thence fusing, and giving another colour, shape, &c. thence, fixing, retaining, confining, as in a mould, may have been successively derived. It must strike every one in going over matter such as this, that the great variety and apparent want of connexion, found in many significations attributable to Hebrew and Arabic words, is to be ascribed to the changes which have taken place in letters of similar sounds, so that the sense of one word is often given by authors to other words, the letters of which may be considered as homogeneous. For example, קָנַר, in Heb. is most frequently used to signify closing, or shutting up. The same is, perhaps, true of the Syr. مَكَّن and مَكَّن, the Arab. سَكَّرَ, سَجَّرَ, سَجَّرَ, and سَكَّرَ. In the Hebrew, again, נָכַר signifies generally inebriating. The same sense is found, more or less frequently, in many of the Syriac, Arabic, &c. cognate roots. Again, in some of these, the sense of heating or inflaming, prevails, thence of irritating, vexing, and so on; as in صَكَّرَ, in which compression seems still to be the leading notion: as, angore animi pressus, commotus fuit, malè habuit ex tædio fastidioque. So also in سَكَّرَ, æstuavit irâ, valdè iratus fuit; which, again, is used in the sense of شَكَّرَ, gratias egit. Again, the Syr. مَكَّن signifies, among other things, præmium, merces, pretium redemptionis; agreeing, in some respects, with our סָגַר, above mentioned. It also signifies scutum, and, in the pl. obstacula aquæ; taking the sense of enclosing, stopping up, or the like. It would be almost endless to follow this out into all its parts. It will be sufficient here to have offered the remark, for the purpose of suggesting the fact to learners, and of enabling them to ascertain the real causes of such discrepancies (which have originated in a slight variety of pronunciation only); and thence the method of investigating the real force of words so circumstanced, and perhaps the means of greatly abridging the Hebrew and Arabic vocabularies. Our term, therefore, viz. סָגַר, or סָגַר, probably means that sort of gold which has undergone the trouble of refining, in contradistinction to that which is termed ἀστυγος. Introd. p. 55, note.

Ib. לֹא יִשְׁקָל. Is not weighed. So Abraham is said to have weighed out the silver to Ephron the Hittite, — Gen. xxiii. 16, — apparently before the coin termed the shekel was known. Ib. מְחִירָהּ. Its price. From the various places in the Old Testament in which this word occurs, no doubt can be entertained as to its general meaning, which is confirmed in the cognate dialects and made sufficiently precise; as, Syr. ܡܫܘܪܐ, mensur, geometra (cogn. Heb. מִשׁוֹרָה, mensura: Angl. measure: aspirates often changing into s: as ܫܘܒܪܐ, super, &c.) Arab. مَسْكَر, præstantiorem supellectilem domus accepit. أَمْتَكَّر, delectum habuit. Cogn. أَمَعَل, operam studiumque obtinendæ rei, quæ debebatur. مِعَال, regulu, ordo: divitiæ, &c.

16. לֹא הֵבִילָהּ. It cannot be compared, r. הִבִּילָהּ, manifestly used here in the sense of הִבִּילָהּ, throwing up a way, mound or mount, in military affairs, so as to place an attacking party on a level with the defending one: i.e. equalising. Comp.

Prov. viii. 11. לֹא הִשְׁוִיָּהּ,—Arab. سَلَّتْ, sewing two straps, so as to make them into one: redup. سَلَسَل, concatenavit.

It is certain that can, may, might, &c. is contained in the Niphthal form of verbs: and, what the Niphthal is to Kal, the same is every other passive to its respective active form. And if so, can, may, &c. are also implied by them. יְבִיֵּלָהּ. Whatever this word may really mean, certain it is that its etymology is very similar to that of כָּנַן, noticed above: כָּתַם, abdedit, continuit iram. כָּתַם, i. q. جمع, congregavit, conguessit rem. implevit. Cogn. כָּתַב, i. q. جمع, conjunxit: vinculo firmiter constrinxit. כָּתַב, i. q. جمع, collegit: effudit, infuditve. כָּתַף, firmiter colligavit ligna,

&c. כָּתַף, densus, spissusque fuit. כָּתַם, insignem dedit.

כָּתַתְּ, multas facultates conguessit. כָּתַם, congregans milium boni. Comp. כָּסַב, כָּפַם, כָּתַם, כָּתַם, &c. Whence I am inclined to think, that the best, finest, most compact, &c.

gold, or that usually brought from Ophir, was intended.

Comp. v. 19. In Jer. x. 9, we are told that הַיָּהוּב מֵאֹפֶז, gold is brought from Uphaz; where, as also in Dan. x. 5,

Uphaz is perhaps put for Ophir: a slight change in the pronunciation of the word having taken place. In Daniel we have וְהִתְגַּבְּרוּ הַגְּזֵרִים בְּבִרְתֵּי אֹפֶז, and his loins girded about with the בְּרֵתֵי of Uphaz: which is thus paraphrased in Rev.

i. 13, καὶ περιζωσμένον σὺς τοὺς μαστοὺς χρυσοῦν,—with a golden girdle. It is not impossible therefore that this term פְּהָרִים is used to signify the finest sort of gold brought from Ophir; or (as Gesenius, after Bochart, Phaleg. lib. ii. c. 27, has remarked), from Uphaz. But in 1 Kings, x. 18, we have בַּרְזֵל בְּהָרֵי, which, 2 Chron. ix. 17, is בְּהָרֵי הַבָּרְזֵל. Is this בַּרְזֵל put for בְּהָרֵי? Is it not a part. of قَص, or قَصَص, disgregavit? purificavit? &c.

Ib. בְּהָרֵי הַבָּרְזֵל. With the onyx. Arab. شَهَب, cinereo colore fuit, et in genere Bicolor fuit, præcellente albedine. أَسْمَب.

Cogn. سَمَم, palluit: it. شَحْمَةُ الْعَيْنِ, nigra et alba pars oculi.

The Greeks seem to have termed this the onyx, on account of its resemblance to the colour of the thumb-nail (ὄνυξ. See Scapula). Braunius, de Vestitu Sacerdot. lib. II. c. xviii. has a dissertation on it, and endeavours to shew that the sardonyx is meant. Ib. בְּהָרֵי הַבָּרְזֵל. And the sapphire. The Greek σάπφειρος is beyond doubt the same word; although it is not certain, whether the stone so called by the moderns is exactly the same. Some think the lapis lazuli was the sapphire of the ancients. See Baierus de Sapphiro SS.; Bellermaun de Urim et Thummim; Michaelis Supp. p. 1798; and the Cyclopædias under the word; and comp. the Arab. سَمَر, سَمِر, and سَمِر.

Precious stones were by no means unknown in these parts of Arabia, especially to the inhabitants of Sabas (Σάβας), according to Diodorus Siculus, who says (lib. III. § xlvi.) after telling us of their vessels and furniture of gold and silver, τὰς δ' ὄροφάς τε καὶ θύρας χρυσαῖς φιάλαις, λιθοκολλητοῖς καὶ πυρναῖς ὀνυλικόταταις ἄπασαν τὴν τῶν οἰκῶν κατὰ μέτρος οἰκοδομίαν πεποιήσονται θαυμαστὴν ταῖς πολυτελείαις, τὰ μὲν γὰρ ἐξ ἄργύρου καὶ χρυσοῦ, τὰ δ' ἐξ ἐλεφαντος καὶ τῶν ὀναπρεπεστάτων λίθων, κ. τ. λ. “Laquearia et portæ crebras ex auro et pretiosis lapillis phialas ostentant. Siquidem in totam adium substructionem mirificos impendunt sumtus; nunc argento et auro, nunc ebore et lapillis exquisitis,” &c.

17. בְּהָרֵי הַבָּרְזֵל. And crystal. Arab. زجاج, vitrum. It is possible, however, as noticed by Rosenmüller from Niebuhr, that as بَلُور signifies both glass and crystal in the mouths of the Arabs, so might this word among the ancient Hebrews. Ib. בְּהָרֵי הַבָּרְזֵל. Nor its barter: supp. לָהּ from the first member. See root בּוּר. Comp. Arab. مور, مير, مير, مير, and مري. Ib. בְּהָרֵי הַבָּרְזֵל. The vessel of pure gold. Comp. 1 Kings, x. 21, where mention is made of vessels, בְּהָרֵי הַבָּרְזֵל . . . בְּהָרֵי הַבָּרְזֵל, probably the same sort with that mentioned here, whether we take קָז, as derived from כִּידָז (r. قَزَّ , divorxit, extubavit, قَوَزَ, conspicua fuit. أَفَاضَ , r. فَيَض , effudit; or فَضَّ , separavit, &c.), and then signifying the same thing with כְּנִיז; or, from אִדָּז, i. q. אִדָּיִר, and signifying of the fine gold of Ophir. In every case the exegetical sense will be much the same.

18. רְאֵמֹרִת וְנָבִישׁ. Things high and massive. I have taken what appears to me to be the general force of these words, without attempting to discover their exact meaning as precious stones—if such indeed they have—which is perhaps now impossible. The first of these has been supposed by the Jews to signify coral, without either authority or probability, as far as I can see,—a thing by no means unusual with them. Aquila seems to have started the notion, that רְאֵמֹרִת signified costly array—which is to adopt, as I have done, the usual meaning of רֹמֶם—because, perhaps, the preceding word, רִקְקָתָה (Ezek. xxvii. 16), signifies something of that sort: and, for a similar reason perhaps, the Jews supposed כְּרִבְדֹּת following, must signify coral. It strikes me as most probable, that even here, רְאֵמֹרִת ought to be taken in the general sense of high things, as high or great in estimation: thus, וְרְאֵמֹרִת וְכִרְבֹּד—after reciting certain sorts of precious clothing—and things high (in value), even the ruby do they give, &c. רְאֵמֹרִת, therefore, seems intended generally to describe various precious things; and to have been used here, in order to avoid a long description. The last word (כְּרִבְדֹּת), in this view, will be taken as standing for a class of precious stones, perhaps, of the highest possible value. In Prov. xxiv. 7, רְאֵמֹרִת is manifestly used in this sense: thus, Wisdom is an exceedingly high thing to a fool (i. e. is too high for him, is of too great a price); therefore, in the gate he opens not his mouth. In Zech. xiv. 10, we find this word in the singular number, and apparently in this sense likewise. So also קִסָּם, from קָוֶם, Hos. x. 14. The proper names thus written, as רְאֵמֹרִת, Dent. iv. 43; Josh. xx. 8, &c. might have been given in consequence of such places having been situated on eminences; as in our Hightown, and Lowtown, in Bridgnorth, High Wycombe, &c. In the Arabic, the root رَأَم seems to have taken the notion of precious, &c. rather than its primary one, viz. amavit, adamarit rem: adhesit propensiore affectu mater pullo, i. e. as conceiving the object to be very precious. Hence, perhaps, too, the ^ערִמָּה, Heb. רִמָּה, albedine purú candicans dorcas, because a very beautiful and lovely object; and hence taken, by way of comparison, for the all-prevailing power of Christ, Numb. xxiv. 8, where exultation, height, or dignity, would be a much more suitable translation of the word רִמָּה, than “strength.” Comp. ch. xxiii. 24; and the cogn. Arab.

رغف, رغب, رغب, رغب, رغب, رغب, &c.

As to the second term, viz. גְּבִישׁ, its primary general sense seems to be, consolidated, firm, compact, condense; and thence, secondarily, weighty, i.e. precious, as opposed to קָל, light, vilis; just as פָּבִיד, or פָּבִיד, is. Chald. גְּבִישׁ, congregavit. Hence, גְּבִישׁוֹשִׁית, eminentia collis. Arab. جَبَسٌ, concretum quid, i.e. as ice of water, congealing of the blood, &c. not congelatum, in the sense of crystallised; and hence crystals, as Dr. Gesenius thinks. The passages on which he grounds this are Ezek. xiii. 11. 13, where he takes the אֲבָנֵי אֶלְגָבִישׁ to signify hailstones; as אֶבֶן : אֶבֶן : lapis grandinis, does in the Æthiopic, and is used also to signify crystal. Therefore he thinks the אֲבָנֵי אֶלְגָבִישׁ, of Ezekiel, and the גְּבִישׁ, of Job, must also mean crystal. This is certainly ingenious; but it may be doubted whether it can be relied upon. For first, If we allow the אֶלְגָבִישׁ of Ezekiel to contain the גְּבִישׁ of Job, and the first to signify hail (comp. perhaps of אֶל strong, and גְּבִישׁ); still, it will not follow that, because the Æthiopic puts hailstone for crystal generally, these hailstones of Ezekiel will also signify crystal in the Hebrew. Certainly the hailstones of Ezekiel—to do what he predicates of them—must be large, such, perhaps, as those cast down from heaven in the times of Joshua (ch. x. 11), which are indeed termed אֲבָנֵי הַפָּרָד, stones of hail,—the Æthiopic terms just cited. In Ezekiel, the term אֶלְגָבִישׁ seems intended to mark the destructive character, and perhaps greatness, of these stones; and, if we may take this word as equivalent to the Arabic جَبَسٌ, congelatum would very well suit this purpose. But would this also suit the character of a precious stone equally well? Would it not rather signify a great stone? It is true אֶבֶן : אֶבֶן : in the Æthiopic, means “lapidibus in modum dense grandinis abruit ;” but the congealing implied in the term بَرَد, seems to be derived from the notion of freezing by cold, not by condensation, or the congregation of many particles, as it is the case with جِبَس, and גִּבְשׁ. In this sense of condensation too, is the verb تَكَجَّبَسَ, jactato corpore superbius incessit, and جَمَش, suffusio, used. Comp. cogn. جَمَسَ, جَمَشَ, جَمِسَ, جَفَشَ, جَفِسَ. Syr. حَصَه. Arab. انكفَسَ; and Chald. פְּבַת. I cannot help thinking, therefore, that both in Ezekiel, and here in Job, the term גִּבְשׁ is used to signify aggregated, great, or the like: and hence, in the first case, to imply violence, or force; in the second, weight, and hence massiveness, or value. Besides, the זבובית, of the preceding verse, bids much fairer for signifying crystal than this word can. Ib. וּמִצְּבִיבָה וְגו'. Nothing has yet been offered on this place at all equal to the explanation of Bochart. Hieroz. Par. II. lib. v. cap. vi. which is this: “Et extractio sapientiae præ peninim.” “Sic enim,” adds he, “alluditur ad modum, quo vel conchæ, vel margaritæ è fundo maris extrahuntur.” “Atqui à latere conchæ manum subjiciunt, ῥαδίως τῶν κόγχων ἀπὸ τοῦ λίδου ἀποσπῶσιν, facile conchas ex saxo extrahunt. Qui conchas sic ἀποσπῶσιν, Hebraicè dice-rentur מִצְּבִיבָה בְּמִצְּבִיבָה. Atque ipsa tractio מִצְּבִיבָה. seu ἀποσπῶσις,” &c. See the whole chapter with Pareau on the passage. I have rendered מִצְּבִיבָה, by the getting; because the extractio, here mentioned, takes place with a view to this, i.e. by a meton. Some, however, have taken this word as signifying extent, hence value, goodness: and this, Prov. iii. 15; viii. 11, —which are manifestly imitations of this place—very much favour.

19. פְּתֹרֶת־פִּיזָה. According to some, the topaz of Arabia. Braunius de Vestitu Sacerd. lib. ii. cap. ix.; Bellermin, Urim et Thummim, p. 37, &c.; Bohlen Abhandlung. der deutschen Gesellschaft, &c. i. p. 80, &c. According to others the Æthiopian emerald. Niebuhr Descrip. Arab. p. 41; Rosenm. I have retained the original word Cush, in order to avoid the ambiguity arising from the term Æthiopian. I can discover no reason why the topaz should not be understood here, which Pliny tells us, lib. xxxvii. 32 (8), “Reperta est . . . in Arabia insula, quæ Cytis vocatur: in qua Trogodytæ prædones, diutius fame . . . pressi cum herbas radicesque effoderent, eruerunt tapazion.” Strabo, lib. xvi. places it in the Serpent Island, ἡ ὀφιδόνηξ . . . ἡζσοξ, and says that it is a pellucid stone, and resembling gold.

23. הִבִּין דְּרָפָה. Hath made known, discriminate, clear, i.e. in that revelation of His will, which he has made known to man : and this may be considered as one of the many places in this book, in which a prior revelation is recognised.

24. בְּיַחְדָּוּ וְגוֹ. For He, &c. See the preliminary remarks to this chapter.

25. לַעֲשׂוֹת. Lit. To make; which, according to our idiom, requires appoint, determine, or the like, i.e. to fix the air in such a state of equilibrium as shall insure the objects had in view by Him. וַיִּמַּח הַיָּם וְגוֹ. And (that) He may establish (the) waters, &c. See Prov. viii. 27. We must not imagine, that the law of parallelism is so exact as to admit of no deviation, or that unity of expression is universally observed by the sacred writers. See Gram. Art. 242, 4. The sentiments contained in this and the following verse, are sufficient to shew that Job had a deeper insight into natural philosophy, than most men are willing to allow was known to the patriarchs. The question here is evidently as to the relative weight and measure of the atmosphere, and waters respectively, and particularly with regard, first, to the descent of the rain; and then, secondly, of the electric fluid, as observed in the lightning: and all this as regulated by permanent and unvarying laws. לְחַזְזוֹ קוֹלוֹת. Lit. The cleaving, or splitting, of the sounds or thunders; by which the lightning or thunderbolt is apparently meant.

27. וַיִּרְאֵהוּ. Then, i.e. when this took place at the creation, when all these great works were completed, וַיִּרְאֵהוּ. He saw; alluding perhaps to the passages in Gen. i. 4, &c. וַיְבַרְכֵהוּ. And described it. He made known this His wisdom to those who lived in the first ages, by giving them His first revelations. וַיִּבְחַרְתָּהּ. Lit. Investigated it. Syr. and Arab. "Weighed and made known." This seems to be one of those cases, in which the simple verb denotes also the permission, &c. of the action implied by it, to others. See Glass. Phil. Sacr. lib. iii. tract. iii. canon xi. ed. 1743, pp. 774, 5: if, indeed, it ought not to be pointed and read וַיִּבְחַרְתָּהּ, in the Pihel form; which is not improbable. Comp. vr. 23. This subject is taken up and beautifully discussed in Prov. viii. and Ps. xxxiii.: the power and effects of the thunderbolt are also powerfully described in Ps. xxix. &c.

28. וַיֹּאמֶר לְאָדָם. Lit. And He says to the man. This, I conceive, alludes to the intercourse which God is said to have had with our first parents (see Gen. i. 28, &c.); and contains, perhaps, a summary of the religious knowledge imparted to them. If so, the wisdom realised by the fear of God, is here finely contrasted with that which was the source of every human misery, and which the disobedience of the fall bestowed on the man, and on his posterity,—Comp. Gen. i. 27; ii. 16; iii. 9, 17; Prov. viii. 22,—of which, however, the several parts of the Book of Job contain the most perfect accounts we have. That some Scriptures existed in the very earliest ages of the world, but which have long been lost, the citation found in the Epistle of Jude, and the allusions made by St. Paul to the faith of the ancients (Heb. xi. 4–6, &c.) are ample proofs. See also Job, ch. iv. 12; viii. 8, 9, &c. with the notes. “The Book of Jasher,” Josh. x. 13, and of “The Wars of the Lord,” Numb. xxi. 14, seem also to have been ancient books of Scripture, which Divine Providence did not deem it necessary to preserve. יְהִי רָצוֹן לְפָנֶיךָ. See Prov. viii. 13; Ps. cxi. 10.

CHAPTER XXIX.

2. בְּיָהֳבֵנִי. Lit. Who gives, or can give out, i. e. say, declare, that I am now as I was in months past. It may be doubted therefore, whether this is perfectly equivalent to the “utinam” of the Latins, or to the “Oh,” &c. of our Auth. Vers. I have not, however, thought it worth while to alter it, as it expresses the exegetical sense sufficiently correct. בְּיָמַי. Lit. As in the days of, i. e. we have here the state of construction marked, with reference to the whole sentence following: an occurrence not uncommon in Oriental writers. Gram. Art. 224, 5.

3. בְּהִלּוֹ בָרוּ. Lit. In His making His candle shine. Rosenmüller thinks the first of these words cannot be taken in a transitive sense, unless we suppose it to be an abbreviated form of Hiphhil for בְּהִלּוֹ. It is very certain, however, that in this family of languages, the same words are often used in both a transitive and intransitive sense. Most grammarians are aware of this (Gram. Art. 228, 3, note). If this be true, we need not recur to a Hiphhil form for the purpose of explaining the force of this word. It may, however, be taken two ways, either by supposing it here to have a transitive sense, as, In His making His light to shine; or by supposing the latter term to involve an Épanorthosis, as, In its shining (viz.) His light, i. e. I mean His light, or luminary. Gram. Art. 216, 4. Arab. جَدَّ, apparuit, splendere cæpit nova luna. See on chap. xxv. 5. As light is often put for prosperity, and darkness for adversity; so here, the meaning seems to be, When He gave me prosperity, I pursued my course with ease, whatever difficulty met me. See ch. xxii. 28, note.

4. חֲרָפִי. My vigour. Symmachus, ἐν ἡμέραις νεότητός μου. Rosenmüller has a good remark here to this effect, viz. As the Eastern people of this family consider the autumn as the commencement of the year; and as they term this season חֲרָף, Arab. حَرْفٌ, tempus exeundi ad poma legenda, &c. and as the fruits, rains, &c. of this season are termed πελώμα, those of the spring ἄψιμα; it was natural enough to name the season and dispositions of youth after it. Hence Chald. חֲרִיפֹת, acies, acumen: it. adolescencia, juvenus: which the Targumist gives here for the word in question. Syr. حَرْفٌ, acutus, asper, &c. Ib. בְּכֹד וְגוֹ. Lit. In making firm, stopping up, &c. Arab. وَصَدَّ, firmus fuit. وَأَوْصَدَّ, occlusit ostium, construitur cum عَلَيَّ; as in this place. Cogn. صَدَّ, impedit. صَدَّ, prohibuit. سَدَّ, obstruxit. سَدَّ, stabilivit, firmavit, &c. The root יָסַד, fundavit, &c. only, is in use in the Hebrew, from which this word is regularly derived. This is, therefore in all probability, its primary sense. When used in the sense of secret—if, indeed, it ever requires that sense—fixed, determined; hence recognised, and allowed matter or purpose, is perhaps its real import. Comp. ch. i. 10; iii. 23.

6. בְּרָוַץ. Lit. In washing, i. e. actively or passively. Gram. Art. 146, 8, note. Ib. בְּרָחֶה, usually בְּרָחֶה, milk.

Arab. حَمًا, spissum, et velut durum fuit lac. Ib. וְצִבֹר. And (the) rock, I doubt whether a rock, in its proper sense, can be said to pour out rivers of oil in any case; but, as the cistern, or vat, applied to the oil-press, might be, and probably was, occasionally cut out of stone; it might with propriety enough be termed צִבֹר, rock. Again, as צִבֹר is used, as a verb, to signify arctare, premere, press, it might here have been applied to signify the instrument by which pressure was effected. But, as the passage is evidently figurative, as is also a similar one in Deut. xxxii. 13, the transition from the stone instrument to the natural rock, is perhaps allowable enough. I construe עִמָּדִי, with me, with צִבֹר; which will therefore be equivalent to my press. A press with me, would scarcely be English. Comp. ch. xxiii. 10. Ib. פְּלָגֵי. Streams, riuulets. See ch. xx. 17, and the note.

7. עַל־עִירָתָהּ. Auth. Vers. "Through the city." This passage appears to me to have been entirely misunderstood. מִקְרָה, signifies “contiguatio, contignatum,” &c. קִרְהָ, tignus, trabs. Sam. porta: also קָרָה, contignavit. Our קִרְתָּ, or קָרָתָ, therefore, I take as exhibiting only a different form of קָרָה, as פִּקְדָתָּ does of פִּקְדָה. If so, it must also signify contiguatio, or something very like it. Now, we read in Neh. viii. 4, that when Nehemiah read the book of the law to the people, he stood, עָלֵי־מִבְדֵּל־עֵץ . . . וַיַּעֲמֵד, upon a tower, or pulpit, of wood. This I presume might also be termed קִרְתָּ, contiguatio, i. e. a wooden frame or scaffold; and, as it was placed, לִפְנֵי הַרְחֹב, in the front of the square or broad open place, and also in front of one of the gates, לִפְנֵי שַׁעַר־הַיָּמִין (ib. vr. 3), it seems very probable that this was a place, and machine, not unlike that in which Job also set up his seat. Again, in 2 Kings, xi. 14, we are told that the king stood upon the pillar, according to the custom, עָמַד עַל־הַעֲמִיד פְּיִשְׁפָּט. This was therefore a customary place of authority. Again, in 2 Chron. vi. 13, Solomon is said to have made פִּיר כְּהַשֵּׁת, Auth. Vers. “a brazen scaffold;” but it is certain that פִּיר must mean something like a bason, or perhaps tub: a name ironically applied to a pulpit. Upon this he stood (וַיַּעֲמֵד עָלָיו) and delivered his dedicatory prayer. Comp. Prov. viii. 1-4; ix. 3, 14; xi. 11: in all which the term קִרְתָּ occurs, and in all, I think, in this sense. In the first, it is said to be near the gates: in the second, wisdom is said to cry, or preach, עַל־יְבֵי קִרְתָּי. In the third, עַל־פֶּסַח וְגוּ, which is just the מוֹשֵׁב of Job. Compare Homer’s account of Telemachus’s proceeding to address the Greeks, Odyss. B. l. 10, et seq. Βῆ δ’ ἄρ’ ἄνευ εἰς ἀγορᾶν—Ἐξέστο δ’ ἐν σατῆρος ἰώκῳ, εἴξαν ὄϊ γέροντες. “Perrexit ire ad concionem—Sedebat autem in patris sellâ, cesserunt vero (ei) senes.” The ⁵⁻⁶مِنْبَر, or pulpit, of the Mohammedans at the present day is, I believe, precisely the same thing; and it is used for precisely the same purposes as those just noticed, i. e. on public occasions, whether political or religious. The use of the term קִרְתָּ in Solomon, may perhaps be accounted for on the ground of his being a manifest imitator of the language of Job. From the context it is evident, that Job here speaks of his reception in public, and upon the occasion of his addressing the people. עָלֵי־קִרְתָּ I have translated as if written for עָלֵי־קִרְתָּי; these particles being often put the one for the other. The passage may, however, be elliptical for וַיַּעֲמֵדֵי, and in my standing upon the pulpit, &c. The general sense is the same in either case. See also Vitringa de Synagoga Vetere, lib. i. pars i. cap. viii. § xi. to the end of the chapter. Comp. 2 Kings, ix. 13; 2 Chron. ix. 18.

8. וְנִקְצְאוּ. Lit. And they became hidden, i. e. on the occasion of my appearance they withdrew, out of respect to me, and, וַיִּשְׁתּוּבּוּ, the elders arose and stood, i. e. as always has been the custom when some great and venerable personage has appeared.

9. עָצְרוּ בְּמַלְוֵיהֶם. Lit. They restrained (i. e. themselves) in, or as to sentences; which I take to mean, they did not presume to speak during Job's address. This construction with ב occurs in ch. iv. 2, and xii. 15, which the following member seems to confirm. וְנִקְצְאוּ. And the hand, &c. See ch. xxi. 5.

10. קוֹלֵי־נִקְצְאוּ. As to utterance. The first of these words signifies properly any sound, as of thunder, waters, musical instruments, persons walking, the voice, &c. In the Arabic it is applied to speaking only; and hence قَوْلٌ, a sentiment, dictum, &c. I take it here as a nominative absolute. Gram. 212, 3, note; 216, 10, 11. Rosenmüller and some others take it as affording a construction similar to those in Gram. Art. 215, 12. But, even in this case, the first word might be considered as a nom. abs. as in truth וְלִשְׁוֹנָם, in the parallel, ought to be. Ib. נִקְצְאוּ. Lit. Became hidden, which is equivalent here to seemed hidden, i. e. so acted as if they had not been present, retired. Comp. vr. 8. Hence we see the necessity of introducing such auxiliary words as will take away the stiffness usually visible in translations, and so give the precise sense of our original unembarrassed and freely.

11. פִּי אֶזְנוֹ וְגו'. When the ear, &c. This, I take, as so far opposed to the sentiments immediately preceding, as to be declarative of what positively took place when Job commenced his harangue; i. e. The attention afforded, whether by the ear or the eye, in their eagerness to catch the sentiments, or to view the person, of Job, respectively, clearly shewed how very greatly he was esteemed.

12. בְּיַצְמַלְטִי וְגו'. Lit. For I deliver, i. e. at this time, &c. It was my practice now to deliver, &c.; i. e. delivered.

13. וְלֵב אִלְמָנָה וְגו'. Lit. And the widow's heart, &c. Job, it may be observed, here appeals to the same criterion of conduct as he does when judging of others, chh. xxiv. 3, 21; xxxi. 16. Comp. Ps. xciv. 6; cxlvi. 9, &c.

14. נָדַדְתִּי לְבִשְׁתִּי. I put on righteousness, as a garment.

I habited myself in it, or, as we say, habituated myself to it : it was my constant practice. וְיָלְכָשְׁנִי. And it clothed me ; i.e. became the means of my protection, defence, and adorning. Comp. Isa. lix. 17. Ib. בְּמַעֲטֵל. As a cloak, &c., my judgment, just decisions as a judge, supp. וְיָלְכָשְׁנִי, clothed me.

15. עֵינַי הָיִיתִי. Lit. Eyes I became. I took upon me the office of seeing for those who could not do so, and of walking for the lame ;—

16, of being a father to those who were as helpless as children ;—and I investigated such causes of complaint as I could not otherwise know. So Telemachus of his father, Odys. 3. 47 : . . . Ζαδὴν.εὐς, πατὴρ δ' ὦς ἤπειός ἤεν . . . “ Imperabat ; paterque velut, mitis erat.” It. l. 234, ib.

17. וְנִשְׁבַּרְתָּ. So, i.e. accordingly, I broke to pieces, shivered, &c. Gram. Art. 234, 2. Ib. מְתִלְעוֹת. Canine teeth, fangs. See Tod's Johnson under Fang.

18. וְאָמַר. And I say, i.e. said, עִם־רֵגְלִי. Lit. With my nest, i.e. my wife and children, in the bosom of my family, having lengthened out my life to a good old age. Comp. Hesiod. opera et dies, i. 301, 307. Rosenm. The term nest is usually, and very appropriately, applied to persons in prosperity. See Numb. xxiv. 21 ; Deut. xxxii. 11 ; Isa. x. 14, &c. So in Macbeth, “ What, all my pretty chickens !” &c.

19. וְנִשְׁרָשְׁתִּי וְגו'. My root (is) opened out, &c. ; i.e. The whole of my substance, family, &c. flourished as if irrigated in every part with streams of waters. See vr. 6, with note. וְנָטַל. And the dew lodgeth, &c. ; i.e. by night the dew refreshes the heads of my crops, just as the waters nourish their roots. The singular, in each case here, is taken generically for the whole class.

As much mistake exists on the use of the word נָטַל, dew, in certain parts of the Old Testament, it may not be amiss to notice this here. In P. cx. 3, we have נָטַל וְיִלְדָּתִי, the dew of thy birth ; to which Isa. xxvi. 19 is a parallel : viz. נָטַל אוֹרוֹת נְטִלָּה, the dew of lights, i.e. gloriously reflecting the light (is) thy dew : i.e. of Christ, intimating his coming and success. This is certainly a prophecy. Again, in Isa. xviii. 4, we have, נָחַם עַל־אֵשׁ, בְּהֵמָּה נָחַם עַל־בָּהֶם קָדְדָר, which I translate : When (the) heat becomes clear to light, i.e. is converted into clear light, even as (the) thick rain-cloud dropping down its dew, in the heat of harvest. This, I think, is another prediction of the coming of Christ, as the sequel at vr. 7 clearly shews. Jehovah is here represented as looking with pleasure on the establishment of his religious worship in Jerusalem, his spiritual Zion, when the fire of persecution is employed to destroy it; but which, from His overruling Providence, terminates in the more ample diffusion of its heavenly light, even to the extremities of the earth; just as the dew-droppings of the cloud are a refreshment and blessing during the otherwise scorching heat of the harvest. Comp. Mic. v. 6, which predicts the very same thing, by the instrumentality of that remnant of which Paul professed himself to be one. Rom. xi. 1-5. Under the term dew, therefore, something refreshing, ennobling, or the like, is manifestly intended. Lowth's notion is, that number or multitude is implied, because dew-drops are numerous: but this is not the Oriental notion. Used as a verb, in طَلَّ , the Arabs mean, "Leviter terram humectavit ros. Intrans. leviter maduit terræ. Plu- cuit; gratus fuit, patuit, commoda ei fuit terra: admiratus est, letatus est ob rem: emineuit, excelluit. Conj. iv. i. q. أَشْرَفَ , superuè ascendit supra illum: ortus est, &c. And, as a noun, طَلٌّ , grata pulchritudo, noctis, &c. Adjectiv. Humidus et bonus, salutaris, dies, &c. The Persians use the word تَم , dew, in the same way. So Saadi, pref. to Gulistan, $\text{بَرِّ كَرْدِ سُرَّخِ از تَمِ افْتَادَه لَای}$. Upon the red rose, pearls of dew had fallen: i. e. they speak of the dew as glorious from the light which it reflects, and the appearance of precious pearls which it assumes. Hence we may see, in what sense the term טל is applied to the birth above noticed, as well as in other numerous instances in which it occurs. Cant. v. 2. $\text{טְּשֵׁה-אֵשִׁי בְּמַלְאֵה טַל}$, therefore, is best explained by Dr. E. Clarke when he tells us, that the hair of one of the Sultanas at Constantinople might be said to be powdered with diamonds.—CLARKE'S Travels.

20. הִחַלְתִּיהָ . Lit. It causes, or makes renewal; i. e. is renewed. See ch. xiv. 7, 14. As if he should say, renews of itself, without any effort of mine.

21. לִי-שָׁמְעוּ . To me gave they ear. Comp. vr. 11, &c. Ib. וַיְחַלְתֵּהּ . And did homage. The dagesh in ל is said to be euphonic. If not, the root is perhaps חָלַה , not יָחַל ; and, in that case, the verb will be in Pihel, for וַיְחַלְתֵּהּ . They placate, render homage, or the like. Arab. حَلَّ . Suavis fuit: trans. suavem reddidit. See Ps. xi. 18; xlv. 13, &c. It is evident, that this word was not intended, by those who affixed the points, to give the same sense with וַיְחַלְתֵּהּ , vr. 23.

Ib. $\text{וַיְדַבְּרוּ וְגו'}$. Kept silence, לָבוּ to them, by a pleonasm, for, they kept their silence. We have here וַיְדַבְּרוּ , for וַיְדַבְּרוּ , the first radical letter being doubled, instead of the second, as it is usual in the Chaldaic. This would be taken as a proof by some, that this book was Chaldaised, and was therefore written since the captivity. But this is to assume too much on the authority of the points (see my Sermons and Dissertations, pp. 188, 189), and to forget that Job resided on the borders of Chaldea. Ib. עֲצָתִי. (At) my counsel, לְמִוֹ עֲצָתִי, for לְעֲצָתִי. Arab. عِظَة. Monitio. Hence, وَأَعِظْ. Concionator, the office which Job seems to have sustained, according to this context.

22. תַּנְחֵף כְּלֶהְרִי. My speech, i. e. the conclusions to which I came, fell on them just as dew does upon the herbs; and it satisfied them. Comp. Deut. xxxii. 1, 2, and supp. בַּמַּטָּר, from the next verse.

23. לְמַלְקוֹשׁ. For the latter or spring rains, by which the fruits, &c. were filled for the time of gathering: i. e. They drank in my discourse just as vegetation does these rains.

24. אֲשַׁחֵק וְגו'. Both members may here be taken interrogatively, thus: Do I smile on them? Are they not confident? I prefer, however, taking the passage as elliptical for לֹא אֲשַׁחֵק, &c. See Judg. viii. 19; and ch. vi. 2. Ib. וְאֹרֶךְ פָּנָי. And at the light of my countenance, &c.; i. e. at the expression of my pleasure: imitated Prov. xvi. 15. Ib. לֹא נִפְּלוּן. They were not cast down. I take this passage to be elliptical for לֹא נִפְּלוּן פְּנֵיהֶם. They caused not their countenances to fall; i. e. became not despondent, cast down, &c. See Gen. iv. 5, 6, where this phraseology occurs twice. The "Et lucem vultus mei non dejiciebant" of Rosenmüller, is unwarranted by the usage of the Hebrew Bible, and I think of all the cognate dialects, not to insist on its frigidity and want of point here.

25. אֶבְחַר וְגו'. I chose out, &c. עֲבָרָה is so often used in the Hebrew for manner, custom, institute, law, or the like, as indeed its equivalent, طَرِيف, is in the Arabic, that no doubt ought to exist here, as to the sense intended; which appears to be, I select their laws, appoint their usages, &c. וְאָשֵׁב. For I sit a chief, yea dwell among them as a king, &c. In both which cases Job would be absolute, and therefore possess the power of making laws. See Ps. xxix. 10. Ib. בְּצִדְרוֹ. Lit. In the section: i. e. the great division of an army. In the Oriental camps,—as may be seen by referring to such drawings of them as are to be found in their MSS.

and to the descriptions of them as given by Xenophon and others—of which a valuable collection has been made by the Earl of Munster, and will, it is hoped, shortly be published—the royal tent occupies the central part. In or near this a court of justice is held (which, indeed, formed the prætorium of the Romans). From this, edicts are issued; in it, causes are heard and determined. This I take to be explanation sufficient of the following פְּאִשָּׁר וְגוֹ, also; because it is in this court that complaints are preferred, investigated, and redressed. The whole of which shews that Job was, during his prosperity, an Oriental prince of paramount power and authority, and such as we might expect the feudal lord of the whole land of Uz would be.

CHAPTER XXX.

1. לְיָמַי כִּי אֶעֱרִים וְגוֹ. Lit. Persons less than myself to days: i. e. my juniors. Ib. לָשִׁיתָ עִם וְגוֹ. This verb, with שָׂרָן, and נָתַן, is often used in the sense of giving out, estimating, &c., as often remarked; so here, I take to place with, to mean to rank with, i. e. consider of the same value. So Jerome, the Syr., and LXX.; which last has, with the Arabic, two different renderings of this passage. Ib. עִם-פְּלָבִי. With the dogs: generally understood of the dogs employed by the shepherds; but it may be doubted whether the meaning is not, the dogs which tore the flock. For, I think, no instance occurs in the Old Testament in which the term dog, is used in a good sense. If so, these persons were more detestable in Job's estimation than the dogs which worried his flock. In any other sense, the passage would be without point. For, if Job considered the dogs of his flocks "faithful creatures," and assistants in guarding his property, it could have been no disgrace to be ranked with them. I think an Arab would understand this passage in the same way. See Jer. xv. 3; Ps. xxii. 17; lxviii. 24. Strabo tells us, lib. xvi. § 10, that a people in Arabia, styled οἱ Κωνομαυλοῖ, and Ἀγροῖ, actually kept large dogs for the purpose of hunting the wild buffaloes. From the little that is said of this people, it should seem extremely probable that buffalo-hunting would not be the only use made of these dogs.

2. אָבֵד פֶּלֶח. Contempt, insolence, insolent power, &c., shall surely perish. The place is elliptical for וְאִשָּׁר עֲלִימוֹ וְגוֹ. פֶּלֶח. The Soorah has on this root, روي ترش کردن, Arabs in this way. All, therefore, that either Bar Bahlul, or Bar Ali, says, is, that by this combination, viz. دُكْس, is meant a certain city, so called after a giant once so named: and, by the former, that we are indebted to an author surnamed Almarwuzi for ascertaining this. The truth however is, this دُكْس is the Calah, קַלְחָ, of Gen. x. 11, 12; the כַּלּוּחַ of Ephrem Syrus (Com. on Gen. p. 58), which he tells us is כַּחְתָּ, Khetra. The giant in question, therefore, is probably Nimrod. See Ephrem, l. c. Once more: If we may suppose that دُكْس had, in the Syriac, some such meaning as that which Jauhari and the author of the Kāmoos assign to كلوح; the phrase in question would signify something like Fierce Khetrian, or inhabitant of Khetra; so that دُكْس, and كَلِيبَان, giant, warrior, جَبَّار, Heb. גִּבּוֹר, would be synonymous, or nearly so: and such sense will admirably suit the places in Job in which דלח occurs. Comp. قلح, جلح, جلخ, جلع, &c. From which it should seem, that contempt, insolence, or fierceness, must be meant.—“Virium integritatem . . . Quem sensum inter veteres Syrus expressit,” says Rosenmüller here.

But the Syr. عَظَمًا signifies just what the Arab. عَظَمَةٌ does: viz. “magnitudo, magnificentia, superbia, fastus.” Which, I must be excused in thinking, carries the matter considerably beyond the virium integritatem of this writer. He likewise cites ch. v. 26, where he thinks this word must mean integritatem, i. e. completis annis, &c. It is very true, this may be made to suit that passage, and yet be very far from the real meaning of the word. Jerome has taken “abundantia,” which Rosenmüller thinks may be applied to years: but, to me, this is most improbable. The Syr. has بِعَسَابٍ, Arab. بِالرَّاحَةِ, quiete; which can hardly apply to the age of the person so described, but to the manner of his interment. One would think that honourably, in splendour, magnificence, &c., in a good sense, would be meant: in the passage under consideration, the same in a bad one. Nor is it necessary to suppose, with Rosenmüller, that the LXX. and Symmachus must have read קַלְחָ, instead of דלח, merely because the one has given συνηλθισια, the other πᾶν τὸ πρὸς ζῶην. For, if this word has some such sense as magnificence, excessiveness, &c., in one sense or other (and hence be cognate with חִלְצִי), there is no good reason for supposing that these renderings resulted from a different reading. Ib. חִלְצִי. Lit. On them, which here is, perhaps, equivalent to with them; and it will suit our idiom better. Upon them, however, might be meant: i.e. their insolence, &c. shall exhaust itself upon themselves: it shall wear out, fail, on their own persons.

3. חִלְצִי. Hardly beset, &c. See ch. iii. 7. Ib. יְשֵׁבֵי. Yesterday. Arab. ^بأَمْسَ. See ch. viii. 9; Gen. xix. 34; xxxi. 29, &c. This word must be construed with the preceding member. Diod. Sic. speaking of the wretched inhabitants of these parts, says (lib. iii. xiv.): Τὰς δὲ οὐκ ἐκλήσεις ἔχουσαν οὐκ ἀπόδεν τῆς βαλάντης παρὰ τὰς βρυχίας, καθ' ἃς εἰσὶν οὐ μόνον βαθύται καὶ ἀόριστες, ἀλλὰ καὶ φάραγγες ἀνώμαλοι, καὶ στενοὶ παντελῶς αὐλώνες, ἀκούσις ἐκτεταταῖς ὑπὸ τῆς εὐσεως οὐκ ἐπιημεμένοι. “Habitant non procul a mari per litorum crepidines, ubi non solum profunda sunt caritates, sed hiatus etiam inaequales, et valles perangustae, in tortuosos a natura anfractus dispersitae.” Strabo, lib. xvi., speaking apparently of the same people, says: Ἦν δὲ τις ἐν βάδει Ἐνδέρᾳ γυμνητῶν ἀνδρώπων κατοικία, τόξοις χρωμένον, κ. τ. λ. . . . πολλὸν δ' ἐστὶ παρ' αὐτοῖς πλῆθος τῶν ἀγρίων βοῶν ἀπὸ δὲ τῆς τοῦτων καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἰθρῶν κρεωφαγῶς ζῴων: ἐπάν δὲ μηδὲν ἰθρῶν ὄντων, τὰ ξηρὰ ὄβρυματα ἐπ' ἀνδροκτιᾶς ὀπτῶντες, ἀρκοῦνται τῆ τριαύτῃ τροφῇ. “Fuit etiam Eudera quaedam interioris gymnectorum (sic a nuditate et exercitatione dictorum) hominum domicilium, qui arcu . . . utantur . . . Summa est apud eos sylvestrium boium multitudo, quorum et aliarum caribus vitam sustentant. Ubi nihil capiunt, sicca coria prunis assantes pro cibo usurpant.”

4. חִלְצִי. The salt shrub on the branch, &c. This, as Bochart has ingeniously shewn, is the ^{عَدَسَات}ملوخ, or ملوخ, of the Syrians, and ἀλίμον of the Greeks. See the Hieroz. pars i. lib. iii. ch. xvi. According to Ibn Beitar,—cited by him,—it is a shrub not unlike the bramble, and with which fences are made; but it has no thorns. Its leaf is like that of the olive, but wider. It grows near the sea-shore, and in hedges. Its tops are eaten when fresh. According to Athenæus, cited likewise by him, the poorer Pythagoreans plucked and ate it: Ἐν τῇ χαρᾷ τῶν πτωχῶν ἀλίμονα, καὶ κατὰ τοιαῦτα σελήγιοντες.—Athen. iv. 6. See the place also in Rosenmüller. Ib. חִלְצִי is best explained in the passage from Ibn Beitar, above alluded to, viz. ^{واطرافه توكل اذا كان} وطرافه توكل اذا كان طرية. Its EXTREMITIES are eaten when fresh. Ib. חִלְצִי. ^{ורקמייה}ורקמייה. And the broom-root, &c. From what has been said by Celsius (Hierobot. par. 1. pp. 246, 250), Schultens, Forskal, and others, it is sufficiently certain that a sort of broom must be meant. Forskal, who saw it when on his travels, has particularly described it. P. 216, &c. he says: "Genista, Ractam" (Arab. ⁵رَمَّ); "foliis simplicibus; ramis alternis, striatis; fructu ovali, uniloculari. . . Rosettæ vidi plantam è desertis allatam; postea abundantissime crescentem inveni circa Saucés in campis arenosis, altitudine fructuiculi." . . . "Vitæ pauperrimæ symbolum est, Job, xxx. 4, 5, et hominis in deserto palantis; cui nullum superest alimentum nisi hujus radicis, quam Arabum nemo gustare cupit propter amaritatem. Designat quoque ipsa loca sterilia, tristia, sine arbore et umbrâ; ipse frutex ramis sparsis, raris, miserum est refugium in aperto et fervido campo (Coufer. I Reg. xix. 4). Igne injecta fragore tonat, velut juniperus, hæc nota apprimè convenit animo iracundo et immiti. Ps. cxx. 4." Suppl. Michaelis. Ib. ⁵רמם. Their bread, i. e. their food generally. In like manner the New Zealanders, when reduced to great want, dig up the fern-roots, which they bruise with a stone, &c. and then eat. Strabo tells us, lib. xvi. § 9, that a people termed ρίζοφάγοι (root-eaters) lived near the rivers not far from Meroë: they are also termed "Ελειοι, because, says he, they pull up the roots from the neighbouring lake, beat them with stones, make them into cakes, and cook them in the sun: διὰ τὸ ἐκ τοῦ παρακειμένου ρίζομοῦντας ἔλουσ, κόπτειν λίθοις καὶ ἀναπλάσσειν μάζας, ἡλιάσαντας δὲ σιτεῖσθαι. And Pliny, lib. xxxii. c. 35, as cited ch. xxviii. 19, above, that a certain people, pressed with hunger, discovered the Topaz by digging up roots for their sustenance, in these same parts. Whence it is evident, that this custom prevailed here. Strabo again, ib. a little earlier, tells us, that from the roots of certain trees producing incense, the juice is likewise extracted for eating. Ἐν δὲ ταῖς πρὸ τοῦ Ευφράτου νήσοις δένδρα φύεσθαι λιζάνου πνέοντα, ἃν τὰς ρίζας κλωμένων ὁπὸν ῥεῖν. And, a few lines still earlier, we have an account of salt-pits, and places in which the inhabitants erect huts of salt; just as Ibn Batuta tells us is the case in Sudān, in Africa (my Translation of these Travels, p. 232, &c.). Strabo's words are: Ἐν βαλεῖ κόλπῳ κείται πόλις Γεῖρρα, χαλδαίων φυγάδων ἐκ βαβυλωνος οἰκούντων ἀλμυρίδα, καὶ ἐχόντων ἀλίνας τὰς οἰκίας, κ. τ. λ. And again (lib. xvi. 13), that in the winter, when the Ichthyophagi cannot get fish, they collect certain thorns, bruise them, and make them into cakes: which thorns however when green, they suck. He adds, they live in caves, or in cots constructed of whales' bones and olive branches. These are just such persons as those described in our context by Job. Diod. Sic. (lib. iii. xxiii.) speaks of persons inhabiting the shores of Arabia in much the same terms. He then tells us of the Πιζοζάγοι, in terms corresponding with those used by Strabo; and again (ib. xxiii.), of the Υλοζάγοι and Σπιζομάτοζάγοι (it. Strabo, lib. xvi. § 9), material- and seed-eaters: and adds, Κατὰ ὅς τὸν ἄλλοιον καιρὸν τῆς θεοτάτης τῆς ἐν ταῖς σχιαζομέναις συναγωγαῖς σγλιζομένης καὶ ψυομένης, προσφίξονται τὴν προσηνεστάτην. “Reliquo tempore ex herbæ ejusdam multifidæ genere, quæ in convallibus umbrosis nascitur, dulcissimam quamque comedunt.” And, a little further on, Ἀνασάινουσαν ἐπὶ τὰ ὀνόζα, καὶ τὰς ἀπαλοὺς τῶν ἀκχευμένων προσφίξονται. “Conscensis arboribus ramos teneriusculos depascuntur.” Mr. Rich, also found, in his Residence in Koordistan, vol. i. p. 115, persons eating certain bulbous roots.

5. פְּרִי־בֵּית. From within, opposed to without (comp. Deut. xxxii. 25; 2 Cor. vii. 5, &c.). Syr. ܦܪܝܬܝܢܐ. Pars intima; hence ܦܪܝܬܝܢܐ, communitas. Arab. جَوْ. Interior pars domus. It certainly was a custom among the ancient Arabs to expel certain characters from society; and to this Harith alludes in his Moallakat Poem (vr. ۲۷, ed. Vullers), in these words:

أَرَمِيَّ بِمِثْلِهِ جَالَتْ الْكَيْدُ وَتَأْبِي لِحَصْمِهَا الْإِجْلَاءُ.

“Aramo ortus ille, talem virum oportet cursu cingant equi, impediētes, quominus per hostes suos e patria expellatur.” And, it is curious enough to remark, the Scholiast on this verse tells us that this أَرَمِيَّ, Aramite, was the progenitor of Uz, عَوْص. See also Gen. x. 22, 23; 1 Chron. i. 17. The custom is therefore, probably one of those of the times of Job.

6. פְּרִי־בְּרֵחַ. Lit. In the abrupt, broken, place of the valleys. See the extract from Forskal, on vr. 4 above. Ib. פְּרִי־בְּרֵחַ. In the holes of, &c. Such were the Horites (Gen. xxxvi. 20). Etym. פְּרִי, or פְּרִי, foramen. Arab. خور, id. Of such holes, or excavations made in the rocks, many of the mountainous parts of Palestine now abound, and particularly the rocks in Idumea. Mr. Rich saw a very large number of such caves, not far from Mousal.—Residence in Koordistan, vol. ii. p. 94. In the language of Harith, in his Moallakat Poem, vr. ۳۸, رَأْسُ طَوْدٍ وَحَرَّةٌ وَرِجَالٌ. “Cacumina montium, terraque lapidosa, peditibus difficilis.”

7. תַּחַת־הַבְּרֵחַ. Beneath the broom-pea. We, learn, from

I Kings, xix. 4, 5, that Elijah sat down and slept beneath the רתם; which, as above, is the Broom-shrub. It appears, that in these desert places no other trees are found; and also, that a sort of oval-formed fruit grows on them. Now, according to Bar Bahlul, פסח, signifies Esca, S. alimanti genus, pisa cicerculæ,—Castell: which might here be taken for the Broom-pea, or fruit, at least until knowledge more certain on the subject can be had. Celsius, Herobot. pars ii. pp. 164–168, takes it to be the Palinrus. Comp. Prov. xxiv. 31, where the קפאשונים, mentioned with this word, seems to signify catable weeds generally, Angl. vulg. garbage, rather than any particular plant or shrub.

Ib. וקפאשו. Lit. Were they congregated. Arab. سَمَّح. Fudit, effudit. Hence, مَسْفُوح. Effusus: res ampla. The sense seems to be, they were poured out, i. e. as waters, and so formed into a large body. See vr. 14 below, where we have a similar figure.

8. נקצאו. Were they beaten. Comp. vr. 5. Cogn. נקצה. Percussit. Syr. نكض. Nocuit, laesit, &c. Arab. نكض. Percussit.

9. נגנתם. Their song; i. e. the subject of it. Ib. ונאחי למלה. . . . And so, i. e. accordingly, become . . . for a proverb, or by-word (Gram. Art. 233, 3). On the word למלה, see ch. xxiv. 24, 25. It should be observed, that when the verb נאח is used to imply a change from one state to another, it is usually construed with ל.

10. נמנני. Lit. And from my face; i. e. at my presence, or when I am present, they forbear not to spit; which is considered in the East a mark of the greatest disrespect: as, indeed, it would be with us in all good society. Most interpreters take this as signifying, spitting in Job's face: which is manifestly wrong, as the following verse is sufficient to shew.

11. בייחתי. Because my cord, &c. It signifies but little whether we consider יחתי (יחתי) here as put for my bowstring, or my tent-rope, as it might be used for either. The Arabic favours the first (وتر). The general sense evidently is, He hath undone me, or the like. Comp. Isa. v. 27; xlv. 1, &c.; where the loosing of the girdle is of similar import. Ib. ורכני. Therefore, or also, the bridle, &c.; which is, perhaps, a mere explanation of the last member of the preceding verse. Arab. رَسَن. Bridling the nose of a horse, or, figuratively, of a man, as in the sentence, فَعَلْتُ ذَلِكَ عَلَيَّ, I have done this against the desire of his bridled part (the nose), or, in spite of his nose, as Castell gives it.

12. פָּרְחָח יְהוּבֵי. Insolent, or, with insult, they arise. The Arabic فرح is, according to Castell, equivalent to فحج, superbivixit; which is likely enough, from the circumstance that it exhibits a sort of reduplicated form of فَرَحَ, letus fuit, or فَرَّخَ, timore vacuus fuit. In the Syr. too, we have ܦܪܚܘܢܐ, for scintillee. Ib. רָגְלֵי נִיחָדוּ. See ch. xii. 5, notes.

Ib. אֶרְצוֹת אֵיבָב. Lit. The paths, or mounds, of their destruction: i. e. which they set up for the destruction of others. I have therefore given “their destructive roads.” The terms used are evidently military. See Jer. xviii. 15; L. 26, &c.; Job, xix. 12; Ps. xviii. 34.

13. נִבְרְכוּ. They break down, cut off, i. e. all my means of defence, &c. Arab. نَتَشَّ. Erulsit spinam. Syr. ܢܘܦ. Scidit dilaceravit. Cogn. أَنْتَضَّ. Protrusit. Ib. לְהִתְהַי. At my fall, or ruin. Arab. هَوِيَ. Lapsus, delapsus; هُوَّةٌ, locus admodum depressus, &c. Ib. יִצְלִי. They profit. Comp. Isa. xxx. 5, where we have יִצֵּר as a synonyme (r. יִצֵּל). Ib. לֹא יִצֵּר וְגו'. Lit. No helper to them. Some refer this to the former state of Job's enemies, as mentioned at the outset of this chapter. Schultens takes the passage as equivalent in sense to the following verse of the Hamāsa: رَأَيْنَاكُمْ لِيَامًا: أَدَقَّةً لَيْسَ لَكُمْ مِنْ سَائِرِ النَّاسِ نَاصِرَ, i. e. We looked upon you as culpably base: you had not of other men a helper: that is, you were so contemptibly bad, as to be frowned upon by all. This seems to me to suit the context well.

14. בִּפְרָץ. As a breach, &c. That is, They break in upon me, as the bursting of a wall when a breach is made in it — comp. Isa. xxx. 13, which will afford a good illustration of this place — or, like the bursting of a bank, or dam, confining large quantities of water. See ch. xxviii. 4. Ib. בְּפִתַּת שְׂפָה. Because of the devastation, ruin. Comp. Isa. lx. 15. בְּפִתַּת הַיְיָהוּ. Because of thy being, &c. That is here, because such a wide breach has been effected, they then roll on, הַרְגִּילָהּ like falling stones, or rather like rolling waves of the sea, &c. The Hithp. of this verb has two forms, viz. that just given, and הַרְגִּילָהּ, Gen. xliii. 18; Jer. li. 25. The former was perhaps intended to give the impression of a great dashing noise. Such is the force of the mountain-torrents occasionally in the East, that beds as of rivers deep and wide are cut out by them, and ruin and devastation spread wherever they go. "There are," says Mr. Rich (Residence in Koordistan, vol. i. p. 17), "some vestiges of a wall on the western bank of the torrent . . . and fragments of immense solid buildings, overthrown by the floods," &c.

15. הִתְהַפְּתָה וְנָה. Lit. It hath been turned over upon me, viz. בְּלִהוֹת, terrors. Gram. Art. 216, &c. Ib. הִתְרַדְּתָה. It followeth, pursueth; i. e. the בְּלִהוֹת just mentioned. Gram. Art. 216, 7. Ib. נְדִיבֻתִי. My ingenuousness, innocency. See the Concordance, under נָדַב. Ib. יְשׁוּעָתִי. Lit. My safety, or salvation. Auth. Vers. "welfare."

16. עָלַי תִּשָּׁפֵסֶה. Upon me is poured out: i. e. I faint, or swoon away, on account of my fears. Comp. Lam. ii. 11, 12, where it rather signifies expiring. So the Arabic عَشِي, covering, concealing, &c., is used to signify swooning. See the verb עָפַף in the Lexicons, and Ps. xlii. 5, 6, &c., similarly applied.

17. נִקְרַח מִעָלַי. Lit. Is pierced by my sickness. The preceding עֲצָמַי. My bones, pl. may be taken as an irrational or collective plural, and so have its verb in the singular. Gram. Art. 216, 7. Ib. מִעָלַי, for מִעָלַי perhaps; the dagesh being often omitted in the liquids (Gram. Art. 113), and which must be compensated by a perfect vowel. It is evident, from the occurrence of עלול in the Chaldee, signifying agrotus, infirmus, &c., and from عَلَّ in the Arabic, signifying noxa, damnum, and عَلِبَرٌ, agrotus, that the root עלל, or על, — dropping one of the similar radical letters, — might have been used to signify sickness, or pain: and, something like this, the parallel לֹא יִשְׁכַּבְנִי, certainly requires. The Vulgate has "doloribus" in this place.

18. יִהְיֶה חַפְּסָה. Lit. It becomes binding, pressing, confining. We have in the Chald. חַפְּסָה. Sacculus. Arab. حَبَسَ. Brevis crassusque vir. Cogn. حَفَّصَ. Congregavit, collegit; حَفَّصَ, saccus coriaceus; حَفَّصَ, inflexit, contorsitque lignum: custodivit incarcerationum; حَفَّصَ, depressit. The parallel, קִבְּרֵי, too, requires this sense. Comp. the Heb. cogn. קִבְּרָה and Arab. قَبْر. Ib. קִבְּרָה. As the mouth, or throat. The allusion seems to be to the neck-hole of a sort of doublet, which was woven without a seam, having a neck-hole so wrought in it as to fit quite close. See Braunius de Vestitu Sacerd. lib. ii. c. ii.; Jahn's Biblische Archäologie, 1 Theil. II. Band. p. 78; Michaelis, Supp. Lex. Heb. p. 1382. It is curious enough to remark, that הַרְגָה, a chain, and زِيَّتٌ, Arab. collare indusii, are so nearly allied to each other. See ch. xxxvi. 8.

19. הֲרַגְנִי לְחַמֵּר. Lit. He hath cast me down to the clay; i. e. He has lowered me in estimation to that degree; he has taught men that I am such. Exod. iv. 12, 15; Job, viii. 10, &c. Ib. וְהִתְחַשֵּׁל. So I become assimilated, &c. That is, because God has so humbled me, and so enabled others to despise me, therefore am I likened to dust and ashes generally.

20. וְהִתְחַבֵּן, supp. וְלֵאשׁ, from the former part of the verse.

21. תִּהְיֶהָּ רָעָה וְנִי. Lit. Thou art become changed, or turned, to a very cruel one to me; i. e. Thou art now such. Ib. תִּשְׁטַמְּנֵנִי. Thou fiercely pursuest me. See ch. xvi. 9.

22. תִּשְׁטַמְּנֵנִי. Thou takest or carriest me off. It is obvious, from the usage of this verb, that it often has the sense here ascribed to it, signifying killing, destroying, or the like; as in the passage in Macbeth, "The deep damnation of his taking off." The Greek αἰζέω has frequently the same sense, as also αἰζῶ; see Stephanus and Schleusner, it. Job, xxxii. 22, &c. I pay no attention to the accent () here. In this acceptance the following two members will be parallels: viz. "On the wind," &c. That is, as a cloud Thou causest me to pass, and entirely to melt away. Ib. תִּשְׁטַמְּנֵנִי. Substantively; i. e. entirely. I take the קָרִי to exhibit the correct reading; and אֵל, in this verse, to be used in the sense of עַל, which is frequently the case.

23. תִּשְׁבִּיבֵנִי. Thou wilt bring me back. The allusion here is to Gen. iii. 19. In Ps. xc. 3 it is repeated; which, in addition to other similar places, induces me to believe that the Book of Genesis must, in one form or other, have been in existence before the times of Job. The remainder of the verse is to the same effect.

24. אֵשׁ. Lit. Only, which in this context I consider as equivalent to nevertheless. Nold. sign. 9, p. 33. Ib. לֹא־בָּעֵי. Not (in) prayer; i. e. Not when prayer is had recourse to (for לֹא־בָּבָּעֵי, the prep. being omitted, as in מְנַת and בֵּית preceding). I take the root—as others have done—to be בָּעַד . Chald. בָּעַס . Syr. ܒܥܝ . Arab. بَعِيَ . Petivit. Ib. בְּעַד-בְּפִדּוֹ . Lit. Surely in His destroying: i. e. when He sends forth His plagues. Ib. לְהֵן שׁוּעַ . Lit. As to these (things) there is safety. I take שׁוּעַ here to be an abbreviated form of שׁוּעַי , as בָּעַד , for בָּעַדְתָּ , לָדַת , for לָדַתְתָּ , &c. Gram. Art. 76. Similar passages will be found in Isa. xxxviii. 16; lxiv. 4; Ps. lxxviii. 15. The plurality in לְהֵן appears to me to refer to the requisites, &c. of prayer. Comp. Jer. xi. 4. In the first passage of Isaiah we have בְּהֵן , which is preceded by אֲדַבֵּר , and אֲדַבְּרָה , with the mention of bitterness of soul. To these, as antecedents, I suppose this בְּהֵן to refer: and, to something like this understood, may the לְהֵן of Job also refer. In Ps. lxxviii. 15 we have the singular בְּהֵן , referring undoubtedly to the preceding בְּקָרְשׁ . This certainly is a peculiar usage of the pronoun, which ought to be observed. See also ch. vi. 29; xxii. 21; xxxvi. 31, &c. As this whole verse seems here to be introduced as proverbial, or generally acknowledged truth, I have added the words I said. This gives ease and point to the place.

25. בְּכִרְתִּי . I have wept: prægnanti sensu, and prayed. Comp. Gen. xxxii. 25, 26, with Hos. xii. 5; and Gen. xxvii. 38, with Heb. xii. 17, and the margin. A good man could scarcely do less. לְקִשְׁתֵּי-יוֹם . Lit. For the hard of day: i. e. for those tried by the hardships of time, the hard-timed or fated. אִיָּאִם , i. e. days, or דְּהַר , time, is often used in this sense in the Arabic; as are the Persian روز , day, and روزگار , time. See note on ch. xxvii. 6. Ib. עֲנִיָּה . Lit. Ben stagnant, i. e. astounded, grieved. This word is evidently cognate with אָנַס , as Rosenmüller has truly remarked. See Isa. xix. 10, where we have $\text{אֲנָמִיר-נִפְּשׁוֹ}$, evidently in the same sense. In the Arabic, hardness, strength, &c. is occasionally meant by it; intimating apparently inflexibility or the like: as, العَجَمَات , a hard rock; and $\text{رَجْدٌ صَلْبٌ الْمَعْتَمِمْ إِذَا كَانَ}$. A man is termed صَلْبٌ الْمَعْتَمِمْ when he is of firm mind. And again: $\text{ذَاتٌ مَعْتَمِمْةٌ أَيُّ ذَاتٌ سَمِي}$. A she-camel (is said to be) ذَاتٌ مَعْتَمِمْةٌ when she is fat, powerful, and refusing to travel. Golius and Castell give, after Giggæius apparently, “Pinguedine, et ad continuandum iter, robore prædita camela.” My MS. of Jauhari, however, has ^{עֵינַי} ^{בְּעֵינַי} here, which I take to mean refusing, or rebelling. Comp. also the cognate roots, ^{עָב}, ^{עָבַ}, and ^{עָמ}. The sense of the phrase, therefore, viz. ^{נִפְּשִׁי} ^{נִפְּקָה} ^{נִפְּשִׁי}, seems to be, My soul is become torpid, motionless, unnerred, or paralysed; broken, indeed, and reduced to this state by vexation. See Jonah, i. 5, ^{וַיִּרְדָּם}; and Isa. xiii. 7; Jer. vi. 24, &c., for similar expressions.

26. ^{כִּי} ^{טַוּב}. Lit. When I looked, &c. For a similar use of ^{כִּי}, see Nold. sign. 22, p. 373. This view of the place seems confirmed by the following, ^{וַיִּשְׁתַּחֲוֶה}. Lit. And I ACCORDINGLY waited for, expected, &c. That is, the paragogic ^ה, affixed to the verb, strongly marks a consequence (see Gram. Art. 234, 2), and forms the ἀπὸδοσις to the preceding member. This will give point to the passage, which has hitherto laboured under great obscurity. Comp. Isa. lviii. 7, 8.

28. ^{בְּקַדְשֵׁי}. In the congregation. That is, in the gates of the city, in which causes were usually tried.

29. ^{אֶחָד} ^{וְנִי}. A brother, &c. That is, the injustice with which I met, ranked me among the most savage monsters. ^{לְתַמְנִים}. To the monsters of the desert. Various have been the attempts to ascertain what particular beast is meant by this word, as well as by another form of it, viz. ^{תַּמְנִים}, and likewise by ^{לְוִיתָן}. The two former are used evidently to designate either a desert or sea-monster; the latter, a sea-monster only. Comp. Jer. ix. 10; x. 22; xlix. 33; Ps. xlv. 20; Ezek. xxix. 3; Bochart, Hieroz. pars ii. lib. v. cap. xvi. That ^{לְוִיתָן} and ^{תַּמְנִים} are occasionally used for each other, will be seen in ch. xl. 25, and the notes on it. See notes on ch. iii. 8.

Ib. ^{לְבָנוֹת} ^{נִנְּהָ}. To the female ostriches: i. e. as frequenting the desert. See Bochart's Hieroz. pars ii. lib. ii. cap. xiv.; and Strabo's Geography, lib. xvi. p. 531, ed. 1587.

30. ^{בְּמַדְּלִי}. With my disease. See vr. 17 above.

31. ^{כַּדְּהִי}. So was, &c. (Gram. Art. 233, 4.) It has already been remarked, that the verb ^{הִדָּה}, followed by ^ל, generally implies a change taking place with reference to the state of the person or thing spoken of. Ib. ^{כַּדְּדִבִּי}. Any my lyre. See ch. xxi. 12 above.

CHAPTER XXXI.

This chapter contains the conclusion of a speech which commenced at ch. xxvi. It may, therefore, be termed its peroration ; and, in matter, it is truly such : for it contains the application of Job's whole argument ; viz. His justification of the ways of Divine Providence, and of his own views and conduct with respect to them.

1. בְּרִית וְגוֹ. I have made a covenant for mine eyes. It should seem from this verse, that Job's wife was now dead ; that his friends were endeavouring to console him with the probability that still he might be restored to health, and again have a numerous and prosperous family. From what we have seen of the character of his former wife, it certainly is likely that she would not be allowed to see and enjoy her husband's return to prosperity.—Lot's wife experienced a similar fate. Again, from the account of Job's restoration and prosperity, and of his being blessed with a second family, it is highly probable that he entered into a second marriage, as noticed in the Introduction. לְעֵינַי. For mine eyes. I have preferred this literal rendering, because the sense seems to be, that, as Job had come to the conclusion that the grave would soon be his portion, he would no more allow his eyes to dwell on any thing considered as a good in this world. Why then, says he, can I entertain any thoughts about the selection of a virgin ? Under the law of Moses, the priests were forbidden to marry any but virgins. Job, in the outset of this book, sustains the office of a priest. It is not improbable, therefore, that this part of the law was, among others, of a date much more ancient than the times of Moses.

2. וַיִּהְיֶה חֵלֶק וְגוֹ. And what is the portion, &c. If Job had really given up all hopes of worldly prosperity, he might well have asked,—as he here seems to do,—why he should indulge in any such prospects generally, and particularly with reference to marriage and its fruits ; which are indeed said to be an heritage and gift from the Lord. See Ps. cxxvii. 3-5 ; cxxviii. ; Prov. xviii. 22 ; xix. 14, &c. What, he seems to ask, are these things to me ? They are quite out of place. The question I have rather to consider now is, How does God deal with the wicked, and with such as you affirm that I am ?

Ib. וַיִּנְקֶר. And animadversion, punishment, &c. Arab. نَكَرَ. Nescivit, abnegavit. Hence, perhaps, the notion of foreign, or strange, so frequently attached to this word in one form or other. Hence, too, might have originated the idea of dealing hardly with one, because perhaps he was a foreigner. In the Arabic we have, “ Improbavit, repudiavit, difficilis ut durus fuit,” &c. ; which is not far removed from the sense required here. Job says therefore, Circumstanced as I am, all I can expect to see in this world is, God's judgments on the wicked. But adds, in the verses following, He does observe my doings, and in effect knows my integrity: it is elsewhere, therefore, that His heavy judgments must fall.

5. אִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה לְקַמִּי. If I have walked; i.e. had gone on in the practice of falsehood; וַרְחִישׁ, so that (my foot) have hurried, i.e. faltered, stumbled, &c. Comp. Prov. i. 16, &c. This verb being apocopated, forms a consequence to the previous member; which may be termed here a subordinate ἀπὸδοσις, the principal one being in the following verb. See Gram. Art. 233, 3.

6. יִשְׁתַּלַּחַנִּי. He will weigh me . . . וַיִּדַע. And He will recognise, recompense, my integrity: i.e. His character forbids the contrary supposition.

7. אִם תִּפְּוֶה. If it decline, &c. In this case the ἀπὸδοσις commences the following verse, and is marked by the presence of the paragogic ה. See Gram. Art. 234, 2, in אִנְרָעָה. Ib. הִלְךָ לִבִּי. My heart hath gone, &c.; i.e. has been intent upon serving my own lusts. Solomon has a similar usage, Eccl. vi. 9, in the terms הִלְךָ יְקַבֵּץ, the proceeding, rambling, vagrancy, of the soul: i.e. of the desires. Ib. בִּמְאִים, for בִּמְאֵה. A spot or blot. Comp. Dan. i. 4. Some take this word to be the same with מְאִיָּה, —see Deut. xiii. 18, — which may be true: the exegetic sense remaining much the same in either case. Arab. موم. Cera. As in the Latin: sincera, for sine cerū.

8. יִשְׁתַּרְשֵׁי. Lit. They be rooted up, or out. This is one of those instances in which the contrary sense might obtain, should the context require it. For יִשְׁתַּרְשֵׁי. The ר being incapable of reduplication by dagesh, must be preceded by a perfect vowel. The (י) changes into (ר), on account of the pause. Gram. Artt. 109; 96, 2; 120, 6. The sentiment is thus given in the Gulistan of the sage and facetious Saadi: “He is fortunate who hath eaten what he sowed; and he is unfortunate who hath sowed and left it.”—Harrington's Works of Saadi, vol. i. Introd. p. ix.

9. אִם הָיָה בָּהּ. If it have become, or been, allured, cajoled, hence made intent upon woman, בְּלִאֲשֶׁה, not “by a woman,” as in our Auth. Vers. If Job here alluded to the temptation laid before him by his own wife, ch. ii. 9, this language would be most inappropriate. Besides, a man might be deceived by a woman, and still be guiltless. I think, therefore, that בָּהּ here requires its most usual sense, on, upon, because of, or the like. Ib. וַעֲלֵ רֵגְלִי. And at my neighbour's door, &c. That is, If when so led aside, I have laid wait for my neighbour's wife. Comp. Prov. ii. 16-19; v. 3-8; vi. 24-35; vii. 8-23.

10. תִּתְחַזֵּק רֵגְלִי. Then should my wife grind, &c.: i. e. corn with the hand-mill. The ἀπόδοσις to the preceding verse, as is apparent from the following member, וְעָלְיָהּ. And upon her others should bow down. וַיִּכְרַעְתֶּם, with the paragogic ׀, implying a consequence. Gram. Art. 235, 3. תִּתְחַזֵּק cannot receive this additional particule. The sense seems to be, If I have myself been so allured as to give in to adulterous practices, the usual course of things under Divine Providence is, that I should be repaid in my kind. Comp. Numb. xxxii. 23; Ps. cix. 7. I shall moreover have committed a sin worthy of judicial condemnation.

11. בְּיַדֵּיהֶם. For it, i. e. this which has just been mentioned. Ib. עֲוֹן פְּלִילִיִּים. Lit. Iniquity of (the) judges: i. e. iniquity cognisable by them. The student should here observe the great latitude, as to sense, in which these instances of “the state of apposition,” as it is termed, indulge. I would add to the etymologies usually given of the word פְּלִילִיִּים, the cognate Arabic, بَيْدٌ. Res communis juris; دُو بَيْتِي, separatus a suis, antistite vel duce destitutus—pl. بَيْبَانٌ—as if possessed of power to decide and judge for self, and subject to no other control.

12. בְּיַדֵּי אֵשׁ רַבָּה. For it is a fire, &c.; i. e. by a meton. would be the cause of such a visitation. This passage was probably had in view by Moses, when he committed Deut. xxxii. 22, 23, to writing. The sentiment is evidently the same; and is,—in the words of Moses,—an exact prediction of the overthrow of the Jews, in consequence of their infidelity. St. Peter has, in like manner, followed Moses, 2 Epist. iii. 10-12, speaking of what was to take place before Christianity should be fully established: but which, by Christians, Pagans, and Mahommedans, has all been understood as referring to the final destruction of the world by fire! Nothing, however, is more common among the Arabian poets, than to speak of fire when they mean the ravages of war: e. g. In Freytag's Hamāsa, p. 123, on the passage, وَأَيْنَ هُمْ صَلُّوْ بِالْحَرْبِ. And if they become hot in war, &c. the Scholiast tells us, that the Arabs assimilate war to fire, and the maker of a war to the kindler of a fire. His words are: والعرب تشبه الحرب بالنار وصاحب الحرب بموقد النار وغيرها.

13. אֲנִי מְבַזְיָם. If I have despised, &c. This, and the following verses, are instances of the present tense used in what is termed by the Arabs, حِكَايَةُ الْحَالِ, i.e. narrative of the present, i. e. relating the events as if present to the speaker. Gram. Art. 231, 10, note; and Freytag's Hamāsa, p. 146, on the verse هُمْ مَنَّعُوا... يُؤَلِّفُ, where the Scholiast has, وقوله بضرب بؤلف قد وقع المنع والضرب جميعاً حال, implying, that the whole is to be understood as if present to the relation, i.e. present to the time in which the event took place. Ib. מְבַזְיָם, properly, My slave, and my female slave, which heightens the sentiment.

14. This verse forms the à-tout-venir to the preceding, as the epenthetic ם in מְבַזְיָם seems to intimate. See Gram. Art. 235, 3. The next vr. 15, seems to have been added for the purpose of strengthening the sentiment delivered, as just observed on מְבַזְיָם, &c.

16. מִן חֲמִצָּה. From (their) wish, i. e. have unnecessarily vexed them. Comp. Ecel. v. 7. Ib. וְעַיִן. And the eyes, &c. If I have deprived them of their just expectation. See Ps. cxxiii. 2; cxlv. 15, supra; ch. xi. 20. וְאֶכְלֶהּ. And I eat, &c. The observance of hospitality here alluded to, is a well-known feature of the Arab character. So a writer in the Hamāsa, ed. Freytag, p. 729 :

فالتمسي له اكيلا فانني كست االكه وحدي
 اخا طارقا او جار بيت فانني اخاف مذمات الاحاديث من بعدي

So seek thou for him a guest,—for I will not eat it alone,— A brother travelling by night, or else a sojourner of (the) house.

For I fear the reproaches of traditionary recitals after me.

18. מִן מִנְעוּבֵי. For from my childhood, &c. The multitude of ellipses and figures of speech usually had recourse to in the endeavour to explain this passage, make it extremely doubtful with me,—particularly when the whole is, after all, any thing but simple and clear,—whether much is not wrong. For מִן מִנְעוּבֵי, therefore, I read מִנְעוּבֵי, in the Pihel species. The verb then becomes transitive, signifying, He hath educated, brought me up, &c. The nominative to which seems to me to be לֵס, vr. 14, and inherent in עֲשֵׂנִי, et seq. vr. 15; where Job is evidently speaking of God's gracious doings, as it regarded both himself and his poorer neighbours. Here, again (vr. 18), he appears to me to recur to the same subject, referring the mercies experienced to himself alone. At the next verse (19), he appeals to his own conduct, as that which ought to result from the gift of so many favours from God. Ib. אֲנִי־נָחָה I thus resolve. נָחָה is used occasionally in the sense of נָחַה, or נָחַת, its cognates: so Isa. vii. 2; Job, xii. 23; which I have rendered reduceth, bringeth back to their pristine wealth and stability. The context seems to make for the contrary; but I was willing to give it the chance of bearing a different interpretation, as is manifestly the case with the original. In this case, אֲנִי־נָחָה (for אֲנִי־נָחָה, for euphony's sake perhaps, Gram. Art. 96, 2) will be the first pers. pres. sing. of Kal, with the epenthetic נָחָה. Gram. Art. 235; and will signify, so, therefore, I am quiet, at rest, &c. i.e. because God acted as a father during this time of my bringing up. Syr. نَسَّ, cessavit. Æth. ነሐ: quievit, requievit, &c. Arab. تَبَّح, firmavit quæ mollia erant, &c. This makes the passage easy and simple, and is confirmed by two others in Ps. lxxi. 5, 17; in the former of which it is manifestly imitated. I think too it must be evident, that vr. 5 is erroneously divided. My opinion is, that מִנְעֵי־רִי should begin the sixth verse, not conclude the fifth. The verse will then read thus: From my youth on thee have I been borne (up): from (the) belly, from the bowels of my mother, &c. I take the repetition (belly and bowels) to imply emphasis, i.e. from that very state or time.

20. אֲנִי־נָחָה. Supp. לֹא from the former part of the verse, i.e. He were not warmed, or became not warm: not "calificiebat sese," as Rosenmüller will have it; there being in reality no reciprocal sense inherent in this form, Gram. Art. 157, 13-19; nor indeed in any other. This is a mere rabbinical figment.

21. הִנֵּי־יָדִי. Have waved my hand, i.e. as persons shouting do, when I saw my own interest strong in court.

22. מִן־שֵׁקֶמָה. From the shoulder-blade, as the sense here requires. Ib. מִן־קָנָה. Lit. From the reed: because the arm-bone adjoining the shoulder is single, and its joint at the elbow is not unlike the knot of a reed, it has probably received this name. I cannot, however, understand this as an imprecation, but only as intimating that Divine Providence would take away all Job's power, which was usually spoken of as residing in the arm. Prediction is often made under these forms. Comp. Ps. lxi. 22, 23, with Rom. xi. 9, &c.

23. This verse is also parenthetical, and seems to be inserted for the purpose of suggesting a reason why the patriarch never committed any of these sins. Comp. Gen. xxxix. 9, where Joseph appears to have been preserved from sin from the same consideration. In the next verse, the former style is resumed. Ib. מִשְׁאֵרוֹ. From, i. e. because of His majesty. Ib. לֹא אִכְלָה, sup. לְעִשְׂוֹת פֶּן. To do so, i. e. to persevere in the commission of such sins.

24. אֲשֶׁר שָׁמַתִּי. If I have laid down, put, gold as my confidence, i. e. have professed or made it such. Ib. וְלִבְהָרָה. And of the pure gold, &c. The real force of the particle לְ is perhaps universally, as to, with respect to, or the like; and hence is in very many instances perfectly equivalent to our of. On בְּהָרָה, see ch. xxviii. 16. Ib. מִבְּרָחִי. Lit. perhaps, My place of trust; for, in the Oriental idiom, God or man is often so designated.

25. וְכִי־קָבֵר. And when as a mighty man, &c. Nothing surely can be more certain, than that קָבֵר, in the Hebrew, and كَبِيرٌ, in the Arabic, properly signify great, not much: nor is there, as far as I can see, one passage in the Hebrew Bible, nor one place to be found in any Arabic author, justifying the latter signification; yet here as in many other instances, a sort of synonyme is taken, which has the effect of making every thing vague and uncertain. This I must ascribe to a want of precision, resulting either from a defective knowledge, or else from a want of industry and care, in ascertaining the true sense of words. The particle of comparison (כִּי) seems here to be omitted by the ellipsis. מְצָאָהּ. Lit. It hath found; which, in Biblical usage, is frequently equivalent to prevailed. Comp. Rom. vii. 18. Syr. ܩܘܡܘܥܘܢܐ. So Gen. xlv. 34; Numb. xi. 11; Judg. xxi. 14; Prov. ii. 5, &c.; where, not merely to find, but to arrive at (comp. Arab. مَصْفِي), secure, effect, make one's own, &c. is rather the sense of the verb.

26. אֹרֶךְ כַּיְהוֹה. Lit. The light, or luminary, when it shone. In Gen. i. 16, הַמַּצְּלֵחַ הַגָּדוֹל, the great luminary. See also Ps. xxxvii. 6; Prov. iv. 18, where אֹרֶךְ, apparently signifies the same thing. I may be allowed here, by the way, to notice an argument often adduced by infidels against the Biblical account of the creation. How, it is asked, can it be said that light (אור) was created on the first day, when it appears that the sun did not exist before the fourth? I answer, philosophers have made up their minds that the disk of the sun is not a luminous body in itself; and that the light which it disperses is a merely luminous substance floating about it. And if this be true, then might this light exist independently of the sun's disk, or of any other similar body; and, therefore, might have afforded its beams to the new creation any length of time before the sun's disk existed. The objection, therefore, is worth nothing to infidelity. Ib. נִתְּנָהּ seems here to be put for נִתְּנָהּ, Gram. Art. 87, 5, 72, נִתְּנָהּ being used in the sense of the cognate לָתֵת. See the Arab. أَهْرَ, and chh. xxv. 5; xxix. 3. Ib. נִתְּנָהּ הַלְלוּ. Lit. Preciously, i. e. gloriously, walking on.

27. נִתְּנָהּ. And it is relaxed, i. e. tempted, deluded. Apoc. for נִתְּנָהּ, and consequently marking an ἀπειθοσύνη. Gram. Art. 233, 3. In Gen. ix. 27, we have this verb apocopated in the Hiphhil form, viz. נִתְּנָהּ, which, I think, has been entirely misunderstood. It has been usually translated "dilatet," &c., a sense quite foreign to this verb. It ought to be, Let God, or God doth, pronounce Japhet deluded, deceived, i. e. idolatrous. Then follows, וְיָשֵׁב, and He, i. e. God, shall reside in the tents of Shem. The prediction therefore goes to affirm, that Shem only shall retain the true religion; the other two brothers be reduced to idolatry and servitude.

Comp. the Arab. فَتَى, and فَتَى. Ib. נִתְּנָהּ. And my hand kissed. Arab. فَتَى, fixa inhæsit, &c. i. e. adhered to לְפִי my mouth. That the adoration of the heavenly bodies is here had in view, there can be no doubt. Job resided in a neighbourhood in which idolatry of this sort most probably commenced; Babylon being emphatically termed the mother of harlots, i. e. of spiritual fornication, which was idolatry. He might well, therefore, excuse himself from having participated in such practices. See my Sermon on the Sabbath. This is a sin to which the Jewish nation was ever prone, and against which they were, therefore, constantly warned. See Dent. iv. 19; 2 Kings, xxiii. 5, 11, Ezek. viii. 16. The Arabs have a proverb to the same effect, given in Erpenius's Arabic Gram. Centur. 1. Num. xxxviii. which is this:

إِحْتَذِرْ مِنَ النَّظَرِ فِي سَعَاعِ النَّجُومِ, Take care of looking at the splendour of the stars. That the hand was applied to the mouth in adoring these bodies (hence the word), is well known to every reader of the Latin and Greek writers. “Inter adorandum,” says Pliny, Nat. Hist. xxviii. 2, “dexteram ad osculum referimus, et totum corpus circumagimus.” So Minutius Felix in Octavio, cap. ii. “Cæcilius, simulacro Serapidis denotato, ut vulgus superstitiosum solet manum ori admovens, osculum labiis pressit.” Other illustrations will be found in Rosenmüller, &c.

28. This verse I consider as parenthetical, and as intended strongly to mark the sin just adverted to. Ib. יָצַח לְלֵבָי. Lit. A judicial iniquity, i. e. cognisable by the judge. The sense will be just the same, whether יָצַח לְלֵבָי, in the state of apposition, as in vr. 11, or יָצַח לְלֵבָי the relative noun, in apposition be taken as in this place. The vowels of יָצַח certainly mark the state of apposition in both cases; and hence Dathe supposed that, in the former, יָצַח ought to be written. But these are questions of small importance; the sense is the same in either case. Ib. פִּי־יִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה. Lit. I should have witholden, i. e. due praise, service, or the like: which is equivalent to denying. Ib. מִמַּעַל. Lit. From above, i. e. who is above, or most high. See Noldius, p. 462, under “Adjectiva.” The discourse now proceeds as before.

29. וַיִּהְיֶה לִּי מְרִירָה. And became excited, or stirred up, i. e. with delight, when evil overtook him. On מְרִירָה, see vr. 25, above.

30. We have here again a parenthesis, given as before, to qualify the matter under consideration. יָבֵט. Lit. My palate as being the place of taste, when the mind is evidently meant. Ib. הִקְדַּשְׁתָּ לְשׂוֹנֵא. To call for a curse. As מִן־שׂוֹמֵר “מִן” signifies, in Syriac, one seeking, or begging for, the peace of another, i. e. saluting him, Rom. xvi. 22, &c.; so here, הִקְדַּשְׁתָּ לְשׂוֹנֵא, to call for a curse, is to curse any one. The expression is more Syriac or Chaldaic, than Hebrew.

31. וְאִם־לֹא־יִשְׁכַּח־וּ. If the men of my tent, &c. The two negatives here seem to create some obscurity. My view of it is this: Job here calls his household to witness, that they had never during his prosperity, uttered one hard speech against him, having had no cause for doing so. I take לֹא, as generally used in this context, and the אִם following, as a direct negative to יִשְׁכַּח־וּ. In the next place, וְאִם־לֹא־יִשְׁכַּח־וּ, of his flesh, &c. to be a sort of prayer expressing the wish that they may never become so ungrateful, as to cause so good a master any such uneasiness as might vex and wear him out. Not filling themselves with his flesh is, therefore, hyperbolic here. Comp. xiii. 14; xviii. 13; xix. 20, 22; Eccl. iv. 5; Ps. xxvii. 2. Then, in proof that he had not offended against the laws of hospitality, which might have been a cause of complaint against him, he asserts by way of parenthesis, that no stranger ever presented himself, to whom his doors had not been thrown open. Ikenius's solution of the difficulties of this verse will be found in Rosenmüller. To me, however, it is most unsatisfactory. Chrysostom, as cited by Rosenmüller, was not far from ascertaining the true sense of this passage. See too the Chald. and Syr. Ib. גָּלִין יָר. Lodged not the stranger. This sort of hospitality,—always highly prized by the Arabs,—is often mentioned in the Hamāsa or ancient war-songs of the Arabs, e.g. where we have the very word, i.e. جَار —

وَمِنْ تَكْرَمِهِمْ فِي الْمَحَلِّ أَنَّهُمْ لَا يَعْلَمُ الْجَارُ فِيهِمْ أَنَّهُ الْجَارُ

And of their honouring (me), it was such that the stranger was not known among them, as the stranger.

The scholiast tells us, their habit was such, that no one would suppose the person so greatly honoured was a stranger, but one of their own people. His words are:

اي باجرونه مجري انفسهم حتي بقدر انه منهم . . . فان كل من رآه قدر انه منهم لاكرامهم له. See, too, the verses immediately following; Freytag's Hamāsa, p. 149: see also p. 149, where we have similar examples.

33. אֲפֹרְסֵי אֲפֹרְסֵי. If I concealed, &c. This contains a manifest allusion to Adam's endeavouring to hide himself from the Almighty, Gen. iii. 8, and by that means to conceal his transgression; which Job ranks among the things that call for severe animadversion; for, in fact, they treat God as a child. The next verse appears to me to contain a general ἀπεδοσις, perhaps, to the whole of the foregoing suppositions.

34. אֲפֹרְסֵי אֲפֹרְסֵי. Surely I should fear. This usage of אֲפֹרְסֵי, in the ἀπεδοσις, and of אֲפֹרְסֵי, in the ἀπεδοσις, has been noticed by Schultens on this place, as well as on ch. viii. 6; xxxvii. 20. The same force is given to this participle by Noldius in this passage, as well as in many others. Concord. Part. p. 368, § 4, “Certe, omnino.” Ib. אֲפֹרְסֵי, I take adverbially, greatly, and construe it with the preceding verb. אֲפֹרְסֵי might, however, have been put to signify tumult here; and the meaning be, Had I acted thus avariciously, tyrannically, and cruelly, I might well have feared the indignation of my countrymen, who might have been disposed to rise tumultuously, and drive me out of society. Comp. Gen. xix. 4-11; and ch. xxx. 5. That this was not unusual with the Arabs of these parts, is clear from the testimony of Diodorus Siculus, lib. iii. § xlvi. who says, Εἰ ὅτι μὴ, γίνονται λαθρόλευσται ὑπὸ τῶν ἄρχων, κ. τ. λ. “Si contra egerint,” i. e. their princes went out of doors, contrary to the ancient custom, “plebs lapidam conjectu . . . eos obruit.”

35. בִּי יִהְיֶה וְנִי. Lit. Who will give to me a hearer (שִׁמְעֵי) for me? i. e. as usually taken, O that I had a hearer—some one to grant me a hearing! Still the passage might mean—and I think it highly probable that it does so—O that He (God) would hear me! i. e. יִשְׁמַע לִי, or יִשְׁמַע לִי. It is then added, for the greater emphasis, הִנֵּן הִנֵּן וְנִי, Behold, my desire, &c. This sort of prolepsis, i. e. anticipation of the nominative is not uncommon in this book. See ch. xxiii. 3, 16, &c. It is occasionally omitted, ch. xxvi. 6-14. The sentiment otherwise obtained is, I think, altogether unscriptural. Ib. הִנֵּן. My desire, for הִנֵּן, perhaps. It has usually been supposed that this is a contraction of הִנֵּן הִנֵּן, from the root הִנֵּן. I rather think it has been derived from a cognate root of the form הִנֵּן, contr. הִנֵּן: for we still have in the Arabic تَوَّ, unicus, simplex, &c. Homo nec hujus, nec alterius, vitæ res curans. Hence the phrase, جَاءَ تَوًّا, venit cum certâ, simplici intentione, ita ut ipsum nulla res à viâ averteret. הִנֵּן הִנֵּן would then mean, Behold, or this is my sole and simple object, i. e. wish, desire. In the Æthiopic, too, we have the cognate አገጥ, arsit: a term, in most languages, used for strong desire. In the Heb. הִנֵּן, penituit, doluit. In the Arab. تَوَّى, perit: a word also similarly used. Jauhari, moreover, gives التَّوَّى, as equivalent to مَقْصُورٌ, wanting, falling short of: هَكَذَاكَ الْمَالِ, loss of wealth.

I cannot help thinking, therefore, that there is better authority for this rendering, than the mere supposition that the word is an abbreviation, as noticed above: and sure I am that it suits the context much better than any other hitherto proposed.

Ib. יִבְרַךְ. And a book, account, indictment, or count, &c.: that is, Would that God would attend and give judgment, and that mine adversary had written out at length all the counts he could number against me. I believe therefore that the "aut," or, of Rosenmüller, &c. is incorrect. This, as remarked in the Introduction, is sufficient to shew that writing was in use in the days of Job.

36. "אֲבִילֵא וְגוֹ. Would I not, &c. אֲבִילֵא, consequently have carried it. I take the epenthetic ך, in this and the following verbs, to intimate a consequence with some emphasis. Gram. Art. 235, 3. Ib. עֲטָרוֹת. Lit. Crowns: properly perhaps Διάδημα. Peculiariter dictum fuit de regio redimiculo capitis; fascia videlicet quaedam (à Δέω ligo). From the expression bound, one would suppose that the wrapping round of a turban were rather meant, than a crown. Besides, it is a practice in the East to carry papers, as letters, &c. in the foldings of the turban. Comp. Deut. vi. 8, 9; xi. 18, 19. All that is meant by such expressions is, that these writings should always be at hand, and hence ever present to the memory: not as the Jews superstitiously interpret the passages, literally bound about the head. The same is true of the words here in Job. The patriarch means to have it understood, that should a real charge be made out against him, none would be more ready both to consider it, and to lay it before the judge, than he would; and, vr. 37, to recount in his presence all its particulars. This part of the discourse being concluded, Job again resumes his former style, viz.

38. "אֲבִיעָלַי וְגוֹ. If against me, &c. i. e. If my neighbours have generally cried out of my injustice, or the cultivators of the soil have been reduced to lamentation through oppression (where אֲבִיעָלַי seems also to intimate prayer: comp. ch. xxx. 25, paral. אֲבִיעָלַי); or if I have set at nought, literally puffed at, אֲבִיעָלַי, its lords, i. e. as the system was then feudal, — at those who held the land under the prince, whether myself, or others. Then comes the ἀπεισοσι; to this, viz.—

40. "אֲבִיעָלַי וְגוֹ. Thorns would generally proceed forth, i. e. of it. According to Celsius, Hierobot. par. i. p. 477, &c. the second of these words signifies the Prunus sylvestris, — a bramble not unlike our common hawthorn. Ib. אֲבִיעָלַי. This, par. ii. p. 199, &c. he makes equivalent to the Aconitum of the Latins. See my Dictionary sub voce. Ib. אֲבִיעָלַי. They are finished, &c. i. e. The discussions, or words, of Job with his friends: not absolutely his words, for he speaks again in ch. xlii. 1, &c.

CHAPTER XXXII.

2. אַף וְגַם. The anger of Elihu. “The wrath” is too strong a word. All that is meant is, that Elihu was so excited and warmed with the question, and the erroneous manner in which he thought it had been treated, that his conscience would no longer allow him to be silent. The prophets occasionally express themselves much in the same way. Comp. Ps. xxxix, 4; Jer. xx. 9. Tarafa has, in his Moallakat poem, vr. 40, an expression equivalent to this, viz. وجاشت اليد النفس, which Reiske well renders by “pectore bullivante.” Reiske’s edit. p. 19. That this Elihu, being a Buzite, was a relation of Job’s, has been shewn in the Introduction. אִתְּךָ אֱלֹהִים. With God; lit. from God: but as this form of expression is often used in a sense equivalent to our more than, or rather than, it has generally been so taken here. It may be doubted, however, whether this is the sense of our author. That God is just, both parties have allowed; and they have even argued that this cannot be said of any man whatsoever. How then it can here be said that Job made himself more just than God, I am unable to discover. But, that he considered, and even declared himself, just, as to the matter at issue, in God’s estimation, is every where apparent; and against this it was that his friends disputed. The real sense of the passage, therefore, seems to be this: Because he declared himself just from, or with God. So Numb. xxxii. 22, אֲנִי טָהוֹר מִיְהוָה is not, more pure than Jehovah; but pure from Jehorah, i. e. considered so by him, or with him. Comp. Jer. li. 5. In such cases מִן, or מִי, may be considered exegetically as equivalent to אִתְּךָ, with. See Job, iv. 17; ix. 2; xxv. 4; xxvii. 13. The Arabs would say, in such a case, مِنْ عِنْدَ اللَّهِ, and the Persians, اَزْ جَانِبِ حَكِّمًا. See Proleg. I. § xii. ¶ viii. to Mr. Bagster’s Polyglott Bible.

3. מָצְאוּ מִתְּשׁוּבָה—לֹא. Found not an answer, i. e. came not to the point, succeeded not in their answers. See ch. xxxi. 25, 29, above. אֲרָאָה אֲשֶׁר עָשִׂיתָ. They declared (him) wicked, condemned him. See Gram. Art. 157, 6.

4. הָרַחֵם וְגַם. Had waited for Job’s words; i. e. He waited in order to address Job on the subject of his assertions. אֲרָאָה here, therefore, may be said to mark אֲשֶׁר, as the object of the transitive verb הִקְדָּה : and ב to shew that his words were the things he should consider. אֶת and ב here, therefore, mark the variety of influence exercised by this verb on the different subjects following. Gram. Art. 228, 5; 229, 3, 4. Ib. פִּי זְקֵנִים . Because elders, &c.; i. e. Elihu waited until the three men had done because of their age, in order that he might consider Job's words. Ib. $\text{מִיָּמֵינוּ וְגו'$. See ch. xxx. 1.

5. וַיֵּרָא וַיִּחַר. So he saw so became hot, accordingly. Gram. 233, 3.

6. וַיִּצֵן . Then answered, &c. Also apocopated, and for the same reason. Ib. אָנֹכִי לְיָמִים . Lit. I am small, as to days: i. e. am inexperienced. It has been shewn, that by the term days, time, is not only meant time, but also events taking place in time. See ch. xxvii. 6. Little as to days is, therefore, i. q. inexperienced: the exegetic sense evidently intended here.

Ib. $\text{וְאַתֶּם יְשִׁישִׁים}$. Lit. But you very substantial: i. e. are great, have acquired much information, experience, influence. It appears to be a reduplication of יֵשׁ , substance, being. Arab. أَسَس . Fundamentum et principium rei; أَسَسَ , id.; بَسَسَ , processit; أَشَّشَ , or بَشَّشَ , exultavit. Cogn. شَبَّيَ and شَبَّيَّ , voluit; شَبَّيَّ , res. Ib. וְדָחַלְתִּי . I tarried. Arab. زَحَلَ .

Declinavit, tardeo fuit incessu camela.—"Sed recte Nachmanides observavit, esse illud pro דָּחַלְתִּי , timui, positum, ex literarum ד ת ז permutatione."—Rosenmüller. It is curious enough to remark, that, when once an absurd interpretation is started, with how much pertinacity it is adhered to. Suppose we now so take this passage, we shall then have $\text{וְדָחַלְתִּי נֹאדָרָה}$. I feared, and I feared! For the last verb, our version has durst; but in the margin, feared. To dare, however, or not to dare, is a thing very different from fearing. Again, we have פָּחַד , as well as יָרָה , in use in this book: but in no case, if we except this presumed one, have we either דָּחַל or $\text{דָּחַל$. Nor again, even in the Chaldee or the Syriac, have we ever, to the best of my recollection, דָּחַל used for $\text{דָּחַל$. Why then are we here to have recourse to a change in the letters of this verb, when a very good sense is afforded without it; and when usage will really justify no such thing? Rosenmüller tells us, indeed, that the Syriac version so has

it. But this is not true. The Syriac has ܕܚܠܐ , where it cannot be proved that the first of these verbs is really the translation of the first of the two in Hebrew ; this version never being so slavishly literal as to warrant any such assumption. But, if the second is, viz. $\overset{\circ}{\text{ל}}\overset{\circ}{\text{ד}}\overset{\circ}{\text{א}}$, then, I say, this does not necessarily mean I feared, but I was moved, agitated, unnerved, or the like. So the Arab. $\overset{\circ}{\text{قَرَعَت}}$, which the $\overset{\circ}{\text{ל}}\overset{\circ}{\text{ד}}\overset{\circ}{\text{א}}$ above would very well bear. “Hieronymus,” he adds, . . . “junctim reddit : demisso capite timui.” I remark, the demisso capite here given is not a bad translation $\overset{\circ}{\text{ה}}\overset{\circ}{\text{י}}\overset{\circ}{\text{ל}}\overset{\circ}{\text{ד}}\overset{\circ}{\text{א}}$, in the sense of declinavi, recessi, or the like. The LXX. similarly render it ἠσβύσασα, silui. The translator of the Targum has dubitabam. Neither the exigentia loci, therefore, nor the usage of the language, nor the authority of the versions, will bear out the “Recte observavit,” &c. of Rosenmüller here. $\overset{\circ}{\text{י}}\overset{\circ}{\text{ד}}\overset{\circ}{\text{א}}$. Lit. I was scared from shewing, proving, demonstrating, my knowledge on the matter. Syr. $\overset{\circ}{\text{ܠܕܡܘܢܐ}}$. Demonstratio.

7. $\overset{\circ}{\text{י}}\overset{\circ}{\text{מ}}\overset{\circ}{\text{י}}\overset{\circ}{\text{ו}}$. Let days speak : i.e. by meton. the experience acquired in time.

8. $\overset{\circ}{\text{י}}\overset{\circ}{\text{שׁו}}\overset{\circ}{\text{ר}}$. Surely, &c. A direct recognition of the existence of the human soul, and of its origin (see Gen. ii. 7), as well as of the prior existence of that scripture. Ib. $\overset{\circ}{\text{י}}\overset{\circ}{\text{ת}}\overset{\circ}{\text{ב}}\overset{\circ}{\text{י}}\overset{\circ}{\text{נ}}$. Gives them intelligence : i.e. the power of ratiocination, investigation, of entertaining hopes and fears, as to futurity : and in which man differs altogether from the inferior animals of creation. See ch. xxvi. 4.

9. $\overset{\circ}{\text{ל}}\overset{\circ}{\text{א}}\overset{\circ}{\text{י}}\overset{\circ}{\text{ב}}\overset{\circ}{\text{י}}$. Not many, &c. “ $\overset{\circ}{\text{י}}\overset{\circ}{\text{ב}}\overset{\circ}{\text{י}}$,” says Rosenmüller, “sunt magni, honorati, ut Esth. i. 8,” &c. So our Auth. Vers. : “Great men are not always wise, neither,” &c. If no good sense could be extracted from this passage, without the insertion of so many explanatory words, then indeed might this be allowed. Besides, this rather goes to deny the sentiments just propounded, which take for granted that the aged are experienced, and therefore entitled to reverence at least. The “always” of the Auth. Vers., and “semper” of Rosenmüller here, are unjustifiable. All Elihu seems to say is, I know that wisdom is not the privilege of the many, although I still allow it generally is of the aged. On this last account, I was unobtrusive and silent. But, as I have seen in this case (vr. 3) that the aged have failed, Therefore I said, &c. After what immediately precedes, however, $\overset{\circ}{\text{י}}\overset{\circ}{\text{ל}}\overset{\circ}{\text{א}}$, vr. 10, is better translated by Nevertheless. See Noldius, p. 134, § 6. And generally let it be observed, that upon applying the particles to the places to which they really refer, they are rarely found to have more than one signification: it is only when we lose sight of the real construction of passages, or cannot in a translation refer them to their real antecedents, that we are driven to the extremity of making for ourselves the host of meanings usually ascribed to these little words. See Gram. Art. 241, 18. The Arabs say, لَوْ كَانَ النَّاسُ كُلُّهُمْ عَقْلًا خَرِبَتِ الدُّنْيَا. “Si omnes homines saperent, desereretur mundus.” And again: طَوَّلُ النَّجَارِبِ زِيَادَةُ فِي الْعَقْلِ. “Longitudo experientiae augmentum est intelligentiae.”—Sententiae Arab. Erpen. xviii. xix. Which appear to me not to be very far removed from the sentiments of Elihu, as found in this place.

11. הוֹחֵלְתִּי. I waited (יחל). Comp. vv. 4, 6, and the notes. Ib. עַד וְגו'. During your considerations: i. e. until they had been brought to a close. Ib. עִדְבַתְּהֶם. Lit. Until ye had thoroughly examined. מְלִים. Lit. Decisions; i. e. the sentiments delivered by Job.

12. וְעִדְבֶיךָ וְגו'. If this be the true reading, the ellipsis may perhaps be thus supplied: וְעִדְבֶיךָ אֶתְבִּינֵן. So during your words I considered, &c. The Syriac version, however, gives ܘܥܘܕܘܬܘܬܝܗܘܢ. Aud to your testimonies; as if וְעִדְבֶיךָ, Aud your testimonies, was the reading of his copy. One of De Rossi's MSS. too, seems to have retained this reading from its original writer. It certainly is more suitable to the context than the other.

13. עֵינֵי וְגו'. Seeing ye say, or may say, &c. Noldius makes this a particle signifying doubt, and derives it from the root פִּוּן. Nothing, however, can be more questionable than the supposition that such a root ever existed; or, if it did, that the sense he attaches to it belonged to it. The word עֵינֵי, on which all this rests occurs only once, viz. Ps. lxxxviii. 16; and there, nothing can be more doubtful,—not to say unsatisfactory,—than the sense usually ascribed to it. My impression is, that עֵינֵי is the root of this particle, and that we have here a segolate noun עֵינֵי; and, dropping the ה, as the grammar requires, we have עֵינֵי, seeing, or the like; which sense, I think will, making due allowance for idiom, suit every place in which it is found. Ib. מְצִאֵנִי וְגו'. We have found, discovered, נִזְכְּרָה (by) wisdom: or, taking this last word adverbially, we have wisely discovered: which seems to me to be just the vain assumption, against which Elihu wished to contend. Ib. אֱלֹהֵי וְגו'. God, &c., contains the common conclusion of these three disputants. Elihu seems to say, I propose to give my answer, lest it should generally be believed that these three men have succeeded, as they would have it believed they have.

14. פָּרְרָה. Arranged, or opposed, as in battle-array, &c. Ib. מְלִין. I take this word here, and מְפָרָס, to signify much the same thing: for, as conclusions is rather the force of this word (see ch. xxiv. 24, 25), so מְפָרָס may also signify either words only, or the arguments made up out of them. This sort of recourse to metonymy is very much in use among Oriental writers, and among none more frequently than those of the Scriptures.

15. חִתּוֹ וְגו'. They were confounded, &c. Arab. حَتَّ. Defluxit, et diffusus fuit. The Hebrew word is used to signify the breaking up of an army by battle, or of a people by war, &c. Isa. viii. 9, &c. Elihu seems here to turn from the three disputants, and to address himself to Job and the bystanders; which will account for the change in the style.

17. חֵלְקִי. Lit. My portion, or part; which I take to signify here, in my turn, or on my part: i. e. Having waited for his seniors, and their answers proving useless, Elihu now claims attention, that he may, in his turn, endeavour to place the question at issue in its true light.

18. מְלֵאֵי מַלְאֵי. I am filled, &c. On the loss of א in מְלֵאֵי, for מְלֵאֵי, see Gram. Art. 72. On the force of מַלְאֵי, see vr. 14, &c. above. Ib. הִקְצִינִי וְגו'. It constraineth me, &c. This is a recurrence to the sentiments with which Elihu commences. See vr. 1, &c. above.

19. כְּבִין וְגו'. Like wine, &c.: i. e. the state of perturbation or fermentation, which takes place with new wine in skins that have no vent. כְּאֵבוֹת. Like new-wine-skins, הַדְּשִׁים. Not new skins; for these would stretch, not burst: but skins into which new wine had recently been poured, and hence new in respect to the use made of them. So Virgil, as noticed by Aurelius Victor, in the passages, "Primum ab aethero venit Saturnus," &c., and "Primumque Machaon;" not because Saturn had first come to Italy, or Machaon had first left the Trojan horse, but because both were first, or leading men, in some other respects.—Origo Gentis Romanae, cap. i. See also Matt. xi. 17, 18. Ib. נִקְצָנָה. It is torn, rent, &c.: i. e. My bowels now suffer the violence and pain attendant on such action.

20. וַיִּרְחַץ לִי. Lit. And it shall relax me, or give me relaxation. Rosenm. “Ut respirem;” which is not correct.

21. There is a manifest opposition here observable in the use of the terms נָשָׂא and נָדָה; which I have endeavoured to keep up, by translating the first the respectable, and the last the mean. The writer’s intention is I think, clearly this: Let me neither shew favour to the powerful, nor yet cajole the vulgar: expedients usually had recourse to by corrupt disputants. On the use of נָשָׂא, with פָּנֵי, see the dictionaries, and supr. ch. xiii. 8. Ib. אֲנַקְּהָ. Lit. Let me call by other names: i. e. call a man one thing when he is another. Arab. كَتَيْ. Appellavit sive signavit nomine per se significante rem aliam. On the construction, see Gram. Art. 222, 4.

The Oriental practice of giving long and fulsome titles is too well known to need any thing beyond the mere mention of the fact; which, with the use of the verb כָּנִי, Heb. כָּנָה, is well exemplified in the following distich from the Hamāsa, Freytag’s ed. pp. 101•-101—

أَكْنِبُهُ حِينَ أَنْادِيهِ لِأَكْرَمِهِ وَلَا أَلْعَبُهُ وَالسَّوَةَ اللَّعْبَاءَ
كَذَاكَ أَدْبْتُ حَتَّى صَارَ مِنْ خُلْفِي إِنِّي وَجَدْتُ مَلَكَ الشَّيْمَةِ الْأَدْبَاءِ.

Whenever I address him I flatter, that I may honour him: but I use no low title. Thus have I been polished, until it has become one of my properties. Indeed I have discovered the wealth of the virtue of politeness.

Of this character Elihu professed himself not to be, because he feared God. Schnurrer’s suggestion to read אֱל, God, for אֱל here, is a mere refinement; nothing being more certain than that the usage of the particles is far from constant. Gram. Art. 229, 9, note.

22. פִּי לֹא יָדָע. For I know not, i. e. אֲנִי לֹא יָדָע, that I may flatter, or how to flatter: lit. I know not I may, or can flatter; the latter verb being added in such cases by way of epanorthosis, or qualifying term, instead of the infinitive usual with us, although this is occasionally done in the Hebrew. See Gram. Art. 222, 4. Ib. בְּקִצֵּץ. In a short time, shortly, soon. See Ps. ii. 12; lxxxi. 15; xciv. 17. אֲהַלֵּךְ, or אֲהַלֵּם, seems to be omitted by the ellipsis. Not unlike Joseph, Gen. xxxix. 9, Elihu spoke and acted with the fear of God before him.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1. וְאַיִלָּם. But nevertheless, &c. : i. e. Be this as it may, hear now, &c. See Noldius, p. 5.

2. פָּתַחְתִּי. I have opened. I take it however to intimate the enunciation, not of what Elihu had said,—for hitherto he had said nothing on the question at issue,—but of his intention to speak; and thence to be an instance of those venerable archaisms so frequently found in the Bible, as, he lifted up his voice and wept, &c.

3. יִשְׁרָ-לִבִּי. Lit. The directness of my heart (detur venia verbo): i. e. that which I consider to be directly the truth in this case. Ib. וְדַעַת, suppl. לִבִּי. וְדַעַת לִבִּי. Lit. The knowledge of my heart : i. e. what I know, have experienced, and felt: which I take to be equivalent to our term opinion, or conviction. Ib. בְּרוּרִי. Adverbially, purely, sincerely : i. e. untainted with any thing which may obscure, or give a doubtful turn to my sentiments. This is intended to impress upon Job, that what he is about to hear will be the real suggestions of Elihu's heart.

4-8. This portion seems intended to give confidence to Job; the first verse of which contains something like an oath or strong asseveration, with an obvious allusion to the work of creation, as detailed in Gen. chh. i. ii. Ib. כַּפִּיךָ. Lit. According to thy mouth: by a meton. for thy words, enouncements, &c. Ib. לְאֵל. For God. Auth. Vers. “In God's stead,” and I am,—as thou hast said of all men,—formed out of the clay. Thou hast, therefore, nothing extraordinary to fear from me. I am very far inferior to God, whom thou hast invoked; but yet I can answer thy arguments. Ib. וְאַפְּדִי. Lit. Litter, pannier, &c. Arab. أَكْفٌ, clitellæ. Cogn. חָפָה, curcavit. Syr. اَحْب, sedulus fuit. Arab. وَكَّفَ, imposuit jumento clitellas. Syr. حَبَّ, incurvatus est. Arab. كَتَّفَ, clausit astrictis vinculis feram, &c. See also كَفَّأ, حَطَّ, &c.

8. וְהָיָה וְנִי. Lit. Thou hast said ONLY, i. e. thou hast kept to this assertion alone; which would be ambiguous in English. I have, therefore, taken surely, with the Auth. Vers. &c. Ib. וְהָיָה וְנִי. Lit. And the sound of (the) sayings I hear, i. e. I seem still to hear these repeated assertions; where קָרַח וְקָרַח has its absolute force as a present tense. Gram. Art. 231, 9.

9. קָרַח וְקָרַח . I am clean. Syr. سَف , lavit, deterisit, سَحْفًا, frictio, lotura, detersio. Chald. קָרַח , perit, fricuit, lavit, &c. Arab. حَفَّ , conciunxit, circumcisit orá, barbani mystacemve, &c. حَفِّي , id. Ib. "וְלֹא וְנָא". Lit. Et non est mihi peccatum, i. e. I have no sin.

10. $\text{הִנֵּן הַבְּרִיאוֹת וְנָא}$. Bekold, heavy things, &c. Arab. نَاءَ بِالْحَمْلِ , assurrexit cum onere, pec. eo gravatus. And morally, according to Jauhari, from the Koran, $\text{لَتَنْوَأَ بِالْعَصَبَةِ}$, which, as El Farā says, means, تَتَّقِلَهَا , lies heavy on such persons: and from the poet, $\text{تَتَّقِلُ صَرِيَّتَهَا}$, *i. q. تَتَّقِلُ صَرِيَّتَهَا, *her stroke was heavy.

And again, $\text{مَا عِنْدِي مَا سَاءَ وَنَاءَ أَيَّ أَثَقَلَهُ}$, there is with me what injures him, and is heavy on him, &c. Conj. iii. certavit eum alio, se opposuit illi, adversando, vel gloriando: which approaches very nearly to the sense required. Cogn.

تَوَي , in conj. iii. id. Rosenmüller finds "hostilitates" out of this, which, although it is no Arabian acceptance of the term, is not far from the sense intended by our author. In all such cases, however, we want precision; and when the Arabs will supply us with a definite and good sense, this it is our duty to adopt. I object still more to Rosenmüller's comment here on the conduct of Job. His words are: "Hæc quidem non totidem verbis dixerat Jobus, imo ipse se immundum et peccatorem agnovit erga Deum, in cujus judicio memo justus reperiatur (ix. 2); fuit tamen omnino reprehendendus, ut nunc jure ab Elihu reprehenditur, quod plura in Deum effuderit temere, dum nimium suæ justitiæ defendendæ adversus socios erat studiosus, ac Deum quasi in jus vocaret," &c. He then cites chh. xiii. 23; xvi. 17; xiii. 10 (xxiii. 10?); xxix. 14, in proof of all this; and ch. xxxviii. 12, as exhibiting the Almighty saying the same thing. The whole however is mere mistake. Job nowhere justifies himself in the sight of God absolutely. All I can find is, his justifying himself in God's sight, from the particular charges brought against him. Nor does he anywhere call God into judgment, much less "tantum non de sede sua eum detrudere vellet ad sibi reddendam rationem,"

&c. All he calls for is, a just decision before God's tribunal, either by His affording an answer miraculously,—as it appears He did in the case of Rebecca's inquiry (Gen. xxv. 22)—or, by His so influencing those, whose business it was to judge, that the question might be fairly decided. That God reprehended Job in ch. xxxviii, is evident enough; but it is equally evident that this was not for his impiety, but for his ignorance and imbecility: and because he, professing to be truly taught, had not seen why these afflictions had been laid upon him. On the contrary, God approves of the sentiments of Job generally. See ch. xlii. 7. Surely it need not seem strange that Job's friends misunderstood him, when all the light of modern Germany has failed to apprehend his meaning. On vr. 12, indeed, Rosenmüller nearly gives the whole of this up. It is well worth remark, that this doctrine of justification by faith, however easy and simple it might seem to be, and really is, is nevertheless of all things the most frequently misunderstood.

11. וַיִּשֶׁב וְגַם. He putteth, &c. See ch. xiii. 27.

12. הֲיִזְזַת וְגַם. Behold in this, &c. Or יִזְזַת may be taken adverbially, thus, and הֲיִזְזַת, like the Arab. هَذَا, or Heb. זֶה, surely, since, &c.; and then the translation will run thus: Since thou hast thus done unjustly, I will answer thee, &c.; where the epenthetic י, marked by dagësh in the pronoun of הֲיִזְזַת, marks the ἀπόσπασις, or consecutive member. See Gram. Art. 235, 2; and Nold. sign. 4, 5, &c. Ib. הֲיִזְזַת. He is greater, &c. that is, in His knowledge of justice particularly, in the wisdom of His plans, the arrangements of His providence; and in the exercise of power and goodness by which these are brought to effect generally. By this Elihu seems to intimate, that Job ought to have acquiesced in, and patiently to have awaited, the result of his misfortunes. But in this Elihu was, perhaps wrong. Every religious-minded man ought to be anxious as to how he stands with God, and particularly under circumstances of great affliction. One main object of this book is, moreover, to shew and to exemplify, the short-sightedness of men generally, under such dispensations as those of Divine Providence; and hence, as much to correct the notions of bystanders as to the afflictions of others, as to evince the blindness of the sufferers themselves, however good and intelligent they may otherwise be. As far indeed as Elihu's sentiments may go in recommending acquiescence in God's dealings simply, they are right; but not, as they urge a similar acquiescence in the opinions either of self or of others, in this respect. And, it ought to be remembered, that it was from these that Job's questions arose, and against which his arguments were directed.

13. ^{וְגַם} ^{כָּל} ^{וְגַם}. Because (for) all, &c. This was really the cause of all Job's complaint. He could not see why his afflictions had been laid on him, when, in fact, they were intended to shew that God's grace was sufficient for him, and to propagate this doctrine to all posterity. In this respect Job was certainly ignorant, but not impious; which last is manifestly the drift of Elihu's reasoning to establish: and, although he set out by promising that he would not adopt the reasoning of Job's other friends, yet the truth is, he did essentially adopt it.

15. ^{וְגַם} ^{וְגַם}. Stupor. Here, perhaps, as in other instances, the ecstasy experienced by prophets and others in receiving Divine revelations. See ch. iv. 13.

16. ^{וְגַם} ^{וְגַם}. Then is exposed, laid open, &c. i. e. deaf as men may be to the admonition of others, God finds occasions, either by dreams or by ecstatic visions, effectually to admonish them of their ways, and so to reclaim them. ^{וְגַם} is, in general, opposed to the notion of covering or concealing: hence it is used to imply carrying into captivity, because this is often the consequence of being overcome—of losing such fences, fortifications, or the like, as would otherwise have saved a country from invasion. See Micah, i. 6. So Jauhari, ^{وَجَدَّيْتُ الْعِمَامَةَ عَنْ رَأْسِي إِذَا رَفَعْتَهَا مَعَ طَبِيبًا عَنِ}, ^{وَجَدَّيْتُ}, i. e. I became laid open, exposed, as to the turban, from my head; when you took it up with its folds from your forehead. And again, ^{وَجَدَّيْتُ} ^{وَجَدَّيْتُ} ^{وَجَدَّيْتُ}, i. e. El Jalā is the falling of hair from the fore part of the head. Hence, as in Hebrew, ^{وَجَدَّيْتُ} ^{وَجَدَّيْتُ}, literally, the exposure (for the exposed), ^{وَجَدَّيْتُ} ^{وَجَدَّيْتُ} ^{وَجَدَّيْتُ}, those who are led captive from their countries. Not as some lexicographers will have it, because a country is denuded of its inhabitants; for, in fact, no such notion is anywhere found attached to this verb, or to any word whatsoever descended from it. On its usage in this place, see 1 Sam. xx. 2; Ruth, iv. 4, &c. A sense not very dissimilar belongs also to the phrase אָזְנוֹתַי קָרִיתָ, Ps. xl. 7. See my Prolegomena to Mr. Bagster's Polyglott Bible, Prol. iv. § iii. ¶ xvii. "Desumpta est locutio ab eo," says Winer ed. Simonis, "ab eo qui arcani quid alterius in aurem insurraturus, hanc, remotis capillis . . . retegere et nudare solet." But this is all without foundation: to lay open, or bare, the ear, being all that the word can mean. Ib. וַיִּבְחָרוּם וַיִּחַתֵּם. And scaleth them to their correction.

Schultens proposes, that the Arabic حَتَمَ, should be taken here instead of حَتَمَ, as formerly done, in order to supply the proper sense of the Hebrew verb. I must confess, — as these are manifestly cognate roots, — I can see no real advantage obtained by this. The first signifies inspiravit, indicavit; and in this sense is construed with ב, כ. It also signifies firmum et necessarium effecit: decrevit, &c. The second, signavit, obsignavit, conclusum, consummatum fait verbum, &c. Now, whether we say He indicates, decrees, &c. their correction, i. e. that which shall elastise and amend them; or, whether having opened their ears, he scaleth them to their correction (as in the New Testament, scaleth them to the day of redemption), i. e. fixes upon their minds something which shall lead to this, the sense will be much the same. In either case, the meaning must be, that by this means something is so effectually infused into the mind, as to end in the correction of the person. And here it is to be noted, as intimated above, that the term מוֹדָר, like the English word correction, signifies both punishment, and by a metonymy, the amendment brought about by its means.

17. מַעֲשֵׂה, supp. מַעֲשֵׂה מַעֲרָם, as the corresponding terms in the parallelism require. Commentators generally take מַעֲשֵׂה here, in the sense of מַעֲשֵׂה רָע, wicked work, which to me seems rather too general for the context. Besides גְּוַה, pride, occurring in the parallel, seems to suggest, that work meriting reward was the sense intended by the writer. To מַעֲשֵׂה רָע, in this sense I have no objection. Comp. Eccl. iv. 4. Nothing can be more obvious, than that man is throughout this book represented by all parties as unworthy of favour from God, and that it is from His goodness alone, that this is to be expected. A little lower down too, we are expressly told of an atonement for man; which is in perfect unison with this. I feel compelled, therefore, to take the term מַעֲשֵׂה in its true and proper sense, signifying work, or working, in the first place; and then, secondly by a meton. as the effect, due, or merit of work, as in many instances פֶּעַל does. See Exod. xxiii. 16; 1 Sam. xxv. 2; Isa. xxvi. 12; Rom. iv. 2, &c. If I am told, as I probably shall be, by certain à priori reasoners, that this doctrine could not have been known at so early a day, my answer will be: It is not for me to determine what could, or what could not, be known at this period: all I have to do is, to inquire what the context of my author requires, either directly or indirectly; and, if it appear that he must have been acquainted with this doctrine, then I have nothing more to do, than to represent him as thus speaking? And, I here repeat it, If salvation is every where in this book looked upon as a gracious gift; then, as human nature was always what it now is, and human pride and assumption were just as obtrusive in those days as they are in these; there can be no good reason assigned why this word should not here have a meaning so frequently found in the writings of St. Paul, when speaking of the manner in which Abraham found favour with God: unless, indeed, it can be shewn, that human pride, arising from an assumption of merit in the individual, never opposed itself in those days to a simple faith and reliance on God's favour; which it is, perhaps, not very easy to do.

18. בַּשִּׁלַח. From the parallel here, in which we find שָׁחַת, and from the parallel passage, vr. 28, in which we have מַצְבֵּר בַּשִּׁחַת, equivalent apparently to the מַצְבֵּר בַּשִּׁלַח, found here; it seems extremely probable that שָׁחַת, and שָׁחַת, are used either in the same, or very nearly the same, sense. It will be seen by referring to chh. xii. 5; xiii. 27; xxx. 12; xxxiii. 11, that to thrust the feet aside (שָׁחַת), to cause them to totter, &c. signifies, on the one hand, the being reduced to weakness, poverty, &c. and made subject to contempt and injury; while, on the other hand, to confirm the feet, make them hard, or strong (Ps. xviii. 34), &c., signifies quite the contrary. I believe, therefore, that שָׁחַת is here used in the sense of thrusting aside, injuring, and hence ruining; which is certainly the sense of שָׁחַת; that is, שָׁחַת has reference to the means by which one is injured: שָׁחַת rather to the ruin, or injury, so inflicted. In this case, then, שָׁחַת is, by a metonymy, used for injury, contempt, &c., and not any missile, as generally supposed: nor do the passages referred to by Rosenmüller afford the least confirmation of that opinion, viz. ch. xx. 24; Ps. vii. 14; xci. 1. See too, ch. xxxvi. 12.

19. וְהִנְדָּהוּ. And he is he reproved, i. e. this is one of those means so generally misunderstood, by which it is the will of the Almighty to bring men to their senses; and this, according to Elihu's views, was the case with Job: affliction of this sort being his monitor. Ib. רָוַב. And the pain, &c. Usually "And the multitude," &c., which appears to me a very unnatural expression. To say that a man's bones are a multitude, is what I have never yet seen or heard in any idiom. I am led therefore to inquire, whether this word (רָוַב) may not be susceptible of some other meaning, more agreeable to general usage, and to the context in this place.

In the Arabic رَأَبٌ, I find, dirisum collegit: fractum consolidavit, &c. In رَوَّبَ (رَوَّبَ), crassum evasit lac: turbata, confusa, gravata fuit mens. Attonitus hæsit ob admirationem. Animo languenti fuit ob somnum. These, I think, are all mere modifications of one original idea; viz. signifying compounding or putting together. Hence the significations of رَبَّ, Heb. רבב, רבה, &c. great, &c. In the next place, if we suppose this compounding to take place by agitation, as the churning of milk into butter; this latter notion may, from the lax use of language in primitive times, have been allowed to qualify the former; and, from this again, that of contention, have prevailed in رِيب, رِيب, or רבה, when used to signify "jaculatus est," &c. Hence, too, the ideas expressed in "gravata fuit," "attonitus hæsit ob admirationem, animo languenti fuit," &c. Jauhari has supplied us with the following adages, in which one part or other of this word is used.

أَهْوَنُ مَظْلُومٍ سَقَاءَ مُرُوبٍ, the worst of buttermilk is that of the agitated churning skin, i. e. of milk not thoroughly churned. By which, I suppose, he means, The worst decisions are those resulting from a perturbed brain. شَرِبُوا مِنَ الرَّأْبِ فَسَكِرُوا, they have drunk of buttermilk (half churned), and are drunken. Again, قَوْمٌ أَرَبِيٌّ is said to mean persons brought confusedly together, thoroughly wearied by travelling, and heavy with sleep.

هُمُ الَّذِينَ اثْخَنَهُمُ السَّيْرُ وَاسْتَنْغَلَوْا نَوْمًا. This last usage will bring us to that of the passage under consideration, viz. רָוַב וְעָנְיָי אֲרָגוּ, and the weight, perturbation, shooting-pain of his bones is violent, i. e. on his bed. See also notes on ch. vi. 6. In the Syr. too, we have أُنْبِت, tumultuatus.

أُنْبِت, clamor, tumultus. Cogn. Arab. رَبَا, auctus fuit, in tumuit equus: anhelavit altiore spiritu: totus metu correptus, consternatus fuit. Comp. רָבָּא , and רָב , and Syr. ܪܒ .

20. וְזוֹהַרְתָּהוּ , for וְזוֹהַרְתָּהוּ , Gram. Art. 208. Abhorreth it, i. e. with a pleonasm of the pronoun. Ib. Art. 216, 14. Comp. ch. vi. 7; Ps. cvii. 18. Chald. ܙܗܘܐ , sorduit, inquinatus est. Syr. ܘܢܫܘܐ , fætor. Arab. زَهَمَ , fætuit. In Pihel, he considers it stinking, i. e. abhors it.

21. מֵרָאִי . From the sight. רָאִי , for רָאִי , form רָאָה , regularly becoming רָא . Gram. Art. 87, 4. Ib. וְנִשְׂפָּרוּ And they have been made to appear, or to be prominent, as it is the case with those who have been long subject to disease. Arab. سَمِعَا , apparuit nova luna, &c. imminuit exitium, &c. Cogn. شَفَّ , auxit: extenuatum fuit corpus: emaciavit, &c. Chald. ܘܨܦܪܐ , comminuit, limá rasit. See cogn. ܘܨܦܪܐ , and ܘܨܦܪܐ .

23. אַס־יֵשׁ וְגוֹ' . Surely there is, i. e. putting the case as a fact; which is here supposed as certain and acknowledged. I take אַס here to imply asseveration: that is to say, although a man may thus be reduced by sickness, still there certainly is an angel or messenger interested in his behalf (עֲלָיִי), who, though God may have wounded and broken him, is ready to bind up and to heal him. Ib. $\text{בְּלִצְפֹרַת מַלְאָכִי}$. An angel, an intercessor. About the meaning of the second of these words, there is but little dispute. It is allowed, I believe, on all hands to signify an interpreter, intercessor, mediator, or the like. It is on the term מַלְאָכִי , that the great difference of opinion is here found. And, as a particular religious doctrine seems, at least, capable of being extracted from the passage, interpreters have, as their tastes may have led them, written much in favour of their several views. The fairest way of proceeding would perhaps be, to inquire in what sense this term was used in times prior to those of our patriarch; for in that it would be most probably used in his times, and by him. In the first place, then, it occurs both in the singular and plural number; and is, beyond all doubt, intended to apply to the angel, or angels, of God, in a sense connected with the religious welfare of good men. See Gen. xvi. 7-11; xxi. 17; xxii. 11, 15; xxviii. 12, 13; xxxi. 11, 13; xlviii. 16. So also Exod. iii. 2; xiv. 19; xxiii. 20-23; xxxii. 34; xxxiii. 2, &c.; and we need not go to Babylon for this doctrine, as our German friends would have us to do. In the second place, it is occasionally applied to men, but never, as far as I can discover, either before these times or after them, signifying strictly any religious teacher, or teachers. See the places in the Hebrew concordances. In many cases it signifies the Angel Jehovah, or of Jehovah; the messenger of the covenant; and the Leader, Protector, Teacher, and Redeemer of God's people; as in Gen. xxii. 11; xxxi. 11; xlviii. 16; Exod. xxiii. 20, 23; xxxiii. 2; xxxiv. 10. Comp. Isa. lxiii. 9; Mal. iii. 1; Job, xix. 25, &c. Now, as this term is no where used to signify doctor, teacher, &c., in a religious sense and as applied to man, it would be forced and unfair to give it that sense here; it would be doing a violence to the passage, which would be perfectly unjustifiable. It cannot, therefore, signify any such teacher here, notwithstanding the unanimity of modern German divines on this point. Nor, for the same reason, can Elihu be meant by it as such teacher. Besides, such an insinuation in him would ill become the modesty and apparent sincerity of his professions; not to insist on the arrogance it would evince in any one, thus indirectly to enounce his own virtues and dictatorial privileges.

If then this term cannot, according to Scriptural usage, signify any religious teacher among men, the only alternative we have is, to ascribe it to an angel, or messenger, of God. And, among beings of this description, Scripture, from first to last, affords us but one entitled to the term Mediator, or Intercessor, and who is, at the same time, a Teacher of divine things. And, as this mediator is here mentioned in connexion with the doctrines of redemption and atonement; things with which no other angel ever had any thing to do, and by virtue of which alone man is to be justified, and restored to his primitive purity and soundness; there consequently is but one Being, viz. our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom we fairly can apply it. To Him, therefore, I do apply it in all the latitude which these terms, both here and elsewhere, require. Nothing further need be added on the term מַלְאָכִים, except to notice a remark of Winer's, who tells us (Edit. Lex. Simonis) "Ferrer appellat Persæ." I can find no such word used in this sense by the Persians; and, until Dr. Winer shall give us his authority for this assertion, I must treat his remark as unfounded. See ch. xvii. 20.

Ib. אֶחָד מֵאַלְפֵי הָאֲלֵפִים. One of a thousand, i. e. a sort of person very rarely to be met with; and, in this sense, perhaps אֶלְפֵי, a wonder, Isa. ix. 5. Thousand is often used in the Scriptures to signify a large indefinite number. See the places in the concordances, and ch. ix. 3 above. Similar to this is the following passage of Ibn Doreid, Haitsma, p. 219, vr. 178—

وَالنَّاسُ أَلْفٌ مِنْهُمْ كَوَاحِدٍ وَوَاحِدٌ كَأَلْفٍ إِنَّ أَمْرَ عَنَّا

But as for men, a thousand of them are as one, and one as a thousand, if a matter distresses.

That is, as I understand it, when distress happens to come on, look not to the many for help: one faithful person (but rarely to be found) is worth them all. The usage, too, is parallel to that in 2 Pet. iii. 8; and will serve to shew, that the term thousand is taken just as indefinitely in the Arabic, as it is in the Hebrew.

Ib. לְהַגִּיד וְנִי. To declare, &c. Lit. To bring before him his own righteousness, i. e. the means of obtaining it by a ransom, or atonement. יִשְׂרָאֵל, form פְּקִיד. The pronoun here ought in strictness to be referred to מִלְּאֵלֶיךָ, not to אֲדָרָא, immediately preceding; it being a rule in all the languages of this family, to refer the pronouns to the subject, or principal noun preceding, with reference to the sense. See Gram. Art. 216, 12. In this case, אֲדָרָא may be considered as a subordinate nominative absolute, to which the affixed pronouns (in vr. 24) will refer (ib. Art. 216, 16, 17). This consideration completely takes away the ambiguity, with which those who have been strangers to it have always been puzzled; and hence it will here supply the want of a pronoun equivalent to our—own, which otherwise the Hebrews have not.

Ib. לְאִשְׂרָאֵל. As it regards man, or as to man. Gram. Art. 216, 15. It signifies but little, as to the exegetical sense, whether we say here to man, or as to man. In the latter case, the proposition certainly is more independent and general than in the former; and this I think the place requires, for reasons stated above. The Greek πρὸς is frequently so used in the New Testament; and, perhaps, much more frequently than commentators have generally been aware. יִשְׂרָאֵל. His righteousness, i. e. the righteousness which this Mediator is empowered to give or impute to those who duly seek it; and thus, as a mediator between God and man, to make it out as their due, by means of the ransom so found, offered, and accepted.

24. וְיִרְחַמֵּנוּ. So will He, i. e. God, surely favour him; i. e. The Angel and Mediator mentioned in the preceding verse pleading his cause; God who, as before, is supposed to sit in judgment, will favour or be gracious to man. I take the epenthetic ו here to indicate the consequence, so will He accordingly be gracious to him, i. e. to man. See Gram. Art. 235, 3; 175, 17. Ib. וַיֹּאמֶר. And will say, i. e. God, who is here the judge, will give this sentence, viz. כִּדְעָהוּ, redeem him, i. e. man, &c. “Ambignum est,” says Rosenmüller “an ipsius Dei sint, an vero interuentii,” &c. I do not think any ambiguity exists here, as to the exegetical sense, which is every thing in passages like this. The very notion of an intercessor or pleader, necessarily supposes the existence of a judge, and of a person arraigned. In the former of these acceptations God is introduced at vr. 10, and is continued in some verses following. Judgment must, therefore, be His province; and, as this is manifestly the subject here, אֵל (vr. 14) must, necessarily be the nominative absolute to which the writer has recurred. Still, as all judgment is now, as it ever has been, delivered to this Mediator, I shall not object exegetically to his being considered here the judge, although I shall grammatically to any such construction. I agree with those who take פָּדַע here in the sense of וָדַע, nothing being more certain, than that ו and ה are, in the Chaldaic, frequently changed the one for the other. “Literarum ה, ה, et ו,” says Rosenmüller truly, “permutatione nil Chaldaeis usitatus; Aramaeisutos autem in hoc libro jam plures deprehendimus.” But, if we take כִּדְעָהוּ, solue cum, with Michaelis, and a few MSS. the exegetical sense will still remain much the same; we shall still have liberation from death through a Mediator, and by means of an atonement. On this use of the preterite, see Gram. Art. 236, 2. Ib. כִּפָּר. An atonement, propitiation, or expiation, as obtained under the law by sacrifices, &c. And such propitiatory sacrifices Job (ch. i.) appears to have offered up for his children. Arab. كَفَّرَ, expiarit crimen: كَفَّارَةٌ, piaculum.

25. וְרִחַשׁ. He shall grow fresh, or moist. Compounded of רָחַב, fresh, or moist, and פָּשׁ (r. פָּשׁ, abundavit, or פָּשָׁה (Arab. فَنَسِيَ, dimanavit), Gram. Art. 197, 3-8; that is, the body wasted by disease (vr. 21), and dried up with burning heat (ch. vi. 4; xix. 26, 27), shall now be restored. Comp. 2 Kings, v. 10. Ib. מִלְּעָר. Than childhood, i. e. than the flesh of childhood; shall become fresh and healthy.

26. יְדִקְרֶהוּ. His righteousness, i. e. God's righteousness, as the preceding construction requires. It is the office of the intercessor, as advocate, to make this supplication; and this is probably intended here,—the person tried having nothing to do in this case. God then accepts the person so interceded for: he then appears joyful before Him, being pardoned, or justified by His grace. On the frequent change of the nominative here, see Gram. Art. 230, 11.

27. יָשַׁר. Lit. Acting, thinking, &c. justly or rightly; exhibiting righteousness concerning men. I take this to be a noun of the form פָּקֵד, or פָּקֵדוֹר; a sort of infinitive, occasionally used like the Latin gerund in do, as פָּקֵד פְּתוּרָהּ, visitando visitavi. Comp. Hos. iv. 2. The passage, if fully written, would perhaps stand thus, יָשַׁר יְיָשָׁר עַל-אֲנָשִׁים וַיֵּאמֶר וְגו', He shall fully consider, pronounce right, as to men, i. e. generally, so that one shall say, &c. Restored, as he would now be, to a sound state of body and mind, his first confession would be his own unworthiness and sin. His words would be, "I have sinned," &c. He would see his own crooked ways, that he had perverted justice and been iniquitous, וְלֹא יִשְׁנָה לִי, lit. and no equity is mine, i. e. I possess none.

Comp. Ezek. xviii. 25, &c. Cogn. Arab. وَشَرَّ, or أَشَرَّ, lucidum reddidit, &c. Rosenmüller takes שָׁוַר, intuens, to be the root used here. But if this had been the case, we should have regularly had יְשָׁוַר, not יָשַׁר. Besides, this sense very ill suits the passage, as every one must see.

28. We have here a repetition of the sentiment delivered in vr. 14. On this use of the pret. see Gram. Art. 236.

29. וַיַּעַל-יְהוָה. God doeth, performeth, bringeth to pass. This seems to be the original of a passage which has been most grievously misunderstood. In the first instance, it has been imitated, Deut. xxxii. 28, in יְהוָה פָּעַל כְּלִי-זֶמֶר; in the second, Prov. xvi. 4, in כָּל פְּעַל יְהוָה וְגו', Jehovah hath done, performed, all for His own purposes; so also (the) wicked (do, perform, &c. all) for the day of evil, i. e. of misery. Not as the Auth. Vers. has it. See too my Sermons and Dissertations, &c. p. lxiii.

30. לְאֹר פְּאֹר וְגו'. To be enlightened with the light, &c. where לְאֹר is probably put for לְהֵאֹר, infin. of Niph'al. So Rosenmüller and others. See Gram. Art. 73. Ib. הַחַיִּים. Not of the living, but of life; which is by far the most usual acceptation of this word. See Gen. ii. 7, &c., and affording a sense more conformable to the usage of Scripture. See John, viii. 12, &c. As some error seems to exist, respecting the use of this word, it may be worth while perhaps to notice it here. Both Gesenius and Winer give יָהּ and יָהִי as substantives, when used in the formula of swearing. יָהּ יְהוָה, and יָהִי נִפְשָׁי. Gesenius inserts the verb “est” to complete the expression, and Winer proposes the particle ב, which he translates “per.” Gesenius tells us too, that יָהּ is the form for construction. But I want to know on what principle it is, that a noun, manifestly not a segolate, can vary from the form of יָהּ to that of יָהִי, in consequence of the state of construction; and this in the one case, but not in the other? I know of no such principle; and I think he knows of none. Again, the term “by,” “per,” is a Latin form of swearing. No such form occurs any where in the Hebrew Bible. To complete the formula therefore by inserting ב, would be manifestly erroneous. And again, the verb, not the substantive, or adjective (unless, indeed, these be considered as verbs), is usually applied in the formula of swearing. The drift of which (formula) is, to institute a comparison amounting to something like this, viz. As surely, or certainly, as God liveth, &c. so surely, &c. is something else named in the latter terms of the oath, to come to pass. As to the variety observable in the vowels of יָהּ, and יָהִי, all I can say is: I believe both forms to be perfectly equivalent; being only different ways of representing the same sound. See Gram. Art. 87, 3. It is to the ignorance and superstition of the Rabbins, that we owe all the nice, but silly, distinctions made on the variety of these forms; distinctions to which—I am sorrow to say—our German friends, notwithstanding all their modern light and discoveries, appear to be in perfect bondage. See note on ch. xxvii. 2. Ib. בְּאוֹר. With the light, &c.; that is, as noticed on other occasions, the prosperity, blessings, &c. of life, as opposed to the privations of misery and death.

32. יִצְדַּקְתִּי בְּיָהּ. I have desired, i. e. and do now desire, thy justification; that is, not to justify Job in the sense of clearing him: certainly no such sentiment can be elicited either from the terms used, or the temper entertained by Elihu; but to give him justice, do him justice, or shew him fair play. The epenthetic ב, expressed by the dagesh in י (Gram. Art. 175, 21), if possessing any corroborative power, as usually in the verbs, would here imply entire justice, or the like.

33. יִלְמַדְתִּיךָ. And I will teach thee. This verb is rather Chaldee than Hebrew.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

2. מִלִּי. My arguments, or opinions. See ch. xviii. 16: xxiv. 24, 25; xxxii. 14. This would suit this word in the next verse: but, as “sentences” (which are often proposed for arguments) seems to suit the context better, I have used that term.

3. אָזְנוֹ. The ear, must here mean the experienced ear; i.e. of the wise, &c., as mentioned above. Ib. אָזְנוֹ. Lit. And the palate: i.e. as the palate discriminates between good and bad food. This sentiment is taken from Job's own words. See ch. xii. 11, &c.

4. מִשְׁפָּט. here, as in many other places, signifies the decision or conclusion to be arrived at. Arab. سَطَطَ. Æquabilis fuit. Cogn. سَعَطَ. Luto obduxit, reparavit, cisternam. Syr. مَوَّلَا. Æquabilis fuit coma; مَطَّحَ, deglabavit. The leading notion seems to consist in setting matters straight; or, at least endeavouring, or pretending, to do so. Hence we have in the Æth. ሰጠ: Decepit, fefellit. Ib. נִבְחָרָה. Let us then choose: i.e. carefully select—after due trial had—our conclusion. On the power of paragogic ה here, see Gram. Art. 234. Ib. גִּדְעָה בְּיָדֵינוּ. Lit. Let us know, recognise, among ourselves: i.e. Let us endeavour to entertain that candour which will enable us all to determine what is good (טוֹב) and right.

5. הָסִיר וְגו'. Hath caused to pass away: i.e. hath laid aside and neglected: not “hath taken away.” This is too strong.

6. עַל-מִשְׁפָּטִי. Respecting, on, or concerning, my case: i.e. the matter which I have to bring forward. Not, on my decision; for none had been made: much less, “my right”; which had been impiously to prejudge the matter without a hearing. Ib. אֶכְדָּב. Shall I lie? i.e.—as in verbs signifying lying, generally, in these languages,—state any thing short of the truth, keep back, withhold, &c., and when used of inanimate things as waters, fruits, &c., fail, deceive the expectations, &c. So כִּדְבָב. Fefellit. Comp. ch. xx. 12, כָּהֵד, כָּחַשׁ. So “my lie,” &c., Rom. iii. 7: i.e. my defective powers in fully stating the glorious truths of the Gospel. And so Job here, Shall I not fully state my case? He then goes on to say, that his wound is desperate, mortal, incurable, in language not unlike that used in Virgil: “Hæret lateri lethalis arundo." Ib. בְּלִי־עֲשָׂע. Without transgression, i.e. adequate, as one would suppose, to bring down so great a calamity. And in this Job was right: for it was not on account of an extremely sinful life that he was thus afflicted, as we learn from the first and last two chapters of this book. That he was a sinner, generally, he plainly allowed. Elihu therefore unwittingly misrepresents him in this place, and, so far, falls into the same error with Job's other friends. This may also be said of the three following verses.

7. וְנָסַח. Lit. And takes his way: i.e. accustoms himself. לְחִבְרָה. Lit. To accompany, herd with. Comp. Ps. i. 1.

9. לֹא יִבְרָךְ. It profiteth not. See ch. xv. 3. Ib. בְּרִנְתּוֹ. Lit. In his acceptance, or his being accepted, &c. The English idiom will not allow of the addition of the pronoun here. I have, therefore, omitted it in the translation. These statements of Elihu seem to be taken from the following passages: ch. vi. 4, 24, 25; xiii. 18; xxiii. 10, 11; xxvii. 6; xxxi.

10. הַלְלִיָּהּ לְאֵל. Lit. Profane be it to God. If we may rely on the accents, the final ה here is paragogic. If so, it may here also have a precative force, as in other cases. See Gram. Art. 234. Winer gives it the force of "in profanum," as if it were the same with the ה in הַרְצֵה, terram versus, &c. I greatly doubt whether this will apply to words of a verbal character. Ib. מִרְשָׁע. Lit. From wickedness, or doing wickedly.

11. פְּעֵל. Lit. Work, performance; but here, by a metonymy, the reward of work, &c. Ib. יִבְרָאֵהוּ. Lit. Shall He assuredly cause him to find: i.e. bring upon him. On the force of the epenthetic ו, see Gram. Art. 235, 3. On מִנְעָה, see ch. xxxi. 25, 29.

12. לֹא־יִדְּוֶנֶה. Will not condemn: i.e. unjustly, as the context here implies.

13. מִי־יִסְדֵּךְ עָלָיו. Who shall set in order against Him? &c. Usually, "Who hath given Him a charge over the earth?" The question here is not on the creation, nor on any thing that might have preceded it; but on the folly of rebelling against God. But, as יִסְדֵּךְ is found thus construed, and in a sense suitable to this place, viz. signifying to set in order of battle, or the like, I cannot help thinking that it ought so to be taken here. See Jer. xv. 3, &c. Ib. I take הַרְצֵה to be equivalent to הַרְצֵהוּ, the form answering to the Latin or Greek accusative; the force of which is, As to, with reference to, &c. Gram. Art. 229, 8, 9. לֹא will occasionally give the same sense, as אֶל־הָעִיר = הָעִירָה, &c. Gram. Art. 241, 17, note. The latter member is a mere amplification of the former.

14. אֵלָיו. Upon him: i. e. upon a person so doing. I might have written “such an one,” in order to avoid the ambiguity necessarily attending a repetition of the pronoun him, when belonging to different persons. Ib. רִחוּ וְרוּ. His spirit, &c. It is of no importance here whether we refer the pronoun וְ to God or to man, the exegetical sense being the same in the main. The Grammar, however, requires that it be referred to אֵל; God being the leading subject of the whole passage. Allusion is made to Gen. ii. 7.

15. וְיָנַע כָּל־בָּשָׂר וְרוּ. All flesh should expire, &c. This is a manifest allusion to the general deluge. All flesh, it should seem, had then become corrupt, and was consequently opposed to God. The giants which were then on the earth had, as we are taught, set themselves in array against the Almighty. And the result was, all flesh (excepting one family only) did expire: the very words used by the historian of that event. See Gen. vi. 17; vii. 21. This, therefore, I take to be a citation from that history. Ib. וְאָדָם. And man, &c. See Gen. iii. 19, to which allusion seems here to be made.

16. וְאִם־בִּינָה. And if there be understanding, discrimination: i. e. If thou hast this, attend to my discourse, which is not only grounded on true wisdom, but has been so awfully exemplified in fact. St. Paul has a similar usage, Phil. ii. 1.

17. הַמֵּאֵף שׁוֹנֵא וְרוּ. Lit. Doth even the hater of judgment bear rule? i. e. Is God then who ruleth, a hater of judgment? וְאִם וְרוּ. Or wilt thou condemn the just and mighty One? In this view, צַדִּיק, and צַבִּיר, epithets very proper for God, answer to the nominative latent in הַמֵּאֵף, in the preceding member. And the sense is, Either we must allow that He who governs the world hates justice; or else, that thou art at liberty to condemn Him who is both just and great. A dilemma from which, as Elihu seems to have thought, Job could not easily escape. The truth however is, Job had asserted neither of these things.

18. הַמֵּאֵמֵר וְרוּ. Lit. Is it a saying, or assertion, for a king? i. e. to be used against a king, &c. Then consecutively in a sort of climax, vr. —

19. לְאִשֶּׁר, for אִשֶּׁר. For Him who accepts not? i. e.

Much more for Him, who is so far exalted above kings and princes, as to be under no temptation whatever to favour them before others in judgment. Ib. וְלֹא נִבְרַר וְגו'. And acknowledges not, recognises, or prefers not. Pih. of נִבְרַר.

Ib. וְשׂוֹיֵץ וְגו'. Affluent, rich. The most easy and obvious etymology of this word is to suppose the root to be שׂוֹיֵץ.

Arab. وَسَع. Amplus fuit, &c.; the form שׂוֹיֵץ, שְׂוִיץ; and, eliding the י (Gram. Art. 76), we shall have שׂוֹיֵץ, affluent, &c. The lexicographers often put it under שׂוֹיֵץ, vociferari; with which it seems to me to have no connexion. Cognate roots are וּשַׁע, tinxit eum canities,—ornavit; וּשַׁע, sparsim excrevit, &c.; שָׁע, radiatim sparsit; שְׂוֹע, dispersa duraque coma fuit; שָׁע, palam evasit; שָׁע, diffusus. Syr. أَم.

Expolivit; מָלָא, linivit, lavigavit, &c.: all containing some shade or other of the sense above given. Ib. כִּי-מִצְיָהּ וְגו'. For the work, &c. This assigns the reason why God is so much above courting the favour of princes, on the one hand, or oppressing the poor, on the other.

20. וְגו' וְגו'. In a moment, &c. An appeal to fact, that the sentiment is true. Ib. וְנִחַזְרָה. Lit. And (in or during) the portioning of the night: i.e. during the time of its watches. Interpreters have usually supposed this to signify the middle of the night: but nothing can be more certain than that the word does not signify to bisect, or cut into two equal parts. See Isa. xxx. 28, &c. It may, therefore, signify the cutting up into any portions whatever; such as the portions assigned to the different watches of the night. Ib. וְלֹא-שָׁנִי עַם. Are a people troubled: i.e. whether great or small. The Concordance here is logical. Gram. Art. 215, 11. Cogn.

Syr. حُف. Cornu petiit. Ib. וְנִסְרִי. Taking סוּר for the root, the form will be Hiphil, and the sense So they cause to pass away, taken impersonally, equivalent to they pass, &c., or are made to pass. But if we take סוּר, Arab. سِير, for the root, then the form will be Kal, and the sense direct, they pass away. וְנִסְרִי. Mighty, taken collectively, and construed logically, as before. וְלֹא-בְיָד. Not with hand: i.e. No man, or men, performing this. The expression is adopted in Dan. ii. 34, in similar context.

21. וְאִישׁ. Every man: i.e. taken distributively, as this word often is; and here intimating both the classes just mentioned.

23. פִּי. Therefore, &c. Nold. p. 369, ideo, propterea; Gen. xxi. 17; 1 Sam. ii. 25, &c. Ib. עֲלֵי־אִישׁ. Lit. Upon man: i. e. incumbent on him, or his duty. Comp. Esth. ix. 31; Neh. x. 33. So, I think, Ps. xvi. 2. תִּזְכֶּרְתִּי בְּלִעְיָיִךָ. My good, i. e. prosperity, or being prosperous, lies, or is incumbent, by no means (as a duty) on Thee. He had just said, She (i. e. his soul, or Zion, perhaps) hath said of Jehovah, Thou art supreme Lord. He then adds the passage just cited. This usage of the Arabic عَلَيَّ is very frequent, e. g. عَلَيْكَ بِجَارٍ, i. e. It lies upon thee for (thy) companion: it is incumbent on thee to do him justice, and to avenge his cause; or, as the Scholiast words it, اِنْتَصِفْ لَهُ لِجَارِكَ وَاَنْتَقِمْ لَهُ.—Freytag's Hamāsa, p. ۲۱۴. See also the places cited in Castell, col. 2770. Golius is defective in this case. Ib. יִשֵּׁם. That he should place, supp. לְבֹו, his heart, any more לִחְלֹל לְפָנֶיךָ to proceed against God in judgment. That is, the facts being such as I have stated, and Job having publicly opposed God's appointments; I now say, Let no man any more presume to do this. Rosenmüller may be consulted on the various methods had recourse to in interpreting this verse. Reimarus seems to have been the first who perceived that לְבֹו ought to be supplied after יִשֵּׁם, which Schnurrer and others have since adopted. My opinion is, that still the true sense had not been seen. I believe יִשֵּׁם refers to אִישׁ, and not to אֱלֹהִים understood, for these reasons:—I. It seems to be nonsense to say, God shall no more place His heart upon man, to proceed against God in judgment. The question manifestly is on Job's impiety (vr. 17) and God's power and independence. I cannot see, therefore, in what way the sentiment so extracted can apply, much less can I in what way the term עוֹד is to be understood. Surely, the dispute now before us could in no way determine what course God should take; as He is confessedly superior to any such consideration. But, if we apply this to man, the drift will be obvious enough: viz. that Elihu urges it in consequence of the arguments he had just advanced. Besides, if God be said here to place His heart on any thing, the meaning must be, either in pleasure or displeasure: for, I think, this will be implied by the term לֵב. If displeasure be meant, then the term לֵב will negative this; which will be altogether opposed to the terms commencing the very next verse. But if pleasure be intended, and it be said that He will not again (עוֹד) do this —implying that it had some time been done—then will the passage be altogether at variance with the sentiments of Elihu. The truth is, the phraseology here has been misunderstood; and the consequence has been, as might be expected, the passage has been divested of all propriety, applicability, and point. On the view now proposed, all will, I think, be obvious and quite easy.

24. רָעַע. He breaketh down, or to pieces: r. רעע. Ib. לֹא־תִתְקַן. Lit. Not inquiring: i. e. He executes His purposes without allowing them to be inquired into in any way. And in this sense the passage agrees well with the preceding context. “Without number,” gives neither the exact sense of the words, nor a meaning in unison with the context.

25. לָכֵן. Lit. For thus, so. Nold. sign. I and 4, p. 434. Ib. וְגַם יִרְאוּ. He recognises, takes cognizance of, מַעֲשֵׂיהֶם, their deeds, or services: i. e. repays them by cutting them off, as they had deserved. Usually, “their works.” עָבַד, however, signifies to labour, serve, &c., rather than to work, i. e. fabricate any thing. Ib. וְהָפַךְ לַיְלָה. Rosenm. “Et convertit, super illos, noctem, &c.” In such cases, however, ל generally precedes the noun; otherwise it would stand as the objective case to the verb. I take the passage thus, וְהָפַךְ לַיְלָה, alluding to what was said in vr. 20 just above; and as the verb וְהָפַךְ seems to shew.

26. תַּחַת. This word, evidently I think, belongs to the preceding verse, and ought not to have been separated from it: and so the Syriac and Arabic of the Polyglott take it. A similar blunder has been committed by the Masorets in Ps. lxxii. 3, 4, where בְּיַד־רִקְקָה, in righteousness, now ending vr. 3, ought manifestly to commence vr. 4.

Ib. כִּסְפָּה. One, some one, claps the hands at them, by way of derision. Ib. בְּמַקְוֵי. Lit. In the place of spectators: i. e. where many see for the sake of example.

27. אֲשֶׁר עָלִינוּ. Lit. Since upon thus: i. e. Since, or because, they thus departed, &c.

28. לְהָבִיא. To bring, &c. In all such cases, I believe, the second member,—although a parallel,—takes a different mode of construction: so here, וַיַּעֲקֹתָ, &c., and apparently for the sake of variety only. For the same reason, perhaps, a leading preterite tense is almost universally followed by a present; and occasionally, vice versâ, a leading present will be followed by a preterite. And so in the vowels, הָהָרִים for הָהָרִים, &c. The beginning of this verse is elliptical. וְהַפֵּל, וְהַלְיָאָה, or some such prefatory terms seem necessary.

30. מְפַלֵּךְ וְגוֹ. Lit. From ruling, or bearing rule: i. e. as in the preceding verse, יִשְׁקֵט, He causes to rest,—hides his face, i. e. withholds his favour, and so takes away all opportunities, so that such cannot obtain rule:—which seems to be indirectly intended for Job. Ib. מִפְּקוּשֵׁי וְגוֹ. Lit. From the ensnarings of a people: i. e. subjectively, as in the preceding member. This applies to בְּיָי preceding, just as the other member does to יָחִיד אָדָם.

31. הַאָּמַר. Lit. The word, i. e. the diction or address to be applied. See vr. 18 above, and Hos. xiv. 3. Ib. נָשָׂאתִי. I have taken up, assisted, &c. Ezra, viii. 36; ix. 2; Lam. iv. 16, &c. This seems directed against Job's assertions, ch. xxxi. 13, where he speaks of his own conduct towards the poor.—Rosenm. I have borne my iniquity: i. e. have suffered for it: which is most unsuitable to the place.

32. בְּלִעְרֵי אַחֲזָה. The first of these words terminates with the vowels usual in the state of construction. If this be intended, the connexion must be with the verb following, or rather with its objective case understood: which is neither contrary to analogy, nor unusual in the Eastern languages of this family. Gram. Art. 224, 5. It may be translated thus: The exceedings of—i. e. things beyond—(what) I see: things which from my ignorance I cannot now see, and therefore do not understand; these, הִרְנִי teach thou me. Imp. Hiph. of נָדָה. לֹא אֶסִּיף. I will not repeat, &c., sufficiently explains the לֹא אַחֲזָבֵל in the verse above; which is evidently intended to express conduct in itself sinful and bad. Elihu seems to say, a defence of this weak sort is not to be offered to God; who, as a just judge, can receive nothing short of perfect obedience.

33. הֲמֵעַתָּה. Lit. Is it from with thee: i. e. at thy command, or will. יִשְׁלַמְכָה, He repay it, render its retribution: i. e. of something not yet mentioned; in which we have an hypallage, i. e. the consequent preceding its natural antecedent. This, I suppose, is to be understood as occurring in מֵאֲסֵף, &c.: thus, בִּי־מֵאֲסֵף. When thou hast despised, and because thou chooseth a conclusion, which I cannot?—Is God to avenge this according to thy notions? מָאֵס is opposed to בָּחַר. Isa. vii. 15; xli. 9, &c. הַבְּחָר. Makest thy choice: i. e. of thy decision, מִשְׁפָּטֶיךָ. Comp. vr. 4 above: but this decision I choose not? וְלֹא אֶבְחָר. Ib. וְכִמָּה. Whatever, then, thou knowest, speak out. That is, Let us hear it all; which I think ought to commence the next verse.

36. אָבִי. Would it were, utinam, or the like. This par-tiele I take to be nearly allied to בָּ, Gram. Art. 243, 2; and also to אָבוֹי, Prov. xxiii. 29. The Arabs also have the formula, بِوَاللّٰه ذٰلِكَ, God grant this, from the root بِوَا, i. q. Heb. בּוּא. Whence one may be induced to believe, that אָבוֹי is an apocopated form of אָבוֹי. Let me bring in, would I could, &c., as in other apocopated forms, and used as an ejaculation. Ib. גַּלְתֵּי־תַשְׁבֵּת. On the answers. אָבוֹי. Respecting, for, or against wicked men: i. e. I suppose, on the answers which he has already given, which might be considered, and cited, as favourable to the wicked; or, perhaps, more generally, on account of the answers to be given to or against wicked men. Elihu, on this view, wished the matter to be thoroughly investigated, in order to afford a standard to which appeals might be made in similar cases.

37. אָבוֹי. He claps his hands contemptuously. See vr. 26 above. וַיִּכְרַח. And then multiplies, &c., for וַיִּכְרַח, taking the form of a segolate noun. Gram. Art. 108.

CHAPTER XXXV.

2. הַזֶּה. Whether this? &c.: i. e. the conduct described in the close of the last chapter. Ib. אָבוֹי אֱלֹהִים. My justification, or righteousness, is of, from, or with God. Auth. Vers. "More than God's." Rosenm. "Institia mea est præ Deo:" which he interprets by "major quam Dei." Which in all probability is wrong. See ch. xxxii. 2, note.

3. אָבוֹי. Will it profit Thee, or will profit accrue to Thee: alluding perhaps to what Job had said, ch. x. 14, 15. Comp. chh. xix. 4; xxi. 17-21; xxii. 2, 3. From the last of which this passage looks like a citation. If so, Elihu must have understood it as retorted upon Job. In this case, אָבוֹי will refer to God: אָבוֹי to Job, as spoken of himself. Rosenmüller adopts Jarchi's comment, which he takes thus: "Plusne utilitatis capiam, quam si peccassem?" Which makes Job a most dissolute character, openly professing modern utilitarianism. The reply of Elihu, however, proceeds upon the ground that Job justified himself; not openly allowed that he was a profligate. All I can see in the passage is, that Job, having affirmed that God would justify him, now declares that he always considered sin as injurious. Besides, the reply of Elihu which follows goes to no such question as Jarchi's comment requires. It is directed more against the ignorance and presumption of Job than against his profligacy, as every one cannot but see; and rather goes to the impossibility of injuring, or profiting God, than the mere will to do either this or that.

4. אֲשַׁבֵּר לְךָ מַלְיוֹן. Lit. I will return, I will answer or retort upon thee, assertions, conclusions, &c. : i.e. those which thou hast advanced. In our idiom, I will answer thy assertions, conclusions, &c. וְאֶת־רְעִיָּה עִמָּךְ. “And thy companions with thee,” usually; but which may nevertheless signify, “And thy opinions with thee,” i.e. the opinions which thou holdest : עִם occurring often in this book in that sense. If so, this is added for the purpose of corroborating the preceding member : thus, yea even the opinions, or principles, which thou holdest : or, as an epanorthosis, see Gram. Art. 216, 4, note. On this sense of רְעִיָּה, see Ps. cxxxix. 2. Besides, so far is Elihu from answering the positions of Job’s friends, that he actually adopts them. Nor, again, can Job’s friends be said to have been with him in this case. With him, perhaps, in society they were : but the question is not here on that subject. I take this latter member, then, as an epanorthosis on the former : thus, yea (rather) thy opinions which attend, or adhere to, thee. He then proceeds to shew, that to argue in this way cannot avail in justifying Job, because in fact no sin, nor virtue of man, can affect the Almighty.

5. נָבְרָהּוּ מִמֶּנִּי. They are higher than thou (art) : by which, as well as by the following sentiments, Elihu seems to intimate that Job had argued to no purpose.

8. רִשְׁעָהּ. Thy wickedness (is). Elihu appears to me here to speak with some abhorrence of the principles of Job. He seems to treat them as sinfulness itself, and to say that Job, and men such as he was, these considerations might and would affect : God they could not. Rosenmüller, with the Auth. Vers., follows the comment of Jarchi ; which, as it misapprehends the passage to which it alludes (viz. vr. 3 above), is not very likely to give a just interpretation here. In my view, the ellipsis is natural and easy, and the sense pointed.

9. מִרֹּב. From multitude, i.e. excess : suppl. עֲשָׂק, of oppression. To this we have in the parallel, מִזְרֹעַ. From the arm ; which, like יָד the hand, is often taken to signify power. Comp. ch. xxii. 8. In like manner, רַבִּים here appears to correspond in the parallelism to עֲשִׂיקָיִם : and, if so, it must be the nominative to יִשְׁעֵי. Elihu seems here to allude to ch. ix. 24, where God’s giving up a land to evil judges is mentioned.

10. וְלֹא אָמַר. Lit. And one, impers. says not : i.e. men so acting say not. They do not recognise God, who alone has lifted them out of weakness and obscurity. ib. זְמִרֹת

בְּלַיְלָהָ. Lit. Songs in the night: i. e. has enabled them to sing and rejoice during the times of adversity which try others: for in this sense לַיְלָהָ is often taken as already noticed. Allusion is made here, and vr. 11, to Job's words, ch. xii. 7-9; xxxi. 15. And the point consists in this, that, although Job's words are not evil, his principles fail of bringing him to their due application; viz. to confess his error, and then to wait patiently for mercy.

12. בְּיַגְבֵּי גְאוֹן. On account of the haughtiness, &c. Elihu, like Job's other friends, seems to have thought that no good man could have been afflicted as Job was. In this place he insinuates that Job wanted humility, as indeed he does in many others. Then, vr. 13, follows his conclusion upon this; viz. that still God does both hear and see all this, and will in His own time avenge it.

14. אֲף־כִּי־וָגֵר. Even though, &c.; alluding to ch. xxiii. 8.

15. כִּי־לֹא־יָדַעַתְּ. Since, or because it is not so. Elihu here necessarily reverts to the main proposition with which he set out: viz. Job's being supposed righteous with God (vr. 2); and therefore he concludes, אֲפֹרָאֵי, He hath appointed, set in order, as an army, His wrath: i. e. commissioned it against thee. Ib. וְלֹא־יָדַעַתְּ. Lit. But knoweth, animadverteth not: i. e. punishes not in its excessive diffusion, בְּפִשׁוֹ. The definite article, expressed by the (-) under כִּי here, may be considered as equivalent to the pronoun הוּ, its: for either of these would restrict the term פִּשׁוֹ to the subject-matter of the context, which is here אֲפֹרָאֵי.—r. פִּזַּח, multiplicavit, &c. Chald. and Syr. Mansit, residuus fuit, &c. Arab. cogn. قَاشَ (r. فَبِش). Expansus fuit; كَفَّتْ, manavit; it. فَشِي, id. Rosenmüller, after Jarchi, makes פִּשׁוֹ here to signify a multitude of sins. He then makes the whole verse to say, "At nunc quum parum animadvertat ira ejus, ignoretque peccatorum multitudinem." Which, to my mind, not only sets the grammatical construction of the passage at naught, but makes it propose sentiments altogether at variance with the reasoning of Elihu: which, if I can see any thing, is intended to shew that Job's sins are justly punished; that God does take cognisance of sin in this case, and this to some extent, though not to that dealt out on other occasions. Our Auth. Vers. is, if possible, worse. The last verse needs no comment.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

2. פת־רִלִי. Wait for me. Chald. et Syr. ; ܩܘܠܝܢܐ. Expectavit, &c. Ib. ܢܘܫܘܢܐ. And I will shew, demonstrate, to thee. This too is rather a Chaldaic than a Hebrew word. The epenthetic נ, visible in ר, was probably intended to mark the ἀπόδοσις here. Gram. Art. 235, 3. Ib. לְאַלֹהֵי מַלְאִיִּם. Lit. Of or for God, sentiments, or conclusions: i. e. many things are yet to be said, or urged, respecting Him.

3. אֶשְׂא מִשְׁלִי־דַעִי, perhaps for מִשְׁלִי־דַעִי. I will take up the parable of my knowledge: i. e. speak of what I know. Ib. לְמַרְרוֹתָא. Lit. As to (what is) from afar: i. e. the result of much labour, research, and consideration: no commonplace matter. Ib. וְלִפְעֻלֵי וְגו'. And to my Maker, &c. I will give, or ascribe righteousness. אֶשְׂאֵר־יְדֵיךָ, i. q. אֶשְׂאֵר־יְדֵיךָ, or, אֶשְׂאֵר־יְדֵיךָ.

4. בְּיִאֲמָנָם. For indeed, &c. Comp. ch. xxxiii. 3, &c. Ib. כְּלִי־תְמִיִּם וְגו' for כְּלִי־תְמִיִּם וְגו'. The whole complete in acknowledgment with thee: i. e. such as thou shalt feel to be just and conclusive.

5. כְּבִיר . . . בְּחַיֵּי הַלֵּב. Great . . . in power, in heart. The commencement of this verse declares that God is great, but despiseth not. This latter member is a parallel to it, affirming that, as in the one case He has power, so in the other He has kindness. The next verse continues this theme, and preserves the parallelism. לֵב. Lit. The heart; usually taken here to denote wisdom: but, as it may signify any affection of the heart, by a meton. and, as it is often used to denote that of love, or mercy, I take this to be its sense here. "Robore cordis" seems to supply no perceptible sense whatever, and palpably so when followed by "Propterea non vivificat," as Rosenmüller has it.

7. לֹא יִגְרַע. He turneth not away His eyes. Syr. et Chald. Rasit, abrasit. Arab. جَرَعَ. Sorpsit, &c.: i. e. neglects, thinks lightly of, &c. Ib. וְאֵת וְגו'. And, as to, &c.: i. e. I now speak with reference to kings, &c. Gram. Art. 229, 9. Jarchi, and after him Rosenmüller, ignorant of the true force of this particle, have completely misunderstood the passage. "Coll." says Rosenmüller, "eadem sententia, 1 Sam. ii. 8; Ps. cxiii. 7." But, whatever may be the meaning of these passages, neither of them contains the same, or even a similar construction. Ib. לְבִשְׂתָא, for אֵם יִשְׁבִּיִם הֵם לְבִשְׂתָא. Whether sitting on the throne. Then follows יָשִׁיבֵם. So He maketh them sit; i. e. firmly establisheth them. Ib. יִנְּבָרֵם. Must here mean, So they are greatly exalted. Their exaltation is, by the stability so communicated, increased and raised still higher.

8. וְגַם וְגַם. And if, when, putting the case that, bound, &c. The וְגַם here, seems to require אִם in the preceding context. I have therefore supplied it in the ellipsis to לִבְנֵי: i. e. Whether in this state, or whether in that. Comp. ch. xxxvii. 13. So the Arabic, أَمَّ—أَمَّ; the Persic, خَوَاه—خَوَاه; the Latin, sive—sive. Ib. בְּזַרְעֵי. In chains. Arab. زَيْت. Collare indusii, pars ejus ambiens collum. Cogn. زَوَج. Con-sociavit, &c. أَدَاقَ. Cinxit. Ib. יִלְבְּדוּן. They are taken: i. e. as captives in war; which is often expressed by אֲסַרְתִּי. All this, to the end of vr. 10, is mentioned as a work of mercy, intended to produce reformation in such men, when tempted by power to depart from the humility necessary to true religion.

11, 12. These two verses contain two cases, the probable result of such divine visitations; viz. prosperity in the one, a miserable death in the other. Ib. בְּשִׁלְחָה. Lit. In or to ruin. Comp. ch. xxxiii. 18.

13. יָשִׁיבוּ אָרָה. They lay up wrath, treasure it up with themselves, give no vent to their feelings in prayer, &c. Chald. שָׁבַח. Summavit, in summam conjecit. Syr. هَمَّر. Thesaurizavit, &c. Comp. Rom. ii. 4, 5, where St. Paul seems to allude to this place: the doctrine in both places being perfectly identical.

14. בְּדֵשֶׁתָּם. Their desire, lust, carnal affections. Comp. ch. vi. 11; Numb. xxi. 4; Deut. xxiii. 25, &c. So the Greek, ψυχή occasionally; as in the ζῷη zai ψυχή of Juvenal, Sat. vi. &c. For this reason I prefer translating בְּדֵשֶׁתָּם, in the next member, by their strength. Ib. בְּקִרְבָּנָם would best be rendered by Juvenal's "Inter Socraticos . . . cinædos." Sat. ii.

15. וְנִפְתָּחָהּ . . . וְנִפְתָּחָהּ. Lit. So their ear opens: i. e. is opened. It. vr. 10, see ch. xxxiii. 16, &c.; i. e. is put into a situation to receive instruction.

16. וְיִצְרֵם וְיִצְרֵם. Aud He moreover impelleth, stimulateth, urgeth thee on. This verb occurs not in Kal, nor indeed in the sister dialects; except perhaps in some cognate form. No doubt however need be entertained, that lexicographers have given it its true meaning. Comp. 2 Chron. xviii. 31,

&c. Cogn. Arab. سَتِي. Accelerare illum curavit, &c.; to which Jauhari makes سَكِي cognate: i. e. manum protendit rem versus, gradum dilatavit, &c. Ib. מַפֵּי־פֶּה. Lit. By the mouth of adversity: i. e. by what it naturally seems to say. Hence פֵּי, by a meton., signifies a command, &c. It is not necessary, therefore, to have recourse to Rosenmüller's metaphor, who says, "metaphorâ a rictu feræ ductâ, quæ eum sit devoratura;" which may appear very forcible, but is entirely unwarranted by Hebrew usage. War is indeed occasionally so represented by the Arabian poets: but we are not at liberty to call in their assistance, except when they concur with Hebrew usage, or when we have no other means of making out our context. Ib. רָחֵב, suppl. לְ, or אֶל־: i. e. To extent, breadth, i. e. plenty, as explained in the terms immediately following. לֹא מוֹדֵק וְגו'. Lit. Its place no restraint: i. e. the place of which is not compressed or straitened. Compare Isaiah, viii. 22, 23. Ib. תַּחְתֵּיהָ. Under which, i. e. the ground on which it rests: which comes to the same thing. Ib. וְנָחַת. Lit. And the descent, laying down, &c. Chald. נָחַת. Descendit. Syr. نَسَد. Descendere fecit. שֶׁלְחָןָךְ. Lit. Thy tray: i. e. that on which viands are set, and sent (שֶׁלְחָן) to the guests. Hence used to signify a table. So Mr. Rich, in his "Residence in Koordistan," vol. i., Loud. 1836, p. 117: "The pasha and myself sat together at the upper end of the hall, and before us was placed an oblong tray of painted wood, with feet raising it a few inches from the ground, on which the different dishes were placed." It. p. 126.

17. וְדִין־רָשָׁע וְגו'. So the judgment of the wicked hast thou filled, or filled up. That is, thou comest in no way short of the sentence, or judgment, due to the wicked. Comp. vr. 15 of the last chapter, and vr. 13 here, which seems to be indirectly intended for Job. It is added, דִּין וְגו'. Judgment and decision will support, sustain (this). Rosenmüller here reads וְיָאם דִּין, At si iudicium, &c.; borrowing this particle, I suppose, from vr. 11, 12. But it may fairly be doubted whether the same construction is employed here, particularly as the context clearly suggests the contrary. Rosenm. indeed, makes וְיָרִמְכֵךְ to signify "se invicem sustentabunt:" i. e. adds he, "sibi mutuo coliarebunt." But why this verb has a reciprocal sense here, perhaps no better reason can be given than that this view of the passage requires it; which, I think, is an absurd one: both because it makes judgment and justice to support one another—a notion nowhere broached in Scripture; and also, because it unnaturally changes the tenor of the discourse for no apparent end. Comp. Exod. xv. 9; Mich. iii. 8; Esth. vii. 5. On the latter verb, see Prov. iv. 4; xi. 16; xxix. 23; Exod. xvii. 12. All Elihu intends is, I think, that both justice and judgment will sustain the conclusion just mentioned. Then very naturally follows the caution.

18. בַּיְהוֹמָהּ. But, as to anger. We have now a recurrence to vv. 12, 13,—הוֹמָהּ here, corresponding to הָס there,—and some advice is given accordingly. Ib. אֶל-יָדָי. Let it by no means bow thee down, i. e. subdue, or turn thee aside. Examples of this sort of transposition will be found in Gram. Art. 241, 18, &c. בְּשִׁפְתָּי. Lit. To clapping of hands: i. e. contemptuous treatment. וְרַב-בְּפָרָר. Lit. And much ransom. It is usual with robbers to seize on the persons and wealth of others, and then to require a ransom for their restoration. That Elihu supposed Job capable of being led even to this, is obvious from vr. 20 following, where he warns him against some such practice.

19. הִנְיָרִיד. Will He set in order: i. e. to compare. See ch. xxviii. 13, 17, 19, and הִנְיָרִידָהּ, ib. vr. 16. Ib. שְׁוִיָּה. Thy influence. See שְׁוִיָּה, ch. xxxiv. 19. לֹא בְּצָר. Neither wealth: i. e. prædial wealth, ch. xxii. 24. מְצַמְצִימֵי-כֹחַ. Lit. Confirmer of strength. Comp. ch. iv. 4; xvi. 5; Deut. iii. 28, &c. That is, all such adherents, friends, connexions, dependents, &c., who may give stability to power: i. e. a ransom with thee may stimulate thee to sin: no consideration will do this with God.

20. הַלַּיְלָה. By night: i. e. During the night-time, when people are off their guard and at rest, excite not the dissatisfied to acts of marauding and plunder. עַמִּים. Lit. Peoples; by which is probably meant tribes, or families—with us populace: it being evident enough from the Hamāsa and other works, that it never required much effort to excite the different clans of Arabia to war and bloodshed. The stealing of a camel, or the like, has often done this. Harith, in his Moallakat (prize-poem), vr. 19, ed. Vullers, makes the night the season for plotting mischief: the dawn, the season for putting this in force. His words are:

أَجْمَعُوا أَمْرَهُمْ عِشَاءً فَلَمَّا أَصْبَحُوا أَصْبَحَتْ لَهُمْ صَوَاعِدٌ.

“Decrerunt rem vespera, et illucescente die clamores belli ediderunt.”—Ed. Vullers, 1827.

It might have occurred to Elihu, that Job's distress and complaints were very likely to have this effect upon him. See Hab. iii. 16. He properly enough adds, therefore—

21. הִשָּׁמֵר. Beware, &c. Ib. בָּחַרְתָּ. Thou hast chosen, or made choice עַל־זֶה. Upon this, i. e. on anger (vr. 18), which is likely to conduct thee to ruin. כִּמְעַנִּי. Rather than (on) affliction, i. e. the patient suffering of affliction.

22. אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׁעֶיב. God giveth exaltation: i. e. It is from God's power alone that exaltation,—in thy case, relief,—can come. Look, therefore, to His mercy and power (vr. 5), and not to complaint, anger, robbery, and wrong.

23. פָּקַד עָלָיו. Has set up against Him, &c. See ch. xxxiv. 13. That is, Who hath effectually resisted Him?

24. אֲשֶׁר שָׂרְרוּ. That men may see, contemplate, i. e. His doings; and hence learn wisdom. The verb (שָׂרַר) is here in the Pihel form.

26. שְׁגִיָּא. Lit. Much, i. e. great. וְלֹא גָרַע. And we know not: i. e. so great as to be incomprehensible to us. A similar mode of expression is adopted in the next member, which seems intended to assert the eternity of His existence.

27. פִּי יִקָּרַע. For He draws off, i. e. from the clouds, which are said to be as hard as molten metal (ch. xxxvii. 18), i. e. extracts the drops of water, which are thence fused in rain. In יִקָּרַע, the notion of fusing metals is retained. See ch. xxviii. 1, and xxxvii. 18. Ib. לְאָרְזוֹ. Lit. For His mist: i. e. instead of this; which I think is an allusion to Gen. ii. 5, 6, where we learn that at that time no rain had fallen, only a mist (אָרַז) had ascended, which fell again and watered the garden. On the verb גָּרַע, see vr. 6 above.

Cognates are גָּרַר. Arab. جَرَّ. Traxit, attraxit; جَرَّوْ, animosus fuit; وَالْأَجْرَانِ, naturam habentes acutum. Chald et Syr.

גָּרַי. Misit, immisit, &c. Heb. גָּרְחָה. Ruminavit. Syr. رَمِيَتْ. Ruminatio. Redupl. גָּרְגַר. Grana singula collegit; גָּרְגַר, cumulus, acervus. That is here, God (אֱלֹהִים, vr. 26) great, and incomprehensible, exhibits instances both of His power and goodness in extracting from the clouds of His firmament the plenteous shower, by which He waters the earth and makes it fruitful.

29. אֲפֵף אִם וּנְאֻ. Even if one understand: i. e. Could one even understand fully the expanding properties of the cloud, the laws whereby its action is regulated, &c. Still it would follow, that this all resulted from Him as its author. Ib. תִּשְׁמָעוּר. The rumblings, rushing uproar like that of an assaulting army. Comp. Ps. xviii. 12-16.

30. הוֹרֶף־רֶשׁ, Behold He hath spread, or now spreadeth, His light; here, probably, his lightning, i. e. He envelopes it in flame. If man could understand the מִקְרָשֵׁי, expansings of the clouds—make this a matter of scientific speculation; still observe, it is God who שֶׁרֶף spreads, &c. Here is a pointed paronomasia in the language, and a pointed difference in the matter taught. Rosenmüller makes זָלַי here refer to God: “extendit super se lumen suum,” because he says, God dwells in light. If we attend to the grammar, however, נָבַב, or קָפְרוּ, ought to be the antecedent: it is of no consequence to the sense here which of these we take. Again, the next member tells us that He, i. e. God, covereth likewise the roots, depths, of the sea. Now, I would only ask, Is the comparison here between the incomprehensibility of God (v. 26), on the one hand, and the depths of the sea, on the other? or, between the height of the cloud, and the depth of the sea? It is hardly probable that God himself would here be put in comparison with the depth of the sea: no such thing certainly occurs in the Bible; and, if it did, it would manifestly be incongruous. All that seems to be intended is, that as God in the one case envelopes the thick and dense cloud in light; so he does in the other cover up the depth of the ocean with impenetrable darkness, Comp. ch. xxxviii. 16, &c.

31. פִּי־בָּרָם. For by them, i. e. by means of his clouds, either withholding the rain, or striking with the thunderbolt, so as to destroy or plague them for their wickedness; or else יָתֵן אֹכֶל. He giveth food in abundance, or great plenty; that is, by restoring the electric fluid to the earth, in order to its furthering and assisting vegetation; and by giving the needful showers in their due seasons and proportions. These phenomena, therefore, are not only proofs of God's power; but they are the ministers both of his wrath and bounty. Comp. Ps. civ. 2-7, which seems to be an expansion of this place. Still, לִמְנוּחַ אֵי, in vr. 2, seems rather to refer to God's pavilion than to God himself; for here, עָבִימ, thick clouds, are his chariot; which, Ps. xviii. 10, is thick darkness, עֲרֵבֶל. And in vr. 12, His pavilion is covered up with darkness and thick clouds. Comp. Ps. cxlvii. 8.

32. עַל־בְּרָחִים. Lit. On the palms of both hands; that is, this אִישׁ לְהֵט (Ps. civ. 4), His minister, He holds, as it were, concealed and in check, upon, i. e. between, each of his palms, just as a man holds a furious animal, which he is about to let loose for the purpose of destroying. So Shakespeare's, "Cry havoc, and let slip the dogs of war." It is added, וַיִּצַו. So, accordingly, He lays command upon it. He holds it in complete subjection until He has delivered His precept: it then rushes out, בְּמִפְגָּעַי, lit. for meeting, encountering, i. e. to destroy. Comp. Judg. viii. 21; I Sam. xxii. 17; Isa. liii. 6. The Jews, and others, take בְּפָנַי here to signify clouds; to which I shall not greatly object, if they only mean that by these God does, as with hands, execute His purposes,—which will be a metaphorical usage. Comp. Exod. xxxii. 22. Lam. iii. 41, is also cited in this sense, as if בְּפָנַי, and שְׂמַיִם, being parallel, must necessarily mean the same thing. But this will not bear a moment's consideration. To lift up one's heart to the clouds, is any thing but Hebrew certainly. All the passage implies, evidently is, either Let us lift up our heart with—in addition to—our hands; or, Let us lift up our hearts, as it were on,—בָּל—being used for עַל,—the palms of our hands, just as an offering would be presented to any prince. There is not a shadow of reason, therefore, for supposing that בְּפָנַי signifies clouds here; nor, indeed, any where else. The Arabs, too, have a usage not very dissimilar to this, when speaking of the lightning. So Amrulkais, in his Moallakat poem, vr. 71, ed. Lette,—

أَصَاحَ تَرَيَ بَرَقًا أَرِيكَ وَمِيضَةً
كَلَمَعَ الْيَدَيْنِ فِي حَبِيٍّ مُكَلَّلٍ

O Socie mi, videsne fulgorem, quem tibi ostendo strictim coruscantem

Instar manuum, quæ vibrantur in nube elatâ, aliis circumdatâ nubibus.

The scholiast here explains the phrase كَلَمَعَ الْيَدَيْنِ, like the shining of both hands, اي كحركاتهما, i. e. like their brandishing. He adds, يقال لمع بيده اذا حركتها. It might be said, لمع بيده, lit. He shines with his hands, when he agitates them اذا حركتها. حبي, he says, means the upper clouds, ارتفع من السحاب; and مكمل those clouds which collectively surround (any thing) like a crown. المستجمع المستدير كالكلمة. The imagery, therefore, in this place, is very much of a piece with that of our patriarch.

33. רָעָא. His will. See Ps. cxxxix. 2, 17. Chald. רָעָא, voluit. Syr. ܠܢ , id. ܦܩܗܘܬܐ . The zeal, or fierceness, of anger: for ܦܩܗܘܬܐ . Gram. Art. 202, 4. Symmachus, $\zeta\eta\lambda\omicron\nu\sigma\epsilon\iota$ $\acute{\alpha}\delta\omicron\rho\iota\alpha\varsigma$. Ib. עוֹלָה , I read עוֹלָה , or עוֹלָה , Job, v. 16, &c. The various ways, in which this verse has been interpreted, may be seen in Schultens and Rosenmüller. I have preferred the above, as the most simple and obvious.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

1. יִתְרַד . “Trembleth,” usually; but this cannot be properly applied to the heart. I have given leapeth from its place, therefore, which suits well the following verb. Ib. וַיִּתַּר . And leaps. So in Lev. xi. 21. In this case not unlike Shakespeare’s, “Makes my seated heart knock at my ribs.” Elihu seems to be describing that violent palpitation of the heart which is felt under a strong apprehension of danger. He therefore calls the serious attention of his hearers to this subject, as to one of the most awful interest.

2. וַיִּתְקַח . And the muttering, or murmuring, i. e. of His voice, קלו, or His thunder. So Milton, speaking of the fall of man, “Skies lowered, and muttering thunder,” &c. Arab. هَجَا , maledixit, vituperavit, &c. Syr. ܟܝܢܐ , gemitus, clamor. Isa. viii. 19; xxxi. 4, &c.

3. וַיִּשְׁרַח . He letteth it loose: r. שָׁרַח, or מָחַ. Chald. Syr. solvit quod ligatum fuit. Both used very much like the Arabic حَلَّ . Fully וַיִּשְׁרַח ; but, by Gram. Art. 73, וַיִּשְׁרַח . Rosenmüller supposes it to be the Pihel of וַיִּשְׁרַח , which ill suits the passage. Ib. עַל-צַנְפוֹת . Lit. On the wings, &c. i. e. the skirts, or extremities, of the earth. So Matt. xxiv. 27, η $\acute{\alpha}\sigma\tau\epsilon\alpha\tau\eta$ $\acute{\epsilon}\xi\acute{\iota}\sigma\chi\epsilon\tau\alpha\iota$ $\acute{\alpha}\pi\theta$ $\acute{\alpha}\nu\alpha\tau\omicron\lambda\omega\acute{\nu}$, $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\tau\alpha\iota\acute{\nu}\epsilon\tau\alpha\iota$ $\acute{\epsilon}\omega\varsigma$ $\acute{\omicron}\sigma\mu\acute{\omega}\nu$. The letting loose, mentioned here, is in reference to the figure introduced at vr. 32, last chapter.

4. וְלֹא יִתְקַבֵּב . Nor doth any trace them, i. e. the lightning and thunder. See vr. 3, עֲקֵב , vestigium. Arab. عَقَبَ , pressit vestigia, ponè à calce venit. Syr. ܟܝܢܐ , inquisivit, investigavit. Comp. Ps. lxxvii. 20. Ib. כִּי-יִשְׁמַע . When, or though, His voice becomes, or is, heard. See Gram. Art. 157, 19. Elihu seems here to say, Great and terrific as this exhibition of God’s power is, still the progress of these His ministers cannot be followed by mortal eye. The sound may indeed be heard, as our Lord says of the wind, but none can ascertain whence it cometh, or whither it goeth (John, iii. 8). Comp. Ps. xix. 4.

5. נִדְּלָאוֹת. Lit. Wonderful things, but here used adverbially. So Ps. xlv. 5. וְרוֹרְךָ נִדְּלָאוֹת יִמְרָנֶךָ. And thy right hand shall teach, or exhibit, thee fearfully, i. e. proclaim by its deeds that thou art tremendous. Ib. וְלֹא נָדַע. And we know not, i. e. we cannot comprehend them.

6. הָיָא—אֶרֶץ. Fall thou on earth: form Heb. נָלָה, or Chald. imp. Arab. هَوِيَ, decidit, delapsus fuit; pec. ex alto, aut præceps. it. appetiit. Hence, perhaps, הָרָה, or הָרָה, was, existed, i. e. fell out, happened. Hence too هَاءُ, fem. هَائِي, da, cede, &c. which are not unlike the word in question. Rosenm. “Esto in terra,” which is stiff and unidiomatical. Comp. Ps. cxlvii. 16. Ib. וְנִשְׂטָם וְגו'. Lit. And body of rain, i. e. heavy, and plentiful rain. Syr. رَدْمًا corpus. Arab. جَشْمٌ, gravitas, ponderis; pinguedo, &c. i. e. the rain producing fertility. The following must necessarily signify the stormy rains. I have therefore put drenching for נִשְׂטָם, which seems to be its true force.

7. בְּיַדְּ-בְּלִ-אֲדָם. For the advantage, more generally, the sake, of all men. יַחְהִימוּ. He sealth, i. e. by His will appoints, and by His power ratifies, this wonderful state of things. In Oriental acceptation, seals the precept (Firmān), vv. 32, 33, above. On this word too, see ch. xxxiii. 16. The various uses of the term יָד may be seen in the concordances and dictionaries. I have chosen that which seems to suit the passage best. It is obvious that power, as evinced by the hand, occasionally presents the sense intended to be conveyed by the word: thence liberality, space, part, portion, help, and the like. The same is precisely the case in the Arabic, and to a degree in the Persic; as may be seen in Castell, Golius, &c. So the author of the Soorah, after Jauhari, generally, تَوَانَأِي وِدَسْتَرِس, power and assistance. And Jauhari, الْيَدُ النِّعْمَةُ وَالْإِحْسَانُ, the hand, is taken to signify, favour, and the shewing of kindness. For the good or advantage then, of all men, has appeared to me to be the intention of the writer here; which seems to be confirmed by what follows. לְדַעַת. For the knowledge or information of, &c. כָּל-אֲנָשִׁי מְעַשְׂהוּ. All mortal men of His work, i. e. These operations are so great, regular, and in every respect wonderful, that men, the work of His hands, cannot but see in them the existence, power, goodness, &c. of a great and inscrutable Creator: a sentiment constantly in the mouths of the Eastern moralists. Saadi says :

ابر و باد و مه و خورشید و فلک در کارند
تا تو نانی بکف آری و بغفلت نخوری
همه از بهر تو سر گشته و فرمان بردار
شرط انصاف نباشد که تو فرمان نبری

The cloud, the wind, the moon, the sun, and heavens, are in action,

That thou mayest have bread, but not eat it in idleness.

All, FOR THY SAKE, are revolving, and UNDER COMMAND (lit. bearing the Firmān).

It were no condition of justice, that thou bear no command.

And again :

برگ درختان سبز در نظر هوشیار هر ورقی دفترست معرفت گردگار

The green leaves of the trees in the eye of the intelligent,— Every single leaf—is a book of knowledge (evincing) a Creator.

Another poet :

آن یار که غیر او مرا یاری نیست
در گلشن وصل او مرا خاری نیست
گر کنه حقیقتش خفائی دارد
در هستی ذات او خفا باری نیست

That friend,—besides whom I have none,—

In the rose-bed of His enjoyment I find no thorn,—

If, indeed, His person be concealed,

In the being resulting from His essence, a Creator is manifest.

To which innumerable passages to the same effect might be added. See also Ps. vii. xix. where the revealed will of God is recommended from the consideration of God's power as seen in creation. Indeed, this always has been, and always will be, a favourite and powerful argument in the mouth of every considerate person.

8. וַיִּבְרָא וְגו'. So it entereth, &c. Elihu now directs his discourse to the orderly character even of the wild beasts, the occurrence of storms, cold, &c. all as effects of God's power and wisdom.

9. מִן־הַחֶדֶר וְגו'. From the chamber or quarter, supp. הַמִּין, of the south, or Teman. See ch. ix. 9. From the occurrence of עֵשׂ, בְּסִיל, וְכִימָה, as names of certain constellations in that place, some such portion of the heavens is probably meant here; and also, from the occurrence of מְזָרִים here, perhaps meaning the same things as מְזָרוֹת, ch. xxxviii. 32 below, and מְזָלוֹת, 2 Kings, xxiii. 5: in connexion with which we there have: וְכָל־זָבָאֵי הַשָּׁמַיִם: וְהַחַר, וְהַיָּרֵחַ, וְהַשֶּׁמֶשׁ, Baal, sun, moon, and all the host of heaven; it is extremely probable that this word denotes either a star or a constellation. From its occurring immediately after the mention of the moon here, one would suppose it to be a general name for the planets; and, as some of these, viz. Jupiter, Saturn, &c. have attendant moons, this might suffice to account for its being in connexion with עֵשׂ, &c. in ch. ix. 9 above. Whether, therefore, we derive the word from חָדַר, cinxit, חֶדֶר, a crown, intimating the circumscribed boundaries of such constellations; or from חָדַר, Arab. نَزَلَ, descendit, whence we have the astronomical Arabic term مَنَزَلٌ, signifying a station, or house, applied to the signs of the Zodiac, &c. we get no further than a name suitable to a constellation generally. The attempts of Michaelis and others to ascertain what precise star, &c. is meant, may be seen in Rosenmüller; where, if I am not very greatly mistaken, it will also be seen that these attempts are vain. This is perhaps certain, viz. that the first of these terms, חֶדֶר, if applied to the heavens, must rather mean constellation, than star; and also, that from a comparison of this place with ch. ix. 9; Isa. xxi. 1; Zech. ix. 14; a southern constellation must be meant. Again, by the term קָרָה cold, occurring with מְזָרִים—considering too, the opposition here apparently intended—a northern constellation was likewise intended. As if Elihu should say, It is by God's appointment, that from certain quarters of the heavens, both the storm and the cold, usually come. See Ps. cxlvii. 17.

10. מִנְשָׁמַת וְגו'. From the breath, &c. As frost rarely takes place with a strong wind, I suspect that what Elihu here means is, that under the gentle breathings, as it were of the gale, which are regulated by God, the frost takes place; opposing this term לְשֹׁמֵת, to the סוּפָה preceding; and intimating that, in either case, it is the work of God, not of chance. Ib. יָתֵן. One gives, i. e. is given, impers. Ib. רָחֵב. Breadth, extent, or, as we say, sheet of water. Ib. בְּמִיָּקָה. Lit. In arctationem, see ch. xxxvi. 16, i. e. so as to appear bound and laid under restraint. Ps. cxlvii. 18.

11. אֲף־בְּרִי. Lit. Moreover for irrigation, r. רָרָה, r. רִי, contr. for רָרִי. Gram. Art. 73. Syr. ܐܦܝܢܝܐ, inebriavit. Arab. رَوِيَ, potavit, explevit potu. Ib. יִצְרֵיחַ. One stretcheth out. Arab. طَرَحَ, longè removit, construed with ב, as in this place; ii. conj. طَرَحَ, longè protendit ædificium: conj. iv. semet projecit. Winer (Lexic. Sim.) tells us, that this interpretation is “incito parallelismo ;” and directs us to Umbreitius for the proof. And his view Rosenmüller takes, who makes בְּרִי a derivative of בְּרָה, and eogn. with בָּרַר, signifying serenitas. But, Is either of these words ever used in any such sense either in the Hebrew, or in any one of its dialects? not to insist on the want of simplicity and of idiom in the expression “serenitas amovet nubes,” which he gives as a literal translation here. Besides, it is erroneous to suppose, that each member of a parallel must invariably say the same thing. In many cases they are directly opposed the one to the other; in many, explanatory; in others, corroborative; and so on. In this case, there appears to be a parallelism even in the subject; the cloud, for example, of one description is made to disperse the rain; of another, the lightning. If we recur to בְּנִשְׁמַת־אֵל, vr. 10, supposing the same construction as in the last verse continued, we shall have יִצְרֵיחַ, some one, impers. stretches out, i. e. passively as before, it is stretched out; or, as some think, is precipitated, in, or for, watering. And, in like manner, the next member supplying ב, to אֲרִיזוֹ. The whole will then run thus: By the breath of God . . . the thick cloud is stretched forth for irrigation: the spreading cloud for his lightning.

12. וְהוּא. So He, i. e. God, מִתְהַפֵּף, becometh turning over, upside down, &c. מְסֻבּוֹת, revolutions, evolutions, &c. i. e. changing, and varying, the positions and offices of these His ministers, בְּתַחֲבוּלֵהֶיוּ, by, or according to, His counsels. מִתְהַפֵּפֵת is used in a similar sense in Gen. iii. 24; תִּקְוֶתוֹ, Ps. xix. 7; סוּבֵב in Eccl. i. 6. Ib. יִצְוֶה. He commandeth them, alluding, as before, to ch. xxxvi. 32. This brings to my mind another passage of Shakespeare, which speaks of an angel descending from heaven “to turn and wind a fiery Pegasus:” which is not unlike the imagery here employed by Elihu. Ib. אֶרְצָה. Lit. Earthwards, to, or towards, the earth: which shews that this word ought to be construed with אֲנִי preceding; and, that this place presents one of those instances of transposition so often noticed in this book.

13. אֶם-לְשִׁבְטֹ. Whether for tribe, i. e. a single clan, אוֹ אֶם-לְאֶרְצוֹ, or whether for its land, i. e. whole country: אֶם-לְחַסְדֹ. Surely for mercy, favour, וַיִּצְאֶהוּ, He causes it to be found, had; or, adopting the sense of مَقَّي, Arab. He causeth it, i. e. His whole system of ministration for one and for all, thus to go forth. The manifest difference between חֶסֶד and the preceding terms, viz. שֶׁבֶט, and אֶרֶץ, makes it absolutely necessary to consider the intention as different; and the sense of אֶם, different in the last, from the two former cases.

Elihu here concludes his argument generally; the drift of which is to shew, that God so regulates every thing in the natural world by his appointments, that, from the terrors of the lightning and thunder, down to the gentler effusions of the genial rain-drops, nothing can possibly happen contrary to His will: and the conclusion averred, rather than affirmed, is, that Job's plagues must have been sent by God, in consequence of some grievous wickedness in the sufferer. However, therefore, the flights of Elihu might exceed those of Job's other friends—which they certainly do in extent and magnificence—the conclusion finally arrived at is the same; which is, to condemn Job as guilty both of ignorance and sin, and particularly as to the line he had taken in discussing this question.

14. We have now a short peroration, recapitulating a few of the last considerations, which Elihu seems to have thought were of a very striking and convincing kind.

15. בַּשּׁוֹם וְגוֹ. Lit. In God's placing upon them, i. e. His mind (לְבוֹ) and hence, perhaps, His command. Comp. vr. 12, with Gen. xlvii. 26, וַיִּשָּׂם . . . לְהִזְקֶךָ . . . עַל וְגוֹ, &c. Exod. i. 11; v. 14; Deut. vii. 15; Judg. ix. 24, &c. Ib. וַיְהוּפִיעַ, snpp. ב. וַיְהוּפִיעַ from the preceding בְּשׁוֹם, and in causing the cloud to pour down the lightning, i. e. Knowest thou when this is done? Are thy powers equal to the task of ascertaining this? On this verb, see ch. x. 3. Light is not meant in this place, but lightning; because a cloud cannot be said, in any way, to supply light, while it naturally does the lightning. And, again, because the command alluded to here seems analogous to the לְשֶׁרֶהוּ of vr. 3, where אִירֵי must mean His lightning.

16. עַל מַחְלְשֵׁי גִבּוֹ. The poisings of the thick cloud? i. e. Knowest thou how their equilibrium is maintained? “Hujus extera indagare, nec interest hominum, nec capit humane conjectura mentis . . . Furor est, mensuram ejus animo quosdam agitasse.”—Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. ii. 1. And again, “Ita mutuo complexu diversitatis effici nexum, et levia ponderibus inhiberi, quo minus evolent: contraque gravia, ne ruant, suspendi, levibus in sublime tendentibus. Sic pari in diversa nisu, in suo quæque consistere, irrequieto mundi ipsius constricta circuitu: quo semper in se currente, imam atque mediam in toto esse terram, eandemque universi Cardine stare pendentem, librantem per quæ pendeat,” &c. Ib. lib. ii. 5. מִכְלֵלֹת תְּמִיּוֹת הַדְּעִיּוֹת. Miracles (properly so called) of, or with, the complete in knowledge, i. e. Knowest thou these things, confessed by the most learned to be perfectly miraculous? We have תְּמִיּוֹת הַדְּעִיּוֹת in ch. xxxvi. 4; and there it manifestly signifies, complete (in) knowledge, i. e. as the context requires, something which shall be recognised as true at first hearing. Here תְּמִיּוֹת הַדְּעִיּוֹת might mean A person perfect in the sciences; for it is certain such existed very early in and about Babylon. “With regard to their uses” (i. e. of meteors), “those of the most magnificent and tremendous kind seem to be destined to preserve the balance of the electric fluid in the atmosphere, the want of which would be productive of the most fatal effects to the world in general. The effects of the inferior ones are more confined, and are of use only to particular districts, scarcely ever extending their influence over a whole country. . . . It is, however, surprising to observe how equally these act over the whole of a very large tract of land; so that, though there is never precisely the same weather in two places twenty miles distant from one another, yet vegetation goes on, without any perceptible difference, in the one as well as the other.”—Encyclop. Britan. Art. Meteorology.

17. אִשֶׁר תְּבָרִיךְ וְגִבּוֹ. Lit. Whose garments are warm by (some one's, i. e. God's) causing (the) land to rest from the south? i. e. no tempest blowing from that quarter. See vr. 9. In other words, Because thou hast knowledge enough to perceive that when the tempest from the south ceaseth, thy clothes will supply thee with warmth; Canst thou also tell When these other phenomena shall take place, and Why?

The comparison seems intended to put Job to shame, and to make his pretensions to any thing like knowledge, on the subject about which he was speaking, appear truly contemptible. So in Luke xii. 55, where we have, καὶ ὅταν νότον πνέοντα (ἰδοῦτε) λέγετε· ὅτι καύσων ἔσται· καὶ γίνεται. Every one seems to have known, that when a gentle south-wind blew, there would be heat; and, consequently, that a person clothed as he would otherwise be, would feel uncomfortably warm. This, it appears to me, Elihu applies to Job, and then ironically asks him, How much farther his knowledge on these subjects reaches? Our Lord, too, uses an argument nearly allied to this in the place just cited, for the purpose of convincing the Jews of their utter blindness and ignorance. Rosenmüller, therefore, and others very erroneously repeat the interrogation here, by supplying קְהָרָעַל from the beginning of vr. 16. “Num scis,” adds Rosenmüller, “hujus rei causam, cur ita vestes tuæ tibi caleant?” &c. Surely it could require but little philosophy to know, why one’s clothes became uncomfortably warm, when an oppressive and sultry wind succeeded to a violent cold one, such as tempestuous winds often are.

18. לְשָׁחֵקִים. The thin clouds. Jauhari, مَسَاحِيْفُ السَّمَاءِ, إِلْتَطَعُ الرِّقَاقَ مِنَ الْعَبِيمِ, i. e. the thin slender portions of the rainy cloud. Ib. קְהָרָעַל. Hard; however thin and small, yet unyielding as it respects the offices for which they are intended, בְּרָאִי, as, or like as, a fused mirror. In Exod. xxxviii. 8, we have בְּרָאִת, signifying mirrors of this sort apparently; and that they were metallic, the place is sufficient to shew, for they were converted into other metallic utensils. For the sense intended here, see ch. xxvi. 8. I think it is undeniable that the verb רָקַע signifies confirming, making strong, &c., as the ancient translators took it; and hence the term firmament, given in our own Auth. Vers. for רָקִיעַ. In this place, therefore, it is in sense connected with the קְהָרָעַל following. I have, therefore, so translated the passage as to point this out. It is curious to remark, that some modern writers have imagined the electric fluid, on the extreme boundaries of our atmosphere, to form a complete and powerful barrier against the ascent of this fluid, as emitted from the earth to the sun, whether in fire-balls or otherwise.—Encyclop. Britan. Art. Meteorology, near the end.

19. לֹא נִעְרָף. We cannot oppose, cannot offer opposi- tion of equal weight or value. See ch. xxxii. 14; xxviii. 17, 19. Ib. חֹשֶׁךְ, darkness, i. e. want of light, or knowledge. Observe, in the preceding בְּהַנְּסִיחַת, the accent is drawn back, and we have an apocopation. Gram. Art. 233, 3. As if the writer should say, So teach us that we may then say of Him that which is suitable and right.

20. הֲיִסְפָּרֶלּוּ. Lit. Should it be told Him, when I speak, i. e. Need this be done? אִם-יִסְפָּר, or, if any have said, בִּי יִבְלָע, that some one should be swallowed up, i. e. overcome and destroyed? This construction presenting הֲ, and אִם, in the correlative members of sentences, is frequent in the Arabic. See Gram. Art. 179, 3. And so in the Heb. Gen. xxvii. 21, &c. as already noticed. Elihu seems to say, God has both wisdom and power sufficient to meet all the necessities of His situation as supreme governor of the world, and needs not, as man does, either to be informed on the one hand, or assisted on the other.

21. וְעַתָּה רְאוּ. And now they (men) look not on the light, i. e. How can men, ignorant as they are, conceive of overcoming God by mere talk, when in fact they cannot so much as face His sun-beams with open eyes? רָאָה אֵינָם, construed in this sense with ב, for the most part, Gen. xxi. 16, &c.; but often without it, as Prov. xxiii. 31. Ib. בָּהִיר הוֹאֵה רְעָם. When it breaketh through the clouds. This first word is usually taken as belonging to the root בָּהַר, which I think is wrong; both on account of the construction in this and the following member. I take the root to be ^והוֹר, whence ^והָר, fracta, vel luxata corrui structura, pars aggeris; construed occasionally with ב. It. prostravit. Cogn. ^והִיַר, diruit aggeris partem, &c. If then we take הִיַר, as a verbal noun, of the form of ^והִיַר, or ^והִיַר, having this sense, and prefix ב (Gram. Art. 174, 6), we shall have, in breaking down, &c. as a mound, i. e. in its breaking, &c. i. e. the light's so forcing itself through the surrounding clouds, בְּפִצְחֵהֶם. This seems to be confirmed by the following וְרִיחַ, or when the wind passeth, and cleaveth them, i. e. cleaveth them away, laying the sun open to view, particularly as ^ושִׁיר also means a certain wind. If, however, we take בָּהִיר to signify (v. בָּהַר) shining, the passage will mean, they cannot look on the light (when) shining on the clouds, which is not true. Men can view the light when transferred to the clouds. Rosenmüller, to get rid of this, has made in nubibus to signify in æthere; and then refers us to vr. 18, the inapplicability of which every one must see.

22. מִצְפּוֹן רָחֵב וְגוֹ. From the north (indeed) cometh gold, i. e. as I understand it, from a great, wise, flourishing, and distant country, the most precious of metals may indeed be brought; and this the wise of this world may idolise and adore, as the most splendid and glorious of things. The case, however, is different with God: His majesty is at once sublime, terrific, active, producing in the heavens and on the earth results the most astonishing, inscrutable; and these fraught with goodness and mercy. Babylon certainly lay northward of the place in which Job resided, a city which, from its immense treasures of gold, got the title of The Golden City. Comp. Isa. xiv. 4, with the Persæ of Æschylus, line 53. See also Rev. ch. xviii. 12, &c.; Herodot. lib. i. clxxxiii.; Diodorus Sicul. lib. ii. ix.; Vitrunga ad Jes. ch. xlv. 1. Whether this gold, &c. was obtained from a country still farther north, it is impossible perhaps now to say. The Jews, however, have an adage, “Qui vult dives fieri, in Aquilonem.” See Castell under מִצְפּוֹן. I am inclined to think, therefore, that this passage ought to be taken literally, and as explained above. Strabo, indeed, tells us, that among the Massagetæ gold was gotten in great abundance: “Ἄργυρος δ’ οὐ γίνεται παρ’ αὐτοῖς (Μασσαγέταις), σιδήρος δ’ ἐνλίγος· χαλκὸς δὲ, καὶ χρυσὸς ἀφ’ ἰσσοῦς (lib. xi.): “Argentum apud eos non nascitur, neque ferri multum; æris et auri abunde.”—Rosenmüller has “aureus splendor.” But I know of no such phraseology occurring either in the Bible, or any other Oriental book. Besides, I must deprecate the principle which runs out into the figures of speech in this way. According to Pliny, moreover, as cited by Rosenmüller, gold was found in the Gordiæan mountains (Hist. Nat. vi. 12 (11); and also among the Scythians (as above), lib. xxxiii. 21 (4). The passage cited from Schultens will by no means prove, that the shining of gold is said to be such by the Arabs, as to take away the sight. The phrase تَذْهَبُ بِالْبَصَارِ (يَذْهَبُ بِالْبَصَارِ), Kor. c. 24), means, indeed, takes away the sight. The verb here, however, has no connexion whatever with this notion of gold, glittering, or any thing of the sort; and it is wonderful how Schultens, and after him others, could have so far imposed upon themselves as to have thought it had. Nor does the term מִצְפּוֹן, as applied to oil in Zech. iv. 12, refer to the brilliancy or splendour of the oil, but to its purity: gold being one of the finest metals. Nor does Isa. xiv. 13, or Zech. vi. 8, tend to shew, in the least degree, that light and splendour come from the north rather than from any other quarter of the heavens. It is truly astonishing how any one should have supposed this from places such as these; unless, indeed, he had some favourite opinion to recommend, at all events. “Sed multo elegantior,” says Rosemüller, “prodibit sententia, si חָדָשׁ h. l. significatu splendoris, &c. capiamus.” My answer is, The interpreter who, on principle, determines to find nothing but what he may consider as elegant in any author, ought surely to be proscribed. Truth is every thing in inquiries such as this; which, however, does not make it necessary that elegance be lost sight of, when translating a really elegant writer.

23. לֹא יִדְבַק אֲנִי לֵאלֹהֵי אֲדָמָה. We cannot discover Him, i. e. effectually, and to perfection, so as to be able to determine His duties, or attributes. Ib. לֹא יִדְבַק אֲנִי לֵאלֹהֵי אֲדָמָה. I prefer reading לֹא יִדְבַק אֲנִי לֵאלֹהֵי אֲדָמָה. He is not to be, or cannot be, answered. See Prov. xxi. 13. The question here is not about God’s inflicting chastisement or not, as the term יִדְבַק would intimate; nor can it be inferred from the attributes here mentioned, that God will not punish; rather the contrary: and to this the drift of Elihu’s reasoning generally adds weight. Nor again, has it been averred by either of the disputants, that God would not, in one way or other, afford answers to his rational creatures. His greatness, considered in the abstract, would not exempt Him from this; nor did it, in fact, when Rebekah and others inquired of Him in the earliest times; nor here, as the next chapter shews. But, that He should not be answered—as Job seemed desirous to do—is the drift of every objector to his pleas: and with this the greatness and fearful majesty, just adverted to, agree well, as also does the caution contained in the following verse.

24. לֹא יִרְאֶה קָל וָגֹי. He looks not upon (קָל) any of, &c. See vr. 21, above. The Hebrews have no word equivalent to our any: when it is necessary to express such idea, they generally use the word קָל, the whole, i. e. taken distributively. See Esth. ix. 21, 27, &c.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

1. מִן הַסְּעָרָה. Out of the whirlwind. If God is described as surrounded with clouds and tempests, ch. xxxvi. 29; xxxvii.; Ps. xviii. 12, &c.; xxix. 3; civ. 2, &c.; we need not wonder at His speaking out of these. A similar revelation was made to Elijah. See 1 Kings, xix. 11, &c. The LXX. have translated מִן here by διὰ, as if it was by means of the tempest that God spoke. Comp. Exod. xix. 16–19; Ezek. i. 24, 25; Rev. i. 7, &c.; in all which cases we have distinct revelations made, and the very words of these are given. In one instance the whole camp of Israel both witnessed the sight, and heard the words. Let it not be imagined, therefore, in these cases, that the hearers were left, as among the heathen, to make out indistinct communications as well as they could,—the favourite method of viewing these questions now by the learned of Germany. Comp. also Acts, ix. 3, 4, 7; xxii. 6; xxvi. 13, &c. It ought to be remembered, too, that to make the requirements of religion binding, they must be miraculously revealed; and, in such a manner as at once to be worthy of God, and indisputable with man. See my Sermons and Dissertations passim. The revelation we have here, therefore, is not only perfectly of a piece with those elsewhere described in Holy Writ; but, generally speaking, such as was absolutely necessary to give a paramount authority to the whole. See the Introduction (pp. 13, 36, &c.) on the first two chapters of this book.

2. בְּמִלִּין וּגְוֹ. With words, &c. i. e. assertions having no foundation in knowledge.

3. כְּגִבּוֹר. Like a stout man, or man of consideration. So Shakespeare, “He was a MAN, take him for all in all,” &c. i. e. an eminent man. Ib. וְאֶשְׁתַּלֵּךְ. Lit. And I will beg of thee, i. e. suppose thyself to be a person of note, me to be an inferior, in the situation of one begging for information. Although, therefore, God speaks out of the storm, it is in the accents of condescension. So in the case of Elijah, just alluded to: it was a still and small voice, distinct both from the terrific display of the fire (lightning), and of the mighty wind.

4. בְּיִסּוּדֵי וּגְוֹ. Lit. In my founding, &c. Speaking of the great work of creation, as men do of an ordinary edifice. Ib. בְּיָנָה, taken adverbially, clearly, distinctly. כֵּן here, as in former places, putting the case, supposing that thou knowest this; which is the primitive acceptation of our if, Sax. gif, give, grant.

5. קָיָוִינִי. Its breadths, i. e. measures, as the following member seems to determine, i. q. קָיָוִינִי, ch. xi. 9. Arab. مَدَّ, extendit, &c. Ib. יָדַעְתָּהּ. For thou knowest, i. e. I take this for granted. The “Si scias” of Rosenmüller, &c. gives an erroneous impression here. Ib. יָדַעְתָּהּ. A line. Allusion is perhaps here made to Gen. i. 9, where יָדַעְתָּהּ probably means, Let them be marked out with a line, i. e. circumscribed or bounded. See vr. 10.

6. מְדַבְּרֵי. Lit. Have been impressed, i. e. so as to have formed a sort of shoe, or socket. See Exod. xxxvi. 24, &c. مَطْبُوعٌ, impressum argillæ, similive rei sigillum, &c. Rosenmüller and others have made this an answer to Job's hanging the world upon nothing, ch. xxvi. 7; which, as far as I can see, Job never said: nor, indeed, any Eastern author ever yet thought of. Ib. מְדַבְּרֵי. Who laid. Comp. Gen. xxxi. 51. Ib. קַדְמֹנִית. Its corner, angle. Arab. قَمِي, miscuit, plicuit. قَمِي, or قَمِيَّة, pars extremitasve seculi, temporis,—ætatist. In Heb. usage,—of place: as if one should say, the extremities or joining of two walls, &c. as in the angular parts of fortifications, at which towers were usually constructed. See 2 Chron. xxvi. 9, 15; Zeph. i. 16. In Zech. iv. 7, we have shouting and rejoicing, in a similar manner, in laying this corner stone; and there it is styled מְדַבְּרֵי מְדַבְּרֵי, the principal, or head stone. Similar exultation is manifested on a similar occasion mentioned in Ps. cxviii. 22-25. Where Christ, as the Head of His Church, is manifestly meant. Comp. Matt. xxi. 42, and the other parallel places. In this place of Job, however—as men were not then in existence—we necessarily have the angels of God joining in one universal chorus with the morning stars. Whether the laying of this stone was meant to denote the completion, or the commencement, of the great work adverted to, it may be difficult to determine. In Ps. cxviii. and Zech. iv. the completion seems rather to be meant; and this, I think, is the case here. And, if so, the first and last hemistich of this verse will be opposed to each other; thus, Who first laid its foundations; or, at last, laid the top stone of its angle? Then follows the song of praise already alluded to. Now, if this short recital or summary of the work of creation be compared with Gen. i. the last act of praise noticed will have its corresponding part in Gen.

ii. 1-4, in which the first sabbatical appointment is mentioned. This universal shout of the angels, &c. was, then, the celebration of this appointment, and was but an echo to the blessing which God then pronounced on His works. Turn now again to Ps. cxviii. 24, 25, and consider, whether THE DAY (הַיּוֹם) there mentioned is not also intended to apply to the Sabbath day. Comp. also Ps. xcii. xev. with Heb. iv.; and see my Sermon on the Sabbath, second edit. p. 45, &c. The recurrence to particulars in vr. 8, &c. may be compared likewise to a similar recurrence in Gen. ii. 4, &c.; a mode of writing familiar to the Orientals, and it will, therefore, furnish no objection to the view here taken.

7. בְּרִנְיָהֶֽדָּר. Lit. In singing as one, i. e. with one accord. This is necessarily metaphorical, as in Milton's "Fairest of stars . . . praise Him in thy sphere." וַיִּרְיֵעוּ. And they shouted; a term frequently applied to the work of praise. See Ps. xev. 1, 2; Ezra, iii. 11, &c. בְּנֵי אֱלֹהִים. Sons of God. Rosenmüller and Gesenius compare this with בְּנֵי אֱלִים, sons of the mighty, occurring Ps. xxix. 1; lxxxix. 7. But this last more properly signifies sons of great men, i. e. princes. Nor does the context, in either place, supply any reason for applying it to the angels. The contrary is clearly the case here in Job. Comp. ch. i. 6; ii. 1.

I think therefore that we have an allusion here to the first Sabbath after the finishing of the creation, as recorded in Gen. ii. 1-4. The two verses, 5 and 6, seem to me to exhibit perfect parallels to each other. Thus, מִי שָׂם, "who appointed," &c. with "upon what," &c.; and consequently מִי יָרָה וְגו', with "who projected," &c. the other hemistichs also being parallel to one another. We may, in this case, read these last parallels thus: מִי יָרָה וְגו' מִי־נָטָה וְגו'. Who laid down the line upon it? or, Who projected its corner-stone? Now, from the passages in which נָטָה occurs, it is evident that the completing, finishing, or the like, of something is meant. See Isa. xlv. 13; xxviii. 17, &c.; and that, when joined with תִּהְיֶה, ib. xxxiv. 11, actual desolation is intended. In some places, as ib. vr. 17, a state of civilisation and prosperity seems to be intimated, because the lot of each family was to be measured out by line. Hence, the measuring of the temple, both in Ezekiel and the Revelation, seems to aver that the thing spoken of shall certainly be done. See Ezek. xlvii. 3; and comp. Isa. xviii. 2, 7; xxviii. 10, 13; Ps. xix. 5; where it appears that instruction of a religious nature is meant. See Rom. x. 18, on the bearing of the last. I am inclined to think, therefore, that we have something more than mere creation meant in this passage of Job. I believe civilisation, and that grounded on religion, is also intended. By קַיִסֵּן קַרְנֵי־אֶבֶן, corner-stone, it is evident the principal part of an edifice is meant. See the places in the concordance. In Zech. iv. 7, we have, as an equivalent to this, הָאֶבֶן הַרְאֵשִׁית, the stone, the head, i. e. the finishing, or principal, stone of the building. This is clearly predicated of the temple built by Zerubabel and his companions. In this case, therefore, respect is had to instruction, and that of a religious nature, just as it is in the application of the term קַרְנֵי by the Apostle in Rom. x. 18, noticed above. Now, to proceed one step farther, Christ is, by a metaphor, termed the Head Corner-stone, Ps. cxviii. 22; as the Apostle himself teaches us, Eph. ii. 20. Comp. Isa. xxviii. 16, with 1 Pet. ii. 6. And here, I think, the בֵּיבֶד בֵּיבֶד of Isaiah, identifies itself sufficiently well with the בֵּיבֶד of Job, vr. 4, l. c. Hence, I think, is derived the notion of Christ's being a stone, a rock, rock of ages, and the like. See Gen. xlix. 24; Dan. ii. 34, metaph. Zech. iii. 9; comp. Rev. iii. 1; iv. 5, &c. particularly the terms, בְּבִרְתָּהּ בְּבִרְתָּהּ, with Rev. ii. 17; the latter of which is evidently copied from the former, and seems intended to explain it. Comp. now Prov. viii. 27-29, with this place in Job; and again with Job, xxviii. 11, 12-27, where we have the work of creation intimately connected with the promulgation of true religion, and the manifestation of the Wisdom of God. This, I think, cannot, upon mature consideration, be avoided. See also the note on Job, v. 23. Compare now, Ps. xvi. 5, 11; xvii. 6, 7, with this place in Job, and with Heb. i. 6, and let it be asked, Is not the passage in Job the first to which allusion is made? The heavens are here described as rejoicing upon the close of creation; and, as it should seem from Gen. ii. 1, on the observance of the first Sabbath. On the work of redemption being foretold, and its completion promised here in the Psalms, and elsewhere, as Isa. xlix. 13; Rev. vii. 9-12; xi. 15-18; xv. 3-5, &c. a similar rejoicing in heaven is mentioned as taking place. My conclusion is, therefore, that this place of Job has particular respect to the establishment and permanency of true religion on earth, under the rule and governance of him, whom St. Paul, Heb. i. 5, terms the First-begotten; the person also particularly had in view, Prov. viii. 24, 25; Ps. cx. 3; Mic. v. 2, &c.

8. וְנִקְּדָהּ. So He fenced in, &c. This verse I take to be parenthetical. In that case, the apocope in the verb is obvious. Gram. Art. 233, 3. The term וְנִקְּדָהּ contains a metaphor taken from the large folding-doors of a city, which are usually set up for the purpose of stopping the progress of an invading enemy, and are hence supplied with bolts and bars. Ib. בְּנִדְחָהּ. Lit. In His extracting (it), as a midwife does a child from the womb. See Ps. xxii. 10; Mich. iv. 10.

Syr. عُد. Fudit, effudit. Arab. جَاخَ. Abrupt fluxus terræ partem. Hence, this notion being introduced, it is added, without the particle of similitude כִּי, בְּרִחָהּ. From the womb, &c. The “and He,” used here, must necessarily be referred to the וְיִי preceding in vr. 5.

9. בְּשֹׁמְרֵי וְהוֹ. When I appointed, &c. Comp. Gen. i. 2, where darkness is said to have rested on the face of the great deep.

10. וְנִשְׁפַּר וְהוֹ. And broke, &c. It should seem by the parallelism here, that this verb is not very different in sense from that which follows it, viz. וְנִשְׁפַּר; i. e. I appoint, place, give out, enounce, &c.: and hence may be supplied by נָתַן, or נָשַׂר. Now, we have in Jauhari under this root, and for its explanation, أَعْطَيْتُ الْمَرْأَةَ شِبْرَهَا أَي حَقَّ الْإِتِّكَاحِ: i. e. I gave to a woman her شِبْرٌ, i. e. the duty of marriage. He adds, شِبْرْتُ فُلَانًا مَالًا أَوْ سَبْعًا إِذَا أَعْطَيْتَهُ: i. e. I שִׁבַּרְתִּי to a certain person wealth, or a sword, when I gave it to him. It means, therefore, to deliver to, or give; and, joined with חַק, חָק, as in the first extract and our place in Job, to deliver the right, due, &c.: i. e. enounce as right and statutable, or, as right, and to be observed. Hence too the idea of buying, or selling, prevailing in the Hebrew usage of the term שִׁבַּר. Apportioning seems to be the general notion, as determining the just quantity, or price to be given in exchange for any thing,—from the primitive noun שִׁבַר, a span. The sense of breaking seems to belong rather to the cognate form in the Arabic, viz. شَقَّرَ, imminuit rei, scalpsit, &c. And from this we have שִׁבַּר, when applied to childbirth; as in שִׁבַר, latus vulvæ, &c. Compare this verse with Gen. i. 9.

11. וְנִשְׂרָהּ בְּנִשְׂרָהּ. Lit. He, some one, appoints against the pride or scelling, &c. Suppl. חָק. A statute, or limit. See ch. xiv. 13, except that the construction is here with ב . See Ps. lxxiii. 9, where against is manifestly intended by this construction. I have, therefore, taken this impersonal construction passively.

12. הִי־מִיָּמֶיךָ . Lit. Is it from thy days, i. e. in consideration of the antiquity of thy birth,—see ch. xv. 7, with the note,—and of thy marvellous great age, that these appointments may seem to be quite modern: or, we may take הִי־מִיָּמֶיךָ , as signifying thy days, in the sense of thy prosperity, power, good fortune, or the like. See ch. xxvii. 6, with the note; and Ps. cx. 3. Rosenmüller prefers “unquam,” i. e. Hast thou ever commanded? &c. Which has no point, and is unsuitable to the context. Schultens has præ diibus, &c.: by which he means, On account of thy days, or great age: which, on the view given above, will very well suit the rest of the context.

13. לִקְחֶנָּה . To take hold of, or possession of. That is, Hast thou so appointed the coming on of the dawn, and the stations of the day-break, as to enable thee to seize upon any distant portion of the earth, whenever it may suit thy purposes to do so; and then, to expel the wicked from it? Comp. Ps. xev. 4, 5. Ib. וְיִקְצְצוּן . And they be shaken off, or out of, &c. Chald. גָּזַר . Dejecit, de loco in locum transtulit. Arab. نَعَرَ . Restitit, peragravit regionem, huc illuc profectus fuit: i. e. Is it since thy days that all this might be effected? Rosenm. “Ut apprehenderet aurora,” &c. . . . “elegantior . . . imago!”

14. $\text{הִתְהַפְּקָה וְגוֹ'$. It, i. e. the earth, and its state, be changed, turned over, remoulded, as the clay of the seal is by impression. A passage similar to this is the following of Firdausi, Macan's Shah Nāma, vol. i. p. ۲۷:

بدین بود بنیاد سخاک شوم

جهان شد مر اورا چو بک مهره موم

With this (i. e. magic, &c.) was the beginning of Zohāk abominable. The world was to him as an impression of wax.—Ib. וְיִתְהַפְּקוּן . And they, i. e. men, set themselves up, for the purpose of prosecuting thy designs. This verb is cognate with סָדְדָה , set in order as an army; קָדְדָה , established; Arab. وَصَّبَ , وَصَبًا , &c.; all having the same, or nearly the same, sense. In the Heb., to present one's self, as ready to execute the commands of another, &c. See ch. i. 6; Prov. xxii. 29. Or, for hostile purposes, Ps. ii. 2, &c. Ib. $\text{בְּמַרְדּוֹ לְבַדָּשׁ}$. I read לְבוּשׁ here, as elliptical for הַצְּרִיּוֹן הַלְבוּשׁ, clothed with armour, &c. 1 Sam. xvii. 5. If we are to read לְבוּשׁ, clothing, then the passage may be rendered thus: And they, i. e. men, present themselves (changed, alluding to the הַתְּהַפְּחוּ preceding) as a garment. Comp. Ps. cii. 27. And it would mean, They present themselves changed in disposition, and renewed, as it were, for the contest in favour of Job, and to execute his commands. I prefer the former, as being more simple and obvious. So, in the Arabic, لِبَاسٌ, Lorica in genere, &c., as Golius gives. How commentators could have satisfied themselves here with supposing, that the morn- ing, &c. were made to stand up as a garment, or to pre- sent themselves as a royal garment, it is quite out of my power to say. One thing I may say, viz. garments, no matter how costly, can neither be said to present themselves nor to stand up. Besides, if irrational beings of this sort had been meant, one would have naturally expected to find the verb in the form הִתְנַצְּבוּ, not הִתְנַצְּבוּ, —see Gram. Art. 216, 7,—in the first member of this verse. The following verse too inti- mates the application of force, not unlike that had recourse to in war.

15. וַיִּפְנֵעַ. And it be withholden, withdrawn, &c. : i. e. the light, i. e. wealth, prosperity, of the wicked. All this requires the exertion of power, such as it has been shewn is implied in vr. 12 above; and such as is never ascribed to the mere action of light, by causing thieves and robbers, &c. to betake themselves to their hiding-places, as Rosen- müller will have it.

16. נִבְדְּדוּ. The labyrinths, mazes, of the sea. Com- mentators have generally supposed, that this verb had for its root בָּדַד, flevit; and thence, that the under-currents of the sea were meant. Schultens takes نَبَكَ as the root, and thence supposes that eminences, or hills, under the surface of the waters, are intended. I prefer taking the general sense of the cognate roots, viz. Arab. بَوَكَ, بَكَ, בִּד. Confusum fuit negotium conflavit, &c. If we read then, נִבְדְּדוּ (comp. Exod. xiv. 3), we shall have, confused things, or places, of the sea. Besides, the very Arabic verb which Schultens takes, viz. اِنْتَبَكَ, signifies implicuit se malo, as well as emi- nit. The following יִבְחַקֵּר. And in searching, &c., suits well with this sense: difficulties of this sort generally forming the objects of inquiry pursued by the learned and wise, such as Job is here, by the hypothesis, supposed to be. By הַיָּם here, the יָם הַקָּדוֹם of Gen. vii. 11, or great ocean, is apparently meant. Ib. הִתְהַלְכָהּ. Hast walked about. See ch. i. 7. Not unlike the sentiment expressed here is that of Homer, Odess. i. l. 52, respecting Atlas :

Ὅστας θαλάσσης
Πάσης βένθεα ᾔδεν.

“ Qui et maris Omnis profunditates novit. ”

17. שְׁעֵי מוֹתָהּ. The gates of death, &c. : i.e. the secret councils,—gates being usually places of judgment,—of that “country from whose bourn no traveller returns.” So also the next member, which seems to suit well with the view taken of the מְבַיְתָהּ preceding. Pliny, speaking of man’s industry in searching after the precious metals (Nat. Hist. lib. xxxiii. 1), also says, “Imus in viscera ejus, et in sede Manium opes quarimus,” &c. And ib., “Illa nos premunt, illa nos ad Inferos agunt, quæ occultavit atque demersit.” See notes on ch. iii. 8; xxx. 29; and xl. 25. A very beautiful description of a survey of the deep, through the clear waters of the northern seas, is given by Mr. Dewhurst (Nat. Hist. of the Whale, p. 25), from Sir Arthur de Capell Brook: “During the whole course of the tour I made,” says the author, “nothing appeared to me so extraordinary as the inmost recesses of the deep thus unveiled to the eye. . . . Now creeping along, we saw, far beneath, the rugged sides of a mountain rising towards our boat, the base of which perhaps was hidden some miles in the great depth below. . . . Now we . . . passed slowly over the submarine forests and meadows which appeared in the expanse below, inhabited, doubtless, by thousands of animals unknown to man.” See also Brackenbury’s dream in Shakespeare’s Richard III.

18. עַד־רִחְבֵי עוֹלָם. Lit. Usque ad latitudines terræ. The term רִחְבֵי עוֹלָם here seems to be synonymous with מְבַיְתָהּ in vr. 5, and the intention of the passage to be, Hast thou become by inquiry, and the exercise of thy own powers, so wise as to know all the things just mentioned (מְבַיְתָהּ), even to the exact extent of the several tracts of land in the world! It is of little consequence to the exegetical sense, whether we construe מְבַיְתָהּ with the first verb or the second. The first of these methods seems to suit both idioms best, on account of the עַד following. Many such transpositions, too, have been noticed already. See the passages cited from Pliny, ch. xxxvii. 16 above.

20. כִּי תִקְחֶנּוּ. That thou mightest take it (comp. vv. 12, 13, above): i. e. as before, in order to enable thee to execute thy several purposes, in the one case; and to put wickedness out of existence in the other. Referring in the one to בָּקָר above, and to רִשְׁעִים in the other. Commentators seem to have entirely misunderstood the scope of this verse.

23. הִקָּרַב. Battle: signifying rather drawing near to battle. Comp. Ps. cxxxv. 5-8, where the things here denied of Job are spoken of as the properties of Jehovah; which tempts one to believe that the Psalmist had this passage in his eye.

24. הַדְרֵךְ הַלֵּךְ. The way, or path, on which light is distributed: i. e. is so divided and apportioned as to fulfil the several offices assigned to it in the world: i. e. in affording the lights, shades, colours, &c. so agreeable and necessary to man in this state of things. Ib. יִפְּצֵהוּ הַדְרֵי. One, some one, &c., impersonally, disperses the deadly east wind, or סָמוּם, Samoom: i. e. so as to effect the other purposes of Omnipotence. Ch. xv. 2 above.

25. לְשִׁטְפוֹתַי. To the inundation; which seems here to mean the waterspout: for the passage speaks of a canal (הַתְּצִלָּה) as made, or cut out for this, in the upper regions. In the parallel, too, we have לְחִצֵּי. Lit. For the cutting of the thunder, which must mean the thunderbolt: i. e. in the first member we have a canal for the inundation, or waterspout; and, in the second, a way, path, דְרֵךְ, for the cutting of the thunders or the thunderbolt. Arab. حَزَّ. Secuit, &c. Cogn. حَزَّ. Transfodit. See ch. xxviii. 26, note.

26. לֹא אִישׁ. No human being exactly answers to the etymology here, and, I think, to the sense intended by the writer.

27. שְׁמֵהָ וּמְשֹׁנָהּ. Lit. Desolation, and desolate place: a repetition, signifying places the most unfrequented. Gram. Art. 223, 2. מִצֵּינָהּ וְנִשָּׂא. Lit. The place of egress of the grass: i. e. grass-land, or pasture. Comp. Gen. i. 12. This seems to be a very ancient mode of expression.

28. אִתְּלֵי־בִטְלֵי. Bottles of dew. Lit. Collections of dew. “Non malè,” says Castellus, “LXX. vertunt βώλους glebas Al, addit συσπράξ coagmentationes,” &c. But, as these are here spoken of as if produced by a mother, bottles, or vessels, would seem to be most appropriate.—Comp. נִבְלֵי, vr. 37 below.—Arab. أَجَلَّ. Continuit, detinuit, &c. Cogn. אָגַר. Collegit, &c. Arab. أَجَرَ. Obligavit os fractum, &c. Hence we have the compound זָבַח־טֵל (Ezra, i. 9), instead of זָבַח־חַיִּים , to avoid the recurring sound of ח . A sort of vessel used (as some have thought) in catching the blood of animals sacrificed in the temple. Now, in the Arabic, طَل signifies either milk or blood. طَل , moistening the earth, as with dew, &c. The general meaning of the word may therefore be, moisture-collector or catcher; whether this be of water, milk, blood, &c. The Syr. ܩܪܬܐ . Cista, Arab. قَرطَلَة , قَرطَالَة , and قَرطَال . Canistrum, sporta, and Greek, καταταλιον , or καταταλιον , i. e. $\text{καταταλιον ἑστῶς τὰ καταταλιον}$; a sort of fruit-basket ending in a point at its bottom, not unlike the pottles, perhaps, in which strawberries are sold in the London markets (see LXX.; Deut. xxvi.; 1 Kings, x.; Jer. v.; Thes. Steph. sub voce); as well as the Arab. قراطيد , promontories, so called, perhaps, on account of their shape resembling that of this vessel;— might all have been derived from this word. Some, indeed, have endeavoured to derive it from the Greek: but to this there is one fatal objection, viz. that language will not readily supply its component parts; while it is certain that many words, with the things they meant, were transferred from the east to the west, and particularly to the inhabitants of Greece, as their collections of foreign words will abundantly shew. On the use of the word טל , see ch. xxix. 19 above.

30. $\text{בְּאֵיזוֹ בַּיּוֹם}$. The ellipsis seems to be $\text{בְּאֵיזוֹ בַּיּוֹם}$. By which: i. e. as with a stone, &c. יִהְיֶה־בְּסֵתֶר . They become hidden, i. e. covered and concealed, as if a stone had been laid upon them. Ib. יִהְיֶה־לְבַדָּה . Become taken, i. e. as a captive in war, or otherwise. The Hithp. eamot, in this last instance, have a reflective sense; neither has it in any other, of its own right.

31. מִצְדַּבְּוֹתַיִם . The sweet influences of the Pleiades. Rosenmüller, with some others, translates מִצְדַּבְּוֹתַיִם by “vincula ;” “veluti,” says he, “transpositis literis, ut צִדְוֹן idem sit quod צִדָּה ligavit ;” and then cites the Talmudical usage of the word, the ὄσσειον of the LXX., and צִדְוֹן , catenus, of the Targumist. To which מִצְדַּבְּוֹתַיִם in the parallel seems to agree. My remark is, No reliance can be placed on the usage of the Talmud; it being as certain as it need be, that many Biblical words occurring in the Talmud, are used in a mistaken sense. This may be said of Rabbinical literature generally: which, it is much to be regretted, was not seen in the age of the Buxtorfs, Pococke, &c. If it had, the Old Testament would have now been much better understood than it is. In the next place, the LXX. have here $\Sigma\upsilon\eta\gamma\mu\alpha\varsigma$ $\delta\acute{\epsilon}$ $\delta\epsilon\sigma\mu\acute{\omicron}\nu$. They seem, therefore, to have taken מִצְדָּפוֹרִית , as if derived from צָדַע ; and $\delta\epsilon\sigma\mu\acute{\omicron}\nu$ as the translation of הִתְקַשְׁרָה . Aquila renders the place by η $\sigma\upsilon\nu\acute{\alpha}\phi\epsilon\iota\varsigma$ $\mu\acute{\eta}\tau\epsilon\iota\alpha$ $\pi\lambda\epsilon\iota\alpha\delta\omicron\varsigma$; Wilt thou join parts of the Pleiades? No reliance, therefore, can be placed on Rosenmüller's argument drawn from the LXX. That of the Targumist now only remains to be noticed; and against it may be brought both Jerome and the Syriac. When we consider, moreover, how little is known of the various readings of the Targum, very little stress can be laid on its single authority in such cases as this.

As to the parallelism, this rather consists in the opposition observable in the verbs הִתְקַשְׁרָה and הִתְפַּתְּחָה , and, therefore, need not be sought in other synonyms. I have on these accounts preferred the usual rendering. The reader is referred to ch. ix. 9 above for its illustration. As to הִתְקַשְׁרָה . Wilt thou bind—i. e. in covenant, so as to insure to thyself the advantages hence derivable—it should be borne in mind, that this verb is far from being synonymous with $\text{בָּדַד$, to bind us a captive, slave, &c. This signifies to bind to one's self, as in covenant, conspiracy, ornaments, &c. See 1 Sam. xxii. 8; Isa. xlix. 18, &c. To bind the sweet influences, then of this constellation to one's self, will mean, to have such power over these heavenly bodies as to render them subservient to one's own purposes; and, in this case, to command the rich produce of the earth (notes on ch. ix. 9), on which they were supposed to exercise great power.

Ib. אֲרוֹ-מוֹשְׁבֹתָ . Or the bands, &c. This term has usually been taken to mean the belts of Orion, as pictured on our celestial globes; but, as far as I can see, without any good reason for doing so. All we find said is, that, as مَسْبَكَة means compes, מוֹשְׁבֹתָ here must mean belts. But compes means a fetter used in binding a prisoner; a belt, the girdle in which a weapon is carried. Can any two things on earth be more vexatiously dissimilar? Some, indeed, take it otherwise, thus: "Num vincula, quibus Pleiades, vel Orionis stellæ junguntur, trahuntur, aut ligare aut solvere potes?" But, who ever heard of these constellations being so joined, or dragged along? Others take מוֹשְׁבֹתָ to signify the influences supposed to be exercised by this constellation in bringing on the winter season, and so binding up nature, as it were, in a state of sterility. Because, just as the Pleiades, by rising early in the spring, brought on the fruitful seasons; so Orion, by rising in the autumn, was said to bring on the winter. This application I believe to be the true one; but I contend, that מושכות rather means attractions, i. e. the hands or very influences supposed thus to affect sublunary things; and that תְּפַחֵם is used to ask the question, viz. Canst thou loose, untie, unbind, or render these ineffectual? From תִּפְּחֵךְ. Traxit, attraxit, allexit, &c. Arab. تَمَسَّ. Tenuit apprehensum; ararus fuit; أَمَسَّ, dominatus est; مَسَّ (much the nearest Arabic form to our word), "Qui, cum rem apprehenderit, illam dimittere non potest: ab eâ se expedire non potest:" which, according to my view, is the very notion presented in our text. If, then, this constellation really represents the person and character of Nimrod (see notes on ch. ix. 9), nothing can be more suitable to his tyrannic disposition than the description thus supposed to be given of him. All that the passage exegetically means is, therefore, Canst thou so affect the heavenly bodies of this or that description, as to secure to thyself the wealth of the earth on the one hand, or to remove far from thee the occasions of its barrenness, want, and the like, on the other? It is no objection that the Divine Being here makes use of language, perhaps not strictly and philosophically true, as to the influences of these stars; it is enough for Him to have uttered sentiments then generally considered as true, and this in terms by which their force and bearing could be clearly understood and appreciated. Of this sort, language used by men, and to be used in addressing them, must necessarily be. Let no one imagine, therefore, either that this is of a piece with heathen fable, or in any way intended to recommend it.

32. מְנַחֵם. The Plucts. See ch. xxxvii. 9. Ab. מְנַחֵם. And console Ayish, &c. See ch. ix. 9 above, where it is evident from the citation given from Jauhari, that this constellation was supposed to have its sons attending on it. מְנַחֵם, I read מְנַחֵם. Will thou console Ayish for her sons? i. e. on account of them. See ch. xlii. 11; Isa. xxii. 4; Ezek. xiv. 22; where the verb is construed with מְנַחֵם in this sense: comp. Jer. xxxi. 15. What the circumstance alluded to may be, it is perhaps impossible now to say: but, that allusion is made to some popular notion well known at that time, seems to me extremely probable. מְנַחֵם has usually been rendered, Will thou lead them? which I think must set every attempt at explanation perfectly at nought. For, who, it might be asked, are the "them" here mentioned? Does the term מְנַחֵם comprehend any such persons, or things?

Impossible. Again: How is עַל־בָּנֶיהָ made to signify “with her sons?” This is most lax. After all, some object of popular belief is evidently had in view, even in this case. Why not take the passage then at once, in its obvious sense, and confess our ignorance as to some parts of its application? Future inquiry may probably make all clear; and to that I therefore leave it. As to the vowels of this word, they were perhaps applied for the purpose of supplying the clumsy sense just alluded to; as it is the case in instances almost innumerable.

I will only add by way of conjecture here, that according to the Greeks and Latins, whose notions of astronomy must have come from the East, Arctus, ἄρκτος, the bear, was originally a daughter of Lyacon, and named Callisto; who, being pregnant by Jupiter, was changed into a bear by Juno, and was, with her son, finally translated to the heavens. Bootes, this son, was termed Arctophylax; while Arcturus, who is said to have been the father of Erigone, is the name of another star, situated in the tail of the great bear. Whether Callisto may have been said by the Chaldeans hence to have consoled her sons—taking this Arcturus for one of them—or whether some other such story as that of the Hyades bemoaning the fate of their brother Hyas, or that of the Pleiades weeping for their father Atlas, I leave it for others to determine. (See Ovid. Met. lib. ii. l. 381, &c.; Cicero de Nat. Deor. lib. ii. 42, 43.) I will only say, Some such generally current story seems to lie at the bottom of this phraseology.

33. הֲיָדָעָה וְגו'. Knowest thou the laws? &c. This, and the two following verses, put the question more particularly as to principle, and as to the results thence to be expected. הַחֲקוּיָה. Statutes, laws, &c. by which the heavens, and heavenly bodies, are regulated. הַשָּׂמִים. Canst appoint, declare to be the influence, dominion, or rule (מִשְׁטָרוֹ) of each, on the earth. Comp. Prov. vi. 7; Deut. xvi. 18; Gen. L. 18, 26. “Suffixum ad מִשְׁטָרוֹ,” says Rosenmüller, “est in singulari, etsi ad nomen duale שָׁמַיִם pertineat, undè מִשְׁטָרֵיהֶם, dicendum fueret.” But does מִשְׁטָרוֹ refer to the preceding שָׁמַיִם? Does it not rather refer to הַחֲקוּיָה, and to be taken distributively? Let the reader judge. Again: Does any such dual form as מִשְׁטָרֵיהֶם occur with a suffixed pronoun? I know of no such thing; and I think none is to be found in the Hebrew Bible. Whether dual or plural, the form would regularly be מִשְׁטָרֵיהֶם, according to the best of my knowledge. And last of all, Is שָׁמַיִם a dual form?

Who would have expected to find Dr. Rosenmüller writing in this manner? And, what is still worse, Dr. Winer referring us in his edition of Simonis to this exquisite note, as above all exception? Gesenius too, I find, refers מִי־נָשָׂא to מִי־נָשָׂא , which is clearly wrong; מִי־נָשָׂא being the preceding subject, מִי־נָשָׂא only a qualifying word given to this! See Gram. Art. 224, 4. That the planets exercise some influence on the earth, as the moon on the tides, is admitted by all who have studied natural philosophy. We need not suppose, therefore, that astrological influences were intended here.

36. מִי־נָשָׂא וְגו' . Who hath placed, &c. As the context, both preceding and following this verse, manifestly relates to the heavenly bodies, it would seem to involve a most unhappy bathos to interpret it as referring to any endowments bestowed upon man. Schultens refers it to the heavenly bodies; and this he does by having recourse to the Arabic طَاحَ , and طَاحَ , signifying to wander, make a random shot, &c.; and then refers this first member to the control which God lays upon what might otherwise seem a chance-shot of the lightning. My belief is, that Schultens is not far from the mark. The following cognates to this word seem to make for the same view. Arab. طَاحَ (r. طوح). Periit in terra, in exitiali fuit discrimine, cecidit: attonitus huc illuc erravit: huc illuc impulit: percussit eum fuste. Cogn. طَبِيعَ , id. ferè. طَاحَا , *expandit; pronum stravit hominem, طَاحَا, amplum umbraculum; طُحْبِيَّةٌ, pars nubis, nubecula. طَاحَا, obscura fuit. طَاحَ, densæ tenebræ. طَاحَا, nubes alta. طَاحَا, nubes exilis; طَاحَا, tenebrositas, alta nubes. طَاحَ, expandit. 4th conj. Projecit. طَاحَا, fregit, segregavit, perdidit, strepuit, turbavit. طَاحَا, sonus collisorum montium; nubes compacta. طَاحَا, tenebræ. Syr. ܥܢܝܢܐ . Illucit, fulguravit; ܥܢܝܢܐ, exagitatus est. From all which it should seem, that some such general idea as tempest was in the mind of the sacred writer. I would translate this member, therefore, Who hath placed wisdom in the tempest? taking the plural form in מִי־נָשָׂא , as intended to heighten the idea, and to express the great, or terrific, tempest; and the passage as meaning, *Who is He that so controls the contending elements, that they cannot but do

His will? Comp. ch. xxvi. 10; xxviii. 26; xxxvi. 32; xxxvii. 3-6; Ps. xviii. 8-17; xxix. 3-11; civ. 4, &c. The remaining member is, perhaps, to the same effect. לְפִנְיָ. To the thunder-storm. Chald. ܩܕܝܫܐ. Mixtio, perturbatio, inflammatio; ܩܕܝܫܐ, clavus. Syr. ܩܕܝܫܐ, id. Arab. سَكِي. Clavus, pec. typus chalybeus, quo signatur moneta. سَكَاكٌ, et سَكَاكَةٌ, aër pertingens ad caeli confinia, ipsumque caelum. سَاكِي, gravis molestusque fuit in petendo. Cogn. صَكَّة. Vehe- mentia meridiani æstus; r. صَكَ, percussit vehementius. صَكَ, arctavit, pressit. صَفَّ, sonuit. دُكُوٌ, ardens flagransque ignis. ابْنُ دُكَاةٍ. Aurora. دَكَاةٌ, fomes ignis; whence مُدَكٌ, iterum iterumque pluens nubes. شَاكِي, instructus armis, pec. acutis. شَكْوِي, querela, lis. شَكْوَةٌ, uter in quo lac vel aqua defertur. شَكَ, transfixit eum hastâ. شَكَّةٌ, arma, &c. Simonis gives ܩܕܝܫܐ, imago, and thence phænomenon caeleste; which strikes me as any thing but a sequitur: and still the passage would remain vague! If, however, one might gather some general idea from these cognate words, thunder-storm, or some such thing, should seem to be meant; and this would suit the place well. The whole verse would then run thus: Who hath placed wisdom in the tempest? or, who hath given intelligence to the thunder-storm? Now, as the terms ܩܕܝܫܐ, Isa. ii. 16; מִשְׁפָּטִית, Lev. xxvi. 1; Numb. xxxiii. 52; Ezek. viii. 12; Ps. lxxiii. 7; refer either to idolatry or its practices, it is worth the inquiry, whether they do not denote representations either of the heavenly bodies, heathen deities, heathen mysteries, or the like, in every case. Certainly the words pictures, imagery, seem to me to fall much below the mark. I cannot help thinking that ܩܕܝܫܐ, fulit, effulit, and thence ܩܕܝܫܐ, conflatile (Deut. ix. 2, &c.), are kindred terms: and hence Arab. نَسَكٌ. Dei cultui devotus, ac religiosus fuit, &c. Hence too, perhaps, the ܩܕܝܫܐ, (Molten Venus?) said to have been made by the men of Babylou, 2 Kings, xvii. 30. Comp. cogn. יִצֵק, זֶרֶק. Of the words given above, שַׁקּוֹת, UTER, &c., is perhaps the nearest in form and sound to the ܩܕܝܫܐ of Job, if we except שַׁקּוֹת, querela, lis, belonging to the same root. The root too seems not to be without the notion of agitation (which, indeed, prevails in most of the other cognate words), for שִׁתִּי signifies Aptavit pellem hædinam ad lac agitandum, butyri elicendi ergo. In the very next verse, too, we have נִבְּלִי שְׁמִיִּם put in the parallel with שִׁתִּי; which seems to be a continuation of the idea started here. See also vr. 38 above. I object to Rosenmüller's "Quis meteoris," or σανομένους: because, as these cannot be considered as agents, but only as spectacles, it must be incongruous to ascribe intelligence to them: besides, these form an equally incongruous parallel to the vagis jactibus preceding; and which, after all, involve an absurdity. For how can these be styled vagi jactus, when from the very first,—from their very creation,—this wisdom must have been supplied to them by Him who now speaks of them in the context? It strikes me therefore that, although Schulzens, and after him his followers, are not far from the mark in this place, their translation of it is sufficient to shew that they have not wholly succeeded.

37. נִבְּלִי. The vessels of heaven. This נִבְּלִי (which is also given as a name of a musical instrument, probably the νάβλα, nabla, navla, or nablium, of the Greeks and Latins) was a sort of jar, apparently, having a neck with a large belly or body, not unlike some of our stone jars. In these the rain or dew was supposed to be stored up, and then, as Providence thought proper, was poured down upon the earth.

Comp. vr. 38. יִשְׁפֹּבֵב. Lit. Causeth to flow. Arab. سَكَبَ. Effudit aquam, &c. This verb seems to have been applied to signify lying down, because perhaps then the system is considered as in a state of relaxation; in its proper sense, in such expressions as שִׁבְתֵּי זָרַע, Lev. xv. 16-18, &c.

38. בְּשִׁקָּה, as לִדְת, for יִלְדֵת, r. יִשֶׁק. Fuse, as metals: thence, becoming hard. לְמִיִּיקָה. Lit. Into a hardened thing. Part. Hoph. In ch. xxi. 33, the word יִלְדֵת was taken to signify stones, and particularly monumental memorials. That can hardly be the sense here: the hardening of the dust, mentioned in the preceding member, seems to require that clods be the sense here. The general sense, too, requires this; as it is on the clods, not on stones, that the falling rain can have any influence. It is highly probable, I think, that stone is only a secondary sense, and that hard, firm, concrete, compact, or the like, is the primitive meaning. We still have in the Arabic, مَرْجَبٌ, signifying stabilis, firmatus, firmus, &c.; and تَرْجِبٌ, making large, or great; and, in the cognate, אַרְתַּבֵּם, accumulata fuit res, et congesta. Such general sense, therefore, will apply to a clod just as well as it will to a stone; each presenting a substance in which the component parts have been consolidated so as to form a hard, compact, and gradually accumulated substance. So philosophers now use the term formation, applying it either to fossil or other substances. Ib. יִרְבְּקִי. Lit. Are made to adhere, stick together, as if glued. That is, Who can sum up these, and tell their amount, when the plentiful showers are afforded for the purpose of fertilising the earth, and at the seasons in which they are most wanted.

39. לְלִבֵּיא. For the she-lion. See Bochart. Hieroz. pt. I. lib. III. c. i. וְחַיִּיתָ. Et appetitum. Rosenm. Because, as he tells us, “eodem modo usurpari, quo haud raro נִבְּשׁ.” He then refers us to Ps. xxiv. 4; xxvii. 12; lxxviii. 18; for proof of this: in neither of which, however, the word in question occurs! Simonis refers us to ch. xxxiii. 20, and to this place, for the same sense; but in neither of these, certainly, does there appear any good reason for adopting it.

In the Arabic, حَي signifies familia, pars magnæ tribus, &c. See Castellus. And so it does in the Heb., Gen. i. 25; Ps. lxxviii. 31; lxxiv. 19, &c.: as the context manifestly requires.

41. לְעֹרָב. For the raven. Arab. عَرَاب, taken here generically for the whole species; and hence, in the last member, יִהְיוּ, in the plural, they wander: not the young immediately preceding (for they remain in their nests and cry, יִשְׁרְעוּ), but the old ones, whose business it is to look out, and to take the prey, when these are without food, בְּלִי-אֹכֶל. This passage is alluded to in Ps. cxlvii. 9.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1. עֵת לְדָרָה. The season of bringing forth, &c. That is, Art thou acquainted with the particular season when each of the mountain-goat species brings forth? Not, as Rosenmüller says, “ut illis parturientibus opem ferre,” &c. (for Who ever heard of men performing any such office?), but rather, one would think, that thou mayest boast of this knowledge; or, it may be, take its young for food. The preceding verse seems, too, to recommend this last. Ib. יַעֲלִי-סֹלֶעַ. Lit. Rock-climbers. See the Hieroz. pt. I. lib. III. c. xxiii. Rosenmüller gives us a note from Chrysostom, in which the following, תִּשְׁמֹר, ἐπιλαῶσα, is made to signify Const thou keep, or preserve, the animal mentioned from casting its young? Which is manifestly wrong; as תִּשְׁמֹר must here necessarily refer to עָרָה preceding, which must also be supplied before הָלַל in the last member. Comp. the next verse. The phraseology will then be Hebrew; nothing being more common than the notion of keeping, i. e. observing times, or seasons. See Jer. viii. 7, &c. Chrysostom, who knew nothing of Hebrew, might well be excused; but I do not see how Rosenmüller or Bochart can, in making such a mistake as this. Ib. הָלַל, r. חוּל, cogn. חָבַל. Binding as with a rope; hence, the binding pains of labour (ὠδῖνες), &c., and the verb itself applied to parturition. This is, perhaps, the proper method of separating this sense from the many others which this verb has. On the word אֲנִלִּית, see Hieroz. pt. i. lib. iii. c. xvii.

3. הִפְזֵלְהֶנָּה. Arab. فَذَحَ. "Rei compos est effectus." 4th conj. Prosper successu. Cogn. فَرَحَ. Latus fuit. 2d conj. Pullulavit, in propagines diffundi cepit planta. Hence, perhaps, we may see why verbs signifying cutting, or the like, are applied to denote the bringing forth of young: not because "fissâ et apertâ matrice excludunt," as Rosenmüller will have it after Schultens; but because the one may be said to be severed from the other, just as a branch is from the stock of a tree. Eth. ፈፈሰ: Ebullivit, emanavit, erupit, &c. Cogn. فَذَجَ. Fidit, pec. in duas partes. Syr. ذَنَى, id. Arab. أَبَدَجَ. Divisit, &c. So פָּר. Filius, r. פָּרָא, asciavit, &c. Ib. הִבְלִיָּהָם. Their pains. Some render it the cause of their pains, i. e. their young; which strikes me as a tautology: nor can I see why pains may not be said to be sent, or dismissed, just as fire, famine, &c. may. Ezek. v. 17, &c.

4. יִהְלִיבוּ. They feed. Arab. حَلَمَ. Pinguis fuit; حَالُومٌ, genus lactis acidi. Cogn. حَلَبٌ. Lac recens. From feeding, growing, &c., we have perhaps the notion of heaviness; thence of sleeping, dreaming, and so on. One would hardly suppose that in the very earliest times, men would reason with Aristotle, and tell us as some do, "Et quia porrò ex humoribus sive vaporibus crassis somnus et insomnia oriri solent (cf. Arist. de Som. et Vigil. c. 3), hinc notat somniavit," &c. בָּפֶר, i. q. פָּחַרָהּ, i. e. In the open air. Comp. Onkelos, Gen. xxiv. 31; Exod. xxi. 19; with the Heb. Arab. بَرَّ ager, campus.

5. פָּרָס. The onager. See ch. vi. 5; xi. 12; Hieroz. pt. i. lib. iii. ch. xvi. Ib. בַּזְקָרֹת. And the cords; ר. יסר. Castigavit. Hence, some render it discipline. I prefer taking the sense of the cognate root. בָּזַר. Binding. On עָרוּד, another name for the wild ass, see Hieroz. as above. Not unlike this is a passage in the Ikhwān Ossafā, p. v, edit. Calcutta. وتجى حيث ارادت في طلب مرعاها ومشاربها ومصالحها فتغرت منهم بعضها مثل حمير الوحش والغزلان والسباع والوحوش والطيور بعد ما كانت مستانسة متألعة مطمئنة في اوطانها واماكنها وهربت من ديار بني آدم الي البراري البعيدة. So they (i. e. the beasts) went where they (i. e. men) would, seeking their pasturage, their watering, and quiet, places. But some of them, as the wild ass the gazelles, lions, wild beasts, and birds, escaped from them, after they had been associated, united, and in safety in their countries and various places. So they fled from the children of men into the distant deserts.

6. מְלָחָה. Salt, barren ground. So the old English marish, i. e. sea-ish, now contracted into marsh. But, as this is occasionally with us very rich pasture-land, the word would, in that sense, very ill suit the context here. See Ezek. xlvii. 11; Auth. Vers.

7. תְּשׁוּבֹת דָּגִישׁ. The tumult, or great tumult—as a pl. of excellency—of the oppressor. Usually Arab. سَاء. Malus fuit, &c. Better, perhaps, شَاء. Mihi admirationem concitavit; شَبَّاءَ نِي, admiratione percussum cor. Cogn. شَأَشَأ. Vocavit jumentum, increpuit oves; شُوْ شُوْ, vel تَشُوْ تَشُوْ, vox illu qua vocatur, &c.; شَوِي, calefecit aquam; شَبِي, voluit, ii. conj. impulit; iv. fecit ut confugeret. Hence, probably, the notion of noise, strepitus, whether in a bad or good sense, as of a storm in שׁוּפָה, Prov. i. 27, &c.; of a waste, as in שׁוּפָה וּמְשׁוּפָה, i. e. howling, and a place of howling; as a desert is said to be a waste howling wilderness, Deut. xxxii. 10. Hence too the notion of terror, as of the thunder in תְּשׁוּבֹת, Job, xxxvi. 29; of joy, as in Zech. iv. 7; of the oppressor, as in this place. לֹא יִשְׁמַע. He disregards. This can hardly be rendered, he hears not: the question not being about what he hears or sees, but what he sets at nought.

8. יְהוּרִי. Abundance, plenty; root יָהַר, which see. 1, therefore, follow Le Clerc here.

9. רִים. See Hieroz, pt. i. lib. iii. c. xxvii. An untameable animal. עֲבָדְךָ. Lit. Thy service; i. q. our infinitive, to serve.

10. בְּתֵלֶם עֲבָתוֹ. Lit. In the furrow, its cords. The natural order would be עֲבָתוֹ בְּתֵלֶם. Wilt thou bind the ox (unite in one interest with thee, I mean.—Gram. Art. 216, 4, and note), his cords in, or for, the furrow?

11. יְהִי עֲשֶׂה. May here mean, either thy labour, or thy wealth; i. e. the fruits of thy labour.

12. כִּי יָשִׁיב. Since he will cause to return, &c., seems to be spoken in irony. Since, forsooth, he will, &c.; taking for granted that this will be the case.

13. The sense here seems to require a repetition of בְּהִשְׁמִינֵי: i. e. Wilt thou put thy trust in the wing? &c. Because its power is great, its motion rapid, and sufficient to save it from the hunter? On the term בְּהִשְׁמִינֵי, see Hieroz. pt. ii. lib. ii. c. xvi. בְּהִשְׁמִינֵי. Becoming agitated, exulting in wing, as a cock before crowing, or after beating an antagonist.

Ἡνωὰς ἑξαισθητὰς τὰς περὶ στυγίας, κ. τ. λ.—Diod. Sicul. lib. iii. xxvii. Ib. וְגַם. Here supply בְּהִשְׁמִינֵי, as before. אֶבְרָה הַסִּידָה. I take to mean, The favoured, favourite, or choice, or graceful, feather, which probably was then, as it now is, an article of considerable value. Bochart. Hieroz. pt. ii. lib. ii. c. xvi., supplies the following notices to this effect. Theoph. Hist. Plant. lib. iv. c. v. τὸ φῦλλον τὸν μὲν μορφῆν περὶ μνησσε, τοῖς δὲ στυγαστυγίας περὶ δὲ μισοῖν, ἃ παρατίθενται παρὰ τὰ χράννη. The leaf is oblong in form, like the feathers of ostriches, which they place on helmets. And Pliny, “Conosque bellicos, et galeas adornantes pennæ.” Bochart adds, “Hæ porrò pennæ tam ex alis, quam ex cauda sumuntur. Neque ullum est animal, cujus pennæ sint tam æquales: pròinde apud Ægyptios struthionis penna legitur fuisse æquitatis symbolum,” &c. Diodorus Siculus (lib. iii. xxvii.) gives an account of a people inhabiting the southern parts of Æthiopia, whom he terms Στυγαστάγγοι, i. e. Ostrich-eaters: for in those parts, he says, the ostrich abounds. He then describes it pretty much as our own naturalists do. Strabo (lib. xvi. § 11) says nearly the same things of a people living in Arabia. הַסִּידָה (ר. הַסִּידָה, favoured), a person favoured, beloved, and hence applied to the saints under the Old Testament. Ps. iv. 4; xvi. 10, &c. In this view, these two words (הַסִּידָה אֶבְרָה) are in apposition, and are regularly and correctly written; whereas, the supposition that the second word here means the stork, requires the first to be written אֶבְרָרָה; which, however, is not without example, as Bochart has shewn. Again, the supposition that the second word should be so interpreted, involves the context in insuperable difficulties; and this for no other reason than because הִסְיִדָה happens to mean stork, as well as favoured. Had commentators but seen this, the whole difficulty would have vanished long ago. Rosenmüller has recourse, moreover, to an argument in this place, which strikes me as exceedingly weak. It is this: because certain travellers have said that the feathers of the stork may, in some cases, be compared with those of the ostrich, such comparison is, therefore, instituted here by the sacred writer. My answer is, I know of no such thing ever done in the Bible. I think, too, it would savour of confusion to institute any such comparison. Ib. וְנִצָּה. And head-plumage, i. e. for the head. Arab. نَصِي. Coma frontis propendula: capronæ, antiæ; نَصَّةٌ, coma muliebris in anteriore faciei parte. Cogn. نَصَأً. Prehendit antiæ, &c. Nothing can exceed the vagueness of the dictionaries here, as in almost all similar cases. אֶבְרָרָה is penna, or ala, they cannot say which; and so also is נִצָּה. Is this likely to be true? Comp. Ezek. xvii. 3, where Gesenius, after Bochart, sees a distinction between אֶבְרָרָה and אֶבְרָרָה, as he also might between these two and נִצָּה. The general sense then seems to be, Wilt thou trust either in the strength of the ostrich, or in the riches derivable from it? It is true, a sense is made out on the other view; but, to me, it is any thing but an obvious or easy one.

14. בִּיְרֵתָ עֶזְבִּי. Because, since, when, she leaveth, &c.: as if boasting in her independence and strength. These properties are strictly true of the ostrich.

15. וְהִצָּרְתָּ. And disregardeth. הִצָּרְתָּ. May crush it, i. e. each one of them distributively. Arab. زور. Violentia: as a verb, May do violence, &c. The Syr. הִצָּרְתָּ, Manu cepit, falls short of the sense; while the Arab. زور, Durus, validus, talis incessus, seems to suit the passage exactly. Comp. Isa. lix. 5, where the pointing should be הִצָּרְתָּ, i. e. The broken (egg). Gesenius recommends הִצָּרְתָּ, actively. But this would require an additional word, as an accusative. The passive is more easy and natural, as well as more consistent with the preceding construction. Thus, And the broken (egg), split out, i. e. emit, a serpent.

16. הִקְשִׁיחַ. Usually, She dealeth hardly, or the like. Cogn. טוֹשׁ הִקְשִׁיחַ. Arab. قَاشِحٌ. Crassior, rudior vestis; قَشَّاحٌ, Hyæna. Cogn. كَسَّحَ. Durus fuit; كَسَّحَ, clandestino in eum odio affectus fuit. As the female ostrich is the subject of the discourse here, a difficulty presents itself in this verb's being in the masculine form, while the feminine is used both in the preceding and following (i. e. 18th) verses. This could hardly have taken place, unless some object had been had in view by it. If then we take the verb impersonally, some one hardeneth; or passively, they become hardened, the translation may be, Her young are hardened, i. e. void of natural affection. More literally, One, some one, hardens her young for their not being hers; or, considers them so hardened (comp. Isa. lxi. 17, where the verb has evidently this sense) as not to be accounted hers. Gram. Art. 157, 6. In this case the ellipsis may be thus supplied: הִקְשִׁיחַ אִישׁ בְּנִיָּהּ; and continuing this train of thought, the next member may thus be supplied, וְהִקְשִׁיחַ אִישׁ לְהַיּוֹת רֵיקָה, וְנִיָּצָה וְהָיָא בְּלִי-פָחַד, men consider her labour to be for vanity (i. e. in vain) and she without fear. They neither owe nor pay her that reverence which, in every other case, is acknowledged and paid to a mother. וְנִיָּצָה must, I think, here be understood of the eggs and offspring of the bird in question, as having given her pain; for naturalists tell us, that she does watch them with the attentions of a mother. בְּלִי-פָחַד may also be taken, less obviously, as signifying that these young ones are unsubdued or wild, rendering neither reverence nor fear to any; i. e. like children brought up without restraint or check; and therefore doing that only which is right in their own eyes.—Then follows the reason of all this, “Because,” &c.

17. בִּי-הִטָּה. Because, when, seeing that, God hath withholden, &c. Not “deprived,” or “privavit,” for, in this case, something must be taken away which was once possessed: but here the thing spoken of was never possessed. In Hebrew, moreover, to remember, often means to regard; to forget, to disregard; and if בִּי-הִטָּה means “oblivisci fecit eam,” the passage may, perhaps, be thus interpreted. The Arabic كَسَّى, however, occasionally signifies iterum iterumque oberavit; and also ebrius ecasit, which in Hiph. (Arab. conj. iv.) will signify “inebriavit illum vinum.” Cogn. كَسَّى, oblitus fuit, neglexit, omisit, &c. The latter member confirms this interpretation.

18. פְּצֵתָּ. Lit. According to the time, i. e. when. פְּמָרִיא. Rosenm. “In altum sese extollit.” Verbum פְּמָרִיא . . . trajectis literis factum ex ראם, quod perinde ac רוּם, altum esse significet.” We are next told, that by “in altum stature proceritas commendatur, de qua omnes, qui de hac ave scripserunt,” is meant. Pliny is then cited, “Altitudinem equitis insidentis equo excedunt.” רוּם, or ראם (i. e. מרא, per metathesin), must here be taken in the sense of קוּם! not to insist on the liberty taken by the metathesis. But, why not take פְּמָרִיא here as cognate with מָרָה, and הַמָּרִיא with הַמָּרָה, Ps. cvi. 33, &c. exacerbavit? We shall then have Syr. cogn. ⁷عَنْفٌ, pertinax, et morosus se opposuit, contendit de victoria: amarum fecit. See Heb. מָרָר. Syr. عَن. Arab. مَرَّ. Also Arab. مَرَّأٌ, virilis, masculus, et fortis fuit. Conj. v. fortitudinem præ se tulit, i. e. تَمَرَّأٌ, which may well have the sense of our פְּמָרִיא, and cogn. مَرِّي, ad vehementiorem cursam sententiã, aliãve re egit equum. Again, מָרוּם does not universally apply to place, but is occasionally put to signify the state of the mind. See Ps. lvi. 3, &c. Besides, it cannot be said that, whenever this bird rises, or elevates herself, from her nest or sitting place, she laughs at the horse and his rider: this can be predicated of her only when engaged, or likely to be engaged, in battle. There is, also, a want of energy and point in this view of the passage, which, in my apprehension, is quite sufficient to condemn it.

Bochart, whose illustration of this passage ought to be read, tells us, Hieroz. Pars II. lib. II. c. xvi. that “Alis exultare struthiones rectè dicuntur, cùm eorum alacritas ex alis tota pendeat,” &c. From Ælian, lib. IV. c. iii. Ἐἰ δὲ αὐτὴν διώκει τις, ἥδὲ οὐκ ἐπιτολμᾷ τῆι πτήσει, θεῖ δὲ τὰς πτέρυγας ἀπλώσασα. If any one pursue her, she attempts not to fly, but runs, having expanded her wings. The poets of Arabia often allude to the swift course of the ostrich, and the resistance which it makes to the hunters. The following is from the Moallakat (suspended prize-poem) of Harith (ed. Vullers, 1827). I give the Latin version only, to save space, vr. 9 :

“Ego vero jam auxilium petam contra marorem, quando hospitem iter acceleratum abducet.

“A celerime incedente instar struthionis camelo, pul-lorum matre, deserta incollente, longo collo prædita.

“ Quæ percepit sonum occultum, quamque exterruerunt venatores tempore pomeridiano, vespera jam appropinquante. Vides pulverem pedibus nunc in altum levatis, nunc terram percutientibus a tergo illius orientem, similem atomis, atque solæ corium huc illuc dispersum, deserto laceratum.”

Tarafa, again (Reiske's edit. vr. 36), compares the swiftness of the hind with that of the ostrich, in these words, “ Si velim, capite in mediam sellam erecto brachiis natabit celeritate sruthocameli.”

19. רָעַמָּה. Usually, “ With thunder.” “ Tropum,” says Bouillier, “ habes splendidissimum;” which, I cannot help thinking nevertheless, a most incongruous one. How thunder, which is a mere sound, can be said to be put on, it is quite out of my power to see. Figures may, indeed, be bold—and such are those used by the sacred writers—still, they must not be incongruous; and of this character, I think, they never are. Schultens makes the primitive and leading notion of this verb (as he does indeed of almost every other) to consist in a tremulous motion, and to be the same with رَعَدَ; all of which may be very true. The Syriac gives رَعَد, iratus est. In Æth. infremuit. Chald. murmurare, querulum esse, &c. Cogn. Arab. رَعِمَ, fastidivit, abhorruit, vim intulit.

رَاعَمَ, succensuit . . . iratus fuit, &c. The word might, therefore, have originally been taken as an imitation of the rumbling noise of the thunder, and thence used to express anger, indignation, or the like, as in the verbs just noticed. And, in this sense it seems admirably to suit the passage in question; as if the writer should say, Canst thou clothe his neck, i. e. place about it, the expression of indignation which it appears to have when he rushes to the battle? Canst thou supply him with that proud and graceful curvature of neck which, with his flashing eye and smoking nostrils, bespeak his mighty and disdainful heart? The verb is also used in this sense in Ps. xvi. 11; xviii. 7; 1 Sam. i. 6. In Ezek. xxvii. 35, רָעַמְי פָּנַיִם is made to signify, “ commoti sunt vultu;” but, to be literal, according to Schultens, it ought to mean, vultu tremunt: which is impossible. All, however, that seems to be meant is, ‘Their countenances express their inward excitement of mind, just as the neck of the horse is here made to express his. The fault in applying this word consisted, therefore, in ascribing a particular sense to it, when the more general one ought to have been adopted.

Cicero gives us, in his translation of Aratus (De Natura Deorum, ii. 43), a description not unlike this of the swift and spirited course of the Pagasus :

“ Huic Equus ille, jubam quatiens fulgore micanti, Summum contingit caput alvo.”

But here, the flowing of the mane is made to resemble the lightning, not the thunder. The case is therefore quite a different one, while the figure is both bold and regular. The place in Job is evidently alluded to in Ps. cxlvii. 10. Amrulkeis too applies the description of the lightning to that of a spirited horse ; but not a word does he say in this case about the thunder. The passage is cited on ch. xxxvi. 32.

20. הַרְרָעִי אֶשְׁמַר. Canst thou make him rush on, &c. i. e. in military array compact and firm, and with a noise like an army of locusts. Rosenmüller here copies a passage from Bochart, the object of which is to shew, that this verb must mean, leap, skip, or the like, as a horse does in galloping. But, strange to say, Bochart never intended in this place to determine the force of this verb at all ! Bochart gives, indeed, from Giggæius, حَرَجَلَ القَرَسَ, saltavit equus ; “ scilicet more,” adds he, “ locustæ, quam animal esse πηδῆσιζόν, et a saltu saltarellan lingua vernacula dici,” &c. In the first place, it is more than either Bochart or Rosenmüller could do, to prove that the Arabic phrase, just adduced, has any such meaning as that which he ascribes to it ; and, in the second, if this proof could be made out, it would still require to be proved that the sense of our Hebrew verb can hence be determined. Rosenmüller also assumes, that a single horse is here compared with a single locust : which is also incapable of proof. The horse is certainly described here as in the field of battle (see the following verses), and, if so, he is generically described : that is, every individual horse so circumstanced is described ; which is just the same thing as speaking of a regiment or army of cavalry. Of all the names of the locust, too, אַרְבֵּה, signifying multitude, is chosen ; which makes it seem as if the locust was also generically described. The best possible comment on this place is, I think, Joel, ii. 2-12 ; and, whether this passage is intended to be finally understood of locusts, or of men (I believe the latter), certain it is, that the whole description consists of a metaphor taken from an army of locusts. See ch. i. 4. This army, too, is represented as in motion, proceeding in regular martial array, and finally making the attack. It is remarkable enough, that the very verb in question occurs here, vr. 10, in רָעִישׁוּ אֶשְׁמַר ; and, in this place, it cannot possibly signify leaping or skipping. The only place here in which any such signification can hold, is in וַיִּרְדְּוּ, in vr. 5. But here, the sound of the whole body in motion is manifestly meant; which must allude to the noise of the flight of the locusts, not to their leaping or skipping on the ground.

One word now on the etymology of this word. It has been remarked that Rosenmüller has misapplied the reasoning of Bochart, and that Bochart also has travelled out of the record. I must now remark, that he has mistranslated a passage from the Kāmoos which tended perhaps in a great measure to deceive himself, and to mislead Rosenmüller. “Sic Arabicè,” says he (Hieroz. Pars II. lib. iv. c. ii.), “عدا يمينه (يمينه?) حرجل chargala de equo dicitur, qui saltat ad dextram, aut ad sinistram.” But عدا never means saltat. Golius renders it by præterit, transivit . . . cucurrit, irruit, avertit, divertit, and so on: terms very proper for describing the course of a horse, or of an army of locusts. It is curious enough to remark, that this blunder of Bochart has found its way into all the modern Hebrew dictionaries!

In the next place, the Arabic رَعَشَ is rendered by tremuit, trepidavit. رَعَشَاءَ, celeriter incedens struthiocamelus fœm. coque tremens. مَرَعَشَ, species columbæ, quæ in altum evolans gyros facit. Cogn. رَعَسَ, id. So that the word, in one form or other, may be applied to the swift motion of an animal, or to the wheeling flight of certain birds, not without, perhaps in each case, the notion of shaking. On the noise made in flying and alighting by the locusts (which I have endeavoured to preserve in the term rush), see Hieroz. Pars II. lib. iv. c. i. orig. edit. p. 447; ib. c. v. pp. 474–478, &c. In Rev. ix. 9, we are told, that “the sound of their (i. e. the locusts’) wings was as the sound of chariots of MANY HORSES RUNNING TO BATTLE:” which, as it is copied from the place in Joel already referred to, seems to be admirably suited to our context. A passage occurs, moreover, in the Epistle to the Hebrews (viz. xii. 26–28), which will throw very great light on the application of this word in prophecy. The original passage is Hag. ii. 6, 7, which the apostle here explains by that sort of shaking, which ends in an entire removal of the thing shaken, so that a perfectly new state succeeds.

21. וַיִּרְדְּוּ. They dig, i. e. each horse by prancing with the hoof or paw; i. e. they paw, “ere they start a thousand steps are lost."—Pope. Comp. Judg. v. 22. From the occurrence of the plural here, followed by a singular verb, it seems extremely likely that the preceding verse, as already remarked, alludes to a whole line of cavalry. Rosenmüller, too, can see this here! סָרָסָר, I think here denotes the orderly, but rapid, march of cavalry to the attack, as if no fear or trepidation were experienced. Comp. Numb. xxi. 23; Josh. viii. 14. לְהִרְאֵת־בְּנִשְׁפָּהָ. In direct opposition to the presented weapon, just as the cavalry of modern times will rush undismayed upon the line of opposing bayonets; which is well explained in the next verse.

23. עָלָיו. Over him, הִרְבָּה, ringeth (Arab. تَرْنِي, quatantat, cogn. רָנָה, Heb. רָנָן), the quiver, &c. of his opponent. Not unlike Hom. Il. i. l. 45, 46 :

Τόξ' ὠμοισιν ἔγγυς, ἀμφηρῆς φάτα τε φαξέτ' ἔργη·
 "Ἐκλ. αἰγῶν δ' ἄρ' ὀϊστοὶ ἐπ' ὠμῶν χαρομῆνοιο, Ἄντοσ' ἰονηθῆεντοσ.

Ib. לְהִבָּה. Flame or flash, i. e. the blade, which from its being polished, and reflecting the sun-beams, may be so termed, just as in the Arabic أَبْرِيْفٌ, a very bright or flashing sword is, from بَرْقٌ, lightning. That the polished blade, or point, of such weapon is meant, is evident from Judg. iii. 22; 1 Sam. xvii. 7; Nahum, iii. 3.

24. בְּרֵעַשׁ וּרְבָזוֹ. In his rush and rage, i. e. when he makes the charge. See note on vr. 20, above. יִשְׁתָּה. He drinketh up the earth (1 Pet. v. 8, καταπίη), i. e. From the extreme rapidity and courage with which he pursues his course, the ground lying before him may be said to be absorbed by him, i. e. as if it ran into his person. Both the Arabs and Latins, as shewn by Bochart, speak of the horse in a similar manner; e. g. أَلْتَهَمَ الْفَرَسُ الْأَرْضَ, Equus voravit terram; and, "Latumque fugá consumere campum." Hieroz. Pars I. lib. II. c. viii. So Shakespeare, 2nd Pt. Henry IV. "And starting so, he seemed in running to devour the way." וְלֹא יִצְמַח. And standeth not fast, or still. The leading notion in this verb seems to be acquiescence, the being satisfied in, or with, something: hence Arab. أَمِنَ, nixus fuit, عَلَى, upon something: securus, tutusque fuit: fidem habuit. أَمِينٌ, firmus, constans. Syr. أَعْمِنًا, stabilis, assiduus, &c.; whence our Amen. The verse is antithetic, as is vr. 22, and may be paraphrased thus: In the charge he seems indignantly to drink in the earth; nor can he, at any time, stand still when he hears the trumpet. So Virgil Georg. iii. as cited by Bochart in the place referred to:

“ — tum si quæ sonum procul arma dedere, Stare loco nescit.”

In the Hamāsa (p. ۵۳۲, edit. Freytag):

وَالْحَيْدُ أَجْوَدُهَا الْمَنَاهِبُ عِنْدَ كَبْتِهَا الْأَرْوَمُ

The best of horses is that which outstrips,—biting in the attack.

25. בְּרַי שִׁפָּר. Lit. At the trumpet, קוֹל being supplied by the ellipsis from the preceding verse. בְּרַי has been usually rendered by the Jews, sufficitia; but this is not well grounded, as Bochart l. c. has shewn. The particle is, perhaps, merely syllabic, as in Jer. xx. 8; xxxi. 20; and intended to add nothing to the sense. יִשְׁפַר הָרָפָה, i. e. He breaks out with some such interjection as this, neighing perhaps as horses generally do upon hearing a horn, or trumpet, and snorting as if offended at the warlike apparatus and tumult opposed to him, and as if he seemed to scent an enemy in his front. On the force of רַעַם, see vr. 19. This expression of rage, joined as it is with תַּרְרִיפָה, is best rendered, perhaps, by tumult, or raging.

To the numerous classical illustrations of this passage given by Bochart l. c. may be added the following, taken from Haitsma's Ibn Doreid, p. 57, &c. I omit the Arabic text to save space.

Vr. 60. “Per hæc (juramentum) sive per Equos, qui transeunt cursu alacri, prominentes jecoribus suis, extenuati ventre, iliisque.

“Equi impexi fremunt instar luporum Algadæ . . . (comp. Habac. i. 8).

“Sublevabunt in dorsum omnem expeditum, strenuum, audacem animo, immittentem se mari bello.”

Vr. 87. “Vestigium ejus; quando in illud intueri studueris, diceres: esse splendorem valde coruscum, aut fulgur latius se diffundens utrumque.” (See from Cic. vr. 19.)

“Ac si esset signum Geminorum in tarso ejus, atque stella in ejus fronte, quando exorta fuit.”

26. זָרַז. The hawk. See Hieroz. Pars II. lib. 11. c. xix. מִשְׁפָּר. Moults. As מִשְׁפָּר, and מִשְׁפָּרָה, mean feather, see note on vr. 13 above, it is most natural to suppose that the verb here has hence been formed; and, as this bird moults annually, the probability is strong that this is its true acceptation. Gesenius gives “in altum enisus est,” for the sense of this verb; and adds, “Nescio an vicinum sit עָבַר, עָבַר, coll. Pers. ابر eber, ὑπερ (super) quæ omnia superi, superandi hincque transcendendi notionem habent.” He then refers to עָבַר; where we likewise find the Persian ابر, بر, and زبر. But, can we rely on a Persian particle for the sense of a Hebrew verb? particularly when the Hebrew verb, to which he also refers, is never found to have any such sense as that of rising up in flight? See Bochart’s illustrations (loco citato) of this place. Ib. לְהִיָּן. To the south. Gregory the great—as Bochart tells us in this place, and after him Rosenmüller—say that, “Domesticis accipitribus, quò meliùs plumescere debeant, humida ac tepentia loca requiruntur. Agrestibus verò moris est, ut flante Austro alas expandant, quatenùs eorum membra ad laxandam pennam veterem venti tepore concalescant,” &c.

27. עֲלֵי־פִיָּהּ. Lit. At thy mouth: meton. for thing spoken or command. נִבְרִיָּה נֶשֶׁר. The eagle towereth on high. Ib. גָּרִים קָבוֹ. Raiseth, or exulteth on high his nest. So Aristotle, as cited by Bochart, Hieroz. Pars II. lib. II. cap. II. Ἡοιοῦνται δὲ αὐτὰς οὐκ ἐν πεδινόσις τόποισι, ἀλλ’ ἐν ὑψηλοῖσι μάλαστα μὲν, καὶ ἐν σέτεσις ἀποσρήμνοισι. Comp. Obad. v. 4.

28. אֶשְׁרֵי־קָלְעַ. Lit. The tooth of the rock, i. e. the craggy and inaccessible part of it. וּבְמִצְרָה. And the fastness. “Venatio,” say some lexicographers, “deinde præda—vertex montis, unde prædatio et insidiae fieri possunt.” A happy method this of deriving words! for it will suit any thing, and any thing will suit it. Is it not more likely, that צַר is here used in the sense of צָרַר, Arab. صَدَّ, prohibit, impedivit, or صَدَّ, id. whence we have مُصَادَّةٌ, contraria, and مُصَدِّدٌ, resistens, &c.; and hence has the signification of arx, præsidium, or the like, Ps. xviii. 3! &c. Aristotle, as quoted by Bochart, l. c. tells us, Ἵψω δὲ σέτεται, ὕψως ἐπι πλεῖστον τόπον καὶ λογῆ. And Apuleius, “Cum igitur eò sese Aquila extulit, &c. indè euneta despiciens, &c. circumtuetur, et quærit quorsus potissimum in prædam supernè sese ruat.” Which will form a good comment on the next verse.

30. יַעֲלֵי. They gulp down. The word, like our own, may be an ὀνομαστικόν, formed from the sound of the act meant. The Arabic, however, supplies several cognate verbs, as عَدَّ, bibendum dedit secunda vice, post priorem haustum. عَدَّر, immisit, indidit rem. كَوَّغَ, cum rem ore versatam deglutis. Ib. לָהֵי. Absorptus. See also ch. vi. 3. Arab. كَلَعَا, imbuit pinguedine offam suam. تَلَعَّى, avidus, gulosus fuit. وَلَعَّ, cupidus fuit. وَلَعَّ, inserta in vas lingua sorbuit canis. Our verb here may, perhaps, be a compound of some two of these; as عَدَّ + لَعَّى, so formed to denote excess or enormity. See Gram. Art. 197, 2-8. This bird drinks not water but blood, as may be seen in Bochart, l. c. and is a constant attendant on fields of battle, as most writers on the East attest. Comp. Matt. xxiv. 28; Deut. xxi. 18; Prov. xxx. 17.

Harith compares a band of robbers to a body of eagles rushing on to the prey. Moallakat poem, vr. ۴۳—

فَتَأَوَّتْ لُدَّ قَرَاضِمَةً مِّنْ كُلِّ حَيٍّ كَانَتْهُمْ أَلْعَاءُ

“Convenerunt ad illum latrones maligni ex omni tribu, ac si essent aquilæ.”

The following adage, which is the lviii. in H. A. Schul-ten's edition of Meidani, is sufficient to shew what opinion the Arabs hold as to the keenness of the eagle's ken—

أَبْصَرُ مِّنْ عَقَابٍ مَّلَاعٍ

“Acutius videns quam aquila in desertis.”

This is said to apply to the eagle of the plain, rather than to that of the mountain; because it is, of the two, the keener sighted, and the swifter in flight. So Homer, II. xvii. 676, styles it the keenest sighted of birds. It has too, I believe, been ascertained by experiment, that it is from the sight, not from the smell, that the birds of prey generally find their food. Comp. ch. xxviii. 7.

CHAPTER XL.

2. הִלָּב. Lit. Whether by contending? &c. “הִלָּב, Participium verbi הִלָּב, litigavit . . . ut הִלָּב, illuxit, et Participium הִלָּב, illucescens, Prov. iv. 18.” Ronenm. in loc. All this, however, is very doubtful: for first, the verb here used is not הִלָּב, but הִלָּב; and, secondly, in either case the participle would regularly be הִלָּב, not הִלָּב. Nor, again, is it at all certain that אָר, Prov. iv. 18, is a participle. It may be an abbreviation for אָר, form אָר, by Gram. Art. 75, and the preterite of the verb; or, it may be a sort of infinitive, of the same form: the context will admit of either. In the next place, רַב will be the regular infinitive, or verbal noun, of רַב, as בּוֹן is of בָּן. See Pardig. for רַב, or רַב, form רַב, contracted as above. Again, Rosenmüller takes יִפּוֹר, as signifying “castigator,” i. e. of the form יִפּוֹר, potens, יִפּוֹר, ebrius, i. q. יִפּוֹר, Prov. ix. 7. It may be objected that this word occurs not elsewhere as an agent in this form; nor, if רַב is to be taken as an infinitive—which it ought to be—will it, as such, suit the passage. Besides, it exhibits the form proper for the third pers. sing. masc. pres. of Kal, of the root יִפּוֹר. So Hos. x. 10, אֶפְרָם, and I will chastise them; where יִפּוֹר is manifestly the full form of the first pers.: the rad. י being dropped, and compensated by the insertion of dagesh, as in יִנַּח. יִפּוֹר, therefore, will be the form proper for the third pers. pres. masc. Kal; and, as such, it will suit the context. Nor does מוֹכִיחַ, impleader, in the parallel, require that רַב be a participle: if a parallelism is found in the sense, that will be sufficient; and this the nominative contained in יִפּוֹר will supply, i. e. One, any one, chastising, correcting. I have added this, as complementary of the verb יִפּוֹר, referring to what had just been said, and which the pronoun in יִפְּנֶה seems to require.

4. קִלְתִּי. I am vile: opp. כָּבֵד, heavy. Syr. ܩܠܬܝ. Arab. قَلِي. Levis, immimtus fuit: a confession most suitable to such an occasion. Ib. אֶשְׁיָכֵן. If any reliance can be placed on the point representing the epenthetic נ in אֶשְׁ here, its force may perhaps be expressed in English by placing a strong emphasis on the word “shall”: what SHALL I, i. e. CAN I, answer thee? Implying that this can by no means be effectually done. Gram. Art. 235. יְדֵי וְנֹ. Mine hand, &c. See ch. xxi. 5.

5. Lit. וְלֹא אֵיֶסֶף. Lit. And I will not add, i. q. Anglicè, I will do so no more: a sentiment worthy of all imitation, and bespeaking the deepest piety of heart.

6. מִן סִפְרָה. In ch. xxxviii. 1, we have הַפְּעֵרָה, with the article; a proof, if any were wanting, that the sacred writers were not quite so much attached to mere grammatical forms, as some have been willing to make them.

7. Comp. vr. 3; ch. xxxviii. and note.

8. הֲשֵׁנָהּ. Lit. Whether moreover, even? &c. i. e. Wilt thou then, child of a woman as thou art (ch. xiv. 1)—vile, as thou hast here confessed thyself to be; unable as thou hast also proclaimed man generally to be (ch. ix. 2)—still continue apparently to impugn my decisions, ordinances, and arrangements, upon earth, in order that thy innocence may the more plainly appear? The object of this passage does not seem to be, so much to accuse Job of directly denying God's goodness, or of asserting his own innocence, as to charge Job with having implicitly done this in some degree, by the incautious line of argument which he had taken. See chh. iii. vi. vii. xii. &c. Others, He seems to say, might take up these arguments and apply them in a sense, and for an object, very different from those now intended. In this way, therefore, he might be said to have appeared to justify himself, and to disannul God's laws, when in truth he meant to do no such thing. Comp. ch. xxxiv. 36; ix. 2, &c. as noticed above. The charge advanced, then, seems to involve foolishness and weakness, rather than impiety; which the following context also justifies by adducing considerations tending still more effectually to humble the patriarch, and to which he seems, ch. xlii. 2-6, more particularly to respond. Ib. לְמַעַן תִּתְצַדֵּק. Lit. That thou mayest be just, i. e. mayest have the appearance of being so.

9. וְהֲשֵׁנָהּ גַם. Or, &c. On the correlative power of הֲ, and שֵׁ, see ch. xxxvii. 20; that is, Whether this, or that? The question here is, Whether Job can exhibit any such proofs of power, as God does. The answer will be found in vr. 14, below.

10. יַעֲרֶה נָּוּ. Deck thee now, &c. Arab. عَدَّ. præterit, supersedit, &c. Hence, perhaps—as in חָלַף, to pass, also change for the better, see ch. xiv. 7, 14, &c.—this verb has been applied to dress, and to that in particular which is ornamental.

11. עֲבֵרֹתַי. The fierceness. Arab. عَبَرَ, abegit aves, increpavit. Cogn. عَبَّرَ, sanie intumuit, fissumque, fuit vulnus, &c.

12. נִהְרָהּ. Yea overthrow. Arab. هَدَكَ, i. q. هَدَمَ, diruit, evertit, &c. This word does not occur again in the Hebrew Bible.

13. פְּנֵיהֶם. Lit. Their faces: but here manifestly like the Greek προσωπα, persons. Ib. הִבְרֹתָם. Shut, or bind up. Syr. حَبَسَ, inclusit, obstrinxit. Arab. حَبَسَ, congregavit.

Cogn. حَبَسَ, continuit, cohibuit. Ib. בְּטָמִיךְ. In safety.
 Arab. ظَمِنَ, securitatem præstitit. See ch. iii. 16; xviii. 10;
 xx. 26.

14. וְנִגַּדְתִּי. Then I also. See the note to vr. 9. אֶרְגֵּזְךָ. I will praise thee. The pronoun expressed here, viz. אֶרְגֵּי, and repeated in the verb, is emphatical. Gram. Art. 223, 2. The epenthetic ו, implied by the dagesh in ה, was probably intended to mark this as an emphatic and correlative sentence. Gram. Art. 235. Ib. תִּשְׁעֶיךָ. It will save, i. e. יְמִינְךָ, thy right hand; not in the second pers. as Rosenmüller has taken it, “salutem . . . parare possis :” the members of the body being mostly construed as feminines.

15. בְּהֵמוֹת. The beasts, i. e. those that are graminivorous, as the next member of the verse tells us expressly. The descriptions given in the preceding chapter went to the consideration of the freedom of certain animals, and the impossibility of reducing them to the service of man. And such truly are the wild ass, the oryx, the ostrich, &c. Our attention is now turned to the most powerful and courageous of the quadrupeds, many of which have been, and still are, reduced and made to serve man. It would be almost endless to cite and refute all that has been said and affirmed of this passage; and it will perhaps be thought almost chivalrous to dissent from the opinion of the very learned and ingenious Bochart (Hieroz. Pars II. lib. v. cap. xv.), which has been adopted by all the learned since his day. I have, however, my reasons for doing so; and these I will now state. I object then, in the first place, to the term בְּהֵמוֹת being taken as a singular noun, and thence made to mean some particular beast. Because, 1. Neither the context, nor the singular pronouns following, require any such sense. 2. The phrase עָשִׂיתִי עִמָּךָ will not bear the sense attributed to it by Bochart; viz. “feci tecum vel potius juxta te . . . inter belluas quas in Nilo creavi Arabiae tue vicino,” &c. as I shall presently shew. 3. Because the passage, הוֹאֵה גְּאֵשִׁית, he will cannot with propriety be predicated of any one animal; and 4. Because the descriptions given from vr. 20 to 25, cannot be easily and naturally applied to the hippopotamus, nor, perhaps, to any other single animal.

1. Nothing is more common in the Hebrew, than that a singular pronoun, in the consequent, should be made to correspond to a plural in the antecedent, when distribution is intended. See Gram. Art. 222, 6. This word, therefore, may be taken in its true plural sense, while the following context may allude to some one or other of the species distributively.

2. The phrase אֲנִי עִשְׂתִּירְךָ will not bear the sense ascribed to it by Bochart. First, because fecit tecum, in that sense, cannot be shewn to be Hebrew; and, secondly, because none of the passages adduced, viz. Josh. vii. 2; Judg. ix. 6; xviii. 3; xix. 11; 2 Sam. vi. 7; xx. 8; Job, xvii. 3, either exhibits that phraseology, or any thing like it. For, to make, or create, any thing with another, must mean one of these two things; 1, either to do this in society with another so that he be present with the action; which is impossible here: or 2, to make, or create, any thing so that it may be or remain with another: and this I take to be the sense intended. In that sense, to create with would supply no sense adequate to that intended by the original. It is, consequently, a false translation. I have, therefore, translated the passage “are with thee;” i. e. in thy neighbourhood, and familiar to thy sight. In this sense, I have no objection to adopt the “propè,” or “juxta,” of Bochart, in rendering it; although I claim the privilege of separating אֲנִי עִשְׂתִּירְךָ from אֲנִי עִשְׂתִּירְךָ, by the term “are,” by which a regular phraseology is restored. In this case too, we are not compelled to recur to the Nile exclusively to find the hippopotamus, but may take in the horse, the mule, the ass, the wild-ass or horse, the hippopotamus, and, indeed, every other animal which is graminivorous, and answers the descriptions severally here given.

In the third place, הוּא רִאשִׁית דְּגַלְגָּלֵי אֱלֹהִים, He or it is the head or first of the ways of God, can fairly be applied neither to the hippopotamus, nor to any other animal or class of animals. Bochart intimates, that as other animals were created on the sixth day, but the hippopotamus, being an aquatic animal, was produced on the fifth; it may hence be termed רִאשִׁית, first, &c. But this does not necessarily follow: for, first, if the “ways of God” are to be referred to creation generally, surely the first of these must have been the creation of the heavens and the earth, not of a certain aquatic animal. And, secondly, although the hippopotamus is an aquatic animal occasionally,—being amphibious,—it cannot hence be presumed that he must have been created on the fifth day; or, which is the same thing, that he was produced by the waters, rather than by the earth.

The other instance adduced, viz. Numb. xxiv. 20, is equally inconclusive; for Amalek could neither be the first of nations, in point of date, nor yet one of the most noble of nations. For, first, Amalek was the son Eliphaz (Gen.

xxxvi. 12). That nation could have been formed, therefore, only during the sojourning of the Israelites in Egypt, and under circumstances by no means favourable to the rapid increase of any people. They must, therefore, have been greatly inferior to Egypt, Babylon, and many other nations then in existence; and, for the same reason, they could with no propriety be termed the first, in point of date. I conclude, therefore, that ראשית must here, i. e. Numb. xxiv. 20, be used in a sense totally different from that assumed by Bochart. Balaam, I think, must have meant, that as Amalek was the first of the nations who opposed the Israelites in their journeying through the desert, their doom was, therefore, they should perish for ever. Comp. Dent. xxv. 17, 19, with 1 Sam. xv. 2, 3, and xxviii. 18. If this may be relied on, ראשית here cannot be taken in the sense ascribed to it by Bochart.

Our question now is, What is meant by ראשית דרכיאל, the first, or beginning, of the ways of God? I think it is obvious, from the preceding context, that both the wisdom and power of Job is intended to be excluded here; and, on the contrary, those of God to be established. Now, if we turn to Prov. viii. 22, we shall find that wisdom is there termed ראשית דרכו, the first, or beginning of His way, i. e. of God's way; and this with reference to the works of creation,—some expressions relating to which are manifestly borrowed from the Book of Job. Allusion is made to this also in ch. xxvi. 14, and with reference to the very same subject, in the terms קבוצת דרכיו, and again ch. xxviii. 23, in connection with a similar subject, in אלהים הבין דרכה: which see with the notes. Our passage, therefore, may be read in either of these two ways: He, i. e. each, and every, of this class of animals is of the first of the ways, i. e. of the wisdom of God. Or, הוא, It, i. e. this, of which I am now speaking, is so derived. It is added, העשו, He who maketh, or createth, him or it, applieth its weapon: which is evidently intended to intimate His wisdom and power. The ellipsis may thus be supplied, הוא מעשה ראשית דרכיאל העשו, He is the work of the first of the ways, i. e. wisdom, of God: He who made him, &c. i. e. He who was wise and powerful enough to make him, was also to vest him with all the properties here described. I take ראשית וגו', &c. therefore, to be a mere periphrasis for אלהים, the wisdom of God.

Again, certain parts of the description given in this place cannot apply to the hippopotamus; e. g. vr. 20, The mountains bear provision for him; for this obvious reason, that it is never found grazing on the mountains at all. All that is said of the hippopotamus is, that it is often seen grazing on the banks of the Nile, or other rivers: but surely, these cannot be termed the mountains, on which all the wild beasts do gambol and play. By this latter description one would suppose were meant, those mountainous districts which are far removed from the natural haunts of the hippopotamus, but in which the wild horse, the onager, &c. are found. I conclude, therefore, that the hippopotamus is not exclusively spoken of in this description.

Now, by the term בְּהֵמֹת, is meant among the Hebrews, and generally among the Arabs, any four-footed beast, not excluding those of an amphibious kind. See Bochart. Hieroz. Pars I. lib. i. cap. ii. and cap. vii. p. 49; also Pars II, lib. v. cap. xv. p. 755. When, however, it is necessary to speak more specifically, the tribe of animals so designated may, as in this place, be opposed to, or compared with, the ox tribe; or it may be opposed to the fiercer wild beasts, &c. It will then mean that of a different nature; and so on, till at last we shall be brought to the horse, and tribe of animals immediately, or more remotely, connected with it. Accurately speaking, therefore, the בְּהֵמֹת of Scripture are of this species. And so I find the author of the Ichwān Oossafā speaking (ed. Calcutta, p. 4), سكّروا من الانعام, البقر والغنم ومن البهائم التخيّل والحمبر والبغال, They pressed into their service of the profitable cattle (for this seems to be the real meaning of نعم, of which انعا is the plural), *the oxen and sheep: and of the بيهائم, بيهيم, the horse, the ass, and the mule.*¹ A little farther on, viz. p. 40, the advocate of the بيهائم, is asked to account for the great body, long neck, small ears, and short tail, of the camel; the great body, long teeth, broad ears, and little eyes, of the elephant; the long tail, thick horns, and want of upper teeth, of the ox and buffalo; and for the different make of the sheep, the tuis, the hare, &c. &c., apparently including all these under the general term بيهائم: but this is done in that laxer mode of speaking just adverted to. The conclusions, moreover, generally drawn here are perfectly in unison with that noticed above as to our context; viz. a manifestation of the wisdom of God. One of these conclusions, p. 44, is: To afford proof of his knowledge, and for fulfilling the designs of His wisdom. And again, p. 44, كلها مصنوعات البارئ الحكيم الذي خلقها ولا يعلم بحكمتها بالعدل والاسباب والاعراض المقصودة ولا يعلم, All of them are the works of a wise Creator, who created them in His wisdom for reasons, purposes, ends, and objects the depth of this none but Himself knows, &c. Again, in a very interesting Persian tract,—a MS. copy of which I possess,—said to have been translated from an Arabic original from the pen of Jaafer Sādik, one of the chapters thus commences:—فكر كن اي مفضل درين سه صنف از حيوان يعني انسان وچهارپايان ومرغان كه هر يك را آنچه مناسب حكمت وجود اوست باو عطا کرده. Observe, O Mufazzil, in these three classes of living creatures, that is to say, man, quadrupeds (here چهارپايان answers to the Arabic and Hebrew general terms, بهائم and בהמות), and birds, how to each of these has been given that which wisdom deems proper for it. Indeed, this is a very favourite topic with the Orientals generally. I cannot help thinking, therefore, that by ראשית ונו׳. The first of the ways, &c., in vr. 19, we are directed to that Wisdom, under the guidance of which creation was planned and completed. We may now proceed to consider the several particulars of this portion of Scripture, as it may appear necessary.

¹ See also De Sacy's Chrestomathie Arabe, ed. 2, Pt. III. pp. {184, {185.

16. בְּכֹחַ לְוָיו. In his loins. It is not uncommon to speak of men as having strength in their loins, as Bochart has remarked (Hieroz. pt. II. lib. v. c. xv., as above). See Nah. ii. 1; Ps. lxxix. 24, &c. But in the horse tribe this is more evident, as may be seen by their efforts, either in the race, or in drawing along heavy loads; while the ox tribe has no such property, and is, therefore, altogether unfit for such exertions. Ib. בְּשִׁרְרֵי וָנו׳. In the firmness, &c. Chald. שִׁרְרִיר. Firmum, ratum. Syr. شَرَرِيْرٌ. Verus, firmus. Bochart assumes here, after the Rabbins, that this word signifies the navel, which is altogether groundless; and then argues that the elephant cannot be meant, because the skin of his belly is soft, while that of the hippopotannus is hard and impenetrable. He ought to have seen, that there is no ground for supposing that this word signifies navel; and, even if it had, that it is absurd to suppose that the strength of any animal consists in his navel: and, further, allowing even this to be true, that the hardness or softness of the skin, in any case, can have any thing to do with the question. On my view, it will apply just as well to the horse, the ass, the wild horse and ass, to the elephant, &c., as it will to the hippopotamus. I take the technical term viscera—bowels with us—as exactly expressing the force of קִרְבָּנִים , in such passages as this; and the meaning to be, that his internal texture is so firm and powerful, that hence the great strength visible in the action of his loins is accounted for. “Quoad tendines firmus,” Ibn Doreid.

17. קִרְבָּנִים . He buds, or moves, &c. Bochart, l. c. “Retorquet,” &c., like the cedar; i. e. in proud and stately manner. Castell gives here, “volet firmiter, firmabit, stabilit, eriget;” and adds, “LXX., Syr., Ar., Ab. Ezr., At. Chal. קִרְבָּנִים , i. q. Ar. קִרְבָּנִים , contorquet, STRINGET: omnium optimè: Job, xl. 12.” If this be the drift of this passage, Bochart’s citations, shewing that the tail of the hippopotamus is like that of the pig, will be out of place; because it is not the form, but the action of the tail, under given circumstances, that is here had in view. The following no one would have expected from such a writer as Bochart: “Ergo enim hippopotami cauda brevis, crassusque sit, et valdè firma, tamen is ad libitum eam flectit, et retorquet, quod ut maximè roboris argumentum hic observatur!”—L. c. It is not uncommon with the Arabian poets thus to describe animals. So Tarafa, speaking of the she-camel, Reiske’s Tarafa, vrr. 16, 17, &c.):

“Cauda, ac si duæ aë aquilæ cingerent utrumque latus, os infixæ subula.

“Cauda, quæ nunc insectoris verberat posticam, nunc aridum, ceu uter aquarius, flaccidum, rugosum. Femora habet compacta,” &c.

Ib. קִרְבָּנִים . Are interwoven. Chald. קִרְבָּנִים . Intersecuit, inter-nexuit, &c. Syr. كِرْبَانِ . Aptatus est. Arab. سَرَج . Ephippio instruxit equum. Cogn. Chald. קִרְבָּנִים . Ordinavit ad lineas. Eth. ሰርገዕ : Ornavit. Arab. سَرَج . Constrinxit, &c.

18. קִרְבָּנִים . Lit. Channels of copper. This is applied apparently to the hollow bones of the thighs, &c., which contain the marrow. So Schultens on the passage. Ib. קִרְבָּנִים . His solid bones. This the context seems to require; and so we have in Castell, קִרְבָּנִים and קִרְבָּנִים .

radius brachii, which are solid bones. Hence the comparison, בְּכַתִּיבֵי פְּרָזֶיֶל. Lit. As a bar of iron. Arab. “مَطْلَرٌ. Ferrum cudit et extendit; مَمَطُورٌ, de ferro, cusum et in longum extensum.”— Roseum.

19. The former part of this verse has been considered. הַעֲשֵׂהוּ. Lit. The person making him. יָגִישׁ חַרְבּוֹ. Applieth, i. e. giveth, his weapon. Bochart applies this exclusively to the teeth of the hippopotamus, and says, “Nos hic harpen interpretamur. Neque enim ἄρπη Græca vox, aliundè deducitur quàm ex Phœnicia harba.” He then cites Sanchoniathon from Eusebius, Prep. Evang. lib. i., as saying, Τῆς δὲ Ἀθηνᾶς γνώμη καὶ Εὐμοῦ κατεσκεύασε Κρόνος ἐκ σιδήρου ἄρπην καὶ ὄζυ. “Ex Minervæ autem et Mercurii sententiâ paravit Saturnus ex ferro harpen et hastam.” Its shape, according to authorities there cited, was that of a crooked sword or scimitar. Some passages are also cited to shew that this term has been applied to the teeth of the hippopotamus, which are long, sharp, and slightly curved. So Nicander Theriac, vr. 566 :

Ἡ ἵππου τὸν Νεῖλος ὑπὲρ Σαῖν αἰὲν ἀλάσσαν Βόσκει, ἄρπυρησιν δὲ κακῆν ἐπιβάλλεται " ΑΡΠΗΝ.

Aut fluvialis equi, Nilus quem pascit adustam Trans Saïn, atque HARPEN dammosam immittit in agros.

See the whole article, Hieroz. pt. II. lib. v. cap. xv. It certainly is curious to find the very Hebrew word here used applied to the hippopotamus. Still I contend, it will not follow that it is to be considered as applicable to no other animal, and in no other sense. The Arabs certainly speak of the weapons given to the animals for self-defence: e. g. in the Ichwân Ossafâ, p. ۲۷, speaking of the elephant: وانبأبه سلاح له يمنع بها السباع عن نفسه. And his teeth are weapons to him, by which he keeps the fierce beasts off from his person. So again Kazwini (Chrestom. De Sacy, edit. 2, p. 3, p. 181): ولما كانت الحيوانات بعضها عدواً لبعض اقتضت الحكمة الالهية لكل حيوان آلة يحفظ بها نفسه من عدوه فمنها ما يدفع العدو بالقوة والمقاومة كالغبل و الجاموس والاسد ومنها ما يسلم من عدوه بالفرار فاعطي آلة الفرار كالظباء والارانب والطيور ومنها ما يحفظ نفسه بسلاح كالغند و غيره. Which M. De Sacy thus translates: “Nous voyons aussi que, parmi les animaux, chacun ayant son ennemi à redouter, la sagesse divine leur a également accordé de moyens (آلة instrument) de défense et de conservation. Les uns, tels que l'éléphant, le buffle, le lion, ont reçu la force en partage pour affronter leur adversaire ; d'autres, qui cherchant leur refuge dans la fuite, ont été doués d'une grande légèreté, comme la gazelle, le lièvre, les oiseaux ; d'autres sont protégés par des armes puissantes, comme le porc-épic," &c. And, a little further on, speaking of that class of animals which is termed

ولما كان المطلوب من الدوابّ : بְּיָמָם, it is said : السِّيرُ صَلِبَتْ حَوَافِرُهَا لِجَمْعِ الْمَشِيِّ الْكَثِيرِ عَلَيْهَا وَلِتَكُونَ سِلَاحًا دَافِعًا لِلْعَدُوِّ فتنم آلة المشي والسلاح وغيرها.

“ Comme la principale destination des bêtes de somme est pour les voyages, leur sabots sont faits d'une manière solide, capable de résister à une longue marche, et de leur fournir en même temps des armes redoutables contre leur ennemis . . . et procure ainsi à ces animaux deux moyens parfaits, l'un pour la marche, l'autre pour la défense.” To the same effect the Persian tract already cited says : وایشان را اعانت کرده اند باسلحه وایشان را اعانت کرده اند باسلحه. And to them (i. e. the fierce animals) have they supplied weapons, and such instruments as are necessary for hunting. Whence it must appear that the Orientals look upon these weapons, not as afforded merely for the purpose of procuring food (as in the teeth of the hippopotamus, above noticed), but also for self-defence, and for the purpose of making war upon others. And, in the horse tribe, both the teeth and hoofs are used for this purpose. Bochart's illustration therefore so far as it goes, is excellent : its defect consists in not being carried out to its legitimate extent. It may be remarked here, that the term חרב, or ḥarḇ, is probably the origin of our harpoon, conveyed to us from the Arabic حَرْبٌ, by way of Spain. See Gol. under حَرْبٌ.

20. פְּרִיבֹל וְנָוָה. For provision, &c. Nothing can be more blind than the account given of this second word in the dictionaries. “ Proventus terræ,” says Gesenius, “ a rad. פָּבַל, ut פְּרִיבֹל, proventus, a פָּוַח.” But here, neither the forms nor the sense are analogous. Winer gives “ proventus ” ex Chald. (Talm.) linguæ usu ;” and ends with “ Alii : proventus arboris h. e. liquum, quod magis placet.” Under פָּבַל, Gesenius gives “ fluxit, maxime copiose et cum quodam impetu ; Arab. وَبَلَ, copiose fluxit, pluit,” &c. But no Arabian author gives fluxit for the sense of this word : as far, at least, as I can discover. Nor, pari ratione, is there any authority whatever for the “fluxit maximè copiosè,” &c. ascribed to the Hebrew. This has all been coined, for the mere purpose of affording an acceptable etymology. Golius and Castell give “Acrius persecutus fuit, vehementer propulit prædam . . . copiosè et vehementer pluit cælum.” But not one word about fluxit, which is the turning point of Gesenius’s etymology. The truth seems to be, that abundance, excess, or the like, is the idea prevailing in this word; and hence perhaps its application to the jubilee,—i. e. the leading on of a number of persons,—and its relationship to בַּבּוּל, r. נבּל, deluge. Arab. cogn. بَلَّ. Rigavit; بَلَدٌ, convivium . . . providentiâ; بَلَّةٌ, bonum, beneficium, it.; بَلَّةٌ, humiditas; alimentum; بَلَّةٌ, graminis ac virentis pabuli humor. Cogn. بَلْبَلٌ. Confusus fuit. Hence يَلْبُدُ. Humidus ventus, bonum, beneficium. Syr. ܒܠܘܢ. Pabulum. Heb. בָּלִיל, id. Cogn. בּוֹל. Numerus, et multus, it. wina, it. effluxio. The leading notion of our word seems to be plenty; and hence, when applied to the earth as it is here, or to fruit-trees as elsewhere, it will necessarily signify produce. And, whether we consider it as an abbreviation of בּוּל, which it probably is (see Judg. vi. 4, &c.), or as of a cognate form, the result will still be the same.

It has already been remarked, that the hippopotamus cannot be said to frequent the mountains: that the horse tribe does, need not be proved. Now, if the בְּהֵמוֹת, of which we are now speaking, is here opposed to הַיַּיִת הַשָּׂדֶה, as in Gen. ii. 20; iii. 14 (comp. Gen. i. 24); and God is said to have given him his weapon, as in the preceding verse; and it is also said that he pastures on the mountains, where all the fiercer carnivorous beasts are found to wanton; I think we can see why the mention of weapon was here introduced: viz. to intimate that Divine wisdom had not left this tamer animal without its means of defence. This must bring to every one’s recollection a passage in the Psalms, which is perhaps a parallel to this. It occurs in Ps. l. 10. בְּיַלְיֵי כָל־חַיְתוֹי־עֵר בְּהֵמוֹת בְּהַרְרֵי־אֶלֶף. For mine are all the fierce beasts of the forest, the graminivorous beasts on a thousand mountains. Here a complete distinction is kept up between הַיַּיִת הַשָּׂדֶה and בְּהֵמוֹת. And, although the forest is the natural residence of the former, no one can deny that they occasionally take their sport on the grassy mountains (comp. Ps. cxlvii. 9); where, however, the hippopotamus, as already remarked, is never found. Abdollatif too (White's edition, p. 77) tells us, that this animal is found in the lower parts of the land in Egypt, and principally in the river near Damietta. If it be objected that the term mountain sometimes means pasture-land in Scripture, as the mountains of Bashan and Carmel; I answer, It cannot be said that all the wild beasts gambol there. That sort of mountain, therefore, cannot be meant. Abdollatif tells us a little further on, viz. p. 79, that the hippopotamus is, in reality, nothing more than a large water-hog. And the same is said by Damiri of the dolphin.—Hieroz. pt. I. lib. 1. cap. vii.

21. זָבִילִים. Wild lotuses. Gol. أَصَالٍ, et أَصْبَلٍ. Produxit locus arborum qua dicitur صَبَالٌ, coll. Lotus sylvestris, aut alia arbor. Diodorus Siculus tells us, moreover, that the lotus grows in these parts to a large size. His words are: . . . ἔτι οὐκ ἐλάττω ἀπόζουζου, lib. iii. xlii. See too Hieroz. lib. III. (p. 11.) c. x. p. 825. Rosenm. after Bochart, takes this word as equivalent to זָלִל in origin, i. e. as signifying shade generally, which is too vague. Besides, to say in the very next verse, that the shadows cover him with their shade, would be to speak in a very extraordinary way, and certainly very unlike the style of this book. One would suppose, that—

22. זָבִילִים here would, in one way or other, supply a sense not unlike that in the preceding parallel: certainly shadows will not suit this place. See Cels. Hierobot. T. I. p. 304, on this word.

23. זָבִילִים. Swell. See Schultens on this place. It is curious enough to remark, that Bochart can find nothing here but the Nile and the hippopotamus! That this animal is found both grazing and couching on the banks of the Nile, no one will deny; although all perhaps may, that זָבִילִים here means "Salices Nili." Nor will any one, that this animal is known to conceal himself among the reeds, and in the shadowy places of lakes, &c. Yet it will not follow that the זָבִילִים, properly so called, do not the very same things; and this in the marshy places bordering on the Euphrates, in Job's very neighbourhood, just as they do in the neighbourhood of the Nile, and even among ourselves in the hotter season of the year. And it is a fact, that the Arabs speak of them in this very way. In the Ichwān Ossafā, p. 14, the advocate of the זָבִילִים, is made to say: كل واحد منا مقبلٌ علي شأنه في مكانه موافقٌ لما ربه في برية او اجمة او سهل او جبل وغيره. Every one of us presenting himself in his order, in his place, according to his dwelling in the desert, or in the reed-pool, or on the plain, or on the mountain. These places, then, are assumed here as common to these beasts, whichever of them may be meant by the context. Again, speaking of the virtues of the horse (which is one of these), at pp. ۴۸-۴۹ it is said: وَجَرَبَانَ كَجَرَبَانَ السَّرْحَانَ وَمَشِيَّ كَمَشِيَّ الثَّوْرِ فِي التَّبَخْتَرِ وَخَبَبٌ كَتَقْرِبِ التَّنْعَلِ وَعَطْفَاتِ كَعَطْفَاتِ جَلْمُودِ الصَّخْرِ إِذَا حَطَّ السَّيْلُ. His running is like that of the wolf, and walking like that of the bull in his insolence. His stealing on is like the approach of the fox; and his gyrations like those of the torrent, when they beat upon the solid rock. And again, when it is said he "trusteth that he can draw Jordan into his mouth," the description is not altogether at variance with what is said of the horse at ch. xxxix. 24: nor is the Arabic citation just made,—as said of the horse,—unlike the former part of vr. 23 here. And, if we may depend upon this, the meaning of the passage is, He trusteth that he can maintain his rapid course, even in opposition to the swelling stream of the Jordan. See note on the place just cited. That is, as the horse was there said in his course to seem to drink in the earth; so here, his believing he can drink up the Jordan only means that he can maintain his course there. And such the horse is, and probably the wild ass and mule.

Once more: Are we to look for the hippopotamus in the Jordan? I believe not. I believe this animal is never found in that river. And, therefore, to get out of this difficulty, Bochart supposes the Jordan to be put here for any river: which is rather bold! It may be asked, too, with what propriety any river can be said to press upon (יִצְטֵה) the hippopotamus, which is an amphibious animal? In such a case, he would only have to dive to the bottom, and then the pressure would be at an end. The same may be said of the terms לֹא יִתְפַּח. Surely it can be no proof of the courage of any animal not to fear, or to flee from, that which could do him no harm! And this must be the case with the hippopotamus, how much soever a river may be swollen or violent. But, if we suppose such animal as the horse, onager, &c. (see ch. xxxix. 22; it. 5-9), to be meant, the terms used are proper, and the description is forcible and striking. I cannot help thinking, therefore, that the hippopotamus is not intended to be understood in this place, but some one or other of the بِهَائِم, or בְּהֵמֹת, already mentioned. lb. יִצְטֵה. See ch. xxxviii. 5. Ib. אֶל־פִּיהוּ, Bochart renders as if אֶל־פִּיהוּ, Over his mouth; and makes צִיָּה to signify crumpet. He then compares this with Ps. lxix. 2, and cxxiv. 4. “Ut spirandi meatus intereludat.” But why all this? Is it to prove either the strength or courage of the animal? No: it is only making much ado about nothing! Strabo will shew us, in the sixteenth book of his Geography, that animals of this description were in great abundance in the deserts of Arabia, not far from Job’s country: and much the same is the case now. Either the horse, or wild ass, or wild bull, will, as before, suit this description.

24. בְּעֵינָיו. Lit. In his eyes: i. e. in his sight, and when he is looking on. אֶת־בִּזְיוֹנוֹ. One bore his nose: i. e. so as to put an iron ring therein, and then lead him away to servitude like a camel. See Isa. xxxvii. 29. According to my view, some one of the بیاض, or בהמות, is here meant; and it may be either the wild horse or ass: probably the latter. See ch. xxxix. 5-9. I suppose, therefore, that from vr. 15 to 25 some one or other of these graminivorous animals is meant; but that it is left to the intelligence of the reader to discover which of them, and so to apply the context as he proceeds, which is no difficult thing. And, if this be the case, then no such monster as the behemoth ever existed, either in the world or in the mind of the sacred writer; and the whole is a figment of Jewish ignorance and superstition!

25. לְהוֹרֵתוֹ. Canst thou draw forth leviathan? &c. It has already been shewn, ch. iii. 8; xxx. 29; that לְהוֹרֵתוֹ and הוֹרֵתוֹ signify the same animal. See also ch. vii. 12. I now remark, that there is no reason—as far at least as I can discover—for supposing that הוֹרֵתוֹ and לְהוֹרֵתוֹ do not also mean the same thing. The only question, therefore, we now have to consider is, what animal, or species of animal, it is which, by this or that word is intended in the sacred writings. Bochart and many others, suppose it to signify the crocodile here; in some other places, the whale, or other sea-monster. My opinion is, that in this place the description rather suits the whale, and more particularly one of the dolphin tribe; although I believe sea-monster is the general intention of the sacred writer: just as בהמות is taken generically in the preceding context. In some others, the wolf. Let us first consider Bochart’s opinion. He tells us, then (Hieroz. pt. II. lib. v. cap. xvi.), “Radix porò nec Hebræa est, nec Syra, sed Arabica.” But in this he is manifestly wrong; for it is both Hebrew and Syriac, as well as Arabic. Heb. לֹוּהַ, whence לְהוֹרֵתוֹ, Prov. i. 9, &c., adjunctio,

&c. Syr. ܠܘܝ , or ܠܘܝܝܢ . Conjuxit, &c. He proceeds: “Arabice scilicet verbum لوي passim occurrit in significatione flectendi, et contorquendi,” &c.; and his conclusion is, “Itaque Leviathan propriè sinuosum est animal, et in plures spiras volubile, qualis est maximè draco . . . Itaque leviathan a Esaiâ definitur עקלרתן נחש serpens obliquus, vel tortuosus . . . Ita,” he adds, “et nomine leviathan passim cetos, et balenas appellari videas, ut Ps. lxxiv. 14, et civ. 26, et Es. xxvii. 1.” This is good, and worthy of all acceptation, perhaps; but, when we are told that “Quâ ipsâ de causa factum ut utroque nomine thamim, inquam, et leviathan, crocodili significentur, quia crocodili sunt ad similitudinem draconis, ut asserit Haitho Armenus,” &c., it may be excusable to object: because, however like a crocodile may be to a dragon, or how respectable soever the person making this assertion, still it ought not to be mistaken for proof that a crocodile is a dragon, or that the term leviathan, which means tortuosus, will apply to an animal the farthest removed possible from such a character. I must say therefore that, whatever other arguments may be adduced to prove that לניחן here means a crocodile, certainly the assertion of Haitho, viz. that the crocodile is like a dragon,—which latter the term לניחן also means,—can never suffice for that purpose: not only because similitude does not constitute identity, but also because dragou is a most indefinite and delusive term.

A little further on, viz. Hicroz. ib. cap. xviii., Bochart offers some other reasons to shew that leviathan here must mean the crocodile. These he deduces from a consideration of Ezek. xxix. 3, 4, and xxxii. 2, 3. In the first of these places it is said: “Ecce ego insurgam contra te Pharao Rex Aegypti, magne thamin, qui cubas in medio rivorum tuorum,” &c. “Et indam hamos maxillis tuis, et agglutinabo pisces rivorum tuorum squamis tuis, et ascendere te faciam è medio rivorum tuorum,” &c. And, in the second, “Tu eras sicut thamin in maribus . . . et prodibas per flumina tua, et turbabas aquas pedibus tuis,” &c. “At expandam super te rete meum in catu multorum populorum, qui te trahent in sagenam meam.” The arguments drawn from these passages are these. “Iis, inquam, verbis, Pharaonem clarum est cum crocodilo, non cum balena, conferri, quæ nec pedes habet, nec squamas, nec versatur in Aegypti rivis, et fluminibus, nec inde ascendit in terram, nec retium indagine cingitur. Sed neque eam hamo capi quisquam dixit præter unum Oppianum,” &c. One consideration more. Ib. “Ad Pharaonis nomen sic alluditur, quo crocodilum significari, ex Arabibus discimus, Alcamus الفرعون التمساح Pharao, crocodilus," &c.

To begin with the last of these. This passage, cited from the Kāmoos, is nothing more than a comment on a passage in the Koran. It is, therefore, of no earthly use or value whatever in this place; and it is astonishing how Bochart could have so much imposed upon himself as to have thought otherwise. To proceed now to the others in their order. First, then, The whale has no feet. Nor does the passage affirm that the animal here mentioned has; but only that Pharaoh did with his feet disturb the waters, just as the מַגֵּן did, by some means. In the second place, it is not certain that squamas is meant by the word מְשֻׁקֵּשׁוֹת, found in the original. The passage alluded to stands thus: וְהִדְבַקְתִּי דְגַת־יַאֲרֵיד בְּמִשְׁקֵשׁוֹתֶיהָ . . . וְנָחַת קַלְיָהָרָה יַאֲרֵיד: וְהִדְבַקְתִּי דְגַת־יַאֲרֵיד בְּמִשְׁקֵשׁוֹתֶיהָ—Auth Vers. “And I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales . . . and all the fish of thy rivers shall stick unto thy scales.” We have another word occurring in the Law, viz. כַּנְפַיִר, which is usually translated by fins. Now the question here is, Are these words accurately translated? From the accounts given of them in the dictionaries, it is certain that very little is known about them. My own opinion is, that the first of these ought to be translated fins, the latter scales, contrary to the usual practice. My reasons are these:—First, I cannot see how fish can be said to adhere to the scales of any other fish, or similar animal; while it is certain that the fins of the whale, and indeed of other fish, are used, some to protect their young, and others (the dorsal fins) for other purposes. Secondly, both the LXX. and Syriac translators give here, the former, τὰς πτερύγας σου; the latter, ^{١٢٢}صفت, signifying the same thing. Thirdly, from the etymology. In the Rabbinic, קָשְׁקֵשׁ signifies sarrire, sarculis fodere; קִשְׁקִישׁ, sarritio, tinnitus, &c. And, under this verb (col. 3469), Castell gives קִשְׁקֵשׁ, Lorica. I make no account here of the difference between שׁ and שׁ, which arises merely out of the pointing; and I take קָשְׁקֵשׁ, durus fuit, to be a cognate root: it being a fact, that the fin is generally harder than the scales of any fish. In the Arabic, قَصَصَ. Communit rem. iv. conj. durus, asper fuit; قَصَصَتْ, aspera contactu, &c. lorica (comp. 1 Sam. xvii. 5). Cogn. قَصَصَ. Confregit. كَصَصَ, celeriter incessit; كَصَصَ, motus et agitatus fuit. To which many other cognates may be added. The word in

I Sam. xvii. 5, means armour ; probably a coat of mail : not because it is like the scales of a fish, but because it is hard and impenetrable, and intended as a means of defence. In the Æth. ቆብቆብ : signifies any piece of furniture.—Ludolf, coll. 201. If any reliance can be placed on these, they certainly apply much better to the fn̄s than to the scales of fish. As to the other word, viz. ቆቆቆቆ. We have, Æth. ቆቆቆቆ : protegit, obtexit. Arab. صَنْعَرٌ. Opus plexile ; ظَفَرٌ, unguis (supposing the 2 to have been inserted, which is often done, by way of augmentation). And, in the Coptic, Ⲙⲉⲛⲉⲩⲓ. Shenfi, squammæ piscium : which is, in all probability, the identical word in question. All of which would rather go to prove that ቆቆቆቆ must mean scales, not fn̄s. In other places, indeed, the LXX. and Syr. take these words in the order as usual ; but this can amount to nothing, as it is but of little consequence what order is taken. This argument, therefore, cannot stand for much. In the third place, a species of the whale tribe is found in the Nile ; and, as I shall presently shew, of that too which is described here. Fourthly, “Nec inde ascendit in terram.” Nor does the text say it does ; but only, that when taken it should be made so to ascend, just as any other monster might. Fifthly, “Nec retium iudagine angitur.” This, I shall presently shew, is true of the whale. Sixthly, “Sed neque cum hamo capi,” &c. I answer : Nor does the word here used necessarily mean any such thing, as every one will see by consulting the lexicons. So far, then, these considerations are of little force or weight. (Boch. repeats them, ib. pt. I. lib. i. cap. viii.)

Once more. Upon collating vr. 5 here, viz. Ezek. xxix. with Ps. lxxiv. 13, 14, it will be evident, I think, that the same animal is meant : for, in each case, the dead carcase is given for food. And, in this last place, Bochart himself has no doubt the whale is meant (Hieroz. pt. II. lib. v. cap. xvi.). Compare now with these two passages, Ezek. xxxii. 4, 5, and say, Is not the same animal meant in them all ?—Let us now examine the particulars.

וּבְהַבֵּל תִּשְׁקֶינִי. Or with a cord which thou lettest down. וּבְהַבֵּל seems to be understood here. Ib. לְשׁוֹנוֹ. His tongue, i. e. תִּשְׁקֶינִי supplied from the beginning of the verse. Wilt thou draw out, or along? Bochart finds a real difficulty here, because writers are unanimous in declaring that the crocodile has no such tongue as can be thus dealt with ; but, that the tongue he has is made fast to his lower jaw. It is quite ridiculous to observe how this writer labours to prove that Aristotle spoke, in saying this, after the manner of the vulgar; and that, although the crocodile seemed to have no tongue, yet that, in fact, he had a small one, which was immovable, and—which he allows after all—could not be taken with a hook, as here described! Nothing can be more certain, than that whales of the dolphin tribe have all tongues.

26. אֶבְיִן. A reed: “id est,” says Bochart, “funem junceum.” I see no necessity for this. The parallelism seems to require, that by a reed should here be meant a light sort of spear, or arrow, made of the reed, for the purpose of striking the smaller fish. Ib. נִבְרֹחַ. Or with a thorn. “Id est,” adds Bochart, “hamo spinæ instar acuto.” This too is objectionable; and particularly so, as it tends to recommend a principle of interpretation by similitude, as if (as before noticed) things similar ought to be taken as identical. I take הַרְחֵק, therefore, in its simple and obvious sense; implying that it would be absurd to attempt taking this animal, as the smaller fish are, by merely fixing an arrow, or thorn, in his jaw.

27. תִּתְרַבֵּה וְגו'. Will he multiply cries? &c. Allusion is, I think, here made to well-known cries of the dolphin. Comp. Mich. i. 8; Pliny, Solinus, &c., as cited by Bochart, Hieroz. pt. I. lib. 1. cap. vii. “A captis delphinis,” says Petr. Gill, ib. “tanti fletus gemitusque fiunt, ut cum in navi ubi permulti delphini tenebantur pernoctarem, mihi acerbissimum dolorem inusserint,” &c. And Mr. Dewhurst, in his Natural History of the Whale, speaking of the fiercest of the dolphin tribe, one of which was some time ago captured in Lynn harbour, says, p. 179, “It was with much difficulty they were able to despatch him by the help of knives and sharpened oars. The groans,” he adds, “of the poor animal are described as having been most horrible, and the effusion of blood very great.” This tribe vary, according to Mr. Dewhurst, from twenty to twenty-four feet in length. The one just mentioned measured, from the tip of the upper jaw to the division of the tail, following the curve of the back, twenty-one feet three inches.

This animal, viz. the Delphinus Orca communis, or common grampus, “is,” says Mr. Dewhurst, “of an extremely fierce and predaceous disposition, feeding on the larger fishes, and even on the dolphin and porpoise. It is also said to attack whales, and to devour seals, which it occasionally finds sleeping on the rocks, dislodging them by means of its back fin, and precipitating them into the water. This animal is found both in the Mediterranean and Atlantic seas.

... The lower jaw is much wider than the upper . . . the dorsal fin sometimes measures not less than six feet in length, from the base to the tip. Fabricius," continues he, "emphatically styles it Balenarum Tyrannus; and it is considered as one of the most ferocious inhabitants of the ocean." Of the common dolphin, Mr. Dewhurst says, p. 176, that "the motions of this animal are inconceivably swift: hence it has been named by mariners . . . the arrow of the sea." And of the porpoise, another species of the dolphin, p. 172, it "is observed, when in quest of food, to turn up the sand and mud at the bottom of the water like a common dolphin," &c. And ib. p. 176, the common dolphins "are gregarious, and, like the porpoises, frequently sport about upon the surface, leaping out of the water, so as to be entirely visible. (Comp. Ps. civ. 26.) Again, p. 170, "The porpoises are constantly to be found sporting in the stormy sea," &c. This is also said of some other whales; and is, probably, true of them all.

There is another sort of whale, viz. the Balenoptera vorqual, or broad-nosed whale; which, as it is found in the Mediterranean, is not improbably had in view in this description of the leviathan. "This genus" (ib. p. 114) "is found not to remain so much in the northward as the common Greenland whale . . . I have already stated its occasional occurrence in the seas about Great Britain, Ireland, Norway, &c. It has also been found in the Mediterranean, near the Straits of Gibraltar." . . . "Its great velocity, &c. make this species a matter of indifference to the whalers, who rarely attempt its capture." One of these, lately exhibited in the skeleton at Charing Cross, London, was found to be ninety-five feet in length, and to weigh, when entire, two hundred and forty tons!

Another species of this is the Balenoptera gibbar, or razor-backed whale. (Dewhurst, p. 92.) This is generally found in the northern seas; but one, as it is believed, one hundred and one feet long, was stranded in 1750 on the banks of the river Humber. A musket-ball appears to make no impression on it (ib. p. 94), and, when struck with the harpoon, "not unfrequently drags the fast-boat with tremendous speed . . . hence the harpooner is commonly under the necessity of cutting the line." (Comp. Job, xli. 18.)

I have cited these few different accounts of the whale, because I have thought it probable that the description, which it is my business to illustrate, may take in more than really belongs—or was intended to be understood as belonging—to any one species of the whale tribe. My opinion, however is, as already intimated, that the Delphinus Orca communis, or common grampus, is the animal more particularly had in view; because, not only does it answer our description best generally, but also is found in the Mediterranean, the Red Sea, and also the Nile. I shall now present a few extracts from Oriental writers, for the purpose of enabling the reader to see, how exactly their notions of this animal suit the context of the sacred writer in this place.

Bochart, Hieroz. pt. I. lib. i. cap. vii. gives the following from Kazwini:—Pessimus est ex Alcausegis (الكلوسج). In ore habet dentes instar cuspidis hastæ: Longus est, ut palma proceræ, oculis rubentibus instar sanguinis, latus ore, et ventre, aspectu fulgurante. Vorat animalia multa, ita ut tam terre, quam maris animalibus sit terribilis. Cùm morietur, mare fluctuat præ roboris ejus vehementia. And, a little lower down, “Est animal (i. e. الكلوسج) in mare infestus, quàm in terra leo, quod aquatica animalia scindit dentibus suis, السيف الماضي ut ensis egregiè cadens.” And again, from Zamakhshari: “Frequens est in mari Kelzem, in quo submersus est Pharao.”—“Almutariz,” adds Bochart, “eandem belluam omnium mari belluarum dicit esse dominam, et longè pessimam.” “ORCAM puto significari,” continues Bochart, “infestam balænis belluam, ejus imago, inquit Plinius, nullâ representatione exprimi possit aliâ, quam curnis immense dentibus trulentæ.” This is, in substance, just what Mr. Dewhurst and Fabricius, as cited above, have said of the “Orea communis,” or common grampus; some parts of which are almost literal translations of an hitherto extremely obscure passage in our description: viz. ch. xli. 26. We are told too by Abdollatif (White’s ed. p. 75), that the dolphin is found in the Nile, particularly about Tanis and Damietta. Having now touched generally on the character of these animals, let us proceed with our comments.

28. הַיְקָרֹת וְגוֹ. Will he make a covenant? &c. That is, Sensible of thy power, will he be content to accept terms of servitude at thy hands, as the conquered generally do, and so become a perpetual slave? On the phrase here used, see the dictionaries.

29. הַיְשִׁחֲקֶיבוּ. Wilt thou play with him? &c. So Catullus, as cited by Bochart:

“Passer delicia mea puellæ, Quicum luderet,” &c.

There is a peculiar propriety in applying this to the whale, which, as already observed, is often seen sporting among the stormy waves of the ocean. Ib. וְהִתְקַשְׁרוּ. And wilt thou attach him? &c. See note on ch. xxxviii. 31.

31. וְיִכְרְוּ וְגו'. Will companies bargain? &c. This verb is often taken in the sense of digging; and, as bargains were usually ratified by the slaughtering and feasting upon animals (see Gen. xxxi. 54), hiring, bargaining, and the like, have become part of its significations. Arab. كَرَى. Fodit terram; conjj. vi. viii. x., conduxit; كَرَى, conductionis pretium; كَرِي, conductor, &c. Ib. הַחֲפָרִים. Persons whose profession it is to trade in companies, as in the caravans of the East. See Gen. xxxvii. 25; and Gram. Art. 154, 12, and note. Ib. כְּנַעֲנִים. Lit. Chanaanites. "Quia Chanaanæ mercaturæ erant dediti, ideò Chanaanæus in scriptura passim pro mercatore sumitur."—Bochart. That is, Is the capture of this animal so certain, that thou mayest stipulate with the merchants for his sale, apportioning him, &c., as a matter of course, beforehand?

Ib. בַּשִּׁבּוֹת. With missiles, or pikes. Bochart, שכורת, missilia explicamus ex Arabica lingua, quæ شوكة vel شكة missile et teli acumen est. "Sed, et גַּלְגַּל, pro telo, geminatis radicalibus alludit ad Arabicum ضالة, quod sagittas explicant Giggæius, et Golius, ille in ضول, hic in ضبل." Bochart adds a note to the effect, that if a whale were spoken of here, this could have no good application, because it is usual to capture it with instruments such as these; otherwise, if a crocodile was meant, whose coating is impervious to them. Whence he would have it inferred, that the animal spoken of could not be a whale, but was probably a crocodile. I doubt whether such inference can fairly be drawn; for, first, No one ever thinks, or ever thought, of attacking a crocodile in this manner. There are other and easier ways of despatching that animal, as Bochart himself has shewn (Hieroz. Pars II. lib. v. cap. xvi.). It would therefore have been out of place to talk of destroying that animal in this way. Again, no one, I believe, ever thought of dividing a crocodile among the merchants, as said of this animal in the preceding verse. No part of that animal was, I think, ever made matter of merchandise. It would therefore have been out of place to speak in this way with respect to him. In the second place, there are whales, as already noticed—whose oil at least is, and perhaps was, even at this early time—an object worthy the attention of merchants; and these animals are killed in the manner here described.

Yet it is a fact that some of these, as mentioned above, are so powerful, swift, and determinate, in opposing the greatest combined force that can be brought against them, that very rarely indeed are they attacked at all, much less by a single individual, as here intimated. I do not think, therefore, that Bochart's remark is of much weight. After all, however, Bochart reduces the argument to this: "Hæ ad Jobum provocaciones tantum eo pertinent, ut scias non esse, quod sibi quis facilem de eo animali spondeat victoriam, cum et mole sit vastum, et robore tremendum:" which may be said with equal propriety of the whale. A little lower down, he doubts of the truth of the stories told by the ancients, when they affirm that the Tentyritæ very easily despatched them; and he adds, by way of confirmation of this, that no one of modern times has seen any such thing done. I remark, One would hardly think this sufficient to bear down a statement supported by the most respectable writers of antiquity. Many things might have happened, in so long a period of time, sufficient to put an end to the custom; such, for example, as wars between that people. Yet Abdollatif speaks, even in his times, of certain men brought from Nigritia, two of whom very soon destroyed two very formidable hippopotami, which had infested the neighbourhood of Damietta for a considerable time. White's edit. p. 79; which appears to me to shew, that something not unlike the ancient practice referred to, actually existed in his days.

32. יָשַׁע יָדוֹ. Lit. Lay on him, i. e. concerning him, thy hand, supp. פִּי, to thy mouth, in token of silence and astonishment. Comp. ch. xxix. 9, and xxi. 5, above. It cannot be meant, surely, that the hand is to be laid on this terrific animal; yet Rosenmüller has here, "Injice ei volum tuam, i. e. si injicere ei ausus fueris, recordari," &c. Bochart, "cum ipso tactu compereris eum esse illi contra omnem ictum invictam." But surely, there could be no necessity for touching the animal, in order to ascertain this, in the one case; nor for putting the man in mind, in the other, that the contest would be a very unequal one. This would be just as much as to say: If you cannot believe my statement, make the trial for yourself: when, in fact, the whole argument proceeds on the assumption, that enough is known to need no such experiment: and to this the subsequent context bears its testimony. On my view, the general sense would be, The character of this animal, or class of animals, is such as to excite the deepest dread and astonishment, even in its contemplation: much more upon the supposition of its being encountered single-handed. Forbear, then, even to think of such a project.

It has already been remarked, that the term $\lambda\upsilon\gamma\mu\acute{\alpha}\tau\eta\varsigma$ here used contains the notion of sea-monster generally; and that my belief is, this was the intention of the sacred writer. It might also apply to those enormous serpents which are occasionally seen in the sea, and in the warmer climates in lakes, and occasionally on the land. I shall notice here a relation to this effect given by Diodorus Siculus (lib. iii. xxxv. &c.) He first tells us that the tales, related by historians as well as by the natives of Æthiopia, about these serpents, exceeded all belief. These he passes over, and proceeds to tell us of the means had recourse to by a certain company of merchants, for the purpose of taking one alive for one of the Ptolemys of Egypt. We are then told of the first attempt to take one of thirty cubits long, in which a total failure was experienced, and many of the persons engaged were killed: $\Omega\varsigma\ \delta\acute{\epsilon}\ \epsilon\pi\lambda\eta\sigma\acute{\iota}\alpha\zeta\omicron\nu$ (says he) $\acute{\alpha}\epsilon\iota\ \mu\acute{\alpha}\lambda\lambda\omicron\nu\ \epsilon\zeta\epsilon\pi\lambda\acute{\eta}\tau\tau\omicron\nu\ \tau\omega\ \delta\acute{\epsilon}\epsilon\iota$, $\theta\epsilon\omega\rho\omicron\upsilon\nu\tau\epsilon\varsigma\ \acute{\alpha}\mu\mu\alpha\ \pi\upsilon\rho\omega\pi\omicron\nu$, $\kappa\alpha\iota\ \lambda\upsilon\gamma\mu\omega\mu\acute{\epsilon}\nu\eta\nu\ \acute{\alpha}\nu\tau\eta\ \tau\eta\nu\ \gamma\lambda\omega\tau\tau\alpha\nu$, $\acute{\epsilon}\tau\iota\ \delta\acute{\epsilon}\ \tau\eta\ \tau\rho\alpha\chi\upsilon\tau\eta\tau\iota\ \tau\omega\nu\ \phi\omicron\lambda\acute{\iota}\delta\omega\nu$, $\epsilon\nu\ \tau\eta\ \delta\iota\acute{\alpha}\ \tau\eta\varsigma\ \acute{\upsilon}\lambda\eta\varsigma\ \pi\omicron\rho\epsilon\acute{\iota}\alpha\ \kappa\alpha\iota\ \pi\alpha\rho\alpha\tau\rho\acute{\iota}\psi\epsilon\iota$, $\psi\acute{\upsilon}\phi\omicron\nu\ \epsilon\zeta\acute{\alpha}\iota\sigma\iota\omicron\nu\ \kappa\alpha\tau\alpha\sigma\kappa\epsilon\upsilon\acute{\alpha}\zeta\omicron\nu\tau\alpha$, $\tau\omicron\ \mu\acute{\epsilon}\gamma\epsilon\theta\acute{\omicron}\varsigma\ \tau\epsilon\ \tau\omicron\ \tau\omega\nu\ \delta\omicron\omicron\nu\tau\omega\nu\ \acute{\upsilon}\pi\epsilon\rho\phi\upsilon\acute{\epsilon}\varsigma$, $\kappa\alpha\iota\ \sigma\acute{\omicron}\mu\alpha\tau\omicron\varsigma\ \acute{\alpha}\gamma\gamma\acute{\iota}\alpha\nu\ \pi\rho\acute{\omicron}\sigma\omega\psi\iota\nu$, $\kappa\alpha\iota\ \kappa\upsilon\kappa\lambda\acute{\omega}\mu\alpha\tau\omicron\varsigma\ \acute{\alpha}\nu\acute{\alpha}\sigma\tau\eta\mu\alpha\ \pi\alpha\rho\acute{\alpha}\delta\omicron\zeta\omicron\nu$, $\delta\iota\acute{\omicron}\tau\epsilon\rho\ \tau\omega\ \phi\acute{\omicron}\zeta\omega\ \tau\acute{\alpha}\ \chi\rho\acute{\omega}\mu\alpha\tau\alpha\ \tau\omega\nu\ \pi\rho\omicron\sigma\omega\psi\omega\nu\ \acute{\alpha}\pi\omicron\beta\epsilon\beta\lambda\eta\kappa\acute{\omicron}\tau\epsilon\varsigma$, $\delta\epsilon\iota\lambda\acute{\omega}\varsigma\ \epsilon\pi\acute{\epsilon}\epsilon\chi\alpha\lambda\lambda\omicron\nu\ \tau\omicron\upsilon\varsigma\ \beta\rho\acute{\upsilon}\chi\omicron\upsilon\varsigma\ \epsilon\pi\acute{\iota}\ \tau\eta\varsigma\ \sigma\acute{\upsilon}\rho\acute{\alpha}\varsigma$. $\tau\omicron\ \delta\acute{\epsilon}\ \theta\eta\rho\acute{\iota}\omicron\nu$, $\acute{\alpha}\mu\alpha\ \tau\omega\ \pi\rho\omicron\sigma\acute{\alpha}\psi\alpha\sigma\tau\alpha\iota\ \tau\omicron\upsilon\ \sigma\acute{\omega}\mu\alpha\tau\omicron\varsigma\ \tau\omicron\nu\ \kappa\acute{\alpha}\lambda\omega\nu$, $\epsilon\pi\epsilon\sigma\tau\rho\acute{\alpha}\phi\eta\ \mu\epsilon\tau\acute{\alpha}\ \pi\omicron\lambda\lambda\omicron\upsilon\ \phi\upsilon\sigma\acute{\eta}\mu\alpha\tau\omicron\varsigma\ \kappa\alpha\tau\alpha\pi\lambda\eta\kappa\tau\iota\kappa\acute{\omega}\varsigma$, $\kappa\alpha\iota\ \tau\omicron\nu\ \mu\acute{\epsilon}\nu\ \pi\rho\acute{\omega}\tau\omicron\nu\ \acute{\alpha}\rho\pi\acute{\alpha}\zeta\epsilon\iota\ \tau\omega\ \sigma\tau\omicron\mu\alpha\tau\iota\ \dots\ \kappa\alpha\iota\ \tau\acute{\alpha}\varsigma\ \acute{\alpha}\sigma\epsilon\rho\kappa\alpha\varsigma\ \acute{\epsilon}\tau\iota\ \zeta\omega\nu\tau\omicron\varsigma\ \kappa\alpha\tau\epsilon\sigma\iota\tau\epsilon\acute{\iota}\tau\omicron$. $\tau\omicron\nu\ \delta\acute{\epsilon}\ \delta\epsilon\upsilon\tau\epsilon\rho\omicron\nu\ \phi\acute{\epsilon}\upsilon\gamma\omicron\nu\tau\alpha\ \tau\eta\ \sigma\tau\epsilon\acute{\iota}\rho\alpha\ \pi\acute{\alpha}\rho\acute{\rho}\omega\theta\epsilon\nu\ \epsilon\pi\epsilon\sigma\tau\acute{\alpha}\sigma\alpha\tau\omicron$, $\kappa\alpha\iota\ \pi\epsilon\rho\epsilon\iota\lambda\eta\theta\acute{\epsilon}\nu\ \acute{\epsilon}\sigma\phi\iota\gamma\gamma\epsilon\ \tau\eta\nu\ \kappa\omicron\iota\lambda\acute{\iota}\alpha\nu\ \tau\omega\ \delta\epsilon\sigma\mu\acute{\omega}\ \dots\ \omicron\iota\ \delta\acute{\epsilon}\ \lambda\omicron\iota\pi\omicron\iota\ \acute{\alpha}\nu\tau\epsilon\varsigma\ \epsilon\kappa\pi\lambda\alpha\gamma\acute{\epsilon}\nu\tau\epsilon\varsigma\ \delta\iota\acute{\alpha}\ \tau\eta\varsigma\ \phi\upsilon\gamma\acute{\eta}\varsigma\ \tau\eta\nu\ \sigma\omega\tau\eta\rho\acute{\iota}\alpha\nu\ \epsilon\pi\omicron\rho\acute{\iota}\sigma\alpha\nu\tau\omicron$. “At quo propius accedunt, eo plus terroris invadit, cum oculos igni quasi ardentibus, et exsertæ linguæ vibratam, strepitumque immanem, asperitate squamarum, et virgulta prosterrente incessu excitatum, et enormium dentium magnitudinem, adspectumque oris truculentum, et peraltæ spiræ orbem, collis instar deprehendunt. Per totum igitur faciem consternatione pallidi timide laqueum caudæ injiciunt. Qui simulac corpus attigit, cum sibilo se monstrum horrendo retorquens, primum . . . rictu suo arreptat, vivique adhuc carnes dilaniat. Secundum procul ex ipsa fuga spiræ innexu attrahit, et circumvolvens se medio constrictum ventre firmiter tenet. Reliqui metu percussî fuga saluti consulunt.” Eventually, however, one was taken and carried to Alexandria. This was perhaps one of the boa species. Valerius Maximus, lib. i. c. viii.—to which Pliny, lib. viii. c. xiv. A. Gellius, lib. vi. c. iii. &c. also bear testimony—tells us from Livy of a serpent of immense size contesting with Regulus the passage of a river in Africa. Pontopiddan, too, Hist. of Norway, vol. ii. p. 195, &c. gives a similar account of an enormous sea-serpent. These may perhaps fall in with the general scope of the sacred writer. Comp. Isa. xxvii. 1, &c. and Mr. Dewhurst's work, p. 205, et seq.

From what follows, it is evident that the argument involves a sort of climax, or what is usually termed à fortiori; i. e. If the case be thus as to this animal, how must it be with reference to God, who is not only the Creator of it, but of all this immense and splendid universe? And certainly a more humiliating consideration cannot be presented to the human mind. Upon the whole, as בְּהַבִּיט, in the preceding context, signifies no one particular animal, but rather those quadrupeds which are most remarkable for their strength and courage; so here, לְוִיָּהֵן signifies those monsters of the seas which are the most powerful, swift, and destructive: and the descriptions here given are generally more suitable to the whale tribes than to any other of the aquatic or amphibious animals.

CHAPTER XLI.

1. הוֹחֵלְתֵּנוּ. His hope, i. e. of any one so presuming to act. Comp. Eccl. vi. 10. הִנְחָזְרָה. Lit. Hath been made false, failing, &c. It has already been remarked, that words signifying lying (chh. xvi. 8; xxxiv. 6), originally implied defect. The preterite is here used to imply a strong future sense. Gram. Art. 236. Ib. הִנְחָה, for נִחָה לֹא, the negative sense being implied in the preceding verb. הִנְחָה. Lit. Thrown down at length. Hoph. of חָל: that is, The sight of such an animal is quite sufficient to put an effectual end to every idea of conflict.

2. לֹא־אֶפְקֹד. There is none so fierce, &c. i. e. no individual who dares do so. וַיִּצְרְעֵנִי. That he stir him up, i. e. provoke him to the battle. See also ch. iii. 8, above.

3. הִקְדַּמְתִּי. Hath caused to be before me, i. e. hath laid something before me as a plan, which I am to fulfil: hath prescribed a course for me.

4. אֶשְׁתַּחֲוֶה. I will not be silent, or dissemble, i. e. will now more fully enter on the description of his power, &c. Ib. וַיִּצְרְעֵנִי. His powers. Whether this word have the sense here which I have given to it in ch. xviii. 13, or whether it take its meaning from the branches of trees, as limbs, according to the lexicons, the exegetical sense will be much the same;

i. e. powers, or the like. וְהִזִּין. And the destructiveness, &c. Commentators, &c. have generally taken this word as equivalent to הָן, gracefulness, &c. But how this can apply either to the crocodile, or the whale, it is beyond my powers of vision to see. No animals, perhaps, are more ill-favoured in form than these. I feel compelled, therefore, to take the Arabic حَيِّنٌ, r. حَيِّنٌ, or حَوْنٌ, perit,—exitium, pernicies, &c. עֲרֵבֹא, order, equipment, array, &c. for the battle.

5. פָּנָיו לְבִשָׁאוֹ. Lit. The faces of his clothing, i. e. so exposed him, as to have deprived him of his power. This verb is used to denote the dismantling of any fortress, and thence to imply captivity. See ch. xxxiii. 16, &c. Ib. בְּדִבְבָּלָהּ. Lit. With, or for, doubling. Schultens takes the construction of וְבוֹא, with בָּ here, as equivalent to the Arabic جَاءَ بِهِ, he came with it; which is perhaps straining the point. In order to double, for the purpose, &c. seems to me to suit the place better. The whole thus: Who can lay him open to assault? Who can approach and place a surcingle on his nose? i. e. as on the nose of a fierce camel.

6. בְּלִתֵּי וְגַ'. The doors of, &c. The terms used are still military. To lay open, Arab. فَتَّحَ, and Pers. گشادَن, having the same meaning, are often used to signify victory. Ib. אֲשָׁפִי. His teeth. Arab. سِنَانٌ, acies, cuspisque hastæ, as if armed in this part with encircling spears. The crocodile, it is true, has teeth and a mouth, which will very well suit this description. But this is also true of the whale, and particularly of that genus, which seems to be described here. Of the whale, one genus has teeth only in the lower jaw, another, in both the upper and lower.

I shall now give a few extracts from Mr. Dewhurst's book on both these genera. Of the Physeter cylindricus, it is said, p. 161: "This species has a hunch on the back; the teeth are curved and pointed at the top; the spiracles, or breathing-holes, are in the middle of the snout . . . The head is at least one-third of the whole length of the body . . . On each side of the lower jaw there is a row of twenty-five curved, sharp-pointed teeth. The dorsal-fin is replaced by a hunch, eighteen inches high, and four inches and a half long at the base."

Of the Physeter microps, another species of this animal, the account of La Cépède is, that it "is one of the largest, most cruel, and most dangerous inhabitants of the deep. Adding to formidable weapons, the two great sources of strength, bulk and velocity; greedy of carnage, a daring enemy, and an intrepid fighter: what part of the ocean does he not stain with blood?" "Its head is so enormous as to equal the whole length of the body . . . The teeth, which appear in . . . (the lower jaw), are conical . . . The dorsal-fin is straight, high, and pointed, and by some zoologists has been compared to a needle. The whole length of the animal usually exceeds fifty feet" (pp. 162, 3). Another species, the Physeter mular, or great-finned cachalot, is said to be very wild, and difficult to wound, and consequently is but rarely taken. "It appears that the harpoon can only pierce them in one or two places near the pectoral fins." (Ib. p. 165.)

Of the dolphin genus, the Porpoise is said to have a mouth of a moderate width; the teeth sharp, small, and numerous, being commonly from forty to fifty in the jaw. The common dolphin has, according to some, ninety-six teeth in the upper jaw, ninety in the lower; according to others, forty-seven in each jaw. This, as well as the preceding, stirs up the mud at the bottom when in quest of his prey (ib. pp. 172, 175). "The mouth . . . is very wide, reaching almost to the insertion of the head. The dorsal-fin is high."

The common Grampus, the largest animal of the dolphin genus, has forty teeth in each jaw. It will attack both whales and seals with its dorsal-fin, which is sometimes not less than six feet in length from the base to the tip. It has twenty-four teeth in each jaw; "the seven backward ones are cuspidate: the rest appear to have been the same, but are now worn down." (Ib. pp. 178, 180.) It would be endless to cite the various accounts of this animal: what has now been given is sufficient to shew its very near accordance with the description given by our sacred writer.

7. חַרְשֵׁן. A back. This I take to be the dorsal-fin just spoken of: a weapon unknown to the crocodile. Bochart takes the word to mean corpus vel tergum. "Quia," says he, "crocodili squamæ potissimum in tergo sunt." The squamæ have been disposed of. Let us now see what is further said. חַרְשֵׁן חַרְשֵׁן. The risings, or embossings, of shields. This Bochart passes over. Winer renders it, "squamaram nales." But what are these? Dicat qui possit. Rosenmüller gives "roboru scutorum." But no such sense is contained in the term חַרְשֵׁן. In ancient shields, however, there was occasionally an eminence in the middle, raised to a considerable height, and terminating in a sharp point, not unlike the dorsal-fin of one of these whales. With this, too, the animal does similar execution, in attacking and wounding his adversaries. The particle of similitude \aleph must be supplied here by the ellipsis. Ib. "קָבֵר וְגוֹ", I take to intimate the firmness and strength of this fin, comparing it to the setting of a signet in metal.

8. "אֶחָד וְגוֹ". One to another, &c. This, as well as what follows in the next verse, applies probably both to the account of the teeth preceding, and to the setting in of this dorsal-fin: implying that all is compact, firm, and inseparable.

10. "עֵטִישְׁתָּיו". His neesings. "Per nares," says Bochart, "confertim actus spiritus tanto prorumpit impetus ut scintillare videatur, et flammæ emittere." "Quod plurimum scriptorum testimoniis confirmat," says Rosenmüller. Yet, I can find but one from Aristotle, in which the crocodile is said to sneeze: not one telling us that this gives out a light, or any thing like it.

Ib. "וְעֵינָיו וְגוֹ". And his eyes, &c. In a passage already cited from Kazwini (ch. xl. 27), on the كوسج, the Orca communis, or Grampus, after stating that "dentes (habet) instar cuspidis hastæ," it is added, "oculis rubentibus instar sanguinis . . . aspectu fulgurante:" which is perhaps as good an illustration of this passage, as is Bochart's appeal to the hieroglyphics in which the eyes of the crocodile are made to represent the dawn. Neither of these descriptions, however, intimates that the eyes are remarkably brilliant. The light of the dawn is not very bright: and of this sort the eyes of the whale are universally said to be.

11. "מִפִּי וְגוֹ". From his mouth, &c. Of whatever animal this is said, it is quite certain, as Rosenmüller has observed, that it must be taken figuratively. If so, Bochart's citations from Achilles Tatius, and Eustathius of Antioch, stating that the hippopotamus emits from his nostrils inflamed smoke, must stand for nothing. Besides, the text here speaks of the mouth, not of the nostrils. All the passage seems to mean is, that as this animal is very dreadful in the pursuit of his prey—which is usually done open-mouthed—and as fire is generally said to accompany the sword in Hebrew descriptions of the ravages of war; so it might here be said to act similarly, and thus to consume all before it.

12. "מִנְהִירָיו". From his nostrils issueth smoke. This is so true, and so well known, of the blowings of the whale, that it can stand in need of no further illustration. Ib.

וְאֶת־הַיָּבֵשׁ. With reed, i. e. burning. Arab. أَجَمَّ, ferbut. أَجِيمٌ, fervere, ardere, &c. By some supposed here to signify a caldron, or the like: but perhaps without any good reason.

13. נְפִישׁוֹ. His breath. Arab. نَفَسٌ, auhelitus. The Hebrew word, however, also means person. The expression may, therefore, be intended to convey the fiery character of his disposition, as we say, personal bravery, courage. In any case, much the same is said, in vr. 11, above. It may be considered, therefore, as a continuation of that verse. Gram. Art. 241, 18. And so, perhaps, vv. 8, 9, above, are continuations of vr. 6, if not also of vr. 7.

14. בְּצַוְרוֹ. In his neck. "An in collo balenæ quod nullum habet?" asks Bochart, very shrewdly; yet Mr. Dewhurst, in his description of the Baleenoptera roqual (p. 122), actually gives an account of the anatomy of the neck! I only ask, Could he have done this if the animal really had no neck? A neck may not indeed appear to general spectators, and, in some cases, there may be none; yet, in general descriptions like that in our text, it may in every case be allowable to assume this, just as it may, when speaking of the animal emitting smoke and fire, as above.

Ib. לִזְרוֹתָא. Lodgeth strength, &c. Two instances are given by Mr. Dewhurst of the immense strength of the whale (pp. 104, 5). One is of an American ship, in lat. 47°, long. 118 west; the other, of a Dutch ship (I suppose). Of the former it is said, "They were surrounded by whales, the three boats were lowered down, and the crews busy in harpooning them. Shortly afterwards, a whale of the largest class struck the ship, and knocked part of the false keel off. . . . He then turned, went round the stern, and, going away about a quarter of a mile, suddenly turned, and came at the ship with tremendous velocity, head on . . . The vessel (which was going at the rate of five knots) went back at the rate of three or four knots. The consequence was, that the sea rushed in at her cabin-windows, every man on deck was knocked down, and the bows were completely stove in. In a few minutes the vessel filled," &c. Of the latter, "Von Longdorff, in the narrative of his voyage from Kamtschatka to Ochotsk, says, 'An uncommonly large whale, the body of which was larger than the ship itself, lay almost at the surface of the water, but was not perceived by any one on board till the moment when the ship was almost upon him. . . . We were thus placed in imminent danger, as this gigantic creature, setting up its back, raised the ship at least three feet out of the water. The masts reeled, and the sails fell all together. . . . We saw the monster sailing off, with the utmost gravity and solemnity.' ” This is, perhaps, sufficient illustration of the following, אֵלֶיךָ יָבִי. And before him, &c.; which is necessarily figurative, and is well illustrated by Bochart from the poets, speaking of the prancings of the war-horse. He has, however, egregiously failed in his application of it to the crocodile, an animal frigid and tame in the extreme.

15. אֵלֶיךָ יָבִי. The muscles, &c. Bochart: “Tori carnis ejus, id est, partes prominentiores . . . ad verbum procidua carnis ejus. Gr. πρὸς τὴν ἄκμην,” &c. Which Rosenmüller converts into “luxæ,” and applies to the soft and pendulous parts of oxen. But, Is it not absurd to say, that the lax and pendulous flesh of any animal is hard and immovable, as our text here manifestly does? Tori carnis would, perhaps, more correctly mean the interlaced and firmer parts of the flesh, as the Targumist has taken the place: where his Latin translator has improperly given costæ. Buxtorf renders אֵלֶיךָ יָבִי, the term here used by the Targumist, “Torus, pulpa carnis muscolosa et firmior.” This, as may be gathered from Mr. Dewhurst’s work, lies under the fat, or blubber, of the whale; and hence, perhaps, is in the text termed אֵלֶיךָ יָבִי, the fallings, or lower parts, of his flesh. The fat or blubber being removed, “there remains,” says Mr. Dewhurst, “only the kreug, nothing more than a huge shapeless mass of bones, covered with a quantity of black muscular substance [this he terms, p. 42, “muscular flesh,” exterior to which is the blubber]; which is abandoned, either to sink or to be devoured by the flocks of ravenous birds and sharks which duly attend on this occasion (pp. 64, 5).” That the interior structure of the animal is spoken of, the following verse seems to prove.

16. לִבּוֹ רַבּוֹ. His heart, &c. “The quantity of blood which circulates in the whale,” says Mr. Dewhurst, p. 39, “is much greater in proportion than that which flows in the veins of quadrupeds. The diameter of the aorta, or large artery arising from the heart, is sometimes more than thirteen inches; and the late Mr. John Hunter estimated the quantity thrown into it, at every contraction of the heart, to vary from ten to fifteen gallons, and that with an immense velocity.” This is, I think, sufficient to shew, that the texture of this vessel must be of uncommon firmness and strength. See also Bochart on the place; who rather travels out of the record, as it appears to me, to make this hardness of heart expressive of the courage of the animal. There is nothing in this which Bochart could ascribe particularly to the crocodile. He merely says, it is true of all large animals.

Ib. מְבַלְלָהּ וְנָהָה. As the lower millstone. See Deut. xxiv. 6; Judg. ix. 53; 2 Sam. xi. 21; Cant. iv. 3. Arab. قَبِيلَخ.

Lapis inferior mola; v. فَدَخَّ. Fregit. Jahn has described these hand-mills in his Archæologie, pt. I. vol. ii. p. 176. It does not appear to be known, why the lower stone is here appealed to for its firmness in preference to the upper. A harder stone might, indeed, have been chosen for this situation: but of this we are not certain.

17. מִשֵּׁרֵהוּ. At his rising. “Hic elatio belluæ est super aquas emersio.”—Bochart. See Gen. vii. 17. That is, in the contest. See the note on vr. 14 above. Ib. מִשִּׁבְרָיו. By his breakings. “The Dutch writers,” says Mr. Dewhurst, p. 76, “mention Jacques Vienkes . . . who, after a whale had been struck, was hastening with a second boat to the support of the first. The whale, however, arose, and with its head struck the boat so furiously that it was shivered into pieces, and Vienkes was thrown with its fragments on the back of the huge animal. Even then,” it is added, “the bold mariner darted a second harpoon into the body of his victim: but, unfortunately, he got entangled in the line. . . . At last, however . . . he swam to the boat.” Another boat was, by a similar rising of the whale, thrown about fifteen feet into the air, which then turned over, and fell into the water, with its keel upwards. Ib. p. 77. וְהִתְבָּאָה. Lit. Become vring, i. e. confused, as under such circumstances they necessarily must be. I do not see how this can fairly apply to the crocodile.

18. הַרְבֵּב. I take this to signify the harpoon; and, as already remarked, to be the identical word. This passage needs no further illustration. Ib. הַרְבֵּית. The spear, &c. Mr. Dewhurst, p. 55, will supply drawings of the harpoon, lance, &c., as used in attacking the whale. Bochart has given the best explanation of these terms, on the place. Hieroz. pt. II. lib. v. cap. xvii.

19. יַחֲשֵׁב. He counteth, &c. It is not said that iron, &c. will not take effect on him, but only that he considers it as straw, and so on. Bochart may have spared his citations, therefore, to shew that the crocodile's back and tail are so hard as to resist musket-balls, &c. Much the same is said, too, of certain genera of the whale and sea-serpent.

20. This verse is literally true of the whale. בֶּן־קֶשֶׁת. Lit. Son of the bow. Comp. Lam. iii. 13.

21. תֹּחָהּ. A club, bludgeon, and, generically, clubs. Arab. وَتَخَّ. Fuste percussit. Indè مَيْتَخَّة. Fustis. So Bochart.

22. בְּתַחְתָּיו. Beneath him, i. e. the things just mentioned, are accounted (נְהַשְׁבֵּה) supplied from the preceding verse) points, or pointed pieces, of the potsherd. יִרְפֵּד. He reclineth, i. e. himself. Arab. رَفَدَ. Suffulcivit, sustentavit. See ch. xvii. 13 above. The construction seems to be this: יִרְפֵּד : נִפְשׁוּ עַל־חַרְוֵץ בְּעַלְיִטִּים : He sustains himself upon the pointed things, as upon mire: i. e. he makes no more account of them than he does of the miry bottom of the deep. Bochart here, rather clumsily, forces in the scales of the crocodile. His translation of the verse is: “Pro eo sunt acumina testæ, sternit se, ut tribulam in luto.” Where both the acumina testæ and the tribulam are made to stand for the scales of the crocodile. Let the reader judge.

23. יִרְתִּיחַ. He causeth to boil, &c. Syr. نَزَّى. Fervefecit, &c. The dolphin genus, &c. are said so to stir up the mud from the bottom; see note on vr. 6 above. Ib. בְּפִרְקָהָהּ. Like a boiling pot of ointment: i. e. in a violent state of agitation. Bochart thinks the musky smell of the crocodile is alluded to here. But is musk ever used as an ointment? This may be more than doubted. I think the idea of boiling belongs as much to the last as to the first member here; and, to avoid mistake, I have supplied it.

24. אַחֲרָיו וְגו'. After him, &c. This is owing perhaps to the swiftness of this animal (see note on vr. 10 above), which cannot be said of the crocodile; nor has Bochart found one instance to justify such an application. Nor has he been able to shew that תְּהוֹם has ever been applied to any river, much less to the Nile.

25. אֵין וְגו'. There is not, &c. Bochart here makes עָפָר, the dust, to allude to those reptiles, to which he thinks the crocodile may, on account of the shortness of his feet, seem to belong, &c. But all this is futile. עָפָר is often used in this book for אֲרָץ, as remarked again and again. The next shift, which is to make the crocodile a reptile, needs no remark. The passage therefore obviously declares, that there is no animal on the earth at all comparable to the leviathan here described; which is literally true. And the distinction intended is, that, as this is a water animal, no such other can be found on the land. But this cannot be said of the crocodile, which is amphibious. Ib. לְבַלְיָהָהּ.

To be unbroken: i. e. undaunted, untamed. Which cannot be said of the crocodile; for it has often been tamed. Ib. הַעֲשִׂי, for הַעֲשִׂי. Lit. The made, created.

26. עַל־כָּל וְגו'. On every, &c.: i. e. He looks down on it as its superior. So Gen. xxxix. 23. אִין . . . רָאָה אֶת־כָּל וְגו'. He looked not, took not the oversight of any thing, &c. Which is explained here in the last member, הוּא מְלֵךְ וְגו'. He is sovereign, &c. Ib. בְּיִצְיָוִתָּהּ. The progeny of insolence, or fierceness. See ch. xxviii. 8. The phrase seems here to have a still more extensive application, taking in all the tribes of the water-animals. And, as the leading sense of the latter word seems to be (شَحَصَ), sustulit se, per superiora elatus fuit: i. e. obtrusiveness in advancing one's own claims to pre-eminence; which is assumption. I have already stated, that, from the descriptions here and elsewhere given, the Delphinus Orca, or common grampus, which Fabricius styles Balaenarum Tyrannus (almost a literal translation of our sacred writer), is probably the animal more particularly had in view. See notes on vr. 27 above. By the terms מְלֵךְ וְגו' עַל־כָּל, therefore, is probably meant nothing more than that this is, of fierce animals the most fierce. I think it must appear from what has been said, that, if the terms leviathan and thammin mean the same animal, and that this is in some cases at least the whale beyond all doubt (which Bochart allows); nothing certainly has occurred in these two last chapters of Job requiring a different interpretation. It should, à priori, seem unlikely that a word signifying a whale in some cases, should in others stand for a crocodile, when in fact the animals are totally dissimilar, and have no common uniting point of agreement, except it be that both are cruel and frightful. But, if we are to unite things in every other respect dissimilar, but agreeing in these, and to translate accordingly; then, I say, there is an end at once to every thing like precision, or certainty, in the sacred writers: which, I am sure, no one duly acquainted with them will ever think of allowing. Once more: If a sea-monster is here had in view,—which I think no one can doubt,—then the crocodile must be altogether excluded, as he is found only in large rivers. And the opposition so kept up between the תְּהוֹמֵי הַיָּם and לְיַרְדֵּן, will consist in the most powerful and courageous of land and sea animals: i. e. of the quadrupeds in the one case, and of sea-monsters in the other.

CHAPTER XLII.

1. יָדַעְתִּי for יָדַעַת, as in Ps. xli. 13, &c. Gram. Art. 72. It is not necessary, therefore, to propose the Chaldaic form, viz. יָדַעַת, as Rosenmüller has done, particularly as no such form occurs in the whole of this book. Ib. תִּיבָל. Art able, i. e. to perform. Some have taken כָּל here as a sort of infinitive, as in פָּקוֹד פְּקָדָתִי, which is unnecessary. לֹא יִבְצֵר. Lit. Is not cut off from. See ch. xxii. 24; Gen. xi. 6. מְזַמָּה. Imagination; taken mostly in a bad sense, as in ch. xxi. 27.

3. מִי יָדָה וְגו'. Who then thus, &c. I take יָדָה adverbially, and the place to imply, Well mightest thou say, Who then, &c. The term לְאָמַר, prefixed, would perhaps supply the ellipsis; but, as this would not make the English very intelligible, I have inserted then. The passage is plainly a citation of the words of the Almighty as given in ch. xxxviii. 2, and here repeated in reprobation of Job's conduct. There, however, we have מִדְּשִׁיחַ, instead of מַעְלִים, with the addition of בְּמַלְיָן. The Auth. Vers. has "hideth," which is not very clear. But as this verb (מַעְלִים) is used to imply obscuring any thing by hiding it, darkeneth is the more proper term for the translation. לָכֵן. Nevertheless. Auth. Vers. "therefore." Rosenm. "igitur:" both of which tend to make the context scarcely intelligible. What Job intends to say, apparently is, I know and have confessed thy Almighty power, declaring that man, born of a woman, is ignorant, short lived, &c.; לָכֵן, nevertheless I have also gone on speaking of things much too high for me, and of which I had no knowledge. Comp. ch. xl. 3, 4. הֵבִירָתִי. Lit. I have brought forward נִפְלְאוֹת things too wonderful for me (מִמְצֵי). The Psalmist, Ps. xl. 6; cxxxi. 1; cxxxix. 6, seems to allude to this place, and hence to have learned humility. I take וְלֹא אָבִין here, to be parenthetical, and וְלֹא אָדַע, as its parallel and corroborative.

4. אֲשַׁאלְךָ וְגו'. I will ask of thee, &c. This and the following term are manifestly taken from ch. xxxviii. 3, or xl. 7, and are, as before, the words of God himself. By their application here, I understand Job to mean, that he had made demands in his contests with his friends or, which is the same thing, had used words—proper for none but God himself. He, therefore, represents himself here as speaking like God; and, apparently used His very words, that he might the more forcibly point out his own error, and thence impress upon himself the necessity of the deepest repentance. Bouillier pointed this out long ago; which, however, has been met with a “hoc friget,” by Rosenmüller, who thinks the words ought to be taken as in our Auth. Vers. I cannot help saying to this, in the words of Rosenmüller, “Sed hoc friget!” Nothing surely could be more natural than for Job—who had just cited a passage from the speech of the Almighty—still more strongly to apply these declarations with the view of humbling himself, and for the purpose of justifying the humiliating language given in the sixth verse. The whole seems to me perfectly consistent with the character and circumstances of Job, and to be admirably fitted for the object which he had in view. We have a usage very nearly of a sort with this in Numb. xvi. 3, 7. Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, in the first place, accuse Moses and Aaron of assuming too much: רב־לָבָב, say they, vr. 3, בִּי קָלִי־הַעֲדָה בְּלָב וְנִי, &c. This, in vr. 7, Moses seems to retort, by repeating the first sentence, רַב־לָבָב, i. e. at vr. 3, It is enough for you that all the congregation, &c. say the conspirators. Then, at vr. 7, Moses retorts, Enough for you! &c. Moses appears here to repeat this expression, for the purpose of condemning the impiety of those who had used it, and had by so doing assumed an authority which by no means belonged to them. In the same way, I think, Job here repeats the words of God, for the purpose of condemning himself, who had used terms amounting to something like an authority equally great.

5. לְשָׁמַע וְנִי. By the hearing, &c. My knowledge of thy majesty has hitherto been defective. This seems to be intimated in ch. iv. 12; xxvi. 14, by the term שָׁמַע, which in the former instance is connected with אָזַן; in the latter, with the verb שָׁמַע, as if the hearing were a less imperfect means of knowledge than the sight: of which, indeed, there can be no doubt when the subject is—as it is here—the majesty of the Almighty. And hence, to realise the presence of God has always been considered as the very best means of insuring humility. Comp. Ps. cxxxix. 6; ch. xl. 4, 5.

7. כַּעֲבָדִי וְנִי. Like my servant, &c. Job had affirmed that both calamity and prosperity came from God (ch. i. 21 ; ii. 10 ; vi. 4, &c. as already remarked) ; whereas Elihu, with Job's other friends, argued exclusively on the contrary presumption. Although their sentiments, therefore, cannot be charged with wilful impiety, they may with being in some respects a departure from truth ; or rather, perhaps, a misapplication of it.

8. שְׁבַע־פָּרִים. Seven heifers, &c. We find no instance in the law of Moses—as formerly noticed—in which such double offerings consisting of sevens were commanded. In Numb. xxix. 32-36, we find that seven bullocks, in the one case, and seven rams, in the other, were to be offered ; and 1 Chron. xv. 26 ; 2 Chron. xxix. 21, such double offerings were made : but nowhere are such commanded. I am inclined to believe, therefore, that such offerings were patriarchal, and occasionally offered as things indifferent, under the law. Rosenmüller is unjustifiable, therefore, in affirming the contrary. In Numb. xxiii. 1, 29, however, we find not only seven bullocks and seven rams offered, but also seven altars prepared, on which each one was to be sacrificed, in conformity with the practice of the Moabites. In the places already pointed out, these were manifestly sin-offerings ; and such was this in Job. It is certain, therefore, that this was practised prior to the giving of the law ; and hence we find it here recommended in Job. It is, moreover, evident from this place, that Job was to act the part of the officiating priest, and to offer up prayer also as Abraham did, Gen. xx. 7, which he could not have done under the law. The whole is, therefore, patriarchal. Ib. נְבִלָה. Foolishness, corruption ; here to be taken in what is termed sensu prægnanti : i. e. by a metonymy, signifying the reward, or punishment, due to foolishness, &c.

10. שָׁב אֶת־שְׁבוּתָהּ. Turned the captivity. Comp. Jer. xxx. 18 ; Ps. xiv. 7 ; lxxxv. 2 ; Rev. xiii. 10. Used to signify a restoration to former happy circumstances, as Schultens has well remarked. The phrase might have been in use among the inhabitants of Canaan, &c. long before the Jews were a people. Ib. וַיִּסְּף וַיִּגַּד. And He added, i. e. increased gradually, as Spanheim has well remarked, all that Job had : first, by the gifts which he received from his friends ; and then, secondly, by making his flocks, &c. fruitful, as he had formerly done with Abraham, Jacob, and others. It need not be supposed, therefore, that all this took place in a moment, particularly as Job's life was very much extended, as it appears in the sequel. Ib. לְמִשְׁנָה.

To the double; i. e. לְהִיזֹר לְמִשְׁנָה, in order to its becoming double. It has already been remarked in the Introduction, that we need not suppose exactly the double here to be meant, but only, that in the main this was the case. It has also been remarked, that it is to this circumstance, in all probability we are to ascribe the otherwise obscure phraseology “double for all her sins.” Isa. xl. 2; lxi. 7; Jer. xvi. 18; Zech. ix. 12. The two first and the last of these passages, are evidently to be taken, as promising double blessings under the Christian dispensation, with reference to the sufferings of the true church under the Mosaic; in the third, as denouncing double punishment, as compared with any at that time experienced by the Jews: which was realised in the Babylonish captivity. Hence the phraseology is used both in a good and a bad sense.

11. קֶשֶׁטָה שְׁהָרָה. Lit. One kesita. But what this was, or how much its value, it is impossible now to say. In Gen. xxxiii. 19, Jacob is said to have given an hundred of these for a piece of land; which, when referred to by St. Stephen, Acts, vii. 16, 17, is made to be the same that Abraham purchased of Ephron the Hittite (Gen. xxiii.). We are there told (vr. 15), that the field was worth four hundred shekels of silver; and at vr. 16, that Abraham weighed the silver to Ephron. It is also evident that a form of this root in the Arabic, viz. كَسَطٌ, signifies—as Schultens has shewn on this place—a pair of scales. קֶשֶׁטָה, therefore, having a participial form, may signify something weighed, and to be synonymous with שָׁקָל; as, it should seem, is the case from the passages just cited. I have, therefore, translated it by shekel, leaving the term in all other respects as indefinite as I found it. Rosenmüller (on Gen. xxxiii. 19) will give a list of the authors who have treated on it. It ought to be observed here, that the relatives and acquaintances of Job are mentioned here, not as fictitious, but as those of a person who really existed.

12, 13. It will be seen by a comparison with ch. i. 3, that the numbers here given are the double of those there mentioned; which, as shewn in the Introduction, must be understood of round numbers only. The number, however, of the sons and daughters are still the same: and these, as I have shewn elsewhere, must have been by a second marriage. Jarchi, indeed, has supposed, that because Job's substance generally was doubled, the number of his children also was; and then, in order to make this good, that the term שְׁבַע־בָּנָה used here, must be a dual form, equivalent to אֲשֶׁר־עָרַבְתִּי, and signify fourteen!

14. The names of Job's daughters are here recited apparently to mark his prosperity. הַיּוֹמָהּ, q. d. Diurna; because, perhaps, Job had now emerged from what may be termed the night of affliction, and what, indeed, is often termed in this book, darkness, and the shadow of death; i. e. as if the light once more shone on his tabernacle. הַקָּיִץ.

Cassia: which, according to Diodorus Siculus, &c. grew in abundance in Arabia, and was used as a perfume. See also Ps. xlv. 9. קָרְנֵי הַחֲבִיבִים. Horn of stibium: used as a pigment to adorn the eye-brows of women in Arabia, and as a collyrium to give lustre to the eyes, as the travellers tell us.

15. לֹא נִמְצְאָה. Impers. It could not be found: the Niphthal form having this power, as already remarked in several places. Ib. נִחְלָה. Inheritance, &c. This is evidently mentioned here as something extraordinary: and there can be no doubt, that among the patriarchs, as well as among the Jews, daughters did not generally succeed to the inheritance. The great wealth of Job was probably the sole cause of it here. The practice of modern Arabs can have no weight in such a question as this. I consider Rosenmüller's appeal to the Koran here, therefore, as vain and useless.

16. Job's living after this a hundred and forty years is also mentioned as extraordinary, as certainly it was. For, if we suppose him to have been seventy years of age now—and he could scarcely be less, having had a family of ten children—his whole age must have been two hundred and ten years; and hence perhaps it is said, that he saw so many of his posterity, even to the fourth generation. It is worth while here to remark, that Job's age was such as to claim the antiquity—if we may here reason from analogy—in which we have placed him. The length of human life, if we may credit the Biblical accounts, was now evidently declining. Take the following examples, pointed out in our marginal references; viz. Terah, the progenitor both of Abraham and Job, lived to the age of 205; Abraham, of 175; Isaac, 180; Jacob, 147; Joseph, 110; Moses, 120; Joshua, 110; and, according to the xth Psalm, the general reduced age of man is that of 70 years. Now Jacob's age was 147 years; and he was partly contemporary with our patriarch. But the patriarch's case was extraordinary. We may, therefore, allow him a longer life; just as we are told that Moses lived to the age of 120 years, without experiencing any diminution of natural strength; when Joseph, who lived a considerable time before him, reached only the age of 110 years. From this longevity and wealth of particularly religious characters, and especially from those of Job, we may, perhaps, observe a peculiar force in the passages; viz. Deut. xxx. 20; Ps. xci. 16; lv. 24; Prov. iii. 2, 16, &c. And hence, too, even in the New Testament, weakness, sickness, and premature death, are considered as marks of God's displeasure against sin.

ADDITIONAL NOTES.

Chh. xi. 6; xv. 7. See Euseb. Prep. Evang. lib. xi. cc. xv-xviii.: Viger's Edit. with his notes. It. Cyrill. Alexandr. contra Julianum, libb. i. viii. Theodoret. Serm. de Principio. Lactantius de vera et falsa sapientia. Kuinoel's Proleg. in Johan. Evang. § vii. Lex. Arab. Freytag. sub voce عُتَابُ, and my Heb. Dictionary, sub עָבַר.

Ch. xiii. 27. See Æschylus Prometh. vinct. l. 76, with the scholia.

Ch. xxi. 29. Strabo, edit. Casaub. p. 513, tells us that it was a custom with the Babylonians to expose the sick in a place in which three ways met, and to inquire of travellers what remedy ought to be applied for their relief. His words are: Τοὺς δ' ἀρρώστους εἰς τὰς τρίτονας ἐκτιθέεντες, τινθανοῦνται τῶν παζιόντων εἴ τις τί ἔχει λέγειν τοῦ πάθους ἄκος· οὐδεις τὲ ἴσται ὅσα κακὸς τῶν παζιόντων, ὅς οὐκ ἐπιτυχῶν εἴ τι ζῶντι σωτήριον ὑποτίθεται.

SINGLE WORDS, OR PHRASES, DISCUSSED.

	PAGE
אָבָה	252
אֶבְלִיָּה	254
אָנָן	361
אָזֵר	} 277
אָסֵר
אֶחָרוֹן	334
אֵיִתְנִים	277
אֶנְנָה	444
אֶלִּיל	282
אֶנְחָפָה	432
אֶשְׂרֵי	370
פְּדֵי	260, 319, 324
בְּהִמּוֹת	529, &c.
בְּלִיל	219, 374
פְּנֵי הָאֱלֹהִים	187
פְּזָר	363
בְּרַכּוֹ	185, 188, 194
בְּאֵל	334
נְבִישׁ	406
נְלָה	448
בְּלִמּוֹד	305, 196, 419
הַיּוֹת . . . הַיּוֹה	229, 230, 423
הִכָּר	328
הִפְּסֵף	381
הַתְּהִלִּים	314
זָחַל	440
זָעַף	313
הִדָּר	248
הִזַּח	369
הִזִּין	540
הִכְבְּיָה	261, 9, 282, 296, 7
הִקְלִמִית	220

	PAGE
חֲלוֹי פְּנִים	268, 414
חֲפֵץ	353
חֲרַף	410
חֲרוּל	421, 2
חֲתַר	377
חַטַּל	413
יֶאֱהִיל	383
יִטִּיב	380
יִסְלַף	277, 8
יִפְתָּ, יִפְתָּ	434
יֵשׁ לְאֵל יָד	273
יֵשׁ־יֵשִׁים	275, 277, 440
פָּקַח	316
פָּזַם	298
פִּי	236
פִּידוֹר	301
פִּימָה	247
פָּלַח	416, 7
בְּמַרְרֵי יוֹם	195
בַּנּוֹר	350
בְּפִסִּיל	246
בְּתָם	403, 433
לֹא	228
לִי	217
לְוַנְתָּן	196, 7, 529
לְעַו	218
לְקַשׁ	374
מִדָּד, ז. מִדָּד	230, 300, 340
מָה	234, 284
מִיפְזֵו	404, 5
מִיזְנָה	267
מִזִּיחַ מִזִּיחַ	279

PAGE	PAGE
מְחִירָה, 402	פְּרִישׁוֹ, 383
מִירְהוֹן, 289, 291	קְהָרִים, 211
מִלְאָף, 452, 3	קָמִים, 211, 223
מִלָּה, מְלִים, 203, 229, 275, 285	קָבֵר, 395
מִלִּים, 419	קָבִיר, 291
מִלִּיץ, 311, 452	קָבֵת, 410
מִקּוֹם, 243, 293, 327	קִשְׁקִשׁוֹת, 531
מִרְצֵ, 228, 206	קִשָּׁר, 536
מִשְׁשׁ, 281	קִשְׁתִּי נְחֹשֶׁה, 345, 6
נְבוֹב, 265	קִצְמוֹת, 405
נִין, 325	קָחַב, 249
נְבֵד, 326	רֹבֵב לֵב, 206, 451
נְעֻפָה, 267	רַעַם, 391
נְפִילִים, 301, 2	רִפְאִים, 384, 396
נְסֹר, קְנִיר, 401	רִשְׁפֵי, רִשְׁפִים, 211, 216
נִיר, 183	רִתְמוֹם, 420
נְסִיר, 531, 2	רִשְׁלֵל, 351, 386
נִבֵר, 350	רִשְׁמֵת, 205
נְנֻקָה, 426	רִשְׁמֵה, 189, 190
נֵד, 291	רִשְׁפֵה, 340
נְנֻב, 350	רִשְׁהוֹ, 193
נְנֻת, 528	רִשְׁחָץ, 517
נְנֻין, 354	רִשְׁחֵם, 207
נְנֻלֵ, 421	רִשְׁלָה, 450
נֵם, 269	רִשְׁמֵץ, 205, 391
נְנֻדֵי, רִשְׁמֵם, 388	רִתְלָה, 207
נְנֻדָה, 376	רִתְנִשְׁתָה, 213, 394
נְנֻדָה, 388	רִתְמֵם, 196, 427
נְנֻדָה, 259	רִתְמֵל, 281
נְנֻדָה, 245	רִתְמֵל, 219
נְנֻדָה, 271	רִתְמֵלָה, 191, 219
נְנֻדָה, 343	רִתְמֵת, 316
נְנֻדָה, 374	רִתְמֵתָה, 206
נְנֻדָה, 423

ERRATA.

Page	58,	line	15,	read	Ch. xxxi. 33,	for	xxi. 35.
—	141,	—	33,	—	even as the,	—	even the.
—	119,	bottom,	—	—	iniquities!	—	iniquities?
—	151,	line	3,	—	delivered in	—	delivered by.
—	—	marg.	—	—	Ezek. xviii. 22.	—	xxi. 26.
—	160,	line	13,	—	that	—	that .
—	—	—	19,	—	when	—	when .
—	194,	—	15,	—	שָׁדָדִים	—	שָׁדָדִים.
—	203,	—	22,	—	לְעֵינֵיהֶם	—	לְעֵינֵיהֶם.
—	214,	—	29,	—	عَلَامَةٌ	—	عَلَامَةٌ.
—	240,	—	5,	—	بومي	—	بوي.
—	283,	—	35,	—	אֵשָׁה	—	אֵשָׁה.
—	295,	—	15,	—	הַבָּיִת	—	הַבָּיִת.
—	300,	—	24,	—	היא	—	היא.
—	362,	—	26,	—	Gomorrhah	—	Gomorrhah.
—	439,	—	32,	—	حُدَا	—	حُدَا.
Passim	—	—	—	—	Shakspeare	—	Shakespeare.

ES1415 L481
The book of the patriarch Job

University of the Pacific, Spreckels Library

1 1012 00042 8674